

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

150
Bd. Sept. 1930

HARVARD LAW LIBRARY

Received

Oct. 20, 1898

128

68

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK XL

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE, WITH FULL ANNOTATION.

BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, AND HENRY P. FARNHAM, ASST.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

1898

KF
133
L3
BCKV

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, by THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Rec. Oct. 20, 1898.

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

IN

LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XL.

A.		Chamberlain, State, Goebel, v. (Wis.)	848
Ada County Farmers' Irrig. Co. v. Farmers' Canal Co. (Idaho)	485	Chambers, Fidelity & C. Co. v. (Va.)	482
A. J. Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co. (Neb.)	584	Cheyenne, State, ex rel. , v. Swan (Wyo.)	195
Allen, Marcotte v. (Me.)	185	State, Noble, v. (Wyo.)	710
American Glucose Co., Huda v. (N. Y.)	411	Chicago, Banta v. (Ill.)	611
American Trust & B. Co. v. Boone (Ga.)	250	Hibbard v. (Ill.)	621
Anderson, North Hudson County R. Co. v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	410	Chicago Packing & P. Co. v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. (Ga.)	367
Aron v. Wausau (Wis.)	738	Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Dew (Tenn.)	518
Atherton v. Atherton (N. Y.)	291	City Electric R. Co., Kaumeier v. (Mich.)	385
		Clogan, Hoefler v. (Ill.)	730
		Cocking, State, ex rel. , v. Wade (Md.)	628
		Coffield, Orchardson v. (Ill.)	256
		Cohen v. Manuel (Me.)	491
		Colfax Mountain Fruit Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal.)	78
B.		Colgan, Lees v. (Cal.)	355
Bagby & R. Co. v. Rivers (Md.)	682	Condon, Gore v. (Md.)	382
Baker, Sherman v. (R. I.)	717	Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., Knapp v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	361
v. Willard (Mass.)	754	Cooch, Lowndes v. (Md.)	380
Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. (Md.)	494	Cook v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. (Wis.)	457
Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. Hambleton (Md.)	216	Corning v. Saginaw (Mich.)	526
v. Rhind (Md.)	216	Cornwell v. Fraternal Acci. Asso. (N. D.)	487
Bandfield v. Bandfield (Mich.)	757	Covenia, Southern R. Co. v. (Ga.)	253
Banta v. Chicago (Ill.)	611	Cowley, Bettman v. (Wash.)	815
Barnard, State, ex rel. , v. Seattle Bd. of Edu. (Wash.)	817	Curtin, Gavin v. (Ill.)	776 array v. Kirkland (Ariz.)	471
axter v. McDonnell (N. Y.)	670	D.
Becker v. La Crosse (Wis.)	829	Dade Coal Co., Henderson v. (Ga.)	95
Bell, Kentucky Female Orphan School v. (Ky.)	119	Defiance, Wilhelm v. (Ohio)	294
Bennett, Morrison v. (Mont.)	158	Dempsey v. Dobson (Pa.)	550
Bettman v. Cowley (Wash.)	815	Dennis v. Moses (Wash.)	302
Black v. Sadlier (N. Y.)	666	Denny, State, ex rel. , v. Bridges (Wash.)	593
Boone, American Trust & B. Co. v. (Ga.)	250	Detlor v. Holland (Ohio)	266
Boston, Ladd v. (Mass.)	171	Dew, Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. (Tenn.)	518
Bowman, Omaha v. (Neb.)	531	Dexter, Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. (Wis.)	887
Bridges, State, Denny, v. (Wash.)	598	Dobson, Dempsey v. (Pa.)	550
Briggs, Fowler v. (Mich.)	528	Dolan v. Hughes (R. I.)	735
Bristol v. New England R. Co. (Conn.)	479	Dooley, Johnson v. (Ark.)	74
Brophy, Harrison v. (Kan.)	721	Dorsey v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	201
Burlington & M. R. R. Co., A. J. Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. (Neb.)	584	Drummond Carriage Co. v. Mills (Neb.)	761
Burnap, Kennedy v. (Cal.)	476	Duffy v. Harris (Ark.)	750
Business Men's League v. Waddill (Mo.)	501	Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. (D. C. App.)	358
		Dunwiddle, Zilley v. (Wis.)	579
		Du Plaine's Estate, Re (Pa.)	552
C.
Callanan v. Votruba (Iowa)	375
Cardwell v. Kelly (Va.)	240

E.

Ebanks, People v. (Cal.)	269
Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. (Iowa)	845
Estate of Du Plaines, Re (Pa.)	552
Zilley, Re (Wis.)	579
Evans, Henderson v. (S. C.)	426
Ex parte Fagg (Tex. Crim. App.)	212

F.

Fagg, Ex parte (Tex. Crim. App.)	212
Fairfield Improv. Co., Baltimore v. (Md.)	494
Farmers' Canal Co., Ada County Farmers' Irrig. Co. v. (Idaho)	485
Ferguson v. Gooch (Va.)	284
Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers (Va.)	432
Foster v. (Wis.)	838
Fletcher v. Wall (Ill.)	617
Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., Kingston v. (Mich.)	131
Foster v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Wis.)	838
Fowles v. Briggs (Mich.)	528
Fraternal Acci. Asso., Cornwell v. (N. D.)	437
Fuller, Phenix Ins. Co. v. (Neb.)	408

G.

Gallatin County, Sears v. (Mont.)	405
Garth, State, ex rel. , v. Switzler (Mo.)	280
Gavin v. Curtin (Ill.)	776
German-American Ins. Co., Erb v. (Iowa)	845
Gerner v. Gerner (Pa.)	549
Gibson v. Gibson (Wash.)	587
Glover, Victor v. (Wash.)	297
Goebel, State, ex rel. , v. Chamberlain (Wis.)	843
Gooch, Ferguson v. (Va.)	284
Goodrich Transp. Co., Slauson v. (Wis.)	825
Gore v. Condon (Md.)	382
Graham v. Smith (Ga.)	503
Gramm, State v. (Wyo.)	690
Grand Lodge K. of P., Wellenvoss v. (Ky.)	488
Gratz v. Land & R. Improv. Co. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	398
Gray, O'Herron v. (Mass.)	498
Greer, Sellers v. (Ill.)	589
Griffith, Shultz v. (Iowa)	117

H.

Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg. & S. Co. (Mo.)	161
Hambleton, Baltimore Trust & G. Co. v. (Md.)	216
Hamby v. Samson (Iowa)	508
Hankins v. Ottinger (Cal.)	76
Harbourne, State v. (Conn.)	607
Harley v. Proconier (Mich.)	150
Harris, Duffy v. (Ark.)	750
Harrison v. Brophy (Kan.)	721
Hatch, Re (N. Y.)	664
Haug v. Riley (Ga.)	244
Henderson v. Dade Coal Co. (Ga.)	95
v. Evans (S. C.)	426
Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. (Mich.)	444
Hibbard v. Chicago (Ill.)	621
Hildreth, Loring v. (Mass.)	127
Hodge v. Hodge (Me.)	33

40 L. R. A.

Hoeffler v. Clogan (Ill.)	780
Holland, Detlor v. (Ohio)	266
Home Mut. L. Ins. Co., State, ex rel. , v. Matthews (Ohio)	418
Hopkins, Ingersoll v. (Mass.)	191
Howard v. Skinner (Md.)	753
Hubbell, United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. (Ohio)	453
Huda v. American Glucose Co. (N. Y.)	411
Hudson Land Co., State, Winston, v. (Wash.)	490
Hughes, Dolan v. (R. I.)	735
Huntington, Re (N. Y.)	664
Hutchinson, Nichols v. (Conn.)	81
People, Mooney v. (Ill.)	770

I.

Illinois Steel Co. v. Mann (Ill.)	781
Ingersoll v. Hopkins (Mass.)	191
Insurance Co., Connecticut Mut. L., Knapp v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	861
German-American, Erb v. (Iowa)	845
Home Mut. L., State, ex rel. , v. Matthews (Ohio)	418
New Hampshire F., Tisdell v. (N. Y.)	765
Northwestern Nat., Dumas v. (D. C. App.)	358
Phenix, v. Fuller (Neb.)	408
Virginia F. & M., v. New York Carousal Mfg. Co. (Va.)	237
International Fraternal Alliance v. State (Md.)	187
Interstate Casualty Co., Kasten v. (Wis.)	651

J.

Jacobs, Welty v. (Ill.)	98
Jacobson v. Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. (Minn.)	389
J. H. Mohlman Co., Western Assur. Co. v. (C. C. App. 2d C.)	561
Johnson v. Dooley (Ark.)	74
v. London Guarantee & A. Co. (Mich.)	440
Jones v. Skinner (Md.)	752

K.

Kasten v. Interstate Casualty Co. (Wis.)	651
Kaumeier v. City Electric R. Co. (Mich.)	385
Kelly, Cardwell v. (Va.)	240
Kennedy v. Burnap (Cal.)	476
Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Bell (Ky.)	119
v. Louisville (Ky.)	119
Kessler, Letts v. (Ohio)	177
Kingston v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. (Mich.)	131
Kinney v. Kinney (Iowa)	626
Kirkland, Barry v. (Ariz.)	471
Knapp v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	861

L.

La Crosse, Becker v. (Wis.)	829
O'Brien v. (Wis.)	831
Ladd v. Boston (Mass.)	171

Land & R. Improv. Co., Gratz, v. (C. C. App. 7th C.)	398
Lees v. Colgan (Cal.)	355
Letts v. Kessler (Ohio)	177
Little Rock Traction & E. Co. v. Walker (Ark.)	478
London Guarantee & A. Co., Johnson v. (Mich.)	440
Lorenzo v. Wirth (Mass.)	347
Loring v. Hildreth (Mass.)	127
Louisville, Kentucky Female Orphan School v. (Ky.)	119
Lowell v. Willard (Mass.)	754
Lowell, L. & H. Street R. Co., Thompson v. (Mass.)	345
Lowndes v. Cooch (Md.)	380
Luzerne, Mooney v. (Pa.)	811

M.

McCole, McHugh v. (Wis.)	724
McDonnell, Baxter v. (N. Y.)	670
McHugh v. McCole (Wis.)	724
McKay v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.)	585
McKenzie, Owings v. (Mo.)	154
McMurtry v. Phillips Invest. Co. (Ky.)	489
Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.)	679
Madison v. Mayers (Wis.)	635
Magee v. Overshiner (Ind.)	370
Mahoney, Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. (Ind.)	101
Mann, Illinois Steel Co. v. (Ill.)	781
Manuel, Cohen v. (Me.)	491
Marcotte v. Allen (Me.)	185
Matthews, State, Home Mut. L. Ins. Co., v. (Ohio)	418
State, National L. Asso., v. (Ohio)	418
Mayers, Madison v. (Wis.)	635
Mayo v. Washington (N. C.)	163
Miller v. State (Ind.)	109
Mills, Drummond Carriage Co. v. (Neb.)	761
Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. Dexter (Wis.)	837
Minneapolis International Electric Co., St. Barnabas Hospital v. (Minn.)	388
Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., Cook v. (Wis.)	457
Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.)	426
Western U. Teleg. Co. v. (Tex.)	209
Mooney v. Luzerne (Pa.)	811
Mooney, People, ex rel. , v. Hutchinson (Ill.)	770
Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.)	158
Western & A. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	84
Moses, Dennis v. (Wash.)	302

N.

Narron v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.)	415
Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co., Mitchell v. (Tenn.)	426
National L. Asso., State, ex rel. , v. Matthews (Ohio)	418
New England B. Co., Bristol v. (Conn.)	479
New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., Tisdell v. (N. Y.)	765
New York Carousal Mfg. Co., Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. (Va.)	287

40 L. R. A.

Nichols v. Hutchinson (Conn.)	81
v. Peck (Conn.)	81
Noble v. Seattle (Wash.)	822
State, ex rel. , v. Cheyenne (Wyo.)	710
North Hudson County R. Co. v. Anderson (N. J. Err. & App.)	410
North Point Consol. Irrigation Co. v. Utah & S. L. Canal Co. (Utah)	851
Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., Dumas v. (D. C. App.)	358
Noth, Rasch v. (Wis.)	577

O.

O'Brien v. La Crosse (Wis.)	881
O'Herron v. Gray (Mass.)	498
Oklahoma A. & M. College v. Willis (Okla.)	677
Omaha v. Bowman (Neb.)	531
Orchardson v. Coffield (Ill.)	256
Orono Pulp & P. Co., Whitmore v. (Me.)	377
Ottinger, Hankins v. (Cal.)	76
Overshiner, Magee v. (Ind.)	370
Owings v. McKenzie (Mo.)	154

P.

Packard, Walsh v. (Mass.)	821
Page, Waverly v. (Iowa)	465
Palestine, Palestine Water & P. Co. v. (Tex.)	208
Palestine Water & P. Co. v. Palestine (Tex.)	208
Parish v. Western & A. R. Co. (Ga.)	364
Peck, Nichols v. (Conn.)	81
People v. Ebanks (Cal.)	269
ex rel. Mooney, v. Hutchinson (Ill.)	770
Perham v. Portland General Electric Co. (Or.)	799
Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.)	661
Phenix Ins. Co. v. Fuller (Neb.)	408
Phillips Invest. Co., McMurtry v. (Ky.)	489
Pierce, Rowzee v. (Miss.)	402
v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal.)	850
Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney (Ind.)	101
Portland General Electric Co., Perham v. (Or.)	799
Preferred Masonic Mut. Accl. Asso., Hess v. (Mich.)	444
Procunier, Harley v. (Mich.)	150

Q.

Quo, Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. (Ga.)	488
--	-----

R.

Railroad Co., Burlington & M. R., A. J. Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. (Neb.)	584
Lowell, L. & H. Street, Thompson v. (Mass.)	345
New England, Bristol v. (Conn.)	479
South Bound, Mack v. (S. C.)	679
Western & A., v. Morrison (Ga.)	84
Western & A., Parish v. (Ga.)	364
Wilmington & W., Narron v. (N. C.)	415
Wisconsin, M. & P., Jacobson v. (Minn.)	889
Yazoo & M. V., Turcott v. (Tenn.)	768

Walker, Little Rock Traction & E. Co. v. (Ark.)	478	Williams v. Thacker Coal & C. Co. (W. Va.)	812
Wall, Fletcher v. (Ill.)	617	Willis, Oklahoma A. & M. College v. (Okla.)	677
Walsh v. Packard (Mass.)	321	Wilmington & W. R. Co., Narron v. (N. C.)	415
Washington, Mayo v. (N. C.)	163	Winston, State, ex rel. , v. Hudson Land Co. (Wash.)	490
Wausau, Aron v. (Wis.)	738	Wirth, Lorenzo v. (Mass.)	847
Waverly v. Page (Iowa)	465	Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co., Jacobson v. (Minn.)	889
Wellenvoss v. Grand Lodge, K. of P. (Ky.)	488
Welsh, Ritchey v. (Ind.)	105
Welty v. Jacobs (Ill.)	98
Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison (Ga.)	84
Parish v. (Ga.)	364
Western Assur. Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co. (C. C. App. 2d C.)	561
Western Commercial Travelers' Asso. v. Smith (C. C. App. 8th C.)	653
Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mitchell (Tex.)	209
Peterson v. (Minn.)	681
Whitmore v. Orono Pulp & P. Co. (Me.)	377
Wilfley, State, ex rel. , v. Rassieur (Mo.)	280
Wilhelm v. Defiance (Ohio)	294
Willard, Baker v. (Mass.)	754
Lowell v. (Mass.)	754
40 L. R. A.
		Y.
		Yates, Union P. R. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	553
		Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., Turcott v. (Tenn.)	768
		Z.
		Zilley v. Dunwiddie (Wis.)	579
		Zilley's Estate, Re (Wis.)	579

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27...	759
v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 522, 58 Am. Rep. 143	756
v. Hills, 158 Mass. 386	333
Abell v. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. 18 W. Va. 400	769
Abernethy v. Medical Lake, 9 Wash. 112	822
Ablard v. Fitzgerald, 87 Wis. 516	828
Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque Street R. Co. 27 U. S. App. 364, 64 Fed. Rep. 70, 12 C. C. A. 37	653
Acker v. Alexandria & F. R. Co. 84 Va. 648	238
Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324	184
Adams v. Adams, 21 Wall. 185, 22 L. ed. 504	180
v. Burton, 43 Vt. 38	690
v. Lawson, 17 Gratt. 250, 94 Am. Dec. 455	663
v. McGlinchy, 66 Me. 474	493
v. Main, 3 Ind. App. 232	88
v. Robinson, 69 Ga. 627	246, 247, 248
v. Robinson, 1 Pick. 561	736
v. Walker, 34 Conn. 466, 91 Am. Dec. 742	859
Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77 Iowa, 381, 4 I. R. A. 122	376
Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 68, 30 L. R. A. 633	364
Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. 400	578
Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 9 L. R. A. 442	833
Albany County Supers. v. Dorr, 25 Wend. 440	696
Alden v. St. Peter's Parish, 158 Ill. 631, 30 L. R. A. 232	732
Aldin v. Clark [1894] 2 Ch. 437	757
Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen. 42	145
Allemon v. Simmons, 124 Ind. 199	591
Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503	254
v. Culver, 3 Denio, 254	335, 345
v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185	285, 298
v. Loudon & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. R. 65	479
v. Reilly, 15 Nev. 452	813
Allnutt v. Ingris, 12 East. 527	382
Alston v. State, 32 Ala. 124, 13 L. R. A. 659	699, 710
Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58	77, 78
American Bank v. Rollins, 99 Mass. 313	239
American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 623	262, 264
American Bd. of Comrs. for Foreign Missions, 27 Conn. 244	46
American S. S. Co. v. Young, 86 Pa. 188, 33 Am. Rep. 748	187
American Waterworks Co. v. State, Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447	690
Amory v. Flynn, 10 Johns. 102, 6 Am. Dec. 316	508
Amperse v. Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78	715
Anderson v. Jefferson County Comrs. 25 Ohio St. 13	407
v. Manchester F. Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L. R. A. 609	502
v. Savannah Press Pub. Co. (Ga.) 28 S. E. 216	86, 90
Andrews v. Andrews, 110 Ill. 223	731, 732
v. Clark, 72 Md. 366	232
Angerhoffer v. State, 15 Tex. App. 813	214
Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 161 U. S. 14, 38 L. ed. 63	384
Anglo-Californian Bank v. Ames, 27 Fed. Rep. 727	232
Anson v. Dwight, 18 Iowa, 241	515
Appeal Tax Ct. v. Gill, 50 Md. 877	382
v. Rice, 50 Md. 317	382
v. St. Peter's Academy, 50 Md. 345	122
Arbuckle v. Templeton, 65 Vt. 206	87
Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 127 U. S. 387, 32 L. ed. 248	684
Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 466	162, 649
Arnold v. City Bank, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 578	500
v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 366	103
Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146, 2 L. R. A. 343	759
Artz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 34 Iowa, 151	749
Ashbrook v. Com. 1 Bush, 139, 99 Am. Dec. 616	860
40 L. R. A.

Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938	631
Asher v. Cabell, 2 U. S. App. 158, 50 Fed. Rep. 818, 1 C. C. A. 633	630
Ashworth v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 97 Ga. 307	748, 749
v. Kittridge, 12 Cush. 193, 59 Am. Dec. 178	558
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 687, 28 L. ed. 291	392
v. Thul, 29 Kan. 468, 44 Am. Rep. 659	338
Atkins v. Cobb, 56 Ga. 88	248
Atkinson v. Atkinson, 8 Allen. 15	500
v. Atkinson, 40 N. H. 249, 77 Am. Dec. 712	751
v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141, 50 Am. Rep. 352	461
v. Wabash R. Co. 143 Ind. 501	104
Atlanta v. Burton, 90 Ga. 496	659
Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Condor, 75 Ga. 51	484
Atrops v. Costello, 8 Wash. 149	824
Atty. Gen. v. Andrews, 3 Ves. Jr. 638	122
v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. Jr. 714	122
ex rel. Holtz v. Heishon, 18 N. J. Eq. 410	632
Aubert's Appeal, 119 Pa. 52	552
A. Westman Mercantile Co. v. Park, 2 Colo. App. 545	545
Ayres v. Hammondsport, 180 N. Y. 665	463

B.

Babcock v. Wolf, 70 Iowa, 676	377
Babson v. Rockport, 101 Mass. 93	468
Bacon v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617	656
Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray. 559	757
Bagnall v. Carlson, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 385	231, 232
Bailey v. New York, L. H. 581, 2 Denio, 433	581
v. Ogden, 75 Ga. 877	98
Bally v. Com. (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 223	698
v. Cranfill, 91 N. C. 298, 49 Am. Rep. 641	741
Baker v. German F. Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490	586
v. Kelloug, 29 Ohio St. 663	269
v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 12 Gray, 608	570
v. Roberts, 14 Ind. 552	312
Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 804	101
v. Washington County Comrs. 85 Md. 145	382
v. Williams, 3 Met. 365	616
Balm v. Nunn, 63 Iowa, 641	376
Halston v. Bensted, 1 Campb. 463	184
Baltimore v. Lefferman, 4 Gill, 425, 45 Am. Dec. 145	187
Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772	559
v. Glenn, 28 Md. 822, 92 Am. Dec. 688	362
Baltimore Coal Tar & Mfg. Co. v. Fletcher, 61 Md. 293	232
Bancroft v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 11 Allen, 34	804
Bangor Electric Light & P. Co. v. Robinson, 52 Fed. Rep. 520	500
Bangs v. Brewster, 111 Mass. 385	758
Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274	881
Rochester v. Jones, 4 N. Y. 497, 55 Am. Dec. 290	548
United States v. Daniel, 12 Pet. 82, 9 L. ed. 889	187
United States v. McKenzie, 2 Brook. 398	799
Barbour v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 82 Ky. 654	127
Barnes v. Barnes, 161 Mass. 381	139, 181
Barnett v. Ashmore, 5 Wash. 163	320
Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224	402
Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 4 L. ed. 83	819
Barron v. Eldredge, 100 Mass. 455, 1 Am. Rep. 126	348
Bartle v. Nutt, 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825	162
Bartlett v. Christliff, 69 Md. 225	394
Barton v. International Fraternal Alliance, '85 Md. 14	189
Bassett v. Bassett, 20 Ill. App. 543	550
v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 43 N. H. 673, 82 Am. Dec. 179	185

Bates v. Morris, 101 Ala. 282	92	Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244	165, 166, 167, 168, 170
v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255	108
Battel v. Smith, 41 Gray, 497	401	Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143	816, 819, 821
Baxendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 525	500
Baxter v. McDonnell, 154 N. Y. 432	678	v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141	469
Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 202	47	Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193	430
Beardslee v. Morgner, 4 Mo. App. 139	863	Brooke v. Hook, L. R. 6 Exch. 89, 3 Alb. L. J. 255	473
Beatrice v. Leary, 45 Neb. 149	533	Brooklyn v. Furey, 9 Misc. 193	623
Beck v. Vancouver R. Co. 25 Or. 32	810	Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732	163
Belding v. Black Hills & Ft. P. R. Co. 3 S. D. 369	804	v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 31	756
v. Johnson, 86 Ga. 177, 11 L. R. A. 53	97	Broome v. New York & New Jersey Teleg. Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 141	374
Bell v. Great Northern R. Co. Ir. L. R. 23 C. L. 423	684	Brotherton v. Manhattan Beach Improv. Co. 43 Neb. 563	534
v. Roberts, 13 Vt. 532	822	Brower v. New York, 3 Barb. 254	493
Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 123	301	Brown v. Buffalo & S. L. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 191	806
Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 564, 6 L. R. A. 553	850	v. Illinois, 27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49	184
v. Lockwood, 20 Wend. 223, 32 Am. Dec. 532	685	v. Matthews, 1 Rand. (Va.) 462	233
v. Smith, 21 Barb. 439	550	v. Nash, 1 Wyo. 25	198
v. State, 86 Ga. 401, 12 L. R. A. 499	91	v. Phillips, 71 Wis. 239	734
Benson v. Abbott, 95 Ga. 69	243	v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. ed. 200	673
Bent v. Lewis, 88 Mo. 462	89	v. Scott, 2 G. Greene, 454	376
Bentlock v. Fenn, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 659	842	v. State, 79 Ga. 324	213
Berger v. Jacobs, 21 Mich. 215	759	Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 544, 35 L. ed. 249	635
Berkeley v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 11	748	Browning v. Keame, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69, 1 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 190	265
Bethea v. McLennan, 28 N. C. 1 Ired. L. 527	743	Brownlee v. Arnold, 60 Mo. 79	158
Bevan v. United States, 13 Wall. 56, 20 L. ed. 531	696, 704	Brownlee v. Cavazos, 100 U. S. 138, 25 L. ed. 574	829
v. Walters, 3 Car. & P. 520	768	Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 221, 46 Am. Dec. 447	773
Biddell v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354	884	Brumm's Appeal (Pa.) 12 Atl. 855	659
Binstead v. Buck, 2 W. Bl. 1117	507	Buck v. Squiers, 23 Vt. 434	402
Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585	92, 98	Buckles v. Lafferty, 2 Rob. (Va.) 292	237
Bittinger v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 549	599	Buckminster v. Buckminster, 33 Vt. 243, 38 Am. Dec. 652	561
Bizzell v. Brewer, 9 Ark. 58	75	Bullard v. Moor, 158 Mass. 413	585
Blackman v. State, 78 Ga. 522	93	Burbank v. Bethel Steam Mill Co. 75 Me. 373, 46 Am. Rep. 400	380
Blaine County v. Heard (Id.) 46 Pac. 890	198	Burdick v. Cheadle, 29 Ohio St. 393, 20 Am. Rep. 767	340
Blake v. Midland R. Co. 13 Q. B. 93	806	Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 21	127
Blasingame v. Home Ins. Co. 75 Cal. 633	568	Burgess v. Clements, 4 Maule & S. 306	493
Blatch v. Archer, 1 Cowp. 63	92	v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359	559
Blatchford v. Newberry, 100 Ill. 489	876	Burk v. Edison General Electric Co. 89 Hun. 498	810
Bleeker v. Johnston, 60 N. Y. 309	87, 83, 92	Burke v. Smith, 69 Me. 395	185
Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641	213	Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 102 Pa. 262, 43 Am. Rep. 205	440
Bliss v. Greeley, 45 N. Y. 671, 6 Am. Rep. 157	184	Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa, 312, 12 L. R. A. 433, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584	392
v. Winslow, 80 Me. 274	493	Burnham v. Nevins, 144 Mass. 88, 56 Am. Rep. 61	757
Blitch v. Central R. Co. 76 Ga. 385	748	Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169	806
Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362	107, 108	v. Lynde, 6 Allen, 305	131
Blundell, R. 30 Beav. 390	719	Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 173, 30 Am. Dec. 327	863
Boardman v. Larrabee, 51 Conn. 39	864	Burroughs v. Ellis, 76 Iowa, 649	376
v. Merrimack Mut. F. Ins. Co. 8 Cush. 583	848	Burwell v. Jackson, 9 N. Y. 535	668
Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453	374	Bush v. Johnson County, 43 Neb. 1, 32 L. R. A. 223	698, 704
Boatmen's Sav. Bank v. Western & A. R. Co. 81 Ga. 221	368	Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 743, 23 L. ed. 585	315
Boehm v. Baltimore, 61 Md. 259	496	Butler v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 334, 38 Am. Dec. 452	859
Bofl v. Fisher, 3 Rich. Eq. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 627	730	Buxton v. Hamblen, 32 Me. 443	492
Boggs v. State, 46 Tex. 10	704	Bye, Re, 2 Daly, 625	754
Boland, Ex parte, 11 Tex. App. 159	214
Bonaparte v. State, 63 Md. 472	332
Bonnell v. Ray, 71 Ind. 141	105
Bosch v. Kassing, 64 Iowa, 312	248
Bottle v. Knocker, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 161	130
Bourne v. Stevenson, 58 Me. 499	60
Bowen v. Hunking, 135 Mass. 380, 46 Am. Rep. 471	380
Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333	384
Bower v. Peate, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 321	347
Bowman v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 40 Md. 620	568
v. Woods, 1 G. Greene, 441	559
Boyd v. Pollock, 27 W. Va. 75	545
Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 627	693, 700
Braddock Glass Co. v. Irwin, 153 Pa. 440	545
Bradshaw v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. L. R. 10 C. P. 139	808
Branan v. May, 17 Ga. 136	748
Brantly v. Swift, 24 Ala. 390	649
Braun v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 186	616
Bremond v. McLean, 45 Tex. 10	210
Breton, Re, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 418	130
Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Pet. 173, 10 L. ed. 408	289
v. Huntingdon, 38 Tenn. 732	198
v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 433	104, 105
Brewster v. Kidgell, Carth. 438	235
Bridges v. Perry, 14 Vt. 232	699
Briel v. Natchez, 48 Miss. 439	404
Briham v. Smith, 4 Gray, 297, 64 Am. Dec. 73	107
Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 423, 20 Am. Rep. 711	380
Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. 118	193
Broadwell v. Rodrigues, 16 La. Ann. 63	312
Brodhead v. Wilse, 35 Iowa, 429	559
40 L. R. A.

Case De Libellis Famosis, 5 Coke, 124b	608	Clarke v. Providence, 16 R. I. 337, 1 L. R. A. 725	404
Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exchange Co. 60 Minn. 530, 28 L. R. A. 310	372, 373	Clegg v. Fields, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 37, 75 Am. Dec. 450	649
Cavanagh v. Boston, 139 Mass. 423, 52 Am. Rep. 716	831	Cleghorn v. Greenon, 77 Ga. 343	310
Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135	478	Clements v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 44 La. Ann. 692, 18 L. R. A. 43	808
Cedar Falls v. Hansen (Iowa) 73 N. W. 585	470, 471	v. Odorless Excavating Apparatus Co. 67 Md. 463	384
Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Dixon, 42 Ga. 327	806	Clifford v. Larrien (Ariz.) 11 Pac. 397	487
Central R. Co. v. Brewer, 78 Md. 394, 27 L. R. A. 63	474	Clouston v. Shearer, 99 Mass. 209	181
v. Harris, 76 Ga. 508	748	Clow v. Chapman, 125 Mo. 101, 28 L. R. A. 412	550
Chadron v. Glover, 43 Neb. 732	838	Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. 175, 7 Am. Dec. 449	498
Chafee v. Maker, 17 R. I. 739	721	Coburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 225	572
Chamberlain v. Chandler, 3 Mason, 242	484	Cochran v. Strong, 44 Ga. 636	247
v. Enfield, 43 N. H. 356	622, 623	Coffee v. Black, 62 Va. 537	625
Chapin v. Ferry, 3 Wash. 333, 15 L. R. A. 118	407	Coffin v. Adams, 131 Mass. 138	364
v. Waters, 110 Mass. 195	54	Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co. 47 Wis. 322	650
Chapman v. Allen, Cor. Car. 271	768	Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601	331
v. Atlantic Refining Co. 38 Hun. 637, 106 N. Y. 638	530	Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 61 Mich. 155, 95 Mich. 77	89
v. Polack, 70 Cal. 487	828	v. Maunder, 3 Rolle, Abr. 548	255
v. Stoneman, 63 Cal. 490	819	v. Railroad Co. (Ga.) 29 S. E.	484
Chapsky v. Wood, 28 Kan. 650	625, 626	Coleman v. Chadwick, 80 Pa. 51, 21 Am. Rep. 68	184
Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411	163, 170	v. Hart, 37 Wis. 180	464
Chase v. Ball, 79 Ind. 311	810	Colerain v. Bell, 9 Met. 490	697
v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95	676	Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & P. 73	558
v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 274	94	Collins, R. 64 How. Pr. 63	754
v. Duby, 20 R. I.	736	v. Blanton, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 645	242
v. Silverstone, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419	184	v. Prentiss, 15 Conn. 39, 38 Am. Dec. 61	107
Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349	184	Colonial Bank v. Cady, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 267	500
Chastfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49	184	Com. v. Boston & A. R. Co. 121 Mass. 36	806
Chattanooga R. & C. R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 293	484	v. Brown, 107 Mass. 144	114
Chenery v. Fitchburg R. Co. 160 Mass. 211, 22 L. R. A. 575	348	v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481	278
Cheapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie, 74 Md. 35	374	v. Conly, 3 Pa. St. 372	697, 706, 708
Cheyenne v. O'Connell (Wyo.) 46 Pac. 1088	714	v. Hart, 11 Cush. 130	573
Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298, 4 Wall. 637, 18 L. ed. 427	206	v. Hazelwood, 84 Ky. 681	514, 515
v. Union Bldg. Asso. 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598	408	v. King, 13 Met. 115	622, 623
ex rel. Anderson Pressed-Brick Co.	798	v. Lane, 113 Mass. 458, 18 Am. Rep. 509	429, 430
v. Sobkowiak, 148 Ill. 573	790	v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 354	273
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 516	101	v. Moran, 148 Mass. 458	716
Chicago & C. Terminal R. Co. v. Whiting, H. & E. C. Street R. Co. 139 Ind. 297, 26 L. R. A. 337	372	v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325	314
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 9 C. C. A. 559, 27 U. S. App. 1, 61 Fed. Rep. 993, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 578	168	v. Ruah, 14 Pa. 186	404, 405
v. Wallace, 24 U. S. App. 539, 66 Fed. Rep. 503, 30 L. R. A. 161	108	v. Webster, 5 Cush. 316, 52 Am. Dec. 711	88
Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 142	101	v. Wilson, 1 Gray, 337	558
Chicago Packing & P. Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 227, 30 Am. Rep. 545	617	Com., ex rel. Roman Catholic High School Trustees, v. Philadelphia, 132 Pa. 288	659
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542	749	Congdon v. Kendall (Neb.) 73 N. W. 659	537, 545
v. Pounds, 49 U. S. App. 476, 32 Fed. Rep. 217, 27 C. C. A. 112	749	Conlon's Case, 148 Mass. 168	114
Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 12 U. S. App. 381, 5 C. C. A. 347, 55 Fed. Rep. 949, 20 L. R. A. 532	656	Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cushman, 108 U. S. 51, 27 L. ed. 648	821
Childs v. Nelson, 69 Wis. 125	649	v. Duerson, 28 Gratt. 630	769
Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552	54	v. Smith, 117 Mo. 251	87
Christensen, Ex parte, 85 Cal. 208	715	Connors v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 490, 60 Am. Rep. 814	806
Chudleigh's Case, 1 Coke, 120a	337	Connitt v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 54 N. Y. 551	676
Church v. Portland, 18 Or. 73, 6 L. R. A. 259	408, 404, 405	Continental Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 87 N. Y. 8	248
Church of Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 35 L. ed. 227	799	Converse v. Wales, 4 Allen, 512	193
Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 104 Ind. 526, 54 Am. Rep. 334	427	Conwell v. Kuykendall, 29 Kan. 707	373
Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Lee, 37 Ohio St. 479	407	Cook, R. 77 Cal. 220, 1 L. R. A. 567	373
Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455	285, 286	Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 99	184
City Bank v. Bangs, 2 Edw. Ch. 97	337	v. Pena, 21 Cal. 411	101
City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570	811	Corbin, ex rel. Jackson, v. Garnsey, 14 Wend. 619, 28 Am. Dec. 550	401
City of Norwalk, The, 53 Fed. Rep. 98	806	Corcoran v. Boston & A. R. Co. 133 Mass. 507	804
City Water Co. v. State, 88 Tex. 600	206	v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 81 Wis. 191	790
Claffin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 230, 31 Am. Rep. 467	570	Corning v. Ashley, 51 Hun. 483, 121 N. Y. 700 (mem.)	765
Calhoun County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 28 L. ed. 470	678	Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 45 Fed. Rep. 730	231
Clapp v. Kemp, 122 Mass. 431	348, 349	Corwin v. New York & E. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 42	464
Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 490	184	Cottman v. Grace, 112 N. Y. 309, 3 L. R. A. 145	723
v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 9 Gray, 143	569	Counsell v. Hall, 145 Mass. 468	117, 792
v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 How. 235, 12 L. ed. 1031	833	County Comrs. v. Colorado Seminary, 12 Colo. 497	127
v. Parker, 106 Mass. 554	737	Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374	108
Clarke v. Bank of Mississippi, 10 Ark. 516, 53 Am. Dec. 248	799	Courtright v. Courtright, 40 Mich. 633, 581, 533, 589	696
v. Cordis, 4 Allen, 466	120	Cox v. Roome, 38 N. J. Eq. 259	696
		Crafter v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. I. C. P. 200	348
		Crain v. Barnes, 1 Md. Ch. 155	231
		Craken v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504	484
		Crane v. Winsor, 2 Utah, 248	890
		Crawford v. Clute, 7 Ala. 157, 41 Am. Dec. 92	229
		v. Slade, 9 Ala. 337, 44 Am. Dec. 463	239
		v. State, 112 Ala. 192	94
		Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 288	169
		Crawshaw v. Collins, 15 Ves. Jr. 227	231
		Crerar v. Williams, 145 Ill. 625, 21 L. R. A. 454	732
		Crichton v. Symes, 3 Atk. 62	616
		Cromartie v. Bladen Comrs. 37 N. C. 134	167
		Crosby v. Grant, 36 N. H. 273	243

Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363.	88	Donahue v. Klassner, 22 Mich. 252.	629
Crossan v. May, 68 Ind. 242.	472	Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306.	122
Crout v. DeWolf, 1 R. I. 393.	472	Donovan v. Fremen's Ins. Co. 30 Md. 159.	382
Crowell v. Hospital of Saint Barnabas, 27 N. J. Eq. 650.	864	Doolittle v. Branford, 59 Conn. 402.	482
Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 84 L. ed. 620.	715, 716	Doodall v. Olmsted County, 30 Minn. 96, 44 Am. Rep. 185.	678
Crumbley v. Bardon, 70 Wis. 385.	404	Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. ed. 533.	609
Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.	263, 741, 742, 746	Dovaston v. Payne, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. in Eq. 7th Am. ed. 142.	402
Culbreth v. Downing, 121 N. C. 206.	417	Dow v. Spenny, 29 Mo. 590.	472
Cullen v. Morris, 2 Stark. 577.	631	Dowdel v. Hamm, 2 Watts, 61.	616
v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 66 Conn. 211.	462	Dowling v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 63, 81 L. R. A. 112.	502
Cully v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.	148	Downing v. Dearborn, 77 Me. 457.	187
Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284.	699, 700, 709	Doyle v. Union P. R. Co. 147 U. S. 414, 37 L. ed. 225.	360
Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Turner, 48 Tenn. 286.	769	Dozier v. Fidelity & C. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 446, 13 L. R. A. 114.	656
Cummings v. Perham, 1 Met. 555.	507	Drake v. Oskafoosa Normal School, 11 Iowa, 54.	679
Curtis v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 566.	198	Driggs v. Phillips, 108 N. Y. 77.	622
Curtis v. Kiley, 163 Mass. 128.	347, 348	Drummond v. Crane, 159 Mass. 577, 23 L. R. A. 707.	345
v. Whipple, 24 Wis. 560, 1 Am. Rep. 187.	286	Drury v. Henderson, 143 Ill. 315.	821
v. Whitney, 13 Wall. 63, 20 L. ed. 513.	522	Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, L. R. 2 P. C. 441.	635
Curtiss v. Brown, 29 Ill. 201.	779	Ducat v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 172.	617
Cushman v. Hassler, 82 Iowa, 295.	581, 584	Duffie v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 8 L. R. A. 420.	530
Cutler v. James, 64 Wis. 173, 54 Am. Rep. 603, 399, 400.	400	Duncan v. Jandon, 15 Wall. 165, 21 L. ed. 142.	500
Czech v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) 38 L. R. A. 302.	684	Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 686.	298
D.
Dalton v. Angus, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740.	757	Dunlop v. Lambert, 6 Clark & F. 600.	540
Dalton City Co. v. Johnson, 37 Ga. 398.	245, 247	Du Pont v. Davis, 30 Wis. 175.	650
Daly v. Smith, 6 Jones & S. 155.	100	Durant v. Comery, 2 Idaho, 809.	376
Danbury & N. R. Co. v. Norwalk, 37 Conn. 109.	496	Durkin v. Dyer, 68 Me. 143.	482
Danforth v. Adams, 29 Conn. 107.	83	R. A. 808.	815
Daniel v. Jacoway, Freeman, Ch. (Miss.) 59.	408	Duror v. Motteux, 1 Ves. Sr. 320.	732
Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248.	387	Dusenbury v. Mutual Union Teleg. Co. 11 Abb. N. C. 440.	374
Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.	308, 677	E.
Davenport v. Bird, 34 Iowa, 624.	214	Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 283, 72 Am. Dec. 395.	471
Davidson v. Nichols, 11 Allen, 514.	590	Earle v. Earle, 9 Tex. 630.	751
Davis v. Afong, 8 Haw. 216.	186	Early v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 71 N. W. 500.	658
v. Alston, 61 Ga. 225.	90	Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Broom, 6 Exch. 314.	475
v. Baker, 71 Ga. 55.	243	East London Waterworks Co. v. Kellerman [1892] 2 Q. B. 72.	659
v. Central R. Co. 75 Ga. 645.	86, 91	Eastman v. Clackamas Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 24.	678
v. Mason, 4 Pick. 156.	649	East St. Louis v. Trustees of Schools, 102 Ill. 489, 40 Am. Rep. 606.	617
Dawes v. Peck, 8 T. R. 390.	541	v. Wehrung, 46 Ill. 392.	617
Day v. Green, 4 Cush. 438.	623	East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Fleetwood, 90 Ga. 23.	484
v. Lafferty, 4 Ark. 450.	75	v. Kane, 92 Ga. 188, 22 L. R. A. 315.	90
v. New Orleans P. R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 694.	86, 89, 90	Eaton v. Cook, 32 Vt. 58.	542
v. Putnam Ins. Co. 16 Minn. 408.	355	Eau Claire v. Matzke, 86 Wis. 291.	650
Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 14 L. R. A. 622.	286	Eavestaft v. Austin, 19 B. & V. 561.	721
Deberry v. Ivey, 55 N. C. 2 Jones, Eq. 370.	695	Eckel v. Eckel, 49 N. J. Eq. 587.	87
Dedericks v. Salt Lake City R. Co. 13 Utah, 34.	176	Eddy v. O'Hara, 132 Mass. 55.	240
Deems v. Baltimore, 80 Md. 174, 28 L. R. A. 541.	490	Edwards, Re, 58 Iowa, 451.	376
Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374.	814	v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121.	829
Delhi v. Youmans, 45 N. Y. 382, 6 Am. Rep. 100.	184	v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 445.	475
DeMelt v. DeMelt, 120 N. Y. 485.	294	v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 160.	759
Dempsy v. Dobson, 174 Pa. 122, 32 L. R. A. 761.	551	v. New York, & H. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 249, 50 Am. Rep. 659.	380
Denney v. State, Basler, 144 Ind. 503, 81 L. R. A. 726.	772, 773, 774	Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L. R. A. 640.	374
Dennis v. Clark, 2 Cush. 347, 48 Am. Dec. 671.	255	Eichels v. Evansville Street R. Co. 78 Ind. 261, 41 Am. Rep. 561.	373
Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 49.	842	Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph, 113 Mo. 395, 18 L. R. A. 590.	621
Desobats v. Berquier, 1 Binn. 349, 2 Am. Dec. 448.	758	Eichert v. Schaffer, 161 Pa. 519.	829
De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Harr. & J. 191, 3 Am. Dec. 635.	382	Eid v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8.	196
Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, 4 Am. Rep. 450.	529	Elliot v. Carter, 12 Pick. 436.	756
v. Detroit City R. Co. 37 Mich. 558.	307	Elliott v. Hall, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 315.	530
Detroit City R. Co. v. Mills, 35 Mich. 634.	572	Ellis v. Bassett, 123 Ind. 118.	107
Devine v. Edwards, 101 Ill. 188.	540, 545, 547	v. Darden, 85 Ga. 308, 11 L. R. A. 51.	193
Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. ed. 73.	252	v. Duncan, 29 N. Y. 466.	184
v. Providence Aqueduct Co. 1 Story, 387.	184	Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82.	184
Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 7 Exch. 382.	184	Ely v. Campbell, 59 How. Pr. 333.	623
Diel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37 Mo. App. 454.	87, 88	Embree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. 101.	239
Dillard v. Evans, 4 Ark. 176.	75, 76	Embury, Re, 20 Misc. 75.	238
District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 29 L. ed. 646.	789	Emery v. Gilman, 10 Cal. 404, 70 Am. Dec. 742.	678
Dittman v. Repp, 60 Md. 521, 33 Am. Rep. 325.	497	Emory v. Smith, 64 Ga. 273.	91
Division of Howard County, Re, 15 Kan. 194.	193	England v. Dearborn, 141 Mass. 590.	532
Doan v. Mauley, 33 Ill. 227.	592	Ennis v. Gray, 37 Hun, 355.	809
Dodge v. Cole, 97 Ill. 238, 37 Am. Rep. 111.	779	Enos v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 4 S. D. 640.	87
v. Williams, 46 Wis. 97.	727	Enright v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 297.	748
Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 8 L. R. A. 833.	550	Entrick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1062.	651
Doe, ex dem. Hollis, v. Roe, 36 Ga. 463.	89
Doer v. Considine, 6 Wall. 453, 18 L. ed. 369.	767
Doll v. Hollenbeck, 19 Neb. 639.	246, 247
40 L. R. A.

Ephraim v. Kelleher, 4 Wash. 243, 18 L. R. A. 604	301
Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565	121
Eppe v. State, 102 Ind. 539	558
Equitable Acc't. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201, 13 L. R. A. 287	486, 440, 451
Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 140 U. S. 228, 35 L. ed. 497	313, 315
Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456	598
Erlanger v. New Sombbrero Phosphate Co. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218	842
Eureka v. Merrifield, 53 Kan. 794	806
Evans v. Cumberland Comrs. 87 N. C. 154	165, 167, 168
Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666	684
Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791	108

F.

Fahey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383	148
Fahnestock's Appeal, 104 Pa. 46	696
Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851	698, 706, 708
Fairfield's Appeal, 57 Conn. 167	482
Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 292, 44 Am. Rep. 642	184
Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 133 U. S. 156, 33 L. ed. 573	207, 208
Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen, 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756	287
Farrell v. Lovett, 68 Me. 380, 28 Am. Rep. 59	248
Farris v. Wells, 68 Ga. 604	247
Farwell Brick, T. & C. Shingle Co. v. McKenna, 7 86 Mich. 238	751
Faucett v. Pierce County Super. Ct. 15 Wash. 342	318
Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. 93	193
Fellows v. Gilhuber, 82 Wis. 639, 17 L. R. A. 577	380
Fera v. Wickham, 135 N. Y. 223, 17 L. R. A. 456	695, 698
Ferguson v. Miller, 1 Cow. 243, 18 Am. Dec. 519	690
Festorazzi v. St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 104 Ala. 327, 25 L. R. A. 360	719, 729, 738
Fidelity & C. Co. v. Chambers, 98 Va. 138, 40 L. R. A. 432	451
v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 632, 32 L. R. A. 664	653
Field v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 24 L. R. A. 406	622
v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294	193, 200
Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6	286
Fieart v. Halderman, 75 Ind. 564	364
Fillebrown v. Hoar, 124 Mass. 580	694
Finch v. Finch, 22 Conn. 421	582, 584
v. Mansfield, 97 Mass. 89	540
v. Toledo Bd. of Edu. 30 Ohio St. 37, 27 Am. Rep. 414	678
Findlay v. Bear, 8 Serg. & R. 571	515
Fink v. Evans, 95 Tenn. 416	524
Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Meschendorf, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 757	362
Firemen's Benev. Asso. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 513, 74 Am. Dec. 115	617
First Nat. Bank v. Crocker, 111 Mass. 163	539
First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Clark, 41 Mich. 730	675
Fitzgerald v. Barker, 4 Mo. App. 105	863
Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 108 U. S. 648, 27 L. ed. 211	300
v. Great Western R. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 645	684
Flagg v. Geltnmacher, 98 Ill. 293	864
Fleming v. Burnham, 100 N. Y. 1	668
Flood v. State, 19 Tex. App. 564	214
v. Western U. Tele. Co. 131 N. Y. 606	810
Flowers v. Harrison, 6 Yerk. 494	525
Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603	297
Foley, Ex parte , 8 Ves. Jr. 38	194
Follis v. United States Mut. Acc't. Asso., 94 Iowa, 435, 23 L. R. A. 78	440
Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 4, 6 L. R. A. 829	550
v. New Haven & N. Co. 23 Conn. 214	88
Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 92	525
v. Ford, 70 Wis. 21	723
Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 128 Pa. 217, 5 L. R. A. 508	104
Forstick v. Hempstead, 125 N. Y. 589, 11 L. R. A. 715	723, 729
Foster v. Davis, 46 Mo. 268	695
v. McGuire, 95 Ga. 447	247
v. Means, Speers, Eq. 509, 42 Am. Dec. 392	235
Foundation Spring Park Co. v. Roberts, 92 Wis. 345	841
Fowler v. Lewis, 25 Tex. Supp. 380	558
v. True, 75 Me. 43	78

40 L. R. A.

Fox v. Kansas City Bank, 30 Kan. 441	248
Francy v. Warner, 96 Wis. 222	841
Fratini v. Caslini, 44 Am. St. Rep. 850	582
Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294	184
Fred M. Laurence, The, 15 Fed. Rep. 635	89
Fredricks v. Mayer, 13 How. Pr. 566	101
Freeland, Ex parte (Tex. Crim. App.) 42 S. W. 295	214
v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 193	821
Freeman v. Curtis, 51 Me. 140, 81 Am. Dec. 564	187
v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 144 Mass. 572	450, 451, 572
Freethy v. Freethy, 42 Barb. 641	759
French v. Boston, 129 Mass. 592, 37 Am. Rep. 393	528
v. Styriag, 2 C. B. N. S. 357	161
v. Turner, 15 Ind. 59	246
Frick v. Barbour, 64 Pa. 120	89
Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 230	387
Fry's Case, 71 Pa. 302, 10 Am. Rep. 698	754
Fuller's Will, 75 Wis. 435	727
Fulton v. Fulton, 52 Ohio St. 229, 29 L. R. A. 678	582, 583
Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 542	301

G.

Gainesville, J. & S. R. Co. v. Wall, 75 Ga. 282	90
Galgay v. Great Southern & Western R. Co. 4 Ir. C. L. Rep. 456	184
Gallagher v. Market St. R. Co. 67 Cal. 13, 56 Am. Rep. 713	87, 558
Gallego v. Chevalier, 2 Brook. 285	239
Galveston & W. R. Co. v. Galveston, 90 Tex. 896, 36 L. R. A. 83	206
Gardner v. Benedict, 75 Hun. 204	88
v. Collins, 2 Pet. 93, 7 L. ed. 359	239
Garly v. Giege, 130 Mass. 184	240
Garland v. Harrington, 51 N. H. 409	736
Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. 196, 23 L. ed. 612	821
Gartley v. People, Pueblo County (Colo.) 49 Pac. 272	698, 708
Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 202	364
Gaslight Co. v. Collidar, 25 Md. 1	660
Gates v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 42 Neb. 379	538, 548
v. Steele, 48 Ark. 599	751
Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49	742
Gatlin v. Tarboro, 78 N. C. 119	417
Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 798	152, 153, 610, 760
Geles v. Franklin Ins. Co. 123 Ind. 172	364
George v. Andrews, 20 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706	864
v. People, 167 Ill. 477	118, 114
Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229	122
German Ins. & Sav. Inst. v. Kline, 44 Neb. 395	409
Gibbons v. Rule, 12 J. B. Moore, 339	615
Gibbs v. Swift, 12 Cush. 393	401
v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241	470
Gibson v. Winslow, 46 Pa. 380, 84 Am. Dec. 552	553
Giddings v. San Antonio, 47 Tex. 559, 26 Am. Rep. 321	213
Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. 16	690
Gillis v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 156	491
Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 52, 48 Am. Dec. 290	678
v. Mcardie, 99 N. Y. 451, 52 Am. Rep. 41	720
Giovanni, The, v. Philadelphia, 59 Fed. Rep. 308	831
Girard L. Ins. Co. v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 896	659
Giraud v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596	808, 811
Gist v. Gans, 30 Ark. 309	75
Gittings v. Stearns, 19 Ill. 376	822
Given v. Western U. Tele. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119	211
Givens v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 39 Ky. 231	806, 806
Glidden v. Lucas, 7 Cal. 26	540
Goersen v. Com. 99 Pa. 388	278
v. Com. 106 Pa. 477, 51 Am. Rep. 434	278
Goff v. Kilts, 15 Wend. 550	690
Goldschmidt v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 623	572
Goodale v. Tuttle, 29 N. Y. 466	184
Goodell v. Buck, 67 Me. 514	73
Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 24 U. S. App. 7, 63 Fed. Rep. 400, 11 C. C. A. 253, 27 L. R. A. 583	530
Goodman v. Henderson, 58 Ga. 567	245
Goods of Cadywold, 1 Swab. & T. 34	193
Gore, Ex parte , 57 Miss. 251	355, 356
Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121	308
Gottseman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 56 Pa. 210, 94 Am. Dec. 55	364
Gould v. Armagost, 46 Neb. 897	764
v. Schermer, 101 Iowa, 582	461
Gowen v. Harley, 12 U. S. App. 574, 56 Fed. Rep. 974, 6 C. C. A. 199	791
Graham v. Adams, 5 Ark. 292	75

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. ed. 206	462	Hatch v. Coddington, 95 U. S. 48, 24 L. ed. 839	309
Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 226, 19 L. R. A. 641	888	Hatfield v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 38 Minn. 120, 53 Am. Rep. 14	888
Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449	668	Haugh's Appeal, 102 Pa. 42, 48 Am. Rep. 188	184
Gray Northern R. Co. v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 5 DeG. & S. 138	168	Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 416, 26 L. R. A. 107	818
Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 389	101	v. Grand Island Light & Fuel Co. 41 Neb. 153	541
Green v. Cornwall, 1 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 11	625	Hawkins v. Watkins, 5 Ark. 482	547
Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Hewitt, 62 Wis. 316	559	Hawyer v. Whalen, 49 Ohio St. 69, 14 L. R. A. 828	75
Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen, 447	408	Haynes v. McRae, 101 Ala. 818	847
Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 123	829	v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 14 L. R. A. 787	92
Greenwood v. Hornsey, L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 471	472	v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810	550
Groer v. Woolfolk, 60 Ga. 623	184	Hayward v. Liverpool & L. Fire & Life Ins. Co. 7 Bosw. 385, 2 Abb. Dec. 349	811
Gregor v. Cady, 82 Me. 151	757	Headlee v. Jones, 43 Mo. 235	500
Gregory v. Bewly, 5 Ark. 318	247	Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 118 Cal. 206, 38 L. R. A. 461	157
Gridley v. Bloomington, 88 Ill. 47	379	Heath v. Chapman, 2 Drew. 417	709
G. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110	77	Hebgen v. Koefler (Wis.) 73 N. W. 745	719
Griffey v. New York Cent. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202	767	Hackle v. Lurvey, 101 Mass. 344, 3 Am. Rep. 366	841
Griffin v. Mississippi Levee Comrs. 71 Miss. 767	708	Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 558, 25 L. R. A. 554	490
Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 491, 38 Am. Dec. 663	800	Heflebower v. Detrick, 27 W. Va. 16	510
Griswold v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 53 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115	763	Heise v. Murphy, 40 Wis. 276	87
Grove v. Brien, 8 How. 429, 12 L. ed. 1142	104	Henderson v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 86 Ky. 380	727
Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 10 U. S. App. 640, 54 Fed. Rep. 481, 4 C. C. A. 454	540	Hennepin County Comrs. v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199 (Gil. 182)	824
Guthrie v. Guthrie, 71 Iowa, 744	89	Henning v. Louisville Leather Co. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 544	606
v. Philadelphia, 73 Fed. Rep. 688	377	Hennington v. Georgia, 168 U. S. 296, 41 L. ed. 168	704
H.	581	Hequemebourg v. Dunkirk, 49 Hun. 550	824
Habler v. Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 414	676	Hershsfield v. Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. 2 Mont. 103	610
Hagerstown v. Dechert, 82 Md. 369	218	Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acci. Asso. (Mich.) 70 N. W. 400	169
Hale v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. Rep. 557, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 L. R. A. 774	684	v. Van Auker, 11 Misc. 422	373
Halbert v. State, Martin County Comrs. 23 Ind. 125	698	Heuser v. Harris, 42 Ill. 425	443
Halcombe v. Haywood Comrs. 89 N. C. 346	706	Hewett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 4 Mackey, 424	452
Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514, 84 Am. Dec. 511	168	Hewitt v. Wisconsin River Land Co. 81 Wis. 548	731
Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 30 L. R. A. 247, 779, 780, 781	184	Hickey v. Ryan, 19 R. I. 399	329
Haley v. Jump River Lumber Co. 81 Wis. 412	781	Hicks v. Com. 86 Va. 223	736
Hall v. Hollander, 4 Barn. & C. 660	461	Higgins v. Prater, 91 Ky. 18	439
v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 18 Utah, 243	254	Hiles v. Hanover F. Ins. Co. 65 Wis. 585, 56 Am. Rep. 637	124
v. Tuttle, 6 Hill, 38, 40 Am. Dec. 382	176	Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 882	896
v. Vanderpool, 156 Pa. 152	376	v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493	523
v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 28 Vt. 401	89	v. Woodman, 14 Me. 38	318
Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 500, 20 L. ed. 214	769	Hillsboro Comrs. v. Smith, 110 N. C. 417	79
Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581	540	Hilton v. Adams, 71 Me. 19	716
v. Reed, 9 Paige, 446	236	Hines v. Wilcox, 96 Tenn. 148, 34 L. R. A. 824	498
Hamilton v. Goding, 55 Me. 419	984	Hissong v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 91 Ala. 514	380
v. White, 5 N. Y. 9	486	Ho Ah Kow v. Nusan, 5 Sawy. 560	108
Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109	83	Hoare v. Oriental Bank Corp. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 589	254
Hammond v. Carter, 161 Ill. 621	678	Hobart v. Stone, 10 Pick. 215	301
v. Danielson, 126 Mass. 294	829	Hobbs v. Memphis Ins. Co. 1 Speed. 444	54
v. Hall, 10 Sim. 552	765	v. State, 188 Ind. 408, 13 L. R. A. 774	368
Hanauer v. Bartels, 2 Colo. 514	184	Hoffen's Estate, 70 Wis. 522	112
Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112	545	Hoffer v. Gladden, 75 Ga. 532	727
Hano v. Bigelow, 156 Mass. 341	697, 708	Hoffman, Re, 143 N. Y. 387	90
Harbeck v. Sylvester, 13 Wend. 608	756	v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30, 7 Am. Rep. 290	289
Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428	335, 345	Hohner v. Gratz, 52 Fed. Rep. 871	294
v. Second Baptist Church, 51 Mich. 187, 47 Am. Rep. 555	401	Holland v. Alcock, 108 N. Y. 312, 719, 723, 728	635
Harford County Comrs. v. Wise, 71 Md. 52	674	v. Brown, 35 Fed. Rep. 43	732
Harkness v. Woodman, 7 Utah, 227	496	Holmberg v. Hauck, 16 Neb. 387	806
Harman v. Lappenden, 1 East. 555	859	Holmes v. Clarke, 6 Hurst. & N. 349	213
Harper v. Lamping, 38 Cal. 641	681	v. Drew, 151 Mass. 580	799
Barrington v. Miles, 11 Kan. 490, 15 Am. Rep. 355	279	v. Seely, 19 Wend. 507	349
v. Port Huron, 86 Mich. 46, 13 L. R. A. 664	514	Holmes, B. & H. v. Holmes, B. & A. Mfg. Co. 87 Conn. 295, 9 Am. Rep. 324	108
Harris v. Beaven, 11 Bush. 254	579	Holt v. Holt, 42 Ark. 495	685
v. De Pinna, L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 238	366	Home F. Ins. Co. v. Dutcher, 48 Neb. 765	568
v. White, 81 N. Y. 582	757	Hooper v. Baltimore, 12 Md. 464	318
Harris County v. Stewart (Tex.) 41 S. W. 650, 212, 213	161	Hope Lumber Co. v. Foster & L. Hardware Co. 53 Ark. 196	382
Harrison v. Baltimore, 1 Gill, 284	213	Hopkins v. Roseclare Lead Co. 72 Ill. 873	540
v. Berkley, 1 Strobb. L. 525, 47 Am. Dec. 578	495	Horowitz v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. 18 Misc. 24	592
v. Kleer, 73 Ga. 589	685	Horton Mfg. Co. v. Horton Mfg. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 817	88
Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 381, 28 L. ed. 717	90	Hoemer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506	684
Hartford v. Talcott, 48 Conn. 525, 40 Am. Rep. 189	353, 364	Houfe v. Fulton, 29 Wis. 298, 9 Am. Rep. 568	108
Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Amos, 98 Ga. 534	297	House Bill No. 208, Re, 21 Colo. 27	463
v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 U. S. App. 162, 70 Fed. Rep. 201, 17 C. C. A. 62, 30 L. R. A. 198	247	Houser v. Houser, 43 Ga. 415	314
Harvey v. Great Northern R. Co. 50 Minn. 405, 17 L. R. A. 84	104	Hovey v. Hobson, 53 Me. 451, 86 Am. Dec. 705	247
40 L. R. A.	239	Howard v. Skinner (Md.) 40 L. R. A. 758	253
		Howard's Estate, 5 Misc. 295	752
		Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 5 Wall. 508, 18 L. ed. 524	723
		Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45	861

Jewett v. Foster, 14 Gray, 495	401
Jochumsen v. Suffolk Sav. Bank, 3 Allen, 87	501
John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 45	450
Johnson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 9 Va. 171	435
v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374, 32 L. ed. 412	399
v. Dodge, 17 Ill. 442	591
v. Kincaide, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 470	741
v. Northwestern Telegraph. Exch. Co. 48 Minn. 433	461
v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975	108
v. Slappey, 85 Ga. 576	91, 98
v. Spear, 76 Mich. 139	530
v. State, 68 Ga. 606	86, 91, 98
v. Tacoma Cedar Lumber Co. 3 Wash. 722	380
v. Thayer, 17 Me. 408	736
v. Union Marine & F. Ins. Co. 127 Mass. 555	849
Johnston v. Lewis & Clarke Co. 2 Mont. 159	407
v. Turner, 20 Ark. 230	751
Jones v. Boyd, 80 N. C. 258	165
v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415	294
v. Lewis, 2 Ves. Jr. 240	695
v. Parker, 168 Mass. 554	836
v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 92 Iowa, 652	440, 572
Jordan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 40	184
v. Stevens, 51 Me. 78, 81 Am. Dec. 556	387
J. S. Keator Lumber Co. v. St. Croix Boom Corp. 72 Wis. 82	650
Judson v. Etheridge, 1 Crompt. & M. 742	768
Julillard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 28 L. ed. 204	699
Julia Bldg. Asso. v. Bell Teleph. Co. 88 Mo. 258, 57 Am. Rep. 598	372, 373, 374
Julius Winkelmeyer Brewing Asso. v. Nipp, 6 Kan. App. 730	547
K.
Kaiser v. Latimer, 9 App. Div. 37	570
Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630	108
Kearney v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 108 804, 805	907
Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80	477
Keoch v. Sandford, 1 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 4th Am. ed. 64	552
Keene v. New England Mut. Acci. Asso. 161 Mass. 149	440, 451, 455
Kelper v. Klein, 61 Ind. 316	478
Keller v. Ashford, 138 U. S. 610, 33 L. ed. 867, 868, 884	484
Kellorg v. Oshkosh, 14 Wis. 624	844
Kelly v. Home Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 288	848
v. Nichols, 17 R. I. 306	719
v. Partington, 6 Barn. & Ad. 645	685
v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284	848
Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. 98, 11 L. ed. 512	630
Kennedy v. Borie, 166 Pa. 360	553
v. Hazelton, 128 U. S. 667, 32 L. ed. 576	592
v. Knight, 21 Wis. 347, 94 Am. Dec. 543	650
v. Tiernay, 14 R. I. 528	796
Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422	104
Kentzler v. American Mut. Acci. Asso. 88 Wis. 566	835
Kenyon v. Kenyon, 88 Hun. 211	89
Keokuk v. Independent Dist. 53 Iowa, 352, 36 Am. Rep. 226	297
Kern v. Myll, 94 Mich. 477	380
Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 273	294
v. Urie, 86 Md. 72, 38 L. R. A. 119	382
Kerr's Appeal, 89 Pa. 97	976
Keyser v. Rice, 47 Md. 212, 28 Am. Rep. 448	382
Keystone Bridge Co. v. Newberry, 96 Pa. 246, 42 Am. Rep. 543	814
Kick v. Merry, 23 Mo. 72, 66 Am. Dec. 658	356
Kilpatrick v. Richardson, 37 Neb. 731, 40 Neb. 478	584
Kimball v. Cochecho R. Co. 27 N. H. 448, 59 Am. Dec. 387	107
v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 8 Gray. 38	836
Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. 124 Ind. 579, 8 L. R. A. 602	372
King v. Gallun, 109 U. S. 99, 27 L. ed. 870	254
v. Meredith, 2 Campb. 639	541
v. National Min. Exploring Co. 4 Mont. 1	769
v. Wight, 155 Mass. 444	344
v. Winants, 71 N. C. 472, 17 Am. Rep. 11	163
Kingdon v. Nottle, 1 Maule & S. 355	345
Kinnaird v. Standard Oil Co. 89 Ky. 468, 7 L. R. A. 451	185
Kirby v. Boyette, 116 N. C. 165, 118 N. C. 244	417
v. Tallmadge, 100 U. S. 379, 40 L. ed. 463	87

I.

J.

Kitchen v. Greensbaum, 61 Mo. 110.	154	Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 788.	316, 363
Klein v. Bayer, 81 Mich. 234.	143	Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, 89 Am. Dec. 563.	859
Kline v. Baker, 49 Mass. 253.	540	v. Pippin, 31 Ala. 542.	108
Knapp v. Preferred Mut. Accl. Asso. 53 Hun. 447.	452	v. Woods (Mont.) 49 Pac. 437.	690, 709
Knapp Electrical Works v. New York Insulated Wire Co. 157 Ill. 450.	546	Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 419, 70 Am. Dec. 187.	553
Kneeland v. VanValkenburgh, 45 Wis. 494, 82 Am. Rep. 719.	402	v. Silver Bow County Comrs. 15 Mont. 433.	407
Kneetle v. Newcomb, 22 N. Y. 249, 78 Am. Dec. 180.	310	v. Washington Gaslight Co. 1 Mackey, 351	630
Knight v. Lord Plymouth, 8 Atk. 480.	685	Lloyd's v. Harper, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 290.	345
Knop v. National F. Ins. Co. 101 Mich. 360.	363	Loberg v. Amherst, 87 Wis. 634.	463
Knosman & P. Furniture Co. v. Davenport, 95 Iowa, 430.	470, 649	Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419.	372
Knox v. Clark, 123 Mass. 216.	471	Logan v. Stogsdale, 123 Ind. 372, 8 L. H. A. 59.	107
v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 441, 31 L. R. A. 779.	500	Lombard v. Lennox, 155 Mass. 70.	684
Koehler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543.	199	London & C. Bkg. Co. v. London & R. Plate Bank, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 232.	500
Koenigs v. Jung, 73 Wis. 178.	649	London & C. Fire Ins. Co. v. Crunk, 91 Tenn. 376.	568
Kohler, Re. 15 Waash. 613.	695	Long v. Ryan, 30 Gratt. 718.	753
Koonce v. Wallace, 52 N. C. 194.	745	Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 543.	580
Koons v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 23 Iowa, 493.	769	Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290.	492
Kramer v. Conn. 87 Pa. 239.	278	v. Jones, 24 Me. 439, 41 Am. Dec. 391.	763
Kruidler v. Ellison, 47 N. Y. 38, 7 Am. Rep. 402.	537	Loring v. Brodie, 134 Mass. 453.	500
Kuback, Ex parte, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482.	314	v. Salisbury Mills, 125 Mass. 138.	500
Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263.	407	v. Whitney, 167 Mass. 550.	129
L.
La Crosse v. Cameron, 46 U. S. App. 722, 25 C. C. A. 399, 80 Fed. Rep. 264.	402	Lossee v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 495, 10 Am. Rep. 638.	530
Ladd v. Foster, 12 Sawy. 547, 51 Fed. Rep. 837.	806	Lott v. Waycross, 84 Ga. 651.	165
Ladywell v. Mir. Co. v. Brookes, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 400.	842	Lougher v. Williams, 2 Lev. 92.	342
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471.	103	Louisiana, ex rel. Folsom, v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 238, 27 L. ed. 938.	818, 821, 822
Lamb v. Camden & A. R. & Transp. Co. 46 N. Y. 271, 9 Am. Rep. 327.	570	Ranger v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 132.	819
Lamb's Case, 9 Coke, 562.	663	Southern Bank v. Pillsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 28 L. ed. 1090.	818, 821
Lambert v. Alcorn, 144 Ill. 813, 21 L. R. A. 611.	471	Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ballard, 85 Ky. 307.	484
Lamont v. Solano County, 49 Cal. 158.	407	v. Copping, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 200.	824
Lampe v. Kennedy, 55 Wis. 249.	399, 400	v. Orr, 61 Ala. 548.	103
Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetta, 165 Ill. 592, 36 L. R. A. 640.	240	Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93.	103
Lancaster v. Roberts, 144 Ill. 223.	101	Lovejoy v. Board of Trustees, 99 Ill. 564.	617
Lancaster Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 304.	362	Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702.	314
Land v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 72.	417	Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39.	236
Landreth v. Landreth, 22 Fed. Rep. 41.	635	Lucas v. New York C. R. Co. 21 Barb. 245.	806
Lannan v. Smith, 7 Gray, 150.	736	Lucke v. Clothing Cutters, & T. Assembly No. 7507, K. of L. 77 Md. 398, 19 L. R. A. 408.	284
Lapworth v. Leach, 79 Mich. 16.	594	Lumbard v. Stearns, 4 Cush. 80.	660
Larson v. Peoria, A. & D. R. Co. 77 Ill. 11.	198	Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216.	84
Larson v. Furlong, 50 Wis. 681.	651	v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604.	100
Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776.	313	Lung Chun v. Northern F. R. Co. 10 Sawy. 17, 19 Fed. Rep. 25.	806
Latrobe v. Baltimore, 19 Md. 14.	382	Lybe's Appeal, 108 Pa. 628, 51 Am. Rep. 542.	184
Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 14 L. R. A. 108.	895	Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 14.	475
Lawrence v. Ballou, 50 Cal. 258.	789	Lyndon v. Lyndon, 69 Ill. 43.	265
v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 288.	863	M.
v. Taylor, 5 Hill, 114.	698	McCabe v. Fowler, 84 N. Y. 315.	695
Lea v. Lea, 104 N. C. 608.	742	v. Illinois C. R. Co. 4 McCrary, 492, 13 Fed. Rep. 827.	769
Leach v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 248.	212	McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 18 Kan. 46.	806
Leavitt v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 89 Me. 509, 36 L. R. A. 382.	380	v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Bliss, 332.	657
Le Clercq v. Gallipolis, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 217, 28 Am. Dec. 641.	404	v. York County Sav. Bank, 74 Me. 815, 43 Am. Rep. 591.	390
Ledgerwood v. State, 134 Ind. 91.	111	McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500.	319
Lee v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 3 Gray, 583.	384	McClellan v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 58 Minn. 104.	462, 463
Leech v. Schwedder, L. R. 9 Ch. 493.	756	McConnell v. Lemley, 48 La. Ann. 1433, 34 L. R. A. 609.	390
Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264.	314	M'Coombs v. Tuttle, 5 Blackf. 431.	663
Leeper v. Bates, 85 Mo. 228.	87	McCormick v. District of Columbia, 4 Mackey, 396, 54 Am. Rep. 284.	374
Leete v. State Bank (Mo.) 42 S. W. 1074.	288	McCourt v. Eckstein, 22 Wis. 153.	578
Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203.	198	McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 11 L. ed. 397.	819
Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 88 Pa. 432.	814	McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 385, 24 L. ed. 248.	153
Lehman v. Robertson, 84 Ala. 489.	695	McCuiley v. State, 62 Ind. 426.	111
Leonard v. Belknap, 47 Vt. 603.	507	McCullough v. Phenix Ins. Co. 113 Mo. 606.	655
v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145.	759	McCutcheon v. Smith, 173 Pa. 101.	553
Leprell v. Kleinschmidt, 112 N. Y. 864.	578	McDaniel v. Springfield Waterworks Co. 48 Mo. App. 273.	660
Lester v. Jackson, 69 Miss. 887.	831	McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 367, 14 L. ed. 782.	831
Levi v. Booth, 58 Md. 318, 42 Am. Rep. 832.	384	McDonough v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 82.	87
Levicks v. Walker, 15 La. Ann. 245, 77 Am. Dec. 187.	310, 312	McFadden v. O'Donnell, 18 Cal. 180.	239
Levy, Ex parte, 43 Ark. 43, 51 Am. Rep. 550.	714, 715	McFarland v. United States Mut. Accl. Asso. 124 Mo. 204.	655
v. Goldberg, 40 Wis. 308.	318	McFarlane v. Sullivan (Wis.) 74 N. W. 550.	463
v. Levy, 33 N. Y. 107.	728	McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106.	87
Libbey v. Telford, 48 Me. 316, 77 Am. Dec. 229.	753
Lincoln v. Hapgood, 11 Mass. 350.	245
v. Haugen, 45 Minn. 451.
Lindsay v. Kendrick, 30 Ga. 546.
Linn v. Chambersburg, 180 Pa. 511, 25 L. R. A. 217.

McGlinchey v. Fidelity & C. Co. 80 Me. 261	657	Methodist Episcopal Church v. Hoboken, 38 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 698	405
McGoon v. Irvin, 1 Pinney, 532, 44 Am. Dec. 409	581, 583	Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 U. S. App. 503, 82 Fed. Rep. 158	150
McGowan v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 211, 41 Am. Rep. 843	384	v. Powell, 89 Ga. 601	93
McGowan Bros. Pump & Mach. Co. v. McGowan, 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 330	635	Metropolitan Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Colwell Lead Co. 18 Jones & S. 488	374
McGuire v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 42 N. Y. S. R. 324	88	Michigan C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 60 Ill. App. 190	548
McHugh v. McCole (Wis.) 40 L. R. A. 724	719, 732	v. Smithson, 45 Mich. 212	362
v. Schuylkill County, 67 Pa. 391, 5 Am. Rep. 445	473	Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 11 L. ed. 1076	237
McKee v. Bainter (Neb.) 72 N. W. 1044	537	Middlefield v. Church Mills Knitting Co., 180 Mass. 287	339
McKenzie v. Cheetham, 83 Me. 543	879	Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 187, 20 L. R. A. 765	440
McKeon v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 667, 83 Am. Dec. 86	239	v. Dayton, 87 Iowa, 423	88
McKethan v. Cumberland County Comrs. 92 N. C. 243	168	v. Seaman, 176 Pa. 231	538, 546
McLane v. Hobbs, 74 Md. 171	753, 754	v. State, 8 Ohio St. 475	198
McLarin v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 85 Ga. 504	748	v. Wolf, 63 Iowa, 238	378
McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 693, 84 L. R. A. 812	809	Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869	314, 315
v. Marston, 78 Wis. 870	541	Miligan v. Wedge, 12 Ad. & El. 737	814
v. State, 45 Ind. 338	111	Mills v. Bennett, 94 Tenn. 651	310
McLln v. Neuburn, 70 N. C. 12	168	v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98	559
McMullan v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 13 Misc. 392	810	Milne v. Davidson, 5 Mart. N. S. 586, 18 Am. Dec. 189	168
McNamee v. Minke, 49 Md. 188	384	Milroy v. Lord, 4 DeG. F. & J. 264	130
McNeal v. Braun, 53 N. J. L. 617	545	Milwaukee v. Milwaukee & B. R. Co. 7 Wis. 85	651
M'Niel v. Holbrook, 12 Pet. 84, 9 L. ed. 1009	559	Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 256	656, 684
Maghee v. Camden & A. R. Transp. Co. 45 N. Y. 514, 6 Am. Rep. 124	363	Miner v. Brader, 65 Wis. 587	649
Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 330	153	Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Beck, 64 N. W. 637, 95 Iowa, 725	313
Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 251, 28 Am. Dec. 461	184	Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 321, 34 L. ed. 457	254
Maher v. Boston & A. R. Co. 158 Mass. 36	804	Mishler v. Reed, 78 Pa. 76	249
Maier, Ex parte , 103 Cal. 476	153	Missouri Furnace Co. v. Abend, 107 Ill. 44, 47 Am. Rep. 425	791
Maire v. Kruse, 35 Wis. 303, 26 L. R. A. 449	649	Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878	610
Mali v. Lord, 39 N. Y. 381, 100 Am. Dec. 448	475	Missouri P. R. Co. v. Bennett, 5 Kan. App. 231	806
Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410	657	v. Roads, 33 Kan. 640	464
Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 35 L. ed. 159	158	Mitchell v. Ede, 11 Ad. & El. 888	548
Maney v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 49 Ill. App. 105	103	Mitchell v. Freedley, 10 Pa. 198	312
Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Alexander, 89 Hun, 449	88	v. Negaunee (Mich.) 88 L. R. A. 157	169
Manning v. Mitcherson, 69 Ga. 447, 47 Am. Rep. 764	506	v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L. R. A. 781	663, 684
Manuel v. Cumberland County Comrs. 98 N. C. 9	678	Mobile v. Yulie, 8 Ala. 140, 35 Am. Dec. 441	615
Manufacturers' Acci. Indemnity Co. v. Doran, 16 U. S. App. 290, 58 Fed. Rep. 945, 22 L. R. A. 620, 7 C. C. A. 581, 440, 443, 451	451	Mohney v. Cook, 26 Pa. 342, 67 Am. Dec. 419	492, 493
Markham v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 119 N. C. 715	748	Mouroe v. Holmes, 9 Allen, 244	67
Marmaduke, Ex parte , 91 Mo. 232, 60 Am. Rep. 250	154	Montague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. 189	100, 101
Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 400	790	Montefiori v. Montefiori, 1 W. Bl. 384	243
v. Mitchell, 25 Wis. 706	649	Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Merrick, 61 Ala. 534	239
Martin v. Missouri P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 476	806	Moody v. State, 48 Ala. 115, 17 Am. Rep. 28	198
v. South Salem Land Co. 94 Va. 243	657	Moog v. Randolph, 77 Ala. 597	198
v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 1 Post. & F. 505	440	Mooney v. Holcomb, 15 Or. 639	92
Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 821	194	Moore v. Eure, 101 N. C. 11	686
Mason, Ex parte , 29 Or. 18	828	v. Hall, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 178	757
Masterson v. Munro, 105 Cal. 431	774	v. Moore, 1 Bro. Ch. 128	616
Mathews v. Shores, 24 Ill. 27	109	v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474	130
Mauldin v. Greenville, 33 S. C. 1, 8 L. R. A. 291	165, 169	v. Robinson, 62 Ala. 567	472
Maxton Comrs. v. Robeson County Comrs. 107 N. C. 236	718	v. United States, 150 U. S. 57, 37 L. ed. 996	278
Meador v. Place, 43 N. H. 306	751	v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 5 L. R. A. 664	668
Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 231, 96 Am. Dec. 759	684	Moran v. Moran (Iowa) 39 L. R. A. 204	720
Meagley v. Hoyt, 125 N. Y. 771	87	Morin v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 103	407
Hee v. McNider, 109 N. Y. 500	538, 541	Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925	817, 818, 820
Megette v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 329	734	Morrell v. Quarles, 35 Ala. 548	265
Mehrhoft v. Mehrhoff, 26 Fed. Rep. 13	560	Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 23	108
Meier v. Shunk, 79 Iowa, 22	118	v. State, Guessert, 65 Tex. 59	207
Mellen v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 609	836	v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 561	525
Melvin v. Easley, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 386, 62 Am. Dec. 171	558	v. Woodburn, 57 Ohio St. 330	296
Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Freed, 38 Ark. 614	542	Morrison v. Marquardt, 24 Iowa, 35, 92 Am. Dec. 444	478
Mennelley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 143 N. Y. 596, 31 L. R. A. 686	653	Mortimore v. Wright, 6 Mees. & W. 482	534
Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 762, 28 L. R. A. 72	685	Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 62, 84 Am. Dec. 114	320
Meracle v. Down, 64 Wis. 323	198	Mosier v. Caldwell, 7 Nev. 363	185
Merchants' Exch. Bank v. McGraw, 48 U. S. App. 55, 76 Fed. Rep. 930, 22 C. C. A. 622	540	Mount v. State, Ritchey, 90 Ind. 26, 46 Am. Rep. 182	700
Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hill, 86 Mo. 466	821	Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 305, 496, 714	714
Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Bangs, 102 Mass. 291	539	Mulchahey v. Washburn Car Wheel Co. 145 Mass. 231	804
Merkle v. State, 37 Ala. 139	558	Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. 10 Wash. 311	104
Merris v. Goodwin, 1 Root, 209	690	Mullaly v. People, 89 N. Y. 365	514, 524
Merrimack River Sav. Bank v. Lowell, 152 Mass. 555, 10 L. R. A. 122	660	Mullen v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 128, 2 Am. Rep. 879	184, 478
Merritt v. Swimley, 82 Va. 433	625	Mulligan v. People, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 105	439
40 L. R. A.		Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 126, 24 L. ed. 84	391, 392
		Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333	252
		Munshower v. State, 65 Md. 11, 39 Am. Rep. 414	559
		Murphy v. Bolger Bros. 60 Vt. 723	578
		v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184	806
		Murray v. J. J. Nichols, 34 N. Y. S. R. 62	547
		v. New York L. Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 236	572, 574
		Musch v. Burkhart, 83 Iowa, 301, 12 L. R. A. 484	627
		Musser v. King, 40 Neb. 892	764
		Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio, 233	696, 697

Mynard v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 180, 27 Am. Rep. 28.....	104	O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477.....	676
N.		O'Hara v. Miller, 64 Iowa, 462.....	118
Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Prince, 2 Heisk. 580.....	806	Omaha v. Richards, 49 Neb. 244.....	583
v. Starnes, 9 Heisk. 52, 24 Am. Rep. 296.....	427	Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, 30 Neb. 85.....	534
Nason v. Erie County Directors of Poor, 126 Pa. 445.....	696, 706	Omaha Street R. Co. v. Leigh, 49 Neb. 762.....	534
National Bank v. Leonard, 91 Ga. 805.....	248	Omro Supers. v. Kaime, 39 Wis. 438.....	708
National Masonic Accl. Asso. v. Shryock, 36 U. S. App. 658, 73 Fed. Rep. 774, 20 C. C. A. 3.....	658	O'Neill v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 72, 23 L. R. A. 715.....	502
Neal v. Neal, 58 Cal. 288.....	279	Opinion of the Justices, 52 N. H. 622.....	198
v. Wilcox, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 146, 67 Am. Dec. 266.....	493	Oregon, The, 78 Fed. Rep. 846.....	805
Necker v. Harvey, 49 Mich. 519.....	580	Orr v. Pennington, 92 Va. 268.....	238
Neime v. Steiner Bros. 113 Ala. 562.....	92	Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640.....	198
Neptune, The, 6 Blatchf. 189.....	570	Osway v. Sadleir, 33 L. T. 46.....	193
Neshkoro v. Nest, 85 Wis. 126.....	658	Ovitt v. Smith, 68 Vt. 35, 35 L. R. A. 223.....	429
New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112, 77 Am. Dec. 60.....	185	Owen, Ex parte , 6 Ves. Jr. 11.....	194
Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297, 56 Am. Dec. 717.....	382	Owens v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 95 Mo. 169.....	833
Newmeyer v. Missouri & M. R. Co. 52 Mo. 81, 14 Am. Rep. 94.....	502	P.
New Orleans Gaslight & Bkg. Co. v. Paulding, 12 Rob. (La.) 378.....	661	Paddock v. Commercial Ins. Co. 104 Mass. 521.....	570
New Orleans Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bagley, 19 La. Ann. 69.....	312	Pagge v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272.....	772
Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Elifort, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 600.....	103	Paine v. Benton, 32 Wis. 498.....	450
New Providence Twp. v. McEachron, 33 N. J. L. 389.....	704	P. & Trumbull, 33 Wis. 184.....	464
Newton Mfg. Co. v. White, 42 Ga. 148.....	708	Pakenham's Case, Y. B. 42 Edw. III. p. 3, pl. 14.....	339
New York, R. 11 Johns. 80.....	285	Palmer v. Andover, 2 Cush. 600.....	483
Re, 99 N. Y. 569.....	831	v. Hawes, 73 Wis. 50.....	734
New York & N. E. R. Co.'s Appeal, 62 Conn. 527.....	482	v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429.....	293
New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627.....	353	Palmer v. Carey, 63 Wis. 426.....	804
New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 608, 37 L. ed. 301.....	789	Panama & S. P. Teleg. Co. v. India Rubber, G. P. & Teleg. Works Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 526.....	232
Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. DeGraff, 12 Mich. 124.....	849	Pardee v. Treat, 82 N. Y. 385.....	864
Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302, 107 v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 120 N. C. 496.....	108, 417	Paris v. Moe, 60 Ga. 90.....	249
Nicol v. Crittenden, 55 Ga. 497.....	90	Parker v. Bennett, 11 Allen. 388.....	757
Nicolai v. Davis, 91 Wis. 370.....	650	v. Foote, 19 Wend. 809.....	478
Nieto v. Clark, 1 Cliff. 145.....	484	Patton v. Rambo, 20 Ala. 485.....	87
Nitsch v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 152 N. Y. 638.....	766, 767, 768	v. State, 93 Ga. 111, 24 L. R. A. 732.....	505
Noble v. Adams, 7 Taunt. 59.....	542	Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 112 N. Y. 472, 3 L. R. A. 443.....	657
Nobles County v. Hamline University, 46 Minn. 316.....	122	Pauley v. Steam Gauge & Lantern Co. 181 N. Y. 90, 15 L. R. A. 194.....	414
Noell v. Gaines, 38 Mo. 649.....	158	Payne v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 193 Mo. 562.....	749
Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 70 Conn. 159.....	83	v. Crawford, 102 Ala. 383.....	87
Noonan v. Kemp, 84 Md. 73, 6 Am. Rep. 307.....	381	Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 217 (Gil. 137).....	566
Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 56 Am. Rep. 542.....	401, 402	Peake v. Buell, 90 Wis. 508.....	734
v. James, 140 Mass. 188.....	337, 342, 344	Pearl v. McDowell, 3 J. J. Marsh. 659, 20 Am. Dec. 199.....	252
v. Norcross, 53 Me. 169.....	434	Pearson v. Hopkins, 2 N. J. L. 181.....	319
Norfolk & N. R. Co. v. Dunnaway, 93 Va. 29.....	434	Peck v. Hutchinson, 88 Iowa, 320.....	550
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brown, 91 Va. 668.....	87	v. James, 3 Head, 75.....	609, 706
Norris v. Blethen, 19 Me. 343.....	187	Peetz v. Charles Street R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 541.....	88
North American L. & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 3 Am. Rep. 212.....	449, 657	Pelican Ins. Co. v. Troy Co-operative Asso. 77 Tex. 225.....	568
Northern Liberties v. St. John's Church, 13 Pa. 104.....	285	Pennegear v. State, 87 Tenn. 244, 2 L. R. A. 708.....	429
Northern Pine Land Co. v. Bigelow, 84 Wis. 163, 21 L. R. A. 776.....	650	Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 364.....	789
Northern P. R. Co. v. Hogan, 27 U. S. App. 184, 33 Fed. Rep. 102, 11 C. C. A. 51.....	559	Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 259, 98 Am. Dec. 846.....	427
North Missouri R. Co. v. Akers, 4 Kan. 453, 16 Am. Dec. 183.....	769	Penny v. Rochester R. Co. 7 App. Div. 596.....	176
Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1086.....	495	People v. Ashauer, 47 Cal. 98.....	274
Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Park Hotel Co. 37 Wis. 125.....	318	v. Baker, 78 N. Y. 73, 82 Am. Rep. 274.....	264
Norton v. Ladd, 5 N. H. 204, 20 Am. Dec. 573.....	515	v. Barkin, 88 Cal. 17.....	270
Norwood v. Harness, 98 Ind. 134, 49 Am. Rep. 789.....	695	v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 613.....	278
Nugent v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 62.....	379	v. Canal Board, 55 N. Y. 390.....	502
Nys v. Biemeret, 44 Wis. 104.....	649	v. Craig, 111 Cal. 480.....	278
O.		v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285.....	115
Oakland Paving Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479.....	198	v. Cunningham, 68 Cal. 668.....	278
Oakley v. Aspiwall, 3 N. Y. 547.....	320	v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.....	651
Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Asso. v. Asbury Park Comrs. 40 N. J. Eq. 447.....	184	v. Eaton, 100 Mich. 208, 24 L. R. A. 721.....	373
Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. 157, 10 L. ed. 105.....	849	v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 458.....	279
O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23.....	294	v. Hall, 48 Mich. 432, 42 Am. Rep. 477.....	568
Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. 123, 22 L. ed. 827.....	353	v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423.....	278
		v. Hillsdale & C. Turnp. Road, 25 Wend. 264.....	207
		v. Jaehne, 103 N. Y. 182.....	304
		v. Lane, 101 Cal. 517.....	278
		v. Leach, 10 Cal. 96.....	279
		v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55.....	278
		v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 584.....	278
		v. McWhorter, 4 Barb. 458.....	85
		v. Mahoney, 18 Cal. 181.....	319
		v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159.....	430
		v. Murray, 55 Cal. 350.....	278
		v. Powers, 147 N. Y. 104, 35 L. R. A. 502.....	728
		v. Reilly, 106 Cal. 649.....	279
		v. Robles, 29 Cal. 421.....	278
		v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 541.....	278
		v. Russell, 46 Cal. 123.....	278
		v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216.....	278
		v. Seagrave, 8 Cow. 139.....	78
		v. Smith, 106 Cal. 74.....	278
		v. Sprague, 54 Cal. 92.....	279
		v. Sweeney, 41 Hun. 383.....	82
		v. Thurber, 13 Ill. 556.....	617

- People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227.
 v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 300, 84 Am. Dec. 351.
 v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138.
 v. Williams, 24 Cal. 31.
 v. Winters, 29 Cal. 661.
 Barnes v. Starnes, 35 Ill. 121, 85 Am. Dec. 348.
 Bradley v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 420.
 Bradley v. Shaw, 133 N. Y. 493, 16 L. R. A. 606.
 Burby v. Auburn, 85 Hun. 601.
 Burgess v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 302.
 Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem Twp. Board, 30 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400.
 Doherty v. New York Police Comrs. 84 Hun. 64.
 Dunham v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 558.
 Gould v. Commissioners of Excise, 61 How. Pr. 514.
 Hadley v. Albany County Supers. 28 How. Pr. 22.
 Herdman v. Rose, 163 Ill. 422.
 Johnson v. New York Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 401.
 Kennedy v. Manhattan Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. 138.
 McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11.
 Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591.
 Nash v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477.
 Pond v. Saratoga Springs, 4 App. Div. 399.
 Roe v. Suffolk Common Pleas, 18 Wend. 530.
 Woodruff v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 451, 771, 774.
 Peoria & P. U. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 109 Ill. 135, 50 Am. Rep. 605.
 Perkins v. Ledbetter, 68 Miss. 327.
 Perman v. Ward, 2 Mass. 203, 3 Am. Dec. 48.
 Perry v. Central R. Co. 65 Ga. 751.
 v. Salt Lake City, 7 Utah, 143, 11 L. R. A. 445.
 Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345.
 v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 182.
 Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 130.
 Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. (Va.) 676.
 Pettr v. Looker, 21 N. Y. 267.
 Peugh v. Davis, 98 U. S. 332, 24 L. ed. 775.
 Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 12 L. ed. 1060.
 Phelps v. Racer, 80 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140.
 Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545.
 v. Smith, 23 W. N. C. 242.
 v. Women's Christian Assn. 125 Pa. 572.
 Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219.
 Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Boren, 83 Tex. 97.
 Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 470.
 Picker v. London County Bkg. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 515.
 Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 144 Pa. 79, 13 L. R. A. 661.
 Piedmont & A. Life Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 277, 23 L. ed. 610.
 Pierce v. Delamater, 1 N. Y. 17.
 v. Drew, 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7.
 Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524.
 Pine v. New Orleans, 19 La. Ann. 274.
 Pine v. Smith, 11 Gray, 38.
 Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427.
 Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 584.
 v. Hall, 156 Mass. 225.
 Pinnington v. Galland, 9 Exch. 1.
 Pittsburgh, W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 309, 23 Am. Rep. 751.
 Pittsburgh Minn. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307.
 Pitzer v. Russell, 4 Cr. 124.
 Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 620, 91 Am. Dec. 72.
 Plaster v. Plaster, 47 Ill. 290.
 Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223.
 Plummer v. Dill, 156 Mass. 426.
 Plunkieka v. Macknart, 91 Mich. 399.
 Pollak v. Harmon, 94 Ala. 430.
 Pollard v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 63 Miss. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 805.
 Pond v. Allen, 15 R. I. 171.
 Pool v. Boston, 5 Cush. 219.
 v. Gott, 14 Law Rep. 269.
 Pope v. Western U. Tele. Co. 9 Ill. App. 238.
 Porter v. Woodruff, 38 N. J. Eq. 174.
 Portland & H. S. B. Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370.
 Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. v. Davis, 95 Ga. 299.
 Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. 613.
 Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Irvine, 49 Fed. Rep. 113.
 40 L. R. A.
 Potter v. Third Nat. Bank, 102 U. S. 163, 26 L. ed. 111.
 v. Titcomb, 7 Me. 302.
 v. Titcomb, 10 Me. 53.
 Potts, Wollerton, v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 361, 24 Am. Dec. 379.
 Poulton v. London & S.W. R. Co. L. R. 2 Q. B. 534.
 Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350.
 v. Lantry, 173 Pa. 543.
 Power v. Cassidy, 79 N. Y. 602, 35 Am. Rep. 560.
 Powers v. Loughridge, 38 N. J. Eq. 396.
 Prader v. National Masonic Accl. Asso. 95 Iowa, 149.
 Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78.
 Pratt v. Lincoln County, 61 Wis. 62.
 Pray v. Mitchell, 60 Me. 430.
 Prentice v. Dehon, 10 Allen, 353.
 v. Duluth Storage & F. Co. 19 U. S. App. 100, 58 Fed. Rep. 457, 7 C. C. A. 236.
 Presby v. Klickitat County, 5 Wash. 329.
 Pressley v. Mobile & G. R. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 199.
 Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 458.
 Price v. Price, 91 Iowa, 693, 29 L. R. A. 150.
 v. Thompson, 48 Mo. 361.
 Prichard v. Thompson, 95 N. Y. 76, 47 Am. Rep. 9.
 Prickett v. Muck, 74 Wis. 199.
 Priewe v. Wisconsin State Land & Improv. Co. 93 Wis. 547, 33 L. R. A. 645.
 Prince v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 101 Mass. 542, 100 Am. Dec. 123.
 Providence L. Ins. & L. Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310.
 Puger Sound Nat. Bank v. Levy, 10 Wash. 499.
 Pugh v. Jones, 6 Leigh, 299.
 Pullman v. Hill [1891] 1 Q. B. 524.
 Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L. R. A. 203.
 Purdy v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 309.
 Putnam v. Tillotson, 13 Met. 517.
 Pye v. Faxon, 155 Mass. 471.
 Pym v. Great Northern R. Co. 4 Best & S. 396.
 Q.
 Quackenbush v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 78 Iowa, 458.
 v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co. 62 Wis. 411.
 Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.
 Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 47 Ohio St. 409, 9 L. R. A. 45.
 Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 365, 5 L. R. A. 848.
 Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231, 20 Am. Rep. 248.
 R.
 Racine v. Crotzenberg, 61 Wis. 481, 50 Am. Rep. 149.
 v. Emerson, 35 Wis. 80.
 v. J. I. Chase Plow Co. 56 Wis. 539.
 Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357.
 Raden v. Georgia R. Co. 78 Ga. 47.
 Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep. 722.
 Raisin v. Clarke, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66.
 Raleigh Gaslight Co. v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 274.
 Ramsey v. Ramsey, 121 Ind. 215, 6 L. R. A. 682.
 Randall v. Eastern R. Co. 106 Mass. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 327.
 v. Persons, 42 Neb. 607.
 Randles v. Waukesha County, 96 Wis. 629.
 Ranney v. Higby, 5 Wis. 62.
 Ransome v. Bearden, 50 Tex. 128.
 Rawlins v. Wickham, 3 DeG. & J. 304.
 Raymond v. Fitch, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 588.
 Read v. Williams, 125 N. Y. 571.
 Reed v. Spicer, 27 Cal. 58.
 Reese v. Biddle, 122 Pa. 79.
 Reg. v. Cheeseman, 9 Cox, C. C. 108.
 v. Courvoisier, 9 Car. & P. 362.
 v. Robinson, 23 L. J. M. C. N. S. 58.
 v. Taylor, 11 East & F. 511.
 Reichenbach v. Quin, 1 L. R. 21 Eq. 138.
 Reingolds v. Edwards, Willes 238.
 Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552.
 v. Racine, 61 Wis. 526.
 Rennyson's Appeal, 94 Pa. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 777.

Bexford v. Knight, 11 N. Y. 308.....	822	Sanger v. Nightingale, 122 U. S. 176, 30 L. ed. 1105.....	821
Bexroth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 85.....	690	Sanner v. Patton, 155 Ill. 553.....	620
Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244.....	724	Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 78 N. C. 153.....	170
Rhode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 586.....	138	Sauer v. Union Oil Co. 43 La. Ann. 699.....	88
Rhymer's Appeal, 93 Pa. 142, 39 Am. Rep. 736.....	719, 730, 732	Saunders v. Reilly, 105 N. Y. 12, 59 Am. Rep. 472.....	301
Rice v. Com. 102 Pa. 408.....	89	v. Saunders, 154 Mass. 337.....	333
v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371.....	759	Savannah v. Hussey, 21 Ga. 80.....	214
Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467.....	538, 584	Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Gray, 77 Ga. 444, 90, 82	243
v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11.....	130	Savings Bank v. Bates, 8 Conn. 505.....	198
v. LaTourette, 119 N. Y. 54.....	665, 666	Sayre v. Pollard, 77 Ala. 603.....	463
Richardson v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 843.....	653	Scannal v. Cambridge, 183 Mass. 91.....	763
Richmond v. Foss, 77 Me. 560.....	492	Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 Mees. & W. 270.....	559
Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 3 L. R. A. 808.....	838	Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 598.....	401
v. Garner, 61 Ga. 27.....	90	Schenk v. Evoy, 24 Cal. 110.....	828
Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore, 94 Va. 493, 37 L. R. A. 258.....	347	Schenley v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 472.....	463
Riesner v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 89 Tex. 656, 58 L. R. A. 171.....	206	Schillinger v. Verona, 83 Wis. 317.....	300
Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408.....	294	Schmidlapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 80 Am. Rep. 530.....	489
Riley v. Connecticut River R. Co. 135 Mass. 292.....	649	Schmidt v. Abraham Lincoln Lodge, 84 Ky. 460.....	107
v. Griffin, 18 Ga. 144, 60 Am. Dec. 726.....	840	v. Quinn, 136 Mass. 575.....	451
Ring v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 39 Am. Rep. 574.....	463	Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co. 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157.....	90
Ripon v. Bittel, 80 Wis. 619.....	558	Schnell v. Toomer, 56 Ga. 163.....	749
Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345.....	198	Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224.....	500
Roach v. Consolidated Imperial Min. Co. 7 Sawy. 224, 7 Fed. Rep. 698.....	806	v. Earl Londesborough [1895] 1 Q. B. 536, [1896] A. C. 514.....	732
Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352.....	184	Schouler, Petitioner, 134 Mass. 426.....	721
Roberts, Re, 5 Colo. 530.....	198	Schultz, Re (Mich.), 71 N. W. 1079.....	759
Robinson v. Mollett, L. R. 7 H. L. 802.....	237	v. Schultz, 89 N. Y. 644.....	376
v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 7 Utah, 493, 13 L. R. A. 765.....	397	Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 829.....	89
v. Pogue, 86 Ala. 257.....	540	Schwier v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 558.....	700
Roche v. State, 82 Ga. 535.....	93	Selo Bd. of Edu. v. McLandsborough, 36 Ohio St. 227, 38 Am. Rep. 582.....	698
Rochester v. Campbell, 123 N. Y. 405, 10 L. R. A. 393.....	297	Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 1059.....	765
Rock v. Stinger, 36 Ind. 346.....	698	r. Delabunt, 5 Lans. 372.....	610
Rockefeller v. Merritt, 40 U. S. App. 666, 76 Fed. Rep. 909, 22 C. C. A. 608, 35 L. R. A. 633.....	655	r. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. ed. 632.....	501
Rockland Water Co. v. Adams, 64 Me. 472.....	680	r. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896.....	757
Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 12 L. R. A. 746.....	530	r. Pape, L. R. 31, Ch. Div. 554.....	684
Roe v. Birkenhead, L. & C. Junction R. Co. 7 Exch. 34.....	475	r. Shepherd, 2 W. Bl. 822.....	194
Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 782.....	103	v. Van Alostyne, 9 Johns. 216.....	92
Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 Mich. 192.....	252	Soovill v. Baldwin, 27 Conn. 316.....	544
v. Gosnell, 51 Mo. 466.....	363	Seaborn v. Maddy, 9 Car. & P. 497.....	248
v. Park, 4 Humph. 480.....	525	Seaman, Re, 147 N. Y. 69.....	751
Rome v. Cabot, 28 Ga. 50.....	168	Sears v. Sears, 45 Tex. 559.....	550
Roosevelt, Re, 143 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 695, 288, 289.....	708	Seaver v. Adams, 66 N. H. 142.....	252
Rose v. Douglas Twp. 52 Kan. 451, 698, 708, 707.....	678	v. Phelps, 11 Pick. 304, 22 Am. Dec. 372.....	864
v. Vertin, 46 Mich. 457, 41 Am. Rep. 174, 675, 676.....	429	Second Nat. Bank v. Grand Lodge, F. & A. A. Masons, 98 U. S. 123, 25 L. ed. 75.....	719, 720
Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 321.....	245	Seda v. Huble, 75 Iowa, 429.....	623
v. Wright, 12 Ga. 509.....	666	Seeger v. Mueller, 123 Ill. 60.....	539
Rothschild v. Mack, 115 N. Y. 8.....	407	Seeligson v. Phillbrick, 30 Fed. Rep. 600.....	719, 722
Rowe v. Yuba County, 17 Cal. 62.....	607	Seibert's Appeal, 13 W. N. C. 276.....	819
Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 306, 23 Am. Dec. 607.....	542	v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161.....	496
Runt v. Herring, 2 Miss. 105.....	603	Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 133, 34 Am. Rep. 604.....	762
Ruppel v. Schlegel, 55 Hun, 183.....	738	Selby v. McQuillan, 45 Neb. 512.....	514
Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa, 443.....	678	Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 166 U. S. 698, 41 L. ed. 1169.....	89
Russell, Re, 51 Conn. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 55.....	356	Seward v. Garlin, 33 Vt. 584.....	806
v. Barstow, 144 Mass. 130.....	181	v. The Vera Cruz, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 59, 804.....	828
v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co. 84 Iowa, 93.....	589	Sexton v. Rhames, 13 Wis. 99.....	753
v. Jackson, 2 Pick. 574.....	107	Shaeffer v. Gilbert, 73 Md. 66.....	213
v. McLellan, 14 Pick. 63.....	592	Shaffer v. Mumma, 17 Md. 331, 79 Am. Dec. 656.....	678
Ruth v. Oberbrunner, 40 Wis. 233.....	727	Sharp v. Contra Costa County, 34 Cal. 284.....	279
Rutherford v. Taylor, 38 Mo. 315.....	404	v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 405.....	757
Ryall v. Rolle, 1 Atk. 180.....	616	v. Ropes, 110 Mass. 381.....	163
Ryan v. Staples, 40 U. S. App. 427, 76 Fed. Rep. 721, 22 C. C. A. 541.....	559	v. Taylor, 2 Phill. Ch. 801.....	285
Ryers, Re, 72 N. Y. 1, 29 Am. Rep. 88.....	820	Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167, 59 Am. Rep. 759.....	314
S.
St. John v. American Mut. F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 Duer, 371, 11 N. Y. 516.....	569	Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931.....	743
St. Louis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Mo. 92.....	297	Shaw v. Burney, 39 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 149.....	500
St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Jones (Tex.) 14 S. W. 309.....	586	v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. ed. 892.....	500
St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 11 Mo. 378, 49 Am. Dec. 74.....	655	v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 1 Am. Rep. 115, 97 Am. Dec. 107.....	500
St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 485.....	838	Sheafe v. Wait, 30 Vt. 735.....	401
Salem-Bedford Stone Co. v. Hobbs, 11 Ind. App. 27.....	810	Sheboygan v. Sheboygan & F. du L. R. Co. 21 Wis. 668.....	651
v. O'Brien, 12 Ind. App. 217.....	810	Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Hull Coal & Coke Co. 101 Ala. 446.....	546
Salisbury v. Andrews, 123 Mass. 336.....	756	Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 410.....	661
Samuel v. Kittenger, 6 Wash. 261.....	301	Shellenberg v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 45 Neb. 487.....	533, 546
San Antonio v. Gould, 34 Tex. 49.....	213	Shepherd v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479, 15 Wis. 313, 32 Am. Dec. 679.....	660
40 L. R. A.		v. Missouri P. R. Co. 85 Mo. 629, 55 Am. Rep. 390.....	838
		Sheridan v. New Quay Co. 4 C. B. N. S. 818.....	548
		Sherlock v. Stuart, 96 Mich. 193, 21 L. R. A. 560.....	715

Sherry v. Freckling, 4 Duer, 452	578	Star Glass Co. v. Longley, 64 Ga. 578	538
Sherwood v. Judd, 3 Bradf. 278	753	Starke v. Littlepage, 4 Rand. (Va.) 368	242
v. Sherwood, 45 Wis. 364, 30 Am. Rep. 767	650	State v. Arnold, 144 Ind. 651	118
Sheward v. Citizens' Water Co. 90 Cal. 635	680	v. Atkinson, 24 Vt. 448	622, 623
Shield, Re, 53 L. T. N. S. 5	130	v. Baldwin, 14 S. C. 135	407
Shields v. State (Ind.) 49 N. E. 851	111	v. Bockstruck, 186 Mo. 385	154
v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349	254	v. Brown, 9 Baxt. 53	524
Shiras v. Ewing, 48 Kan. 170	660	v. Butler, 8 Wash. 194, 25 L. R. A. 434	439
Shieler v. Vandike, 92 Pa. 447, 37 Am. Rep. 704	478	v. Call, 121 N. C. 643	417
Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331	401	v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 21 L. R. A. 169	760, 761
Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410	399	v. Clarissa, 11 Ala. 57	439
Shrewsbury v. Tufts, 41 W. Va. 212	239	v. Cousins, 54 Iowa, 250	88
Snugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 359	97	v. Croft, 24 Ark. 550	708
Sherry v. State (Ind.) 47 N. E. 458	111	v. Doe, 79 Ind. 9, 41 Am. Rep. 599	513, 514
Sidekum v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 93 Mo. 400	883	v. Edwards, 86 Me. 102, 25 L. R. A. 504	313
Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 558	54, 57, 60	v. Farrell, 23 Mo. App. 176	153
Sill v. Worwick, 1 H. Bl. 690	381	v. Foster (Wyo.), 20 L. R. A. 226	694, 705
Sillman v. Wing, 7 Hill, 159	187	v. Goodwill, 53 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621	314
Sims v. Barlow, 16 Gray, 829	674	v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 632	290
Sims v. Macon & W. R. Co. 23 Ga. 96	365	v. Hathaway, 106 Mo. 236	502
v. Whitlock, 5 Ark. 103	75	v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 69	699, 709
Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co. 3 El. & Bl. 478	656	v. Hoyt, 46 Conn. 390	558
Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Union Buttonhole & E. Co. Holmes, 238	101	v. Huck, 29 Wis. 202	464
Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745	387	v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 387	649
Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 14 Mich. 497, 90 Am. Dec. 252	576	v. Lewis, 134 Ind. 250, 20 L. R. A. 52	153
Slater v. Mercereau, 64 N. Y. 188	462	v. Lymus, 26 Ohio St. 400, 20 Am. Rep. 772	513, 514
Slauson v. Racine, 13 Wis. 396	772	v. Manley, 68 Iowa, 344	376
Slomaker v. Marriott, 5 Gill & J. 406	681	v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714	315
Slummer's Appeal, 54 Pa. 155, 98 Am. Dec. 248	551	v. Moore, 38 Ohio St. 7	423
Slipper v. Mason, Nelson's Lutyche Rep. 43	389	v. Myers, 82 Mo. 562, 52 Am. Rep. 389	278
Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. 111 Cal. 683, 32 L. R. A. 198	684	v. Nevin, 19 Nev. 162	698, 704, 707, 780
Slocovich v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. 108 N. Y. 56	567	v. Northern P. Exp. Co. 58 Minn. 408	780
Small v. Jenkins, 16 Gray, 155	401	v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 386	558
Smith v. Adams, 6 Paige, 435	184	v. Parker, 108 N. C. 711	745
v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104 Ala. 315	660	v. Patza, 3 La. Ann. 513	278
v. Bradley, 154 Mass. 227	756	v. Phipps, 95 Iowa, 491	516
v. Burgess, 133 Mass. 511	500	v. Robitahak, 60 Minn. 123, 38 L. R. A. 33	214
v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. 82 Ga. 804	366, 748	v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 368	153
v. Felton, 43 N. Y. 419	665	v. Roemer, 55 Iowa, 517	88
v. Fox, 48 N. Y. 674	665	v. Schwin, 65 Wis. 207	649
v. Gillett, 50 Ill. 290	537	v. Thompson, 28 Or. 296	194
v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 360	167, 169	v. Trask (Vt.) 27 Am. Dec. 569	404
v. Howard, 20 How. Pr. 121	301	v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 83 Mo. 144	392
v. Hurd, 12 Met. 365, 46 Am. Dec. 600	591	v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92	622, 623
v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 7 L. R. A. 469	169	v. Yates, 10 Crim. L. Mag. 439	514
v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 768	168	v. Young, 3 Kan. 445	213
v. Rome, 19 Ga. 89	88	State, ex rel. Atty. Gen., v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561	772, 774
v. State, 23 N. J. L. 130, 712	622	Atty. Gen., v. Hagood, 13 S. O. 46	196
v. Whitdin, 10 Pa. 30, 49 Am. Dec. 572	356	Atty. Gen., v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771	207
Smith v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17	128	Atty. Gen., v. Mead, 71 Mo. 266	196
Smayles v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 217	107	Atty. Gen., v. Monitor Fire Assn., 42 Ohio St. 555	423
Sneathen v. Grubbs, 88 Pa. 147	545	Atty. Gen., v. Morrison (Wash.) 52 Pac. 228	431, 432
Snell v. Dwight, 120 Mass. 9	163	Atty. Gen., v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629	114, 115
Sobier v. Norwich F. Ins. Co. 11 Allen, 886	570	Atty. Gen., v. Toledo, 43 Ohio St. 112, 111 L. R. A. 729	169
Solomons v. United States, 187 U. S. 342, 34 L. ed. 607	551	Atty. Gen., v. Western Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 47 Ohio St. 167, 8 L. R. A. 129	423
Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 459	616	Chamberlin, v. Daniel, 17 Wash. 111	304, 314
South v. Maryland, 18 How. 896, 15 L. ed. 438	631	Dolan, v. Clarksville & R. Turnp. Co. 2 Meed, 58	769
Southern L. Ins. Co. v. McCain, 96 U. S. 84, 24 L. ed. 653	399	George, v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 21 Am. Rep. 721	196
Southern Ohio R. Co. v. Morey, 47 Ohio St. 207, 7 L. R. A. 701	347	Huff, v. McLelland, 18 Neb. 286, 53 Am. Rep. 514	196
Southwestern R. Co. v. Hankerson, 61 Ga. 114	366, 367	Markens, v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407	198
Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 166 Mass. 285, 38 L. R. A. 512	688	Marlay, v. Liedtke, 9 Neb. 462	198
Sparhawk v. Salem, 1 Allen, 80	166	Mississippi County, v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322	698, 706
Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 370	215	Morris, v. Wrightson, 56 N. J. L. 126, 22 L. R. A. 548	772
Spaudling v. Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 10 L. R. A. 297	166, 169	Overton County, v. Copeland, 96 Tenn. 298, 31 L. R. A. 844	699, 709
Spence v. Dasher, 63 Ga. 432	85, 93	Purves, v. Moyer, 17 Wash. 643	306
Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 508, 3 Am. Rep. 491	499	Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469	289
Sprague v. Birchard, 1 Wis. 457, 60 Am. Dec. 368	215	Schwartz, v. Ferris, 58 Ohio St. 314, 80 L. R. A. 218	290
v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 360	154	Setzer, v. Setzer, 97 N. C. 262	741
Stabler v. Com. 95 Pa. 318, 40 Am. Rep. 653	439	Stuart, v. Kinsella, 14 Minn. 524 (Gil. 395)	213
Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 213	976	The Township, v. Powell, 67 Mo. 398, 29 Am. Dec. 512	696
Stamper v. Temple, 6 Humph. 118, 44 Am. Dec. 296	355	Townshend, v. Meagher, 44 Mo. 359, 100 Am. Rep. 298	695
Standard L. & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434	435	Vanderwerker, v. Brown, 54 Md. 325	631
v. Taylor, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 387	443	Waterbury, v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 534, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 63	208
Stanley v. Snyder, 53 Ark. 429	751	Wyandot County, v. Harper, 6 Ohio St. 608, 67 Am. Dec. 363	697, 708
Stanley County Comrs. v. Snuggs, 121 N. C. 304	186	Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) 72 N. W. 713	391
Stanton v. Eager, 16 Pick. 467	540	Stenberg v. Wilcox, 96 Tenn. 163, 34 L. R. A. 615	881
v. Willson, 3 Day, 37, 3 Am. Dec. 255	581, 582, 584

Stephens v. Santee, 49 N. Y. 39	376	Toomey v. Lyman, 40 N. Y. S. R. 611	39
Stephenson v. Duncan, 73 Wis. 404	791	Total v. Bonnetier, 123 Ill. 653	890
Stetter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 48 Wis. 497	462	Towle v. Larrabee, 26 Me. 464	492
Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256	53, 57	Traer v. Whitman, 56 Iowa. 443	376
v. Queen Ins. Co. 81 Wis. 335	364	Trageser v. Gray, 73 Md. 230, 9 L. R. A. 780	716
v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 396,		Transatlantic F. Ins. Co. v. Bamberger, 11 Ky.
18 L. R. A. 832	623	101	568
Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 653, 14 L. R. A. 459	198	Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642	653
v. Mortimer, 2 Cowp. 805	187	v. Harvey, 82 Va. 949	435
v. State, 83 Ga. 575	92	v. Mitchell, 47 U. S. App. 280, 24 C. C. A.
Stewart v. Hartman, 48 Ind. 331	107	305, 78 Fed. Rep. 754	456
v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 108 Ind. 44	806	v. Robbins, 27 U. S. App. 547, 65 Fed. Rep.
Stickney v. Goudy, 132 Ill. 213	592	178, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629	656
Stock v. Inglis, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 564	538	v. Seiden, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. Rep.
Stockmeyer v. Tobin, 139 U. S. 176, 35 L. ed. 123	312	285, 24 C. C. A. 92	656
Stockwell v. Byrne, 22 Ind. 6	312	v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 32 L. ed. 308	570
v. White Lake Twp. Bd. 22 Mich. 341	320	Trawick v. Harris, 8 Tex. 312	751
Stone v. Dickinson, 5 Allen, 29, 81 Am. Dec.		Tregelles v. Sewell, 7 Hurlst. & N. 574	543
727, 7 Allen, 26	462	Trester v. Sheboygan, 87 Wis. 496	830, 831
v. Lannon, 6 Wis. 497	464	Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 6 Hurlst. &
v. Oconomowoc, 71 Wis. 159	734	N. 839	657
v. United States Casualty Co. 34 N. J. L.		Trout v. McDonald, 83 Pa. 146	184
371	443, 448	Tucker v. Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co. 50 Hun, 50, 449	451
Story v. Odin, 12 Mass. 157, 7 Am. Dec. 46	477	v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 297	161, 165
Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558	558	v. Werner, 2 Misc. 193	765
Stover v. Poole, 87 Me. 217	187	Tuig v. Sheehan, 101 Pa. 363, 47 Am. Rep. 727, 675	676
Stowers v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 68 Miss. 559,		Turner v. Crosby, 85 Md. 180	753
12 L. R. A. 864	374	v. Iowa Nat. Bank, 2 Wash. 192	301
Straus v. Wesel, 30 Ohio St. 211	540	Turpin v. Eagle Creek & L. W. L. Gravel Road
Strudgeon v. Land Beach, 107 Mich. 496	833	Co. 48 Ind. 45	106
Stuart v. Machias Port, 48 Me. 477	148	Tuttle v. George H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. 145 Mass.
Suffield v. New Haven & N. Co. 53 Conn. 368	482	169	380
Suit v. Woodhall, 113 Mass. 361	545, 547	Twitty v. Houser, 7 S. C. N. S. 153	695
Sullivan v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 378	810	Tyson v. Booth, 100 Mass. 258	166
Sun Printing & Pub. Assn. v. New York, 152 N.
Y. 237, 37 L. R. A. 788	169
Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 73 Md.
230, 9 L. R. A. 737	496
Sutherland v. Standard L. & Acci. Ins. Co. 87
Iowa. 506	435, 440
Swan v. Com. 104 Pa. 218	278
v. North British Australasian Co. 7
Hurlst. & N. 603, 2 Hurlst. & C. 175	500
v. Sayles, 165 Mass. 177	193
Sweeny v. Hunter, 145 Pa. 363, 14 L. R. A. 594	315
Swift v. People, Powers, 63 Ill. App. 453	715, 716
Swift & Co. v. Madden, 165 Ill. 41	794
Swinburne v. Mills, 17 Wash. 611	304, 306, 311
Swinfin v. Lowry, 37 Minn. 345	97
Swink v. French, 11 Lea, 79, 47 Am. Rep. 277	525
Sykes v. Readon, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 170	162
Syme v. Johnston 3 Call. (Va.) 522	238

T.

Tacoma v. Krech, 15 Wash. 296, 34 L. R. A. 68	309	Union Bank v. Oxford, 119 N. C. 214, 34 L. R.
Tarbell v. Jewett, 129 Mass. 457	54, 60, 65	A. 437	165
Tasker v. Stanton, 153 Mass. 148, 10 L. R. A. 468	550	Union Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 2 Dill. 14	570
Taylor v. Fickas, 64 Ind. 167, 31 Am. Rep. 114	184	Union Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228,
v. McGill, 6 Lea. 294	768, 769	10 L. R. A. 383	449
v. Runyan, 3 Iowa, 474	376	Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 12 U. S. App. 541,
v. State, 83 Ga. 659	85, 93	56 Fed. Rep. 98, 6 C. C. A. 205	656
v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411, 5 Am. Dec. 107	107	v. Carr, 1 Wyo. 96	198
v. Welch, 6 Or. 198	185	v. Johnson, 45 Neb. 57	538
Taylor Dist. Twp. v. Morton, 37 Iowa, 550	693, 708	Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83	463
Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415	313	Union Trust Co. v. McCallan, 40 W. Va. 406	89
Teale v. Bishop of Derry, 168 Mass. 341, 38 L.		United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed.
R. A. 629	130	319	698, 708
Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 262, 25 L. ed. 652	215	v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 389, 2 L. ed. 314	430
Tennessee, ex rel. Bloomstein, v. Sneed, 96 U.		v. Keebler, 9 Wall. 83, 19 L. ed. 574	698, 708
S. 74, 24 L. ed. 612	821	v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. ed. 643	698
Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brunner, 128 Ind.		v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734
542	838	v. Reid, 12 How. 361, 13 L. ed. 1023	698, 697, 707, 708, 709
Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365	821	v. Ryder, 110 U. S. 729, 28 L. ed. 308	124
Texas & P. R. Co. v. Mangum, 68 Tex. 342	380	v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89	698, 708
Thelsen, Ex parte, 30 Fla. 529	716	v. Watts, 1 N. M. 562	708
Thomas v. First Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. App. 56	548	United States Exp. Co. v. Kountze Bros. 8
v. Thomas, 41 Wis. 233	581, 588	Wall. 342, 19 L. ed. 457	353
v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 26 L. ed.		v. Ware, 20 Wall. 543, 22 L. ed. 422	769
950	858	United States Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U.
Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 473	92	S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60	657
v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602	831	v. Newman, 84 Va. 52	435
v. Township Sixteen, 30 Ill. 99		Utley v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 119 N. C. 720	417
698, 704, 705, 707, 708
Thorn v. London, L. R. 10 Exch. 123	679
Thornlike v. Boston, 1 Met. 245	753
Thornton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 42 Mo. App. 58	356
Throckmorton v. Chapman, 65 Conn. 442	87
Thernay v. McGarity, 14 R. I. 231	736
Tilden v. Green, 130 N. Y. 29, 14 L. R. A. 33	732
Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 34 L. R. A.
678	698, 701, 707, 708
Timm v. Harrison, 109 Ill. 593	617
Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. 9	616
Todd, Ex parte, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 188	130
40 L. R. A.

U.

V.

W.

Waddell v. Simoon, 112 Pa. 567	814	Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 109	232
Wade v. State, 65 Ga. 756	98	Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L. R. A. 630	471
Wagner v. Breed, 29 Neb. 720	541	Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721	184
v. Carpenter, decided Nov. 17, 1897	758	v. Harris, 4 Sneed, 468, 70 Am. Dec. 258	524
Wait v. Maxwell, 5 Pick. 217, 16 Am. Dec. 391	253	Wheelden v. Lyford, 84 Me. 114	492
Wakeley v. Nicholas, 18 Wis. 589	844	Whipple v. Eddy, 161 Ill. 114	262
Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 556	384	v. Robbins, 97 Mass. 107, 93 Am. Dec. 64	239
v. Ham, 2 N. H. 236	187	White v. Bass, 7 Hurst. & N. 732	107
v. Springfield, 94 Ill. 373	617	v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 61 Wis. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 154	833
Wall v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 498	769	v. Road Dist. No. 1, 9 Iowa, 202	679
v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273	812	v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 106, 43 Am. Rep. 347	763, 764
Wallace v. Henry, 5 Ark. 107	75	Whitfield v. Rogers, 26 Miss. 84, 59 Am. Dec. 244	408
v. Tumlin, 42 Ga. 462	245	Whitford v. Panama R. Co. 23 N. Y. 464	806
v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 133, 10 L. ed. 95	239	Whitney v. Lee, 1 Allen, 198, 79 Am. Dec. 727	757
v. Woodgate, 1 Car. & P. 575	763	v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40	89
Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546	690	Whittaker v. Ferguson (Utah) 51 Pac. 981	861
Walter v. Kirk, 14 Ill. 55	248	Whitworth v. Erie R. Co. 87 N. Y. 413	570
Ward v. Morrison, 25 Vt. 596	429	Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 102 Ill. 560	617
v. State, 48 Ala. 161, 17 Am. Rep. 81	514	Wilburn v. Greer, 6 Ark. 255	75
v. Weeks, 7 Bing. 211	685	Wilds v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. 82 Ga. 667, 366, 367	552
Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 42	568	Wilen's Appeal, 105 Pa. 121	567
Warner v. Grace, 14 Minn. 487	356	Williams v. Allsup, 10 C. B. N. S. 417	764
Warren v. Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 351	404	v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92	147
v. State, 1 G. Greene, 106	515	v. Farrand, 89 Mich. 473, 14 L. R. A. 161	635
v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545	550	v. Herrick, 19 R. I. 197	719
Washburn v. Catlin, 97 N. Y. 623	586	v. Mutual Gas Co. 52 Mich. 499, 50 Am. Rep. 266	660
Washburn College v. Shawnee County Comrs. 8 Kan. 350	127	v. Robinson, 6 Cush. 334	320
Washington v. State, 87 Ga. 15	96, 93	v. Thweatt, 12 Rich. L. 478	366
Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 8 Am. Rep. 149	361	v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 183, 14 L. R. A. 220	294
Washoe County v. Humboldt County, 14 Nev. 123	407	v. Williams, 63 Wis. 72, 53 Am. Rep. 253	734
Wasserboehr v. Boulvier, 54 Me. 165	492	William's Case, 5 Coke, 72b	339
Waterman v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Co. 55 Conn. 564	769	Williamson v. Williams, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 446	742
v. Dockray, 78 Me. 141	50	Willis v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 37 Minn. 347	374
Waters v. Randall, 6 Met. 479	810	Willits v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 281, 21 L. R. A. 608	471
Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Cook, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 573	319	Willson v. Treadwell, 81 Cal. 58	390
Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 410	659	Willy v. Mulleady, 78 N. Y. 310, 34 Am. Rep. 536	414
Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 698	676	Wilmington, O. & E. C. R. Co. v. Onalow County Comrs. 116 N. C. 563	166
Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Spring Co. v. Waukesha, 68 Wis. 475	650	Wilson, Ex parte, 14 Tex. App. 562	214
Wayne County v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 390	650	v. Burnstead, 12 Neb. 1	768
Weatherford, M. & N. W. R. Co. v. Duncan, 88 Tex. 611	88	v. Carson, 12 Md. 54	382
Weaver v. Wible, 25 Pa. 270, 64 Am. Dec. 686	552	v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748	167, 168
Webb v. Winter, 1 Cal. 417	540	v. People, Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449	695
Webber v. Webber, 79 N. C. 576	741	v. Sanitary District, 133 Ill. 459	775
Weber Wagon Co. v. Kehl, 139 Ill. 648	798	v. Wichita County, 67 Tex. 647	698, 704
Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 369, 57 Am. Rep. 273	727	v. Wilson, 45 Cal. 401	598
Weil v. Golden, 141 Mass. 384	545	Wimer v. Smith, 22 Or. 469	89
Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111	196	Winney v. Sandwich Mfg. Co. (Iowa) 50 N. W. 565	769
Weich v. Garrett (Idaho) 51 Pac. 406	487	Winslip v. Bass, 12 Mass. 188	54, 59
Wells v. Steam Navigation Co. 2 N. Y. 204	104	Winsmore v. Greenback, Willes Rep. 577	550
Wells, Fargo, & Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 469	101	Winsted Hosiery Co. v. New Britain Knitting Co. 69 Conn. 575	83
v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 561, 18 Fed. Rep. 517	101	Winter v. Coulthard, 94 Iowa, 312	376, 377
Welty v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 105 Ind. 55	464	Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109	530
Werner v. Litzinger, 45 Mo. App. 106	87	Wise v. Biggar, 79 Va. 269	198
West v. Shuttleworth, 2 Myl. & K. 684	719	Wolf v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 353, 26 L. ed. 395	818
West Chester v. Apple, 35 Pa. 284	812	Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 237, 29 L. R. A. 376, 690, 661	861
Western & A. R. Co. v. Bishop, 60 Ga. 465	103	v. Chapin, 13 N. Y. 509, 67 Am. Dec. 62	399
v. Bloomingdale, 74 Ga. 604	748	Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L. R. A. 213	349
v. Turner, 72 Ga. 292, 53 Am. Rep. 842	484	Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 40 L. ed. 973	816
Western Granite & M. Co. v. Knickerbocker, 103 Cal. 111	477	v. Munroe, 33 Md. 147	472
Western Nat. Bank v. Maverick Nat. Bank, 90 Ga. 342	246	Woodward v. Murdock, 124 Ind. 439	112, 114
Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 1 L. R. A. 728	211	Woodworth v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 273, 3 Am. Rep. 706	163
v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 371, 24 L. ed. 1049	500	Woonsocket Rubber Co. v. Loewenberg, 17 Wash. 29	302
v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 561, 15 L. R. A. 129	211	Worden v. Humeaton & S. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 201	806
v. Newhouse, 6 Ind. App. 422	211	Workman v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 546	472
v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423	101	Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496	198
v. Williams, 36 Va. 693, 18 L. R. A. 429	374	Wray v. Miller, 20 Pa. 115	312
v. Woods, 56 Kan. 737	211	Wright v. Bales, 2 Black, 535, 17 L. ed. 264	559
Westervelt v. Mohrenstecher, 40 U. S. App. 221, 76 Fed. Rep. 113, 22 C. C. A. 98, 34 L. R. A. 477	655	v. Moore, 38 Ala. 563, 82 Am. Dec. 731	860
Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397	560	Wulfstange v. McCollom, 83 Ky. 381	213
West Maryland R. Co. v. Franklin Bank, 60 Md. 36	232
Westmoreland v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 75 Fed. Rep. 244	653
West Orange Twp. v. Field, 37 N. J. Eq. 600, 45 Am. Rep. 670	496
Westurn, Re, 152 N. Y. 93	290
40 L. R. A.

Y.

Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 90	231
---	-----

Yavapai County v. O'Neil (Ariz.) 29 Pac. 430.....	406	Z.
York Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 358, 30 L. ed. 230.....	715	Zable v. Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, 92 Ky. 91, 18 L. R. A. 668.....	124
York County v. Watson, 158 C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675.....	699, 709	Zander v. Valentine Blatz Brewing Co. 89 Wis. 164, 95 Wis. 162.....	578
York Teleph. Co. v. Keesey, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 366.....	373, 374	Zanone v. Mound City, 108 Ill. 552.....	715
Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95.....	680	Zeigler v. Vance, 3 Iowa, 528.....	376
v. Newark F. Ins. Co. 59 Conn. 41.....	569	Zielke v. London Assur. Corp. 64 Wis. 442.....	886
v. South Tredegar Iron Co. 85 Tenn. 189.....	769
v. State, 65 Ga. 565.....	98

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

France.		Civil Code.
Code.		§ 5. Easements.....	478
Art. 3. Status and capacity of persons.....	430	17. Degrees of negligence.....	354
6. Preservation of public order.....	312	138. Custody of children.....	586
Cachard's Civil Code.		662. Appurtenances to land.....	477
Art. 170. Qualifications and conditions required to contract marriage.....	430	801. Light and air may be the subject of an easement.....	477
England.		1084. Transfer of a thing, transfers all its incidents.....	477
Statutes.		1104. What easements pass with property.....	477
14 Edw. III., chap. 10. Custody of gaols.....	630	1107. Grant, how far conclusive on purchaser.....	477
32 Hen. VIII., chap. 34. Lease.....	386	2174. Obligations of common carrier.....	354
1 Edw. VI., chap. 14. Church property held by Crown.....	718, 722	2175. Liability of common carrier.....	354
43 Eliz. chap. 4. Charitable uses.....	731	2201. Liability of common carrier.....	79
8 & 9 Wm. III., chap. 20. Brokers.....	615	3816. Breach of carrier's obligation to deliver.....	355
2 & 3 Wm. IV., chap. 115. Requests for support of Roman Catholic religion.....	719	Penal Code.
1 Vict. chap. 26, § 18. Revocation of will by marriage.....	198	§ 809. Signature of district attorney to information.....	274
1846, Lord Campbell's act.....	804	817. "Peace officer" defined.....	356
10 & 11 Vict. chap. 17. Water.....	659	886. Arrest by peace officer.....	357
50 & 51 Vict. chap. 21, § 4. Arrears of water rates.....	659	1074. Grounds for challenge of juror.....	279
United States.		1121. Permitting jurors to separate.....	275
Constitution.		1122. Admonishing jurors.....	275
Art. 1, § 2. Enumeration of people.....	773	1287. Appeal from order made after judgment.....	279
§ 5. Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings.....	199	1258. Filing affidavit.....	275
§ 10. Prohibiting state passing any law impairing obligation of contracts.....	315, 817	1547. Reward for arrest of murderer.....	355
4, § 1. Full faith and credit shall be given in each state.....	298	Code of Civil Procedure.
Amend. 1. Religious establishment prohibited.....	724	§ 339, subd. 1. Contracts not in writing; two years' limitation.....	352
5, § 1. Due process of law.....	315, 817	458. Pleading statute of limitations.....	352
14. Equal protection of laws.....	283, 417	462. Allegations not denied when deemed true.....	352
§ 1. Due process of law.....	190, 315, 817	1696. Historical and scientific works; evidence.....	560
Statutes.		Connecticut.
1834, June 30. Trade with Indians.....	760	Statutes.
1854, Dec. 19 (10 Stat. at L. 598). Negotiations with Chippewa Indians.....	760	1899, chap. 220. Grade crossings.....	482
Treaty.		1893, p. 240. Pool selling.....	608
1855, Feb. 22. With Chippewa Indians.....	760	General Statutes.
1864, May 7. With Chippewa Indians.....	760	§ 873. Demurrers.....	482
1867, March 19. With Chippewa Indians.....	760	2562. Wagers, loans, etc., for purpose of gaming, void.....	609
Revised Statutes.		2563. Money or property lost in gaming.....	609
§ 2339. Appropriation of water.....	487	2569. Betting on horse races.....	609
Arkansas.		2557. Gaming.....	609
Constitution, 1874.		2558. Gaming.....	609
Art. 9, § 6. Homestead.....	751	Revision, 1808.
California.		P. 361. Recovery of money or property lost in gaming.....	609
Statutes.		Georgia.
1856, p. 153. Consolidation act of city and county of San Francisco.....	357	Constitution.
1872, April 1, p. 826. Foreign corporations.....	352	Art. 7, § 2, ¶ 1. Tax on domestic animals.....	504
40 L. R. A.		Statutes.
		1875, p. 92. Days of grace.....	249
		Code.
		§ 2965. Liability of owners of dogs for damages.....	506
		3064. Negligence.....	748
		3764. Credible witness.....	90

§ 3735. Credible witness.....	90
3830 (2972). Contributory negligence.....	748
3838. Suit on lost note.....	245
4432. Larceny of animals.....	505
4627. Malicious mischief.....	505

Code, 1882.

§ 2244. Assignment of chose in action.....	246
--	-----

Civil Code.

§ 2322. Injuries by railroads; consent or negligence.....	365
3077. Assignment of chose in action.....	246
3652. Contract by insane person.....	252
3679. Days of grace.....	249
3681. Manner of transferring legal title to negotiable instrument.....	247
3698. Negotiable instruments.....	248
3830. Physical injuries; diligence of plaintiff.....	365
4419. Duty of trial judge.....	93
4427. Duty of attorneys at law.....	94
4750. Suit on lost note.....	245
5163. Suppression of evidence.....	90
5337. Juror as witness.....	484

Penal Code.

§ 1255. Verdict of coroner's jury.....	870
1269. Verdict of coroner's jury.....	870

Political Code.

§ 9. Rule of construction.....	246
--------------------------------	-----

Idaho.Revised Statutes.

§ 2325. Real property.....	487
4225. Variance, when material.....	487
4231. Error or defect in pleadings.....	487

Illinois.Constitution, 1818.

Schedule, § 8. Apportionment of legislators..	773
---	-----

Constitution.

Art. 4, § 1. Legislative power.....	772
§ 6. Apportionment of election districts.....	772
9. Sessions of legislature.....	775
6, § 5. Districts for election of judges.....	775
§ 13. Judicial circuits.....	776
9, § 1. Uniform taxation.....	616
§ 9. Local municipal improvements.....	617

Statutes.

1891, July 1. Election law.....	619
1893, May 16. Apportionment.....	774
June 15. Apportioning senatorial districts.....	771
1898, Jan. 11. Apportioning senatorial districts.....	771

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 24, § 62, cl. 91. Power of cities to impose taxation.....	617
89, § 2. Marriage by insane person or idiot.....	263
131, § 1, cl. 6. "Insane person" defined.....	263

Starr and Curtis's Annotated Statutes.

Vol. 1, chap. 24, art. 3, § 13. Yeas and nays; certain majority necessary.....	622
chap. 24, art. 5, § 2 (ed. 2). Style of city ordinances.....	623
3, chap. 131, § 1, cl. 15 (ed. 2). Construction of statutes.....	620

Indiana.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 13. Rights of accused in criminal prosecutions.....	118
§ 16. Cruel and unusual punishments.....	111
18. Penal Code founded on principles of reformation.....	112
3, § 1. Distribution of powers.....	113
5, § 17. Pardonng powers of governor.....	114
7, § 1. Judicial powers of state.....	113

40 L. R. A.

Statutes.

1897, February 23, p. 69. Reformatory act.....	110
--	-----

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 61. Cruel and unusual punishments.....	111
1833. Minor's imprisonment.....	116
1837. Verdict.....	110
1929. Punishment for burglary.....	112

Revised Statutes, 1894.

§ 61. Cruel and unusual punishments.....	111
1902. Minor's imprisonment.....	116
1906. Verdict.....	110
2002. Punishment for burglary.....	112
3238. Shortening term of imprisonment.....	114

Horner's Revised Statutes, 1897.

§ 61. Cruel and unusual punishments.....	111
1837. Verdict.....	110
1929. Punishment for burglary.....	112

Iowa.Constitution.

Art. 5, § 8. Style of process.....	215
------------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

17th Gen. Assem. chap. 25. Dogs on premises of owners.....	517
19th Gen. Assem. chap. 30, § 3. Power of cities over water-courses.....	471
20th Gen. Assem. chap. 70. Tax on dogs and domestic animals.....	517

Code.

§ 242. Completion of record by clerk after term.....	877
243. Record controlled by court.....	877
1485. Liability of owners for injuries done by dogs.....	118
2355. Division fence.....	627
3769. Judgment; final adjudication.....	876
3784. Judgments and orders entered.....	876
3801. Liens of judgments.....	876
3954. Enforcement of judgment by execution.....	877

Code, 1873.

§ 45, ¶ 2. Words and phrases, how construed.....	516
¶ 9. Personal property.....	516
10. Property.....	516
499. Tax on dogs and domestic animals.....	517
527. City council, control over streets, etc.....	471
1485. Liability of owner of dog for damages.....	517
1490. Neglect to repair or build partition fence.....	627
1492. Settlement of disputes by fence viewers.....	627
1938. Waiver of right to possession.....	312
3100. Appraisal of personal property sold on execution.....	313
3902. Larceny.....	514

McClain's Code.

§ 4903. Books of science and art read in evidence.....	559
--	-----

Kansas.Bill of Rights.

§ 7. Religious freedom.....	724
-----------------------------	-----

General Statutes.

§ 422. Action for negligent killing.....	806
--	-----

General Statutes, 1897.

Chap. 1, § 4. English common law incorporated into state statute.....	723
---	-----

Kentucky.Constitution, 1850.

Art. 13, § 5. No preference given by law to any religious sect.....	125
---	-----

Constitution.

§ 3. Special privileges to men, etc.....	125
5. No preference given by law to any religious sect.....	125

§ 170. Property exempt from taxation.....	120
171. Taxes levied and collected for public purposes only.....	125
174. Uniformity of taxation of corporate property with that of individuals.....	125

Statutes.

1825, Dec. 17. Exemption of educational institutions from taxation.....	123
1874. Recovery on policy of insurance.....	362

Revised Statutes, 1852.

Chap. 58, art. 1, § 1. School lands exempt from taxation.....	124
---	-----

General Statutes.

Chap. 57, § 3. Action for negligent killing.....	824
--	-----

General Statutes, 1872.

Chap. 92, pp. 709, 710, art. 1, § 3. Exemption of all property of institutions of learning.....	124
---	-----

Morehead & Brown's Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 1080. Exemption of educational institutions from taxation.....	123
---	-----

Louisiana.Code.

Art. 11, § 2. Renunciation of private rights..	312
--	-----

Revised Code.

Art. 11, § 2. Preservation of public order.....	312
---	-----

Maine.Statutes.

1851, chap. 211, § 18. Liquor law.....	493
--	-----

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 27, § 7. Limitation of innholder's liability for loss of certain articles.....	493
87, § 19. Prosecution of claims.....	70

Public Laws.

1889, chap. 298, § 1. Peddler's license.....	492
1891, chap. 118. Burial permits.....	186
1895, chap. 154. Burial permits.....	186

Maryland.Constitution.

Art. 1, § 1. Qualification of voters.....	753
---	-----

Statutes.

1809. Citizen committed to custody of officer not to be removed.....	630
1852. Negligence causing death.....	632
1892, chap. 488. Insurance companies.....	189
1894, chap. 256. Insurance companies.....	189
chap. 295. Insurance companies.....	188
1896, chap. 202. Registry lists.....	753

Code of Public Local Laws.

Art. 4, § 378. Power of municipal authorities.....	495
§ 409. Power of municipal authorities.....	495

Code of Public General Laws.

Art. 23, § 17. Formation of insurance companies.....	188
§ 38. Formation of insurance companies.....	189
95. Powers of building associations.....	188
112. Capital stock of insurance companies.....	190
116. Guaranty capital of life insurance company.....	190
124. Powers of building associations.....	188
127. Incorporation of insurance companies.....	188
128. Insurance companies.....	189
136. Capital stock of insurance companies.....	190
255. Mode of proceeding for forfeiture of charter of corporation.....	188
262. Remedy for misuse or nonuse of corporate powers.....	188
263. Remedies for nonuse or misuse of corporate powers.....	191

Art. 42, § 18. Citizen committed to custody of officer not to be removed.....	630
51, § 22. Grand jury to visit jail.....	630
67. Negligence causing death.....	632
87, § 43-45. Custody of prisoners.....	630
93, § 313. Lapsing of legacy.....	381

Massachusetts.Constitution.

Art. 12. No subject shall be deprived of his property but by the law of the land.....	130
---	-----

Statutes.

1817, chap. 190, § 35. Guardian.....	500
1820, chap. 84, § 3. Guardian.....	500
1842, chap. 89, § 1. Action for negligent killing.....	805
1846, chap. 167, § 14. Boston water supply.....	659
1861, chap. 174, § 1. Estates in the hands of executors and administrators.....	130
1863, chap. 163, § 13. New Bedford water supply.....	659
1864, chap. 268, § 14. Salem Water Company.....	659
1865, chap. 153, § 9. Cambridge Water Company.....	659
1867, chap. 60, § 7. Medford Water Company.....	659
chap. 343, § 13. Roxbury water supply.....	659
1869, chap. 462, § 12. Lynn water supply.....	659
1871, chap. 183, § 17. Fall River water supply.....	659
chap. 307, § 8. Woburn water supply.....	659
1872, chap. 62, § 9. Holyoke water supply.....	659
chap. 79, § 11. Lawrence water supply.....	659
chap. 188, § 9. Concord & Lincoln water supply.....	659
chap. 336, § 14. West Roxbury water supply.....	653
chap. 337, § 11. Waltham water supply.....	659
chap. 343, § 14. Brookline water supply.....	659
chap. 344, § 14. Newton water supply.....	659
chap. 345, § 10. Springfield water supply.....	659
1873, chap. 76, § 9. Natick water supply.....	659
chap. 274, § 7. Lexington water supply.....	659
chap. 322, § 9. Westfield water supply.....	659
1874, chap. 125, § 10. Newton water supply.....	659
chap. 191, § 9. Danvers water supply.....	659
chap. 256, § 9. Marlboro water supply.....	659
1875, chap. 158, § 6. Rockport Water Company.....	659
chap. 199, § 14. Watertown water supply.....	659
chap. 217, § 9. Taunton water supply.....	660
1876, chap. 93, § 9. Clinton water supply.....	659
1881, chap. 174, § 9. Weymouth water supply.....	660
chap. 206, § 8. Framingham water supply.....	659
1882, chap. 142. Reverse Water Company.....	658
1884, chap. 229. Corporation.....	500
chap. 256, § 12. Cambridge water supply.....	659
chap. 259. Winthrop water supply.....	658
1887, chap. 387. Amendment of charter of water company.....	658
chap. 416, § 11. Malden water supply.....	659
1891, chap. 348, § 9. Haverhill water supply.....	660
chap. 401, § 13. Quincy water supply.....	660
1892, chap. 118. Revocation of will by marriage.....	192
chap. 384, § 12. Chicopee water supply.....	660
1894, chap. 137, § 12. Stoneham water supply.....	660
chap. 299. Refusal to supply gas in certain cases, unlawful.....	659
1896, chap. 816. Free exhibitions by street railway company.....	246
chap. 449, § 13. Authority of water commissioner.....	171
chap. 504. Sentence.....	114
1897, chap. 473, § 10. Stoneham water supply.....	660
chap. 522. Appointment of guardian ad litem.....	130
1898, chap. 163. Refusal to supply water in certain cases, unlawful.....	659

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 69, § 11. Estates of persons deceased....	500
---	-----

General Statutes.

Chap. 100, § 14. Trust.....	530
109, § 22. Guardian.....	500

Public Statutes.

Chap. 61, § 16. Right of gas company to stop gas on failure of consumer to pay.....	659
120, § 3. Estate at will.....	660
127, § 21. Omission in will.....	193
§ 24. Will.....	193
§ 25. Will.....	193
141, § 20. Trust.....	500
203, § 37, 41. Larceny.....	496

Michigan.Constitution.

Art. 18, § 4. Navigable streams..... 527

Howell's Statutes.

Vol. 1, § 495. Bridging navigable streams..... 527
 § 4217. Members of life insurance companies..... 424
 2, § 6245. Divorce..... 759
 § 6295. Property of married woman..... 759
 6297. Action by or against married woman..... 759
 7683. Property exempt from levy and sale..... 150

Minnesota.Statutes.

1887, chap. 10. Duty of common carrier..... 390
 1896, chap. 91, § 3 (A). Duty of common carriers..... 390

General Statutes, 1894.

Chap. 66, § 5181. Form of action..... 364
 § 2170. Protection of game..... 760
 2177. Seizure of game illegally in possession..... 760

Special Laws.

1889, chap. 325. LaCrosse wagon road..... 829

Mississippi.Code.

§ 2078. Action by executors..... 805
 2079. Action for trespass to person of decedent..... 805
 2768. Reward for arrest of fleeing homicides..... 365

Missouri.Constitution, 1875.

Art. 2, § 15. Retrospective legislation prohibited..... 288
 4, § 46. Grants of public money prohibited..... 288
 10, § 3. Uniform taxation for public purposes..... 284
 § 4. Taxing property..... 288
 11, § 1. Establishment of free public schools..... 286
 § 5. State University..... 286
 6. Public school fund..... 286

Statutes.

1868, March 23. Construction of railroads..... 819
 1896, March 18, p. 194. Uniform policy of insurance..... 502
 April 1. Endowment of State University, etc..... 288
 1897, March 17. Amendatory act; endowment of State University..... 288

Revised Statutes, 79.

§ 5697. Forest trees..... 286

Revised Statutes, 1889.

§ 2810. Right of withdrawal of stockholder in building association..... 818
 3901. Killing of certain game prohibited..... 152
 3902. Possession of game during close season..... 152

Montana.Penal Code.

§ 279. Refusal to assist officers in arrest, etc... 408
 1460. Power of sheriff in overcoming resistance..... 408

Political Code.

§ 4296. Claims against county must be itemized..... 408
 4381. Duties of sheriff..... 408
 4661. County charges..... 408

Nebraska.Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 29. Uses and trusts..... 247
 30. Uses and trusts..... 247
 31. Assignment of chose in action..... 247

40 L. R. A.

New Hampshire.Public Statutes.

Chap. 174. Marriages..... 428

New York.Statutes.

1813, chap. 60, § 4. Property held in trust for use of religious society... 674
 1850, chap. 311, §§ 6, 9. Gas companies..... 659
 1868, chap. 45. Roman Catholic churches..... 674
 1871, chap. 721, pp. 1871, 1877, §§ 7, 8, 33. Protection and preservation of game..... 158
 1876, chap. 110. Religious corporations law..... 674
 1882, chap. 23. Religious corporations law..... 674
 1884, chap. 210. Religious corporations law..... 674
 1887, chap. 462. Fire escapes..... 414
 1902, chap. 673, § 6. Manner of constructing fire escapes..... 418
 1895, chap. 723, §§ 14, 50, 51. Religious corporations law..... 674
 1896, chap. 906, § 225. Refund of tax erroneously paid..... 290

Revised Statutes.

Vol. 2, p. 148, § 59. Orders respecting custody of children..... 586

Revised Statutes, 1896.

PP. 1356, 1357. Gas companies..... 659

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 190, subd. 2. Cases in which court of appeals has jurisdiction..... 676
 §§ 501, 502. Counterclaim..... 665

North Carolina.Constitution.

Art. 7, § 7. Power of counties to contract debt for necessary expenses..... 166

Statutes.

1898, chap. 152. Limitation of actions against railroad companies..... 416
 1896, chap. 224. Amending Laws 1893, chap. 152..... 417
 1897, chap. 339. Amending Laws 1893, chap. 152..... 417

Private Laws.

1846-47, chap. 199, § 1. Power of corporation... 164

Code.

§ 217, subd. 3. Judgment against insane person without notice to guardian..... 744
 1670. Clerk to file and record report of jury..... 745
 8800. Powers and duties of commissioners..... 167
 8821. How debts of municipal corporations shall be paid..... 167

Revised Code.

§ 7698. Attempt to commit crime..... 439
 7694. Attempt to commit crime; punishment..... 439

North Dakota.Statutes.

1891, chap. 69. Killing prohibited game..... 439

Ohio.Statutes.

1883, April 18 (80 Ohio Laws, p. 180). Life insurance companies..... 422
 1891 (88 Ohio Laws, p. 252). Life insurance companies..... 422

Revised Statutes.

§ 2840. Power of city over streets..... 297
 2745. Power of superintendent of insurance to revoke license..... 419
 3587. Authority to make insurance on lives of individuals..... 420
 3604. Life insurance companies..... 422

§ 3605. Life insurance companies.....	422
3609. Life insurance companies.....	423
3630. Mutual protection associations.....	420
3630c. Rules under which foreign insurance companies may transact business....	418

Oklahoma.

Statutes.

1898, § 143. Oklahoma agricultural and mechanical college.....	677
§ 147. Authority to take title to real estate.....	678
148. Board of regents.....	677
150. Compensation of board of regents.....	677
151. Salary of superintendent of construction.....	677
159. Regent's report to governor.....	677
§§ 385-387. Power and duties of board of regents.....	677
§ 389. Power and duties of board of regents.....	677
925. Public corporations.....	678

Oregon.

Code.

§ 371. Recovery for negligent killing.....	800, 804
--	----------

Hill's Code.

§ 369. Recovery for negligent killing.....	804
--	-----

Hill's Annotated Laws.

§ 1045. Resignation of attorney.....	194
1046. Resignation of attorney.....	194
1047. Removal or suspension of attorney.....	194

Pennsylvania.

Constitution.

Art. 5, § 23. Style of process.....	215
-------------------------------------	-----

Penal Code.

Art. 26. "Prosecution" defined.....	215
-------------------------------------	-----

Rhode Island.

General Laws.

Chap. 254, § 28. Assignment of future wages.....	736
--	-----

South Carolina.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 13. Right of accused in criminal prosecutions to compulsory process.....	426
--	-----

Statutes.

1892, Dec. 22. Refunding act.....	228
1896, February 4, p. 102. Defendants' witnesses; fees of.....	426

General Statutes.

§ 622. Fees to be paid by county.....	426
2633. Right of accused, in felonies, to compulsory process for his witnesses.....	426

Revised Statutes, 1893.

§ 676. Fees to be paid by county.....	426
---------------------------------------	-----

Revised Statutes, Criminal Code.

Vol. 2, § 45. Right of accused, in felonies, to compulsory process for witnesses.....	426
---	-----

South Dakota.

Compiled Laws.

§ 5498. Negligent killing.....	804
5499. Action for negligent killing.....	804

Tennessee.

Statutes.

1891, chap. 122. Filing charter of foreign corporation.....	768
---	-----

Shannon's Code.

§ 4455. Limitation of action against person out of state.....	768
---	-----

40 L. R. A.

4469. Limitation of action for injury to person.....	768
4539. Service of process on corporation.....	769
4540. Service on agent.....	769

Texas.

Constitution.

Art. 5, § 1. Judicial power of state.....	213
§ 12. Style of process.....	214
16. Jurisdiction of county court.....	214
18. Jurisdiction of justices of the peace.....	214

Revised Statutes, 1895.

Art. 383. Power of cities over streets.....	206
419. Power of cities over streets.....	206
705. Power of gas or water corporations.....	207

Penal Code, 1895.

Art. 57. "Petty offense" defined.....	214
427. Adulterated food.....	202
430. Adulterated food.....	202
432. "Adulteration" defined.....	202

Code of Criminal Procedure.

Art. 91. Jurisdiction of county courts.....	214
95. Jurisdiction of justices of the peace.....	214
929-931. Power of mayors and recorders of cities.....	214

Utah.

Compiled Laws, 1893.

§ 2780. Right to use water.....	860
2785. Return of surplus water.....	859
§§ 3135, 3137. Limitation of actions.....	860
§ 3463. "Nuisance" defined.....	860
4566. "Public nuisance" defined.....	860

Virginia.

Constitution.

Art. 5, § 18. Lotteries prohibited.....	242
---	-----

Code.

§ 3252. When failure to perform condition of policy, etc., not available as a defense.....	434
3471. Appeal bond; when and by whom taken.....	236
3474. Limitation of appeal; writ of error.....	236
3825. Lotteries prohibited.....	242
3826. Lotteries prohibited.....	242

Washington.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 3. Due process of law.....	315, 817
§ 12. Prohibiting special legislation.....	314
23. Obligation of contracts.....	817
30. Rights of the people.....	308
32. Recurrence to fundamental principles.....	308
2, § 83. Prohibiting ownership of lands by aliens.....	431
4, § 4. Power of supreme court.....	318
15, § 1. Harbor lines.....	605
§ 2. Leasing wharfage rights.....	606

Statutes.

1893, p. 204, § 41. Periods of redemption.....	305
1895, p. 81. Attorney's fees.....	303
1897, p. 71, § 3. Duty of judgment creditor.....	313
p. 229, § 53. Leasing wharfage rights.....	606
March 6. Lien of judgment.....	817
March 10, p. 70. Sales of property under execution.....	303
March 11, p. 91. Payment of obligations.....	303
p. 98. Deficiency judgment act.....	303
16, p. 227. Judgment debtor's right of possession during period of redemption.....	303

Code of Procedure.

§ 163, subdiv. 4. Disqualification of judge.....	319
--	-----

Hill's Annotated Code.

Vol. 1, §§ 3068, 3069. Support of indigent parents.....	825
2, § 138. Action for negligent killing.....	822

Vol. 2, § 148. Abatement of action by plain- tiff's death.....	824
§§ 462, 463. Judgment lien.....	817
§§ 511-521. Redemption.....	806
§ 650. Sale of mortgaged lands.....	804

West Virginia.Code, 1891.

P. 905, Append. § 11. Ventilation of coal mines	818
---	-----

Wisconsin.Constitution.

Art. 2, § 1. Boundary.....	890
9, § 1. Jurisdiction on border lakes.....	890

Statutes.

1899, chap. 37. La Crosse bridge.....	829
1891, chap. 238. Unacknowledged agreements relating to sales of land.....	898

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 124, § 10. Publication of summons.....	845
§ 675. Printing public notices.....	844
1130. Advertising delinquent taxes.....	844
1131. Contract for publication.....	844
1508. Order of support by relatives, etc.....	581
1810. Duty of railroad to erect fences.....	468
3092. New trial.....	829
4511. Penalty for unlawful assembly and riot.....	734

Private Laws.

1856, p. 230, chap. 3, § 9. Charter of Oshkosh; official newspaper.....	844
--	-----

Sanborn & Berryman's Annotated Statutes.

§ 938. Liability for injury done by a mob or a riot.....	734
2081. Uses and trusts.....	727
40 L. R. A.

Wyoming.Constitution.

Art. 3, § 13. Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings.....	199
§ 25. No bill shall become a law except by majority vote.....	199
28. Signing of bills.....	199
15, § 7. Deposit of public funds in banks.....	706
§ 8. Making of profit out of public funds.....	708
18, § 4. Custody of land-grant funds.....	708

Statutes.

1888, chap. 44. License money.....	713
1890-91, chap. 28. Liquor license p. 339. Investment of permanent land funds.....	713
1896, p. 125. Investment of permanent land funds.....	708
1897, March 1, chap. 56. Sale of real estate for delinquent taxes...	196

Revised Statutes.

§ 161. Enumeration of specified corporate powers.....	714
subd. 3. Licenses.....	714
4. Control of gaming and immor- ality.....	714
7. Ordinances to prevent and re- move nuisances.....	714
18. Prescribe limits for licensing unlawful business.....	714
174, p. 115. Cheyenne city charter, new cor- poration legal successor of city.....	713
1438. License money payable to city.....	713
1442. Liquor licenses and penalties.....	713
1455. Penalty of selling liquor without li- cense.....	713
1687. Bond of officers and deputies.....	701
1698. Enumerated duties of treasurer.....	701
1731. Balancing accounts; succession in of- fice.....	701
1734. Funds to be paid only on warrants.....	701
3959. Duties of school-district treasurer.....	704
Title 26. Licenses.....	713

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Lincoln County for the opinion of the full bench of a suit brought to recover assets alleged to have belonged to plaintiff's intestate and to have been appropriated by defendant's testator to his own use. Bill dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. P. Pierce for plaintiff.

authority of the administrator de bonis non extends only to such of the personality of his intestate as remains in specie, unaltered or unconverted by his predecessor, and so far only can be regarded as trustee for distributees and creditors.

But in Whitworth v. Oliver, 36 Ala. 286, the expressions in Benton County Ct. Judge v. Price, 6 Ala. 36, and Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721, to the effect that the "authority of the administrator de bonis non extends only to such of the personality of his estate as remains in specie, unaltered or unconverted by his predecessor, and so far only can be regarded a trustee for distributees and creditors," were criticised. The court said that the real point in those cases was that, in the absence of the statute of 1846, the administrator de bonis non could maintain no action to recover from his predecessor any of the effects of the estate, except such as remained in specie, unaltered and unconverted by him. But when the court went further, and limited the authority of the administrator de bonis non, it was a question if it did not trench on other statutes of force in this state, as a voluntary payment by an administrator in chief to his successor would exonerate himself and his sureties, and fasten a liability on his successor to creditors and distributees.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

In the absence of statutory provisions an administrator de bonis non could not require of his predecessor a settlement of his administration, as such settlement could only be made between the administrator in chief and the creditors or distributees. Nolly v. Wilkins, 11 Ala. 372.

So, an administrator de bonis non was not entitled to recover in assumption from the administrator of his predecessor moneys collected by him and unaccounted for. It was said that for assets wasted or converted by the first administrator or executor, the action should be brought directly by the creditors, legatees, or distributees. Chamberlain v. Bates, 2 Port. (Ala.) 550, 27 Am. Dec. 667.

And an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond, for a conversion under Ala. act 1806, providing that if any administrator hath embezzled, wasted, or misapplied any part of the decedent's estate, the court may revoke his letters and grant letters of administration to other parties who may have actions of trover, detinue, account, and on the case for such goods or chattels as came to the possession of the former administrator and were withheld, wasted, embezzled, detained, or misapplied and no satisfaction made, as this act did not authorize an action on the bond for a conversion. Benton County Ct. Judge v. Price, 6 Ala. 36.

And in Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721, it was said that under Ala. act 1806, neither of the actions provided by this statute, nor any other, was maintainable at common law where the assets had been wasted or converted, and the act only applied where letters had been revoked and granted to another for either of the causes mentioned in the act.

And a decree in favor of an administrator de bonis non against his predecessor for the balance found due to the estate was erroneous, where the decree was rendered prior to Ala. act Feb. 4, 1846, authorizing the orphan's court on a final settlement with the administrator in chief to render a decree against him, either in favor of the administrator de bonis non or of the heirs or distributees, as the court may see fit. Price v. Simmons, 18 Ala. 749.

40 L. R. A.

In Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721, it was held that Ala. act 1843, amending the law in relation to insolvent estates, authorizing the orphan's court to render a decree in favor of the administrator de bonis non appointed pursuant to its provisions against his predecessors, for all moneys found due from him to the estate, and all such goods, chattels, choses in action, and other personal effects and deeds, and other evidences of title to realty as may be in his hands belonging to the estate, applied exclusively to insolvent estates.

And a decree of the orphan's court ascertaining a certain sum in the hands of a displaced administrator to which the estate of the intestate was entitled, and adjudging the same to be paid over to his successor, and directing an execution to issue for the collection thereof, was erroneous, under Ala. act 1830, Clay's Dig. § 42, providing that all decrees made by the orphan's court on final settlement of the account of executors, administrators, and guardians shall have the force and effect of judgments at law, and execution may issue thereon, and § 43, giving to each distributee, heir, or devisee a writ of execution or attachment when a distribution of real or personal estate is decreed, one or both in the case of personal estate, and in the case of real property a writ of habere facias possessionem against the executor, as the act of 1830 only applied to a distributee, heir, or devisee, and did not embrace an administrator de bonis non. Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721.

In Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326; King v. Smith, 15 Ala. 264; and Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615,—it was said that at common law an administrator de bonis non could not recover of the administrator in chief for his delinquencies or devastavits, or compel a settlement of his devastavits.

Under the Alabama statutes the claim of the administrator de bonis non against the administrator in chief for a devastavit is a personal asset in the hands of the administrator de bonis non, and if he fails to use proper diligence to recover such assets, and protect the estate against loss, he renders himself accountable for the loss to those entitled to the estate. Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 82; Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326; Glenn v. Billingslea, 64 Ala. 352; Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 628; Banks v. Speers, 103 Ala. 436.

So, in Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 73, it was said that at common law an administrator de bonis non was not authorized to have an account for assets converted, wasted, or misapplied by the administrator in chief; but this rule was abrogated by the act of 1846, and by the act of February, 1858.

And in Hatchett v. Billingslea, 65 Ala. 16, it was said that Ala. act Feb. 4, 1846 (Pamph. Acts, 14), 1 Brick. Dig. 919, § 82, was carried into the Code of 1852, and forms the subject of chapter 9, title 4, part 2, beginning with § 1876. That section provides "that whenever an executor or administrator is removed, resigns, or his letters are revoked, or his authority ceases from any cause, he must, within one month thereafter, file his account, vouchers, evidence, and statement of the heirs and legatees, as in the case of other settlements; and upon the same being duly advertised as other settlements, his account must be audited, stated, and a decree rendered thereon." Section 1877 provided that "if there is any remaining or succeeding executor or administrator on said estate, a decree must be rendered in his favor, for the amount found due on such settlement, or for the delivery of any personal property in the hands of the executor or administrator whose authority has ceased." Similar provisions are found in Rev.

Messrs. N. Morrill and John A. Morrill, for defendant:

This trust property, if it be a trust property, stands absolutely unidentified, and no trace of it can be found. The plaintiff, then, stands simply in the position of a general creditor of the estate.

Fowler v. True, 76 Me. 43.

Code, §§ 2165-2169, 2232-2238; Ala. Code, §§ 1876-1881; Code 1876, § 2591.

In Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326, it was said that the common-law rule was changed by Ala. act 1846, and that under it the duty was imposed on the administrator de bonis non to compel a settlement with his predecessor, and that for any want of diligence in the performance of that duty he was responsible.

Where a sheriff by virtue of his office was appointed administrator, and collected moneys belonging to the estate, and afterwards was appointed administrator, and an action was brought on the bond given for the second administration to recover for effects and assets which had come to his hands as administrator in chief, it was held that under Ala. Code, § 1877, it was also the duty of the administrator de bonis non to collect such funds thus held from the resigned or removed administrator in chief, and that the sureties of the administrator de bonis non were liable for his failure to make such collection. Whitworth v. Oliver, 30 Ala. 286.

So, under Ala. Code, §§ 1876, 1881, where an administrator de bonis non had been administrator in chief, and under his second appointment ample time had elapsed to possess himself of the assets that he received as administrator in chief, his bond as administrator de bonis non was liable for the same. Whitworth v. Oliver, 30 Ala. 286.

And an administrator de bonis non would be liable for negligence in not compelling a settlement of the accounts of his predecessor, and for any actual loss occasioned thereby, under Ala. Code, § 2537-2540 (similar to act 1846 and act February, 1858), providing that the administrator de bonis non may obtain on such settlement a decree for assets converted, wasted, or misappropriated by his predecessor. Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 73.

In Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615, it was said that under Ala. act 1846 the administrator de bonis non was the only one who had the right to call his predecessor to a settlement, and to recover of him for any waste or conversion of the assets of which he might have been guilty.

In Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615, it was said that under Ala. Pub. Laws, act 1846-1848, p. 14, Rev. Code, §§ 2232-2238, Rev. Code 1858, §§ 2165-2169, an administrator de bonis non was liable for not collecting assets unadministered, and also for such as may have been wasted or converted.

In Glenn v. Billingslea, 64 Ala. 345, it was said that under Ala. Code 1876, § 2591, if an administrator de bonis non failed to use proper diligence in recovering the assets of the estate he was liable for the loss.

In Glenn v. Billingslea, 64 Ala. 345, it was said: "The administrator de bonis non had the power and authority to receive from the administratrix in chief compensation for the alleged waste, and for the unauthorized keeping up and cultivation of the plantation. Such compensation, when received, will be assets in his hands, for the payment of debts, or for distribution."

Under Ala. act Feb. 4, 1846, the question whether the sureties of a sheriff acting as administrator were liable for a devastavit during the first administration, where the sheriff was reappointed as administrator de bonis non after his term of office as sheriff expired, was not decided; but the sureties on the first bond were liable by reason of a settlement made by their principal acting as sheriff and administrator, and were concluded by that decree. Hagland v. Calhoun, 36 Ala. 611.

40 L. R. A.

And an administrator de bonis non was chargeable with the amount in money which by the exercise of due diligence he might have collected or choses in action belonging to the estate which his predecessor was ordered to deliver up to him, and the burden of proof was on him to show that he had used due diligence. Wilkinson v. Hunter, 37 Ala. 268.

In Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 12 L. ed. 130, where a judgment had been rendered against an executor, and he was removed and an administrator de bonis non appointed, it was said that the objection that an administrator de bonis non was not liable for assets in the hands of a deceased executor, could not be sustained, as Ala. Stat. Sept. 1821, Clay's Dig. 227, provides that where any suit may have been commenced on behalf of or against the personal representative of any testator or intestate, the same may be prosecuted by any person who may afterwards succeed to the administration or executorship.

An administrator could discharge himself from liability by surrendering to his successor the assets in his hands to be administered, or by paying him money due from him. Skinner v. Frierson, 8 Ala. 915; Willis v. Willis, 16 Ala. 650; Bogle v. Bogle, 23 Ala. 544.

Choses in action.

Under Ala. Laws, pp. 326-334, providing that the administrator by order of the county court shall sell at public sale on a credit, the purchaser giving bonds, and that he shall not sell at private sale, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to collect a note payable to his predecessor in office, as bonds taken by an administrator on a sale for credit as required by law are assets. Callier v. Boykin, Minor (Ala.) 206.

So, a bond payable to an administratrix as such was assets in the hands of an administrator de bonis non, and he could recover upon such bond where the prior administratrix resigned after having married an obligor to the bond sued on, which she held as assets. King v. Green, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 183, 19 Am. Dec. 46.

So, where an administrator was removed after he had sold property of his intestate and had not received the price, he could not sue the purchaser for the same, but the right of action passed to the new administrator, under Ala. Stat. Clay's Dig. 270, § 30, providing that when any personal representative shall be displaced all moneys due to him or her in that right by execution or otherwise shall be paid to his or her successor. Harbin v. Levi, 6 Ala. 399.

And an administrator de bonis non was entitled to maintain an action in his own name on a note given to his predecessor which was not indorsed. It was held that Ala. act 1837, providing that notes payable to a person or bearer shall be sued on in the name of the payee, his indorser, or personal representative, did not interfere with the rights of an administrator de bonis non to take possession of the unadministered assets of the estate he represented, and to sue as such upon notes payable to his predecessor. Barron v. Vandevent, 13 Ala. 232.

In King v. Griffin, 6 Ala. 387, it was said that the administrator de bonis non became entitled to bonds, notes, etc., which his predecessor had in his hands when his representative functions ceased.

The administrator de bonis non should be held to account for all the assets and moneys which came to his hands as administrator, and, so far as he claimed to withhold them for debts due him from the estate, the burden rested on him to establish the validity of his claim; but this rule did not apply to moneys paid to him as a creditor on a claim by the former administrator. Daughdrill v. Daughdrill, 108 Ala. 321.

The time allowed for bringing suits at law against the executrix of William Hodge has expired, and this action can only be maintained, if maintainable at all, under the provisions of Rev. Stat. chap. 87, § 19.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Under Ala. Code, § 1743, providing that the probate court shall have jurisdiction to order a sale of personal property on an application by the administrator for a sale to pay the debts, where the sale was made without the proper showing by the administrator, the court had no jurisdiction and the sale was void, and the administrator de bonis non could recover the property from the purchaser. It was held that the common-law power of an administrator to sell the property of his intestate without an order of court was taken away by the statute. Ikelheimer v. Chapman, 32 Ala. 676.

And where an administrator fraudulently sold slaves of the testator in collusion with the vendee, the administrator de bonis non could recover the slaves without bringing a suit in equity to have the sale adjudged void. Swink v. Snodgrass, 17 Ala. 653, 52 Am. Dec. 190.

So, where an administrator sold slaves at private sale contrary to law, it was held that no title passed, and an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could recover the property, although it was said that the executrix could not. In this case it was said the question of the right of an administrator de bonis non to recover what his predecessor had thus converted or administered (a question which has elsewhere been settled in the negative very frequently) is not the same as it is in England and in states which have no such statute as that of Alabama, providing that private sales by an administrator shall be unlawful. Hopper v. Steele, 18 Ala. 523.

Where a sale of the personal property of the estate was made by an administrator without the authority of an order of court, or of a will, the purchaser obtained no title against an administrator de bonis non. Wyatt v. Rambo, 29 Ala. 510, 68 Am. Dec. 89.

And in Woolfork v. Sullivan, 23 Ala. 548, 58 Am. Dec. 306, the same was said to be the rule.

In Elliott v. Branch Bank, 20 Ala. 345, it was said that a fraudulent sale, or one made by an administrator without authority, is not an administration, unless the parties in interest choose so to consider it, and if they fail to do so their representative, the administrator de bonis non, can recover the property.

But proceeds of a void sale of land made by an administrator are not assets of the estate, and the administrator or his sureties are not liable for such to the administrator de bonis non. Pettit v. Pettit, 32 Ala. 289; Woods v. Legg, 91 Ala. 511.

And where the administrator without authority sold personal property belonging to his intestate's estate, and the parties interested received the benefit of the sale and treated it as an administration and not a wrongful conversion, the administrator de bonis non could not recover the property. Elliott v. Branch Bank, 29 Ala. 345.

And an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo having, with knowledge of the facts, treated the proceeds of a sale made by an executor as assets of the estate, and having caused them to be charged against the estate of the executor, and having received all the benefit which could have accrued from a regular valid sale, could not thereafter treat the sale as void, thereby receiving double 40 L. R. A.

Rockland v. Rockland Water Co. 86 Me. 55; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 188 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873.

Upon the allegations of the bill alone, and compensation for the property in controversy. Bell v. Craig, 52 Ala. 215; Sampey v. Sowell, 93 Ala. 447.

Arkansas.

Most of the cases held under the common law that an administrator de bonis non could not call his predecessor to account for money, or wasted or converted assets, as the successor took only unadministered property. But now he can call his predecessor to account under the statute in force.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

The administrator de bonis non of C. was entitled to a decree against a guardian for the possession of a negro and for his hire, where the guardian had acquired the negro under a will of C. which will had been set aside. Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111.

Where specific property belonging to an estate was left by an executor at his death undisposed of, and came to the hands of his administrator, who also collected rents from the real estate, and the will was set aside, the administrator of the executor was required to account to the administrator de bonis non of the first estate, and a decree was rendered against him as such administrator for the value thereof. Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111.

And an administrator de bonis non was entitled to take and administer property and effects of the intestate or testator remaining unadministered. But he took such property subject to any proper charges or liens against the same. Turner v. Tapscott, 30 Ark. 312.

In Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111, it was said that an administrator de bonis non is simply to collect and administer such property and effects of the deceased, not administered by the former representative, as remain in specie, and are capable of being ascertained and identified as the specific property or estate represented by him.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non could not call the former administrator to account for money in his hands, as he was only responsible for that to the creditors, distributees, and legatees. Green v. Byrne, 46 Ark. 453; Williams v. Cubage, 36 Ark. 307; Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 117; State, Oliver v. Rottaken, 34 Ark. 144.

So, an administrator de bonis non could not call the administrator in chief to account for waste or conversion of the assets of the estate. Brice v. Taylor, 51 Ark. 75.

And he could not maintain an action for waste or loss occasioned by a former executor. But it was said that he might ask the court to remove clouds from the title of lands belonging to the estate in order that he might take and administer them by a sale and by the application of the proceeds to the debts. Ludlow v. Flournoy, 34 Ark. 451.

And he could not maintain an action to hold the representative or sureties of his predecessor accountable for property lost, wasted, mismanaged, or converted by him. It was further held that Ark. Stat. Gantt's Dig. § 44, providing that if an executor or administrator die or resign, or his letters be revoked, he or his legal representatives shall account for, pay, and deliver to his successor all money and personal property, and rights, credits, deeds, evidences of debts and papers belonging to the estate of the deceased, only applies to such as further upon the facts offered in evidence by the plaintiff, the action clearly cannot be maintained.

Prentice v. Dehon, 10 Allen, 358; Shilaber v. Wyman, 15 Mass. 325; Alvord v. Marsh, 12 Allen, 604; Hatch v. Proctor, 102 Mass. 354; Dearborn v. Matthes, 128 Mass. 196; remained in specie, as they could not account for, pay, and deliver to a successor any other assets. It was further held that Gantt's Dig. § 191, providing that the bond of any executor or administrator may be sued on at the instance of any legatee, distributee, creditor, or other "person interested" for any mismanagement, waste, or other breach of the condition of such bond, and providing for judgment against the executor or administrator and his securities for the whole value of the estate mismanaged or wasted, did not authorize an administrator de bonis non to recover, as he did not have any interest in the assets wasted or mismanaged. State, Oliver, v. Rottaken, 34 Ark. 144.

And an action by the administrator de bonis non of C. and his heirs, against the widow, heirs, and administrator of his predecessor, for the hire of slaves and value of goods, choses in action, rents, etc., wasted, converted, and appropriated by the executor to his own use, could not be maintained under Gould's (Ark.) Dig. chap. 4, §§ 43, 44, providing that an administrator de bonis non may invoke the aid of the probate court against his predecessor, or his legal representatives, to obtain possession of the effects unadministered, or he may bring suit upon the bond of the delinquent predecessor. Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111.

And under Ark. Rev. Stat. chap. 4, §§ 37, 38, providing that if any executor or administrator dies or resigns, or his letters be revoked, he or his legal representatives shall account for, pay, and deliver to his successor, all money and personal property, and all the rights, credits, deeds, evidences of debts, and papers of any kind belonging to the estate of the deceased, at such time and in such manner as the court shall order, and the succeeding administrator may proceed at law against the delinquent and his securities, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action upon the bond of his predecessor without averring that the proper court of probate had made an order directing the payment of the same to the plaintiff, and that there was a failure to comply with such order. State v. Ferguson, 8 Ark. 172.

But an administrator de bonis non was entitled to require an account of the administrator of his predecessor for all money and property due the estate from the deceased administrator, under Ark. act March 13, 1890, providing that when an administrator to an estate dies his successor in office shall compel his personal representative to account for and pay over all moneys and property due such estate from the estate of the deceased administrator. Wilson v. Hinton, 63 Ark. 145.

Under Mansf. (Ark.) Dig. § 199, authorizing a suit against an executor or administrator and his bondsmen by "any legatee, distributee, creditor, or other person interested," where the next of kin of a testator brought a suit to surcharge the accounts of a party who had been an executor, and to recover the value of assets which he had technically administered, but for the proceeds of which he had failed to account, and after judgment the administrator de bonis non of the first estate brought a suit to enjoin the payment until the debts were paid, it was held that in order to prevent a failure of justice, the balance recovered should be paid to the administrator de bonis non as assets, but if it could be ascertained from the records of the probate court that the fund was ripe for distribution it could be distributed in chancery. Brice v. Taylor, 51 Ark. 75.

Tyler v. Wheeler, 180 Mass. 206; Brooks v. Brooks, 11 Cush. 18; Monroe v. Holmes, 9 Allen, 244, 13 Allen, 109; McLane v. Curran, 133 Mass. 531, 43 Am. Rep. 535; Murray v. Wood, 144 Mass. 195; Foster v. Bailey, 157 Mass. 160.

The statute relied on provides that the credi-

Connecticut.

The common-law rule seems to prevail in this state in regard to calling a predecessor to account. Where there was trust property that should have come to his hands it was held that he could pursue it, but it was treated as unadministered.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

An administrator de bonis non of a wife could maintain an action against the administrator of the husband for the wife's property, where an express trust was created upon her property which the husband had mingled with his own funds, under Conn. Stat. 1866, providing that the property of the wife upon the death of the husband after the prior decease of the wife should vest in the same manner as if she had always been a feme sole. It was said that this was not an action on a devastavit or for an accounting, as the wife's estate was not taken or held by the husband as administrator and there was no actual administration of her estate, but it was a suit against the administrator of a person who, up to the time of his death, held personal property as the statutory trustee, and who had refused to deliver it upon demand to her administrator. Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Security Co. 67 Conn. 438.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not liable on his bond at the common law for any devastavit or default of his predecessor either of omission or commission, as there was no privity between an administrator de bonis non and the preceding executor or administrator. Also See v. Matther, 8 Conn. 584.

So, in American Bd. of Comrs. for Foreign Missions, 27 Conn. 344, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could not bring a suit for a devastavit or call the executor or first administrator to an account for money received for property sold. The remedy for this was an action on the predecessor's bond by the persons injured and to the extent of the injury averred and proved.

So, where an executrix having an absolute estate in the property had disposed of the same and had died without filing an inventory, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action for the technical breach of the bond in neglecting to file an inventory, where there was no remaining property to which the administrator had a rightful claim, and there were no debts to be paid. State v. Smith, 52 Conn. 557.

Delaware.

An administrator de bonis non may recover the balance shown by the settlement of his predecessor, and is entitled to follow choses in action taken by his predecessor for land sold under order of court.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

In State, Burton, v. Tunnell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 182, it was said that where an executor or administrator is removed from office, or dies before closing the estate, the succeeding administrator is entitled to the goods, chattels, rights, and credits which remain in specie, and money kept separate, which are therefore termed unadministered.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non could recover on his predecessor's bond for all money and other tor must not be chargeable with culpable neglect in not prosecuting his claim within the time limited for commencing an action at law. The plaintiff, Edward T. Hodge, has been guilty of such neglect. This action is not commenced until long after the statute bar has become effectual.

Waltham Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen, 121; assets, and all securities, books, and papers belonging to the estate of the intestate remaining in the hands of the deceased executor or administrator, or with which at the time of his removal or decease he was chargeable. The statute was not referred to, but evidently was based upon Del. Rev. Code 1852, p. 298 of the statute, providing that "whenever an executor, or administrator is removed or dies before he closes the estate of the deceased, his co-executor or administrator, or if there be none such, his successor, shall be entitled to receive all the unadministered effects, including books and papers, which, at the time of such removal or death, shall be in his hands, or for which he is answerable, just allowances being made;" and p. 299, providing that the condition of the bond of an executor or administrator shall be that he shall, without delay, deliver to the person or persons entitled to receive the same all the unadministered goods, chattels, rights and credits, money, securities, books, and papers belonging to the estate of said deceased with which the said shall be chargeable. State, Burton, v. Tunnell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 182.

Where an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo brought suit to recover the balance of money with which his predecessors had charged themselves in settling an account before the register, a plea that the amount charged was for judgments taken for the sale of the property, by mistake made in the name of the executors individually, and which they were ready to assign and turn over as assets, constituted no defense. It was said: "If the charge was of articles of property remaining in specie, or of credits uncollected, and which were contained in the account as such, and thus shown to be in the hands of the executor unconverted, and only estimated in Federal money as indicating their probable value, then he would not be absolutely chargeable for such estimated value in case of loss or failure to realize, without his default, but would be finally accountable for the sum actually received, and in every subsequent account would be entitled to have allowance of the loss as a credit." No statute was cited, but Rev. Code, chap. 89, § 12, providing the same as Rev. Code 1852, p. 298, was in force. Peckard v. Price, 5 Del. Ch. 239.

Choses in action.

Where a promissory note was taken by an administrator individually for the proceeds of land of his decedent A, sold under an order of court for the payment of debts, and the note showed on its face the purpose for which it was given, and such note was assigned by the administratrix of such administrator to pay his debts, the administrator de bonis non of A was entitled to the proceeds of the note claiming the same as a trust fund, as it was not in the power of the administratrix of his predecessor to change the trust character. Barwick v. White, 2 Del. Ch. 235.

District of Columbia.

Although the common-law rule applies here, a recovery was allowed on an additional bond required by a statute, where there was danger of the assets being wasted.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

In Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 14 L. ed. 472, it was said that under the Maryland law, only property remaining in specie passed to the administrator de bonis non.

40 L. R. A.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Where other sureties were called for by the orphans' court of the District of Columbia under U. S. Stat. at L. 4, act 1846, § 3, providing that whenever the orphan's court shall be satisfied that the security of an executor or administrator is insufficient, the court may call upon the executor or administrator to give additional security, and on failure may appoint another administrator instead of the first, and require, from him removed, to hand over to his successor the unadministered assets, sureties given under such an order were bound for the waste of their principal to the amount of the estate or funds with which he charged himself by his return to the orphans' court as administrator, where it called for additional security and for such funds as the administrator might afterwards receive. Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 14 L. ed. 472.

Florida.

The administrator de bonis non cannot call the representative of his predecessor to an account for a devastavit or conversion. There is a statute authorizing him to call to an account the predecessor who has been removed. In other cases the common-law rule applies. The administrator de bonis non takes only unadministered property. He may set aside a void sale on proper pleading.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

An administrator de bonis non can only administer upon such of the estate as remained in specie unadministered upon by his predecessor. Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980; Gregory v. Harrison, 4 Fla. 56.

Where an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo turned over to the board of trustees of the improvement fund of Florida coupons found amongst the papers of the decedent, supposing that they were the property of the board of trustees, the decedent having been its secretary and treasurer and salesman for its land, it was held that this was not such a change in the property therein as would have amounted to an administration so as to prevent a subsequent administrator de bonis non from asserting the claim for such coupons turned over by his predecessor, but it was held that under the evidence the coupons were never the property of the decedent. Adams v. Internal Improvement Fund, 37 Fla. 266.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non cannot call to account a removed executor for a devastavit. Gregory v. Harrison, 4 Fla. 56.

In Gregory v. Harrison, 4 Fla. 56, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could assert no claim for money which came into the hands of an executor.

Florida act Feb. 19, 1870, chap. 1733, McClellan's Dig. p. 98, §§ 80-90, giving powers and rights of action not existing at common law to administrators de bonis non against executors or administrators who may have been removed by the court for cause, did not extend to the case of a delinquent deceased executor or administrator who had not been thus removed. Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

In order for an administrator de bonis non to recover assets sold by his predecessor, it should be

Jenney v. Wilcox, 9 Allen, 245; Bradford v. Forbes, 9 Allen, 365; Wells v. Child, 12 Allen, 333; Richards v. Child, 98 Mass. 284; Sykes v. Meacham, 103 Mass. 283; Bacon v. Pomeroy, 104 Mass. 583; Spelman v. Talbot, 123

Mass. 489; Brooks v. Rayner, 127 Mass. 268; Morey v. American Loan & T. Co. 149 Mass. 253; Knight v. Cunningham, 160 Mass. 580.

This action being simply for the recovery of shown that there was collusion between the predecessor and the alleged purchaser, in order to deprive the sale of its effect as an administration, and the fraud relied upon should be specifically stated in the pleading. Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980.

Georgia.

Prior to the act of 1845 an administrator de bonis non could not maintain a suit for waste or conversion committed by his predecessor. Since that act he can call his predecessor or his representatives to an account. He cannot recover property sold by his predecessor, but since the act of 1845 he may maintain an action to set aside a sale fraudulently made by his predecessor.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Under Ga. act 1845, Cobb's Dig. 335, providing that it shall be the duty of the removed executor or administrator to account to the administrator de bonis non, it was held that a judgment creditor could not sue to recover property that was sold fraudulently by an executor where there was an administrator de bonis non whose duty it was to maintain such action. Hardwick v. Thomas, 10 Ga. 266.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo of an insolvent estate could maintain an action against a creditor where the executrix, who had been removed, had paid such creditor an excess beyond his pro rata share of the assets, as the statute gives a creditor a cause of action where a distributee has been overpaid, and the same principle applies here. McFarlin v. Ringer, 51 Ga. 363.

But where an administratrix individually sold a negro that belonged to the estate, an administratrix de bonis non could not recover the same, as she could only recover for goods, chattels, rights, and credits which remain in specie in the hands of the former administratrix unadministered, and are capable of being identified as the property of the first intestate. Paschal v. Davis, 3 Ga. 256; Bates v. Woolfolk, 5 Ga. 329. This was prior to Ga. act 1845.

And in Thomas v. Hardwick, 1 Ga. 78, it was said that an administrator de bonis non has no right to sue for assets which may have been previously administered, and that where lands and negroes are sold by order of the court of ordinary, or perishable property by the act of the party himself, they are administered so far as the successor is concerned. "He cannot maintain an action for them. Of course the predecessor is liable for their proceeds to creditors, legatees, and distributees. If an executor or administrator be removed or die, having on hand in kind a portion of the original assets, these could be sued for and recovered by the administrator de bonis non."

In Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56, it was said that at common law if there was a fraudulent collusion between the administrator and the purchaser in the sale of goods by such administrator, the administrator de bonis non might then pursue the property.

In Hardwick v. Thomas, 10 Ga. 266, it was said that if a removed executor has colluded with a purchaser at a sale made by the executor the administrator de bonis non can pursue the property and collect it, as a fraudulent sale will not be held to be an administration by a removed executor.

Chosen in action.

In Gilbert v. Hardwick, 11 Ga. 599, it was said that an administrator de bonis non at common law could not sue for the purchase money of negroes sold by the executor, as such sale was an administration, and the administrator de bonis non could neither call the executor to an account nor collect any purchase money; and it was held that Ga. act 1845 did not apply where the rights of the removed executor, and his obligations, and the rights of the administrator de bonis non, had been fixed before the passage of the act.

In Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56, it was said that at common law the administrator de bonis non would have no right or title to a judgment obtained upon a note given for property sold by the former administrator.

Claims for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Prior to Ga. act 1845, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain a suit for waste or conversion committed by his predecessor. Thomas v. Hardwick, 1 Ga. 78; Paschal v. Davis, 3 Ga. 256.

But in Shorter v. Hargroves, 11 Ga. 658, it was said that under Ga. act 1845, Cobb's Dig. 335, providing that whenever an executor or administrator may be removed or depart this life chargeable to the estate which he or she represented, it shall be the duty of such removed executor or administrator to account fully with the administrator de bonis non who may be appointed to finish the administration of such estate. The administrator de bonis non can call the representative of his predecessor to an account.

And in Knight v. Lasseter, 16 Ga. 151, it was said that under Ga. act 1845, it was designed to give a remedy which should be full and complete as to all and every portion of the estate, whether remaining in specie or converted into cash and notes, remaining in the hands of such removed trustee or his representative, and as to which the rights of other persons had not become vested.

And Ga. act 1845 repeals the common law as to all restrictions which it imposes upon the administrator de bonis non, and subjects the first administrator and his estate to liability to account to and with the administrator de bonis non touching the entire administration, and the administrator de bonis non should be made a party to an action by a distributee against a former administrator charging a devastavit. Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56.

Under Ga. act 1845, the administrator de bonis non was not liable to the heirs and creditors for the failure to call the previous administrator to an account, unless they showed that he knew of a devastavit, or was guilty of some positive neglect. Bowers v. Grimes, 45 Ga. 616.

And under Ga. Code, § 2514, providing that upon the revocation of letters of one administrator where there are more than one, the trust remains in the hands of the other, and with him as to an administrator de bonis non the removed administrator must account, the sureties upon the joint bond of both of the administrators were exonerated from a liability for a devastavit committed after the first was discharged and the other was appointed sole administrator. Veach v. Rice, 181 U. S. 293, 38 L. ed. 163.

Illinois.

The authority of the administrator de bonis non extends only to such goods as remain in specie unadministered, except in such cases as are modified by the statute authorizing an action on the predecessor's bond where he has been removed. But he statute does not give any right of action for a specific sum of money or for the recovery of a money judgment, the action is one at law.

Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 358; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 188 U. S. 146, 34 L. ed. 873.

account, balance, or conversion against the representative of the predecessor who has died, but only applies to cases of removal.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

In Newhall v. Turney, 14 Ill. 338, and Rowan v. Kirkpatrick, 14 Ill. 1, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could only recover such of the goods and chattels of the intestate as remained unadministered in specie, and such of the debts due the intestate as remained unpaid, but that his authority did not extend to assets already administered, and so far as the estate had been administered by the first administrator he was concluded.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Scates's Comp. Stat. (Ill.) 1196, Statute of Wills, § 75, providing that where any executor or administrator shall have his letters revoked he shall be liable on his bond to such subsequent administrator for any mismanagement of the estate, and such subsequent administrator may maintain actions of trover, detinue, account, and on the case against such former executor or administrator for all such goods, chattels, debts, and credits which shall have come to the possession of him or her, and which shall be withheld, wasted, embezzled, or misapplied, an administrator de bonis non could call a prior administrator to account and maintain an action on his bond. Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17.

In Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17, a distinction was made between an administrator de bonis non calling his predecessor to account and calling the administrator of his predecessor to account, holding that he could maintain the first-named action, and overruling Stose v. People, 25 Ill. 600.

In Hanifan v. Needles, 108 Ill. 408, it was said that under Ill. Rev. Stat. 1874, chap. 3, § 39, providing that upon revocation of letters and removal of an executor or administrator from office his successor may maintain an action for waste, mismanagement, or breach of duty in regard to the estate, that an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against his predecessor for an accounting and for mismanagement. But it was said that if he died the administrator de bonis non could not maintain such an action.

Where the executor of an estate sold a leasehold and was removed, an administrator de bonis non was appointed, and the executor died, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for the proceeds of the sale against the estate of his predecessor under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 3, § 39. McDonough v. Hanifan, 7 Ill. App. 50.

And an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor for money due to the estate, under Starr & C. Stat. (Ill.) p. 208, § 39, providing that where such executor or administrator shall have his letters revoked he shall be liable on his bond to such subsequent administrator, or to any other persons aggrieved, for any mismanagement of the estate committed to his care. Nevitt v. Woodburn, 160 Ill. 203.

In Stose v. People, 25 Ill. 600, it was held that an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo had no right to call for an account of any part of the estate converted or wasted by an executor who had been removed. But this case was overruled in Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17.

In Graffenreid v. Kundert, 34 Ill. App. 483, it was said that the administrator de bonis non had no

The bill must allege, and the facts proved must show, that the plaintiff has not pursued his remedy at law for reasons which of themselves afford ground for equitable relief.

Rockland v. Rockland Water Co. 86 Me. 55; right at common law to an account from his predecessor for the proceeds of the estate or for its mismanagement, or for any breach of duty respecting it, and that where an executor was guilty of a devastavit and died, the Illinois statute giving an administrator de bonis non an action against a removed executor did not apply.

And in Re Richart, 58 Ill. App. 91, it was said that if an administrator converted assets of the estate into money, and used the same, such action operated as a devastavit, and the money so converted was to be treated as assets administered, and an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action therefor upon the bond of the prior administrator who converted the same. The court did not make a distinction between a conversion by an administrator who died and one who was removed.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could not be held to account to the residuary legatee for money and property that the deceased executor administered upon and wrongly converted to his own use. It was further held that such administrator de bonis non had no authority to call on the personal representative of the deceased executor for an account of the assets other than those unadministered, as the residuary legatees are the persons who should prosecute the personal representatives of a deceased executor for any waste or misapplication of assets. Bliss v. Seaman, 165 Ill. 422, Affirming 59 Ill. App. 238.

And an administrator de bonis non could not call in question a settlement of a claim against a debtor made by the prior administrator, as an administrator de bonis non could not charge his predecessor with a devastavit. Short v. Johnson, 25 Ill. 489.

Under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 109, § 75, providing that on the revocation of letters of an executor or administrator he shall be liable on his bond to his successor, who may maintain an action of trover, debt, detinue, account, and on the case, against his predecessor for goods, chattels, debts, and credits withheld, wasted, or misapplied, an action of debt for conversion could not be maintained by an administrator de bonis non on the bond of the predecessor who had died and had not been removed under the statute. Marsh v. People, 15 Ill. 235.

In Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17, it was said that in Marsh v. People, 15 Ill. 236, a distinction was made between the authority of an administrator de bonis non on the death of his predecessor, and the authority of one appointed on the revocation of letters.

Choses in action.

Where a note was given "to T. administrator of the estate of S., deceased," and the administratrix of T. brought an action on the same, and it was contended that it should have been brought by the administratrix de bonis non, it was said that "for aught that appears in the record, this suit may be prosecuted for the benefit of the administrator de bonis non. It makes no difference to the maker of the note which of them is permitted to bring the action." Newhall v. Turney, 14 Ill. 338.

Indiana.

In this state prior to the act of 1849 an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action for conversion, devastavit, or account, but since that statute such action may be maintained. An action may be maintained to set aside a void sale, and an action may be maintained on choses in action due the estate.

Waltham Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen, 121; Wells v. Child, 12 Allen, 333.

In the two cases in Massachusetts, in which relief has been granted, the court acted only upon strong equitable grounds.

Morey v. American Loan & T. Co. 149 Mass. 253; Knight v. Cunningham, 180 Mass. 580.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Prior to the statute of 1849 an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for a devastavit. State, Piereson v. Gooding, 8 Blackf. 567; Anthony v. M'Call, 8 Blackf. 86.

In Graham v. State, Reynolds, 7 Ind. 470, it was said that prior to the passage of Ind. act 1849, p. 53, 2 Rev. Stat. p. 286, an administrator de bonis non could not sue his predecessor in administration for a breach of duty.

Ind. Rev. Stat. 1843, p. 567, providing that the executors and administrators of every person who, as executor either of right or in his own wrong, or as administrator, shall have wasted or converted to his own use any goods, chattels, or estate of any deceased person, shall be chargeable in the same manner as their testator or intestate would have been if living, did not give an action to the administrator de bonis non for a devastavit committed by his predecessor. Young v. Kimball, 8 Blackf. 167.

But under 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. p. 286, §§ 162, 163, Laws 1849, p. 53, providing that any executor or administrator may be sued on his bond by any creditor, heir, legatee, or surviving or succeeding executor or administrator for, (1) failure to inventory the property; (2) failure to pay money of the estate into court; (3) failure to use diligence; (4) want of reasonable care in taking solvent sureties; (5) embezzling, concealing, or converting to his own use; (6) negligently permitting property to be injured; (7) for committing waste,—an administrator de bonis non might maintain an action upon the bond of his predecessor for breach of duty to recover assets, although the bond was executed before the passage of this act. Graham v. State, Reynolds, 7 Ind. 470, 65 Am. Dec. 745.

And an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against the administrator of the surety of his predecessor for a breach of duty on the part of the latter, in failing to pay into the clerk's office to the proper heirs money belonging to the estate upon which he was administrator, under 2 Ind. Rev. Stat. pp. 285, 286, §§ 162, 163, where the administrator had left the state with money in his hands, and had for that cause been removed. State, Wright v. Porter, 9 Ind. 342.

Under 2 Gavin & H. (Ind.) Stat. p. 531, § 162, authorizing a suit by the succeeding administrator on the bond of the previous administrator for any violation of the duties of his trust, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor for money belonging to the estate which he had failed to pay over. Lane v. State, Harmon, 27 Ind. 108; Myers v. State, McCray, 47 Ind. 293.

Choses in action.

Under Ind. act 1891, pp. 107, 108, providing that when it is shown that an administrator or executor has been finally discharged, and that there is no administration of said estate pending in any court of this state, and there are assets belonging to the estate within the jurisdiction of said state that have not been and should be administered, the court may appoint an administrator de bonis non to have the same powers now given to administrators and executors, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on an appeal bond given in the decedent's lifetime where such bond had never been

Wiswell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Bill in equity by the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Abigail T. Hodge against the executrix of William Hodge, the administrator of Abigail T. Hodge.

The complainant, the administrator de bonis administered upon, although the prior administrators had made a final settlement and been discharged. It was further held that such act was remedial, and was not void, and applied, although it was not passed until after final settlement. Barnett v. Vanmeter, 7 Ind. App. 45.

And under Ind. act 1891, p. 107, Rev. Stat. 1894, § 2395, after a final settlement and the discharge of an administrator, an administrator de bonis non could be appointed where it was shown that there was a claim against the government within the jurisdiction of the state that had not been sold and should be administered. Wahl v. Schierling, 11 Ind. App. 696.

In order for an administrator de bonis non to recover from a debtor to the estate, he must allege that the defendant did not pay the sum of money sued for, either to the intestate in his lifetime, or to the predecessor of the administrator de bonis non. Griffith v. Fischli, 4 Blackf. 427.

And in an action by an administrator de bonis non against a surviving partner of the decedent to recover the share of the decedent in the partnership assets, the defendant could set off the indebtedness of the decedent to him, and also the amount paid to discharge the debts of the decedent in excess of assets received by him as administrator. Skillen v. Jones, 44 Ind. 130.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Where an administrator sold land under an order of court, and took the purchase-money notes and canceled them by having a personal debt owing by him to the obligor canceled and made a deed which was never confirmed, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action to recover the purchase money from the purchaser or to have the sale set aside. Chandler v. Schoonover, 14 Ind. 324.

And an administrator de bonis non who had obtained a judgment against the predecessor and sureties for the conversion by the former of the assets of the estate might, without proceeding to collect the judgment, maintain an action to set aside a conveyance which the defaulting administrator had fraudulently made of land purchased with the trust fund. Harvey v. State, Rogers, 123 Ind. 280.

But where the heirs of an intestate obtained a decree for land fraudulently conveyed by an administrator and that the land should be sold to satisfy the decree, the administrator de bonis non had no right to enforce that decree, as it belonged to the complainants in that suit. Ferguson v. Sweeney, 6 Blackf. 547.

Where there are no assets.

Under Ind. act 1881, p. 247, Rev. Stat. 1881, § 2240 providing that if any executor, administrator with the will annexed, or administrators, shall die, resign, or remove from the state, or his authority be revoked or superseded, the remaining executor or administrator shall complete the administration, but if no such executor or administrator be remaining in the state an administrator de bonis non may be appointed with the same rights and subject to the same liabilities as his predecessor, an administrator de bonis non could not be appointed where his predecessor had made a final settlement which was unrevoked and in full force, discharging him from the trust because fully settled, as such matter was res judicata, under 2 Ind. Rev. §§ 2402, 2403, pro-non, is the son of Abigail T. and William Hodge. The intestate died April 8, 1879. Her husband, William Hodge, was appointed administrator upon her estate December 7, 1880, and died June 6, 1892. The complainant was appointed administrator de bonis non on the first Tuesday of October, 1892.

The complainant alleges, in substance, that the intestate at the time of her death was the owner of a deposit in the Cambridgeport Saving that such final settlement is conclusive on all parties interested in the state, unless reopened within three years for mistake or fraud. Pate v. Moore, 79 Ind. 20.

In Barnett v. Vanmeter, 7 Ind. App. 45, it was said that prior to the act of March 5, 1881, there was no law in force in Indiana under which an administrator de bonis non could be appointed for any decedent's estate after the final settlement of such estate, unless such settlement was vacated or set aside.

An administrator de bonis non may maintain an action against his predecessor and sureties for assets converted by his predecessor who had been removed, under Iowa Code, § 2348, providing for the appointment of an administrator in case of vacancy, and § 2349, providing that the substitution of other executors shall occasion no delay in the administration of the assets, as this statute changed the common-law rule. It was further held that the substituted administrator was entitled to the possession of all the assets, and could maintain an action for the recovery of any sum in which the estate had an interest, and that was to be applied to the debts. Stewart v. Phenice, 65 Iowa, 475.

But an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action to recover from the surety of his predecessor the avails of a policy of insurance on the life of his decedent, collected by his predecessor and not accounted for, under Iowa Code, § 1182, which provided that a policy of insurance on the life of an individual shall inure to the separate use of the husband or wife and children of said individual independently of creditors. Kelly v. Mann, 56 Iowa, 625.

In Stewart v. Phenice, 65 Iowa, 475, Kelley v. Mann was distinguished, as in that case the fund could not be appropriated to the payment of debts but descended directly to the heirs. The holding was that the substituted administrator was not entitled to the funds, but that the sureties on the bond of the first administrator were answerable on the bond to the heirs for their distributive shares. The court said that "if there were no claims against the estate in this case it would be governed by the same principle."

Kansas.

An administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor who had sold personal property and taken payment part in cash and part in a note of the purchaser, where the sale was set aside, but the purchaser retained the property and the administrator de bonis non subsequently collected the note from the purchaser, and the administrator failed to pay the cash received by him from the sale. This was under Kan. Gen. Stat. (1888) p. 435, § 28, providing that an administrator appointed in the place of an executor or administrator who has resigned, been removed, or whose letters have been revoked, shall be entitled to the possession of all assets unadministered, and may maintain an action against the former executor or administrator and his sureties on his bond, and for all damages arising from maladministration. Musick v. Beebe, 17 Kan. 47.

Kentucky.

The administrator de bonis non is entitled to control all assets remaining in specie or unadministered. He cannot maintain an action of account or for conversion or for a balance remaining in money in his predecessor's hands. As to a chose in action an administrator de bonis non was entitled to recover in some cases where he had obtained possession of notes, but some cases held that he was not entitled to recover notes taken by his predecessor where there had been a conversion and where it was not shown to be necessary for distribution through him, and he could not intervene to claim choses in action that should go directly to distributees.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

Where a will gave to the wife of the testator all his estate, real and personal, "except such as will hereafter be disposed of, which is to fulfil any contracts I may have made for the conveyance" of land, and the wife was made executrix, and after her death certain slaves of the testator came to the hands of another party and the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo brought detinue for the slaves, it was held that as it was not shown that the executrix had elected to take as devisee, the administrator de bonis non could recover. It was not claimed that the executrix sold the slaves or otherwise parted with them in the course of administration. Floyd v. Breckenridge, 4 Bibb, 14.

In Graves v. Downey, 3 T. B. Mon. 355; Bradshaw v. Com. 3 J. J. Marsh. 632; Oldham v. Collins, 4 J. J. Marsh. 49; Slaughter v. Froman, 5 T. B. Mon. 19, 17 Am. Dec. 33; and Carroll v. Connet, 2 J. J. Marsh. 196.—It was said that an administrator de bonis non would be entitled to whatever of the estate of the intestate remained in specie.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Administrators de bonis non could not call the representatives or sureties of the first administrator to account. Bradshaw v. Com. 3 J. J. Marsh. 532; Slaughter v. Froman, 5 T. B. Mon. 19, 17 Am. Dec. 33.

So, a decree in favor of an administrator de bonis non for an account for money arising from the result of his predecessor's administration was erroneous, as an administrator de bonis non was not entitled to the proceeds of chattels sold, nor to the hire of slaves. Slaughter v. Froman, 5 T. B. Mon. 19, 17 Am. Dec. 33.

And an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond, where it did not appear that any one article of property which had ever belonged to the intestate remained in the hands of the plaintiff's predecessor at his death, as the right of action was in the distributees and heirs. Oldham v. Collins, 4 J. J. Marsh. 49.

And an administrator de bonis non could not maintain a suit on the bond of his predecessor for assets converted by him and wasted, as the right of action was in the distributee, and not in the administrator de bonis non. Felts v. Brown, 7 J. J. Marsh. 147.

And where a trust fund was created by an executor under a will, and several successive administrators de bonis non cum testamento annexo were appointed, and the last one brought a suit upon the bond of his predecessor for the fund, it was held that it was a trust fund for the widow for life, and was held by those having control of it as trustees and not as executor or administrator with the will annexed, and that the right and duty to hold it did not devolve on the administrator de bonis non, and that the last administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action to recover on his predecessor's bond for a devastavit, under Ky. Rev. Stat. chap. 37, art.

ings Bank of Cambridgeport, Massachusetts; that, although such deposit was in the name of one Hannah C. Wilson, it was in fact the money of the intestate, deposited by her in the name of Hannah C. Wilson, in trust for the sole benefit of the intestate; that after her death William Hodge procured from Hannah C. Wilson a transfer of said deposit, without consideration; and that on August 26, 1879, before his appointment as administrator, he

1. §§ 19-21, providing that if there are no other personal representatives to discharge the trust the court may appoint one who shall have the same power and rights, and be liable to the same responsibility, as respects the estate unadministered, as the person removed. Warfield v. Brand, 18 Bush, 77.

In Anderson v. Miller, 6 J. J. Marsh. 568, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could have no remedy against a previous administrator for money collected for the hire of slaves belonging to the estate.

And in Thomason v. Thomason, 1 Met. (Ky.) 53, it was said that the estate in the hands of the administrator at the time of his death, which had been converted into money, formed a part of his estate which was under the control of his personal representatives after his death, and must be accounted for by them, and an administrator de bonis non of the first estate would have nothing to do with this part of the estate.

So, in Graves v. Downey, 3 T. B. Mon. 356, it was said that where an administratrix had married, and she and her husband had converted some of the assets into money, an administrator de bonis non could have no title nor maintain any action on the administration bond for such conversion.

In Trigg v. Daniel, 2 Bibb, 301, where the administrator de bonis non brought suit against the husband of the administratrix with the will annexed and her sureties for an account of the property administered, and to have the balance delivered over, the court did not discuss the question as to whether or not an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for an accounting, but affirmed the decree with certain corrections as to credits for care, education, and support of the children.

Choses in action.

And an administratrix de bonis non could maintain an action in equity to enforce the payment of a note and enforce a lien by which it was secured, where the note was taken by her predecessor in his individual name in satisfaction of a debt due the estate, although the administratrix de bonis non could not have maintained an action at law on said note in her own name. Burrus v. Koulach, 2 Bush, 40. It was said that this does not conflict with the doctrine recognized in Saffron v. Kennedy, 7 J. J. Marsh. 188, and Williams v. Collins, 1 B. Mon. 58.

Where notes were given to Sarah C., as administratrix of William C., and she died, it was said that the notes were prima facie assets of William C. which his administrator de bonis non might have lawfully collected, although the administratrix might have made them their own property by being charged in the settlement with their amount. Williams v. Collins, 1 B. Mon. 58.

So, where notes were made payable to C., administrator of M., and he died without collecting the notes or fully administering, and the notes came to the hands of the sheriff of the county as administrator de bonis non of M., he was entitled to recover upon them under 1 Ky. Rev. Stat. Stanton's ed. p. 500, providing that in all cases where assets are committed to the hands of a sheriff, he shall by virtue of his office and the order of the court be the administrator de bonis non of the decedent, and shall have all the rights and powers, and shall be bound to perform all the duties, of such administrator. Maraman v. Trunnell, 3 Met. (Ky.) 147, 77 Am. Dec. 167.

But where an administrator received a note for 40 L. R. A.

goods of the intestate it was assets in his hands, and for a conversion an action would lie by creditors. It was said that in Kentucky an administrator de bonis non would not be entitled to the same, although it was settled otherwise in England. Morrison v. Page, 9 Dana, 428.

And where more than five years had elapsed from the intestate's death, and it was not shown that the notes in controversy were necessary for the payment of debts and to save circuity and delay, the administrator de bonis non was refused possession of uncollected notes belonging to the estate of his intestate, and a decree of distribution was made without permitting it to pass through his hands. Bellomy v. Bellomy, 3 Bush, 109.

Bonds made payable to a commissioner in consideration of the sale of slaves made by him as an administrator could not be held to be assets in the hands of an administrator de bonis non, where it was supposed that the slaves were sold for the benefit of the distributees and the commissioner was a trustee for the distributees, and the bonds given were not assets in his own hands as the administrator, and consequently could not constitute assets in the hands of an administrator de bonis non who would have a right to nothing which had not remained actually in specie and had not been administered. Saffran v. Kennedy, 7 J. J. Marsh. 188.

And where heirs quitclaimed to a mortgagee their interest in the estate as a compromise of their claims, and obtained a judgment on the consideration note, and a suit was brought by the grantee to enjoin such judgment, the administrator de bonis non was not entitled to intervene and claim the proceeds where twenty years had elapsed from the death of the mortgagor, as it was presumed that there were no debts, and if the administrator had the money he would hold it merely for the benefit of these heirs who were the distributees or devisees. Breckinridge v. Waters, 4 Dana, 620.

Maine.

An administrator de bonis non was entitled to money remaining in specie, but was not entitled to real estate or trust property. He could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for a conversion under the statute where the interest of the administrator de bonis non had not been "specifically ascertained." The case of HODGE v. HODGE, holding that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against the estate of his predecessor for money which could not be identified as remaining in kind, is in accord with this doctrine.

In HODGE v. HODGE it was held that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against the estate of his predecessor for money belonging to the estate wrongfully received by him prior to his appointment as administrator for which he failed to account, where it was not distinguishable as part of the intestate's property, as an administrator de bonis non was entitled only to such goods or chattels of the estate as remained in specie in the hands of his predecessor at the time of his death, or to such money as belonged to the estate and had been kept separate by the predecessor and unmixed with his own.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

Where a widow was an executrix, and was given a life estate in most of the property, and collected money from a debtor of her husband, and it was deposited in bank without having been commingled with her money, and the executrix died, the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was withdrew from the savings bank a portion of such deposit,—about $800; that he did not include this sum in his inventory as administrator, and never in any way accounted for the same; that in withdrawing a portion of such deposit he became an executor, de son tort; and he asks that the defendant, as executrix of such administrator, may be compelled to pay the amount so withdrawn, with interest, to him as administrator de bonis non.

The respondent both demurred and answered entitled to the possession of that money. Hatch v. Caine, 86 Me. 282.

Real estate.

An administrator de bonis non cannot maintain a real action claiming title under a will which vested the title in two persons, executors and trustees, as the title to a testator's real estate does not vest in an administrator de bonis non. Brown v. Strickland, 32 Me. 175.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Me. Rev. Stat. chap. 72, § 10, providing that any person interested personally or in any official capacity in a probate bond, or in a judgment rendered thereon, whose interest has been specifically ascertained by a decree of the judge of probate or "by judgment" of law, may originate a suit on such bond or scire facias on such judgment, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond where the interest of the plaintiff had not been "specifically ascertained" or authority from the judge of probate given to him to maintain an action, as, in the absence of statutory provisions, he has no recourse against his official predecessor for devastavit or maladministration. Waterman v. Dockray, 78 Me. 141.

Choses in action.

Where an administrator of an administrator turned over to an administrator de bonis non two notes described in the predecessor's inventory, they were assets, and the administrator de bonis non was liable for the same. Woodbridge v. Tilton, 84 Me. 92.

Trust property.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo did not succeed to the rights or duties of his predecessor who was appointed by the will to be a trustee of a fund arising out of the estate of the testator. Knight v. Loomis, 30 Me. 204.

Maryland.

An administrator de bonis non is entitled to the possession of all the assets remaining in specie and unadministered as at common law. He is entitled under the statute to an order directing that choses in action taken by his predecessor belonging to the estate, and all money in the hands of his predecessor, shall be turned over to him. He could not maintain an action for conversion until the statute of 1820. Where he is diligent he is not liable for any loss of funds by his predecessor.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

Where property remained specifically after the death of the executor it was unadministered property, and it was necessary that it should go through the hands of an administrator de bonis non in order to pass the title to the distributee. Alexander v. Stewart, 8 Gill & J. 226.

Where the residuum of the testator's interest in a leasehold upon the termination of the estate for life given by the testator's will was not converted into money, or distributed, or delivered to the party entitled or retained by the former executors under the court's direction, under Md. act 1798, subchap. 5, § 6, subchap. 14, § 2, providing that the authority conferred by such letters shall be to administer all things herein described as assets not converted into money and not distributed or delivered or retained by the former executor or administrator under the court's direction, it was the proper subject for an administrator de bonis non, and vested in such administrator upon the grant of his letters. Smith v. Doe, Dennis, 38 Md. 442.

And where an executor's inventory showed that a leasehold belonged to an estate, and it did not appear to have been sold or accounted for in any subsequent proceedings in the orphans' court, at his death administration de bonis non cum testamento annexo should be granted, although the widow insisted that the executor had sold the property to her, and that she had paid for it, and that the claim was stale, and that after the lapse of twenty-eight years the court ought to presume that all debts and legacies were paid. It was also held that the title of the distributee could not be made in any other way except by administration de bonis non. Neal v. Charlton, 52 Md. 495.

So, where a husband administered on the estate of his wife and charged himself with the inventory including the leasehold property, and credited himself, thus: "Allowed this accountant for the balance of said estate retained by him as the surviving husband and tenant for life with remainder to his children, viz., a lot of ground and improvements on ———," and after his death two of his wife's sons were appointed administrators de bonis non and obtained an order for the sale of the leasehold property on the ground that it was unadministered, it was held that the entry or credit in the account was without legal effect, and the orphans' court properly held that the distribution was incomplete. Woelfel v. Evans, 74 Md. 346.

And where an executor or administrator died without having made full administration and distribution of the estate, administration de bonis non was necessary, and the title of the distributee could not be made in any other way. Neal v. Charlton, 52 Md. 495.

So, where S. K. at his death kept a bank account, and D. K. became his administrator, took possession of his money, and made deposits derived from S. K.'s estate in the account of S. K. at the bank, and died leaving in the bank a balance to the credit of said account of S. K., and there was no final settlement, and it was not shown that the money belonged to D. K., it was assets unadministered, and should go to the administrator de bonis non. Getty v. Long, 82 Md. 643.

So, where an executrix neglected to counter secure one of her securities, and an order was made directing her to turn over money to her security who gave a bond to deliver the goods to the person having the right to demand the same, and a creditor of the estate brought an action on the bond, it was said "the obligor in the bond is liable to the administrator de bonis non if one is appointed; and if none appointed, he is liable to nobody." State v. Wright, 4 Harr. & J. 111.

An executor of an executrix was liable in trover to the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo of the first estate for property that came to the executor's hands, and that had been appropriated and converted by him. Haslett v. Glenn, 7 Harr. & J. 13.

In Kearney v. Sascor, 37 Md. 204, it was held "an administrator de bonis non is chargeable only with the unadministered assets which come into his hands, and the fact that the former administrator may have confessed a judgment, and thereby admitted a sufficiency of assets in his hands to pay to the bill, and the case is here upon report of the pleadings and testimony. The defendant contends that the bill cannot be sustained, either upon its allegations or upon the testimony.

It is very clear that if this sum of money

the same, does not preclude an administrator de bonis non from pleading to a scire facias issued on such judgment that the unadministered assets, for which alone he is responsible, are insufficient to pay the original judgment."

Where the inventory of the administratrix showed six negroes, it was held that a parol order of the orphan's court allowing the administratrix to take the property at the appraisal had no effect, and where the administratrix had died, an administrator de bonis non should be appointed under Md. act 1798, subchap. 5, § 6, providing that in case any executor or administrator shall die before the estate shall be fully administered, letters of administration de bonis non shall be granted, and subchap. 14, § 2, providing that if an executor die before the administration, letters de bonis non may be granted, and the authority conferred shall be to administer all things herein described as assets and not converted into money, and not distributed or delivered or retained by the former executor or administrator under the court's direction. Scott v. Fox, 14 Md. 388.

In Gardner v. Simmes, 1 Gill, 425, it was held: "The acts of 1798 and 1820 confer jurisdiction on the orphan's court to coerce the delivery over of property or chose in action or payment of money by the representative of the executor or administrator to the administrator de bonis non only in case the property, chose in action, or money belonged specifically to the deceased while alive, and remained in the hands of the executor or administrator as such, and not as legatees, or in case the chose in action or money was received by the executor or administrator in that capacity, and was so retained in that character till the death of such executor or administrator."

In Hagthorpe v. Hook, 1 Gill & J. 270, it was held by the chancellor that an administrator de bonis non could not demand in his representative character anything but those goods, chattels, and credits which remained undisposed of by his predecessor, or which had been and continued to be held unaccounted for by anyone; but this was not discussed on appeal.

Real estate.

Where the executor died in the lifetime of the testator the orphan's court had no power to grant letters of administration de bonis non cum testamento annexo simply for the purpose of making the sale of real estate under the will, as in order to authorize the grant of letters of administration de bonis non there must be something remaining to be done to complete the administration of the estate of the deceased, or some function to be performed in regard to it. Wilcoxon v. Reese, 63 Md. 542.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Money remaining in the hands of an administrator de bonis non was subject to an order of the orphan's court directing it to be paid to his successor, under Md. act 1820, chap. 174, § 3, which is the same as Md. Code, art. 93, § 72. Donaldson v. Raborg, 26 Md. 312.

Under Md. act 1820, chap. 174, § 3, authorizing and requiring the orphan's court on an application of the administrator de bonis non, to make an order directing the executor or administrator of a deceased executor or administrator on or before a certain day to deliver over to the administrator de had been received by William Hodge in his capacity as administrator, and had been either administered or converted to his own use, neither an action at law nor a bill in equity could be maintained by the administrator de bonis non against him or his estate. As indi-bonis non all the bonds, notes, accounts, and evidences of debt which the deceased executor or administrator may have taken, received, or had as executor or administrator at the time of his death, and also to pay over to the said administrator de bonis non all the money in the hands of such deceased executor or administrator as such at the time of his death unless it has been retained by an order of the orphan's court, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to the balance shown to be money in the hands of his predecessor, where the orphan's court made an order directing that it should be paid to him. Lemmon v. Hall, 20 Md. 188.

So, under Md. act 1820, chap. 174, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to the proceeds of property which his predecessor had received and converted into money in his lifetime. De Valengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. 282, 10 L. ed. 457.

But the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not entitled to recover money in the hands of his predecessor at the time of his death belonging to the estate, without obtaining an order from the orphan's court for the payment of money due him, under Md. act 1820, chap. 174, § 3, Rev. Code, art. 50, § 109, providing that the court on the application of the administrator de bonis non shall order the administrator of the deceased administrator to deliver over all the bonds, notes, accounts, and evidences of debt which the deceased administrator may have taken, received, or had as administrator at the time of his death, and to pay over the money in his hands as such. State, Green, v. Hart, 57 Md. 234; Johnson v. Farmers' Bank, 11 Md. 414.

So, under Md. Code, § 243, art. 63, providing as in chap. 174, § 3, a similar ruling was made. State, Dittman, v. Robinson, 57 Md. 436.

In Sibley v. Williams, 3 Gill & J. 52, it was said that under Md. act 1798, chap. 101, subchap. 14, § 2, making it the duty of the administrator de bonis non to administer all things in that act described as assets not converted into money and not distributed or delivered or retained under the court's direction, it was clear that the legislature did not intend to make anything the subject of administration in the hands of an administrator de bonis non which did not exist in specie, and if property had been converted into money, such money was not the subject of administration but the estate of the first executor or administrator was liable therefor as for a devastavit.

In Sibley v. Williams, 3 Gill & J. 52, it was said that Md. act 1820, chap. 174, § 3, giving power to the administrator de bonis non to recover assets by an action on the bond extends only to bonds, notes, accounts, and evidences of debt, which the deceased executor or administrator may have taken, received, or had as executor or administrator, and to money in his hands. "Previous to that act, no suit could be maintained on it by an administrator de bonis non for goods converted."

Where a will gave to the wife "cash money in hand and the bills receivable of which I shall die possessed for her own absolute benefit, behoof, and disposal," and also a leasehold house and lot on H street, and two leasehold lots on Baltimore street during her life, and the testator sold the lots on Baltimore street before he died, and a part of the purchase money remained due at his death and was collected by the executors, who also sold the H street house and lot and converted the proceeds to their own use, the administrator de bonis non cum cated by his title and commission, there vests in him, as administrator de bonis non, only the unadministered property of the intestate; that is, the goods, effects, and credits which were of the intestate at the time of her decease, and which remained in specie, unaltered or uncon-verted by any act of the administrator, or the proceeds thereof which have not been commingled with the administrator's own money. American Bd. of Comrs. for Foreign Missions, 27 Conn. 344.

"But at common law the authority of the testamento annexo was entitled to recover on his predecessor's bond the amount of the proceeds of the sale of the H street lots sold by the executors and converted to their own use, under Md. Code, § 243, art. 93, providing for the appointment of a new administrator upon the revocation of letters already granted, and for an order to deliver up, and providing the mode of enforcing obedience; but was not entitled to recover for the proceeds of the Baltimore street lot, which was held to be bills receivable and which passed direct to the widow. State, Dittman, v. Robinson, 57 Md. 486.

An administrator de bonis non who had faithfully and diligently performed his trust should not suffer any loss by reason of the default of his predecessor, and is chargeable only with the funds that come into his hands or which he is entitled to receive from the estate of the deceased executor. Smithers v. Hooper, 23 Md. 273.

Where an administratrix settled her account with the orphans' court, and afterwards individually mortgaged some of the personal property, a subsequent administrator de bonis non could not maintain replevin against the mortgagee where the presumption was that all the debts had been satisfied and that the remaining assets had been distributed, and that the mortgage was made by the administratrix as a distributee. Allender v. Kiston, 2 Gill & J. 86.

Choses in action.

Where the administrator of W. W. brought an action upon a note payable to W. W. administrator of R. W., and it was contended that he could not maintain the action because such right of action was in the administrator de bonis non of R. W., it was held that Md. act 1820, chap. 174, authorizing the orphans' court to pass an order for the delivery over to the administrator de bonis non of all bonds which the deceased executor or administrator may have taken, received, or had as executor or administrator at the time of his death, did not vest the title of such property in the administrator de bonis non, nor did it give the right of possession to him where the order of the orphans' court was not made. West v. Chappell, 5 Gill, 228.

Where a bond was given to an executor by distributees to refund in case of a deficiency, and the administrator de bonis non of the executor brought a suit on the bond to recover because there was a deficiency of assets; and it was claimed that there were other assets than such as were administered upon, it was said that if they had existed they would have been alone subject to the control of an administrator de bonis non of the first estate. Salisbury v. Black, 6 Harr. & J. 241, 14 Am. Dec. 279.

Massachusetts.

It seems that in this state the common-law doctrine as to the privity between an administrator de bonis non and his predecessor in relation to the assets was changed at an early day by the statute, as will be seen from Mass. Rev. Stat. 1836, chap. 70, §§ 1-11, based upon the prior acts of 1788 and 1816, providing for an action upon the predecessor's bond for maladministration, and that all moneys (unless the execution be awarded for the use of a creditor, person, or next of kin) shall be paid over to the coexecutor or coadministrator if there be any, or to whoever shall then be rightful executor or administrator, and shall be assets in his hands to be administered according to law.

40 L. R. A.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

An administrator de bonis non was entitled to receive the assets in specie where an administrator was removed and the assets could be identified. Marvel v. Babbitt, 143 Mass. 226.

In Thayer v. Kinsey, 162 Mass. 232, it was said that it was the duty of the administratrix de bonis non to collect and receive the assets remaining unadministered from the predecessor.

In an action by an administrator de bonis non against the administrator of his predecessor for the possession of stock belonging to the estate, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 151, § 2, cl. 4, providing for a recovery of property secreted or withheld from the owner, so that it cannot be replevied, it was held that the defendant had the right to retain the same for a settlement and for whatever lien and expenses he should have against the same. Foster v. Bailey, 157 Mass. 160.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, devastavit.

Under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 70, § 11, providing that all moneys collected on an executor's or administrator's bond, unless where, in special cases, the money is received for the use of a creditor or next of kin, shall be paid over to the coexecutor or coadministrator if there be any, or to whoever shall then be the rightful executor or administrator, and shall be assets in his hands to be administered according to law, a balance in the hands of a former administrator obtained by a suit on the bond should be paid into the hands of the administrator de bonis non, and was assets. Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Met. 194, 39 Am. Dec. 716.

So, under Mass. Rev. Stat. chap. 70, § 11, where an action was brought by the probate judge for maladministration, the proceeds should be paid over to the administrator de bonis non. Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Met. 525.

So, where a trust was created by a will with power in the executrix to sell the property, and the executrix sold the same and her administrator collected the money, such trust passed to the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, and he was entitled to recover the proceeds in an action for money had and received as it should be administered, as there might still be debts due from the testator. The court said that if the trust fund consisted in stocks or specific property, other than money, a bill in equity might be necessary to enable the administrator to recover it. Buttrick v. King, 7 Met. 20.

Where a judgment was recovered by the judge of probate in favor of an administrator de bonis non on the bond of his predecessors, ordering that said judgment should be a security for the payment by the defendants of such sums as should be found due from them as administrators of J. S. to the plaintiff as administrator de bonis non of J. S. for the next of kin of J. S. and their legal representatives, upon the adjustment of plaintiff's administration account and upon a decree for a distribution of the balance that should be remaining in his hands, an action could be maintained by the administrator de bonis non upon this judgment. Storer v. Storer, 6 Mass. 390.

So, where the personal estate of a deceased person was distributed under a decree of the probate court before the debts of the estate were barred by the statute of limitation and the administrator was removed, a subsequent decree was made reopen-administrator de bonis non does not extend to any property which had been administered, either fully or partly. . . . It follows from these principles that the administrator de bonis non can sustain no action at law against his predecessor for anything save unadministered effects existing in specie." 2 Woeyner, American Law of Administration, pp. 744, 745.

In Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 292, it is said: "To the administrator de bonis non is committed only the administration ing the administrator's account, and directing him to pay to an administrator de bonis non the amount necessary to settle the estate. Browne v. Doolittle, 151 Mass. 595.

And where an action of contract on the bond of an administrator was brought for the use of the administrator de bonis non, it was held that the chattels which were returned by the administratrix in her inventory should be accounted for by her, and the fact that the chattels were in existence and had not been sold by the administratrix would make it proper for the administrator de bonis non to include them in his inventory, and the administrator de bonis non was entitled to receive them or to maintain a suit for their value against the administratrix on her bond. Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619.

Where an executrix was entitled only to the income of her husband's estate for widowhood, and at her marriage or death it was to pass in equal shares to his and her heirs, and she used the money of the estate to purchase bank stock in her own name, and at her death her executors sold the stock, the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo of the first estate could maintain an action against the executors for money had and received with a special count to recover the proceeds of this stock. Sewall v. Patch, 132 Mass. 326.

Where the administrator de bonis non brought suit on his predecessor's bond, it was held that no recovery could be had for manure which was taken from the barnyard of the homestead of the deceased which was not in a fit condition for use at the time of his death. The court said: "Manure made in the course of husbandry upon a farm is so attached to and connected with the realty that, in the absence of any express stipulation to the contrary, it passes as appurtenant to it." But a recovery could be had for the manure from the hotel stables, which was agreed to have been personal estate, and was included in the inventory, and it was no sufficient account to say that it had been expended upon the real estate which had since been sold for the payment of debts. Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619.

So, where the estate was insolvent and the administratrix had paid debts of the estate without knowledge that such estate was insolvent, the administrator de bonis non was entitled to recover on the administratrix's bond for such payment in violation of her official duty, and the administratrix was also liable for money expended on repairs and improvements of her real estate. Cobb v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 57.

But an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed could not recover of the administrator of his predecessor money that belonged to his predecessor as heir of his wife although he was her executor, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 147, § 6, providing that a married woman's will shall not, without the husband's written consent, operate to deprive him of more than one half of her personal estate, where he did not consent that her will should deprive him of his half, although he acted as executor. Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206.

In Foster v. Bailey, 157 Mass. 160, it was said: "It is suggested that specific chattels on the decease of an executor or administrator pass to the administrator de bonis non of the original estate, while money, including the proceeds of goods converted into money, does not; and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled at once to the possession of everything except money. In the first place, we do not think that any such distinction exists in this commonwealth. An executor or administrator holds all the property of the estate as a trustee, and he is as much bound to keep the money distinct as he is any chattel.

In Browne v. Doolittle, 151 Mass. 595, it was said that when an administrator had made a settlement before the time for presentation of claims had expired and the administrator was removed, he remained liable to account for the whole amount of the inventory as assets, and it was his duty to pay over the assets of the estate to the administrator de bonis non, whose duty it was to collect them.

Where an administrator of a partner compromised and settled the interest of his estate in the firm with the surviving partner, and duly accounted for all that he received, and rendered a final account which was duly allowed in the probate court, and the administrator de bonis non gave notice to the partner and sought to have the compromise set aside for fraud, and to open the account of his predecessor and restate the partnership account in the probate court, it was held that the administrator de bonis non could only proceed in a court of equity to enforce any rights he may have against the surviving partners and secure a settlement of the partnership accounts if a valid one had not been made. It was said that the administrator de bonis non cannot be charged with anything until he has received it, or has been guilty of some neglect in not receiving it. Blake v. Ward, 137 Mass. 97.

But where the executor resigned and turned over to the administratrix de bonis non cum testamento annexo certificates for stock which had been paid for with the money of the estate, worth at that time the value of the assets, and the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo collected dividends and voted by proxy thereon, he could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for the funds after the stock became worthless, as a representative could release or compromise a claim of the estate. Thayer v. Kinsey, 162 Mass. 232.

In Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206, it was said that in the absence of an account in the probate court an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could not recover from the administrator of his predecessor in an action of contract, for assets which his predecessor appropriated and assumed to administer, and which could not be traced or identified as a part of the estate, as a probate account could not be settled in an ordinary action at law.

Choses in action.

Where a testator sold some of his land after he had devised the same to a minor, and the executor gave the purchase-money notes to the legatee's guardian, the administrator de bonis non was entitled to recover this money from the guardian with interest in an action for money had and received. Stevens v. Goodell, 3 Met. 34.

In this case it was further held that the fact that the defendant had been summoned as the trustee of the executor, in a process of foreign attachment which was then pending, did not prevent a recovery.

Proceeds of real estate.

Where the will gave the executor "or whoever shall execute" the will power to convert the real estate into money, and the executor sold the real estate and died without rendering any account, the of the goods, chattels, and credits of the deceased which have not been administered. He is entitled to all the goods and personal estate which remain in specie. Money received by the former executor or administrator, in his character as such, and kept by itself, will be so regarded; but, if mixed with the administrator's own money, it is considered as converted, or, technically speaking, administered."

administrator de bonis non of the first estate was entitled to assert against the estate of his predecessor a claim for the amount received from the sale of real estate and not accounted for, as the power to sell the real estate and convert it into money was not a personal trust, but was conferred upon whosoever might execute the will. Minot v. Norcross, 143 Mass. 326.

Under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 134, § 1, providing that where the estate of an intestate is insufficient to pay his debts, and the real estate is sold for the same, the proceeds are to be considered as assets, where real estate was so sold and the proceeds paid by the administrator to his counsel and the administrator was removed, the administrator de bonis non was entitled to this fund as assets of the estate. It was held that the money passed to the administrator de bonis non if it could be identified as funds of the estate. Marvell v. Babbitt, 143 Mass. 226.

Michigan.

Under Mich. Comp. Laws, § 4408, providing that any person interested in the decedent's estate may bring before the judge of probate for examination anyone whom he suspects of possessing writings which tend to disclose the interest of the deceased in any property, an administrator de bonis non was authorized to cite the executor of his predecessor to produce the books of a partnership composed of the deceased and the previous administrator. Perrin v. Calhoun County Circuit Ct. Judge, 49 Mich. 343.

Minnesota.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1873, chap. 55, § 6, providing that when an administrator omits to perform any order made in the matter of account or of final settlement, the judge of probate may cause the bond of such administrator to be prosecuted and the moneys collected thereon to be applied in such manner as they ought to have been applied, and § 10 providing that all moneys received on any execution so issued on a judgment in favor of the judge of probate, shall be paid over to such person, other than the defendant, as shall then be the rightful executor, administrator, or guardian, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to receive the amount collected upon his predecessor's administration bond, and to institute proceedings which would result in such collection. Palmer v. Pollock, 26 Minn. 433.

And under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 55, § 10, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to recover on the bond of his predecessor the proceeds of the estate which he had converted into money. Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 152.

Mississippi.

In this state the common-law doctrine that the administrator de bonis non takes only such property as remains unadministered, and cannot maintain an action for conversion, waste, account, or for the balance, is, in effect, subject, however, to an exception that where transfers of notes or sales are fraudulent or void the administrator de bonis non can maintain an action treating the assignment by his predecessor of the purchase-money note as void, or may enforce a statutory lien.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

The duties of an administrator de bonis non are limited to such assets as were left unadministered by his predecessor. Gray v. Harris, 43 Miss. 421.

40 L. R. A.

In Hendricks v. Snodgrass, Walk. (Miss.) 86, it was said that if a person died intestate and administration was granted to A. B., who died without having administered all the intestate's goods, the ordinary should grant administration of the goods unadministered to another, for the first administrator could not continue the trust reposed in him to his executor or administrator, because he had no interest but what he derived from the act of the ordinary.

In Ruff v. Smith, 31 Miss. 59, and Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130, 43 Am. Dec. 502, it was said that the administrator de bonis non was only entitled to goods remaining in specie.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Where an administrator had made a settlement of his account showing a balance due by him, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action for the balance, as the right of action was in the creditors or distributees. Byrd v. Holloway, 6 Smedes & M. 323.

So, where an administrator had placed a note in the hands of an attorney who had collected the money, and the letters of administration were afterwards revoked and another administrator appointed, the money thus collected was not assets of the estate. It was held that at most the administrator de bonis non could only assert an equitable claim to the same, and the extent of that claim would be determined by the amount of the balance which, if any, might appear against his predecessor on a settlement by the court. Sloan v. Johnson, 14 Smedes & M. 47.

And a decree directing that the balance found to be due from the administrator to the estate should be paid over to the administrator de bonis non was erroneous, because if the fund was for distribution it should have been ordered to be paid to the distributee rather than remit it to the hands of a successor. Gray v. Harris, 43 Miss. 421.

And an administrator de bonis non was not entitled to money found due the estate upon a final settlement of the account of the first administrator, as a bond of an administrator de bonis non only relates to the administered estate, and so far as the administrator had progressed in the administration the estate was already administered, and was therefore not covered by the bond of his successor in the administration. It was said that if the funds in the hands of the executor were paid over to the administrator de bonis non, the creditors would be without any security for the faithful distribution of the money. Dement v. Heth, 45 Miss. 388.

So, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action to call the administrator of the previous deceased administrator of his intestate to account for any property of the intestate that such predecessor converted, or wasted, or for money or effects that the representative of such predecessor had in his hands upon the final settlement of his intestate's administration of the first estate. Rives v. Patty, 4 Miss. 338.

And under Miss. orphans' court law, § 55, giving the administrator de bonis non the right to demand the property of the deceased in the hands of a former administrator, and in case of refusal to deliver it up authorizing a suit on the bond, the administrator de bonis non did not have a right of action for the failure of the administrator to make and return a true inventory as that was an act of maladministration, and must have happened

The administrator de bonis non is entitled only to such goods or chattels of the testator as remained in specie in the hands of the executor at the time of his death, or to such money as belonged to the testator's estate, and had been kept by the executor separate and unmixed with his own. Potts, Wollerton, v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 861. And see the very full notes to this case in 24 Am. Dec. 379.

This doctrine was fully and unequivocally before the second administration, and no such remedy was given to the administrator by the statute. Prosser v. Yerby, 1 How. (Miss.) 87.

So, in an action by an administrator de bonis non on the bond of his predecessor, it was held that where an insolvent administrator took in liquidation from a debtor a debt due by the administrator to such debtor, if the act took place by collusion there would not be an extinguishment of the debt by the pretended receipt, and the debtor would still be liable to the administrator de bonis non, but he could not recover on the bond, as the right of action was in favor of creditors or distributees for maladministration. Judge of Probate v. Green, 1 How. (Miss.) 146.

In Davis v. Brandon, 1 How. (Miss.) 154, where an administrator de bonis non brought suit to recover purchase money for a tract of land sold by his predecessor, it was said that where an order of court has been obtained, and the land sold in pursuance thereof, it is an act in the due course of administration, and the administrator is responsible on his bond, and the powers of an administrator de bonis non are limited to the administration of goods and chattels left unadministered by the first administrator, and the statute authorizing an administrator to sell land does not provide for a breach of that duty by clothing his successor with power to fulfil it at his own discretion.

The administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could not maintain an action for a devastavit or maladministration against the executors who had been removed, as the heirs or distributees and legatees would be the only proper parties to maintain such an action. Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130, 43 Am. Dec. 502; Prosser v. Yerby, 1 How. (Miss.) 87.

And the administrator de bonis non could not recover for money in the hands of his predecessor, where he did not show that it was the specific and identical property of the deceased remaining unadministered. Prosser v. Yerby, 1 How. (Miss.) 87.

Where the administrator de bonis non procured a citation to be issued against his predecessor requiring him to render an inventory of the estate, suggesting that he was indebted to said intestate, and his predecessor in his answer denied that he was administrator and set up a gift of money made by the intestate in his lifetime, the petition was dismissed, the court saying "that the petitioner has a full and complete remedy, if he can establish his claim as administrator to the property, in a court of law." Gaskins v. Hammett, 32 Miss. 103.

In Ruff v. Smith, 31 Miss. 60, it was said that an administrator de bonis non can maintain no action against the prior administrator for any balance in his hands remaining after a settlement of his accounts.

In Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130, 43 Am. Dec. 502, it was held that a settlement in the probate court by the executors would be a bar to an accounting on behalf of the administrator de bonis non.

Chosen in action.

Where an intestate sold property and took mortgage notes, and his administrator collected one of them and made a final settlement and was discharged, and two remaining notes passed into the hands of a guardian, who obtained a judgment on one of the notes, the administrator de bonis non of the original owner was entitled to foreclose the mortgage notwithstanding the judgment in favor of the guardian of the heirs of the payee. The court held that mere possession of the evidence of debt was not an administration, and said that as long as a note given to a deceased person remains uncollected or undisposed of by legal means it belongs to the estate. Morse v. Clayton, 13 Smedes & M. 373.

And where an administrator transferred, to pay his own debt, a note given to him for the purchase of personal estate of the decedent, and then resigned, an administrator de bonis non could maintain a suit in equity in order to obtain the note and to foreclose a mortgage securing it, as the assets constituted a trust fund. Scott v. Searles, 7 Smedes & M. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 317.

It was said in the briefs that the bond being payable on its face to the administrator was notice that it belonged to the estate.

So, where a testator sold land in Mississippi secured by a vendor's lien and also by a deed of trust, and died a resident of Kentucky, and his administrator de bonis non with the will annexed appointed in Kentucky, obtained possession of the note, an administrator de bonis non of Mississippi could there maintain a bill to enforce the vendor's lien, and to enforce the trust deed as further security, without having the note in his possession. It was said that "the fact that the 'evidence' of the debt was in the hands of the Kentucky administrator did not destroy his character as Mississippi assets, nor defeat his right of recovery," and that the protection in favor of a bona fide holder for value would not inure to any assignee of the Kentucky administrator. McIlvoy v. Alsop, 45 Miss. 365.

And an administrator de bonis non was entitled to notes payable to the intestate held by the administrator of his predecessor and made by the predecessor to the intestate, under Miss. Rev. Code, §§ 88, 99, providing that it shall be the duty of an administrator or executor to give in claims against himself in the list of debts which he is bound to render, and if the executor or administrator shall give in such claim he shall account for the sum due as if it were so much money. Kelsey v. Smith, 1 How. (Miss.) 68.

The rents are incident to the legal title, and belong to an administrator de bonis non of an estate declared to be insolvent and ordered to be sold. Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87.

But where an administrator who was a surviving partner of his intestate assigned away a note received by him as administrator from the sale of his intestate's property, and accounted for the note in his settlement, the administrator de bonis non could not enforce it. Searles v. Scott, 14 Smedes & M. 95.

In Searles v. Scott, 14 Smedes & M. 95, it was said that the difference between this case and Scott v. Searles, 7 Smedes & M. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 317, was that in that case a part of the note was transferred and the assignment was made "subject to the payment of the legal representatives of J. S., deceased, of the balance due said estate," and in this case there was an additional fact that the note was included in the settlement of the administrator and accounted for by him in his final settlement.

Where sales or transfers are void.

Where an administrator made a fraudulent disposition of property of the estate, the property remained subject to the control of the administrator de bonis non as though it had never been sold by his predecessor. Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87; Hull v. Clark, 14 Smedes & M. 187; Rosser v. Leath- sustained by this court in the case of Waterman v. Dockray, 78 Me. 141.

But the persons legally interested are not without ample remedy in such a case. An omission by an administrator to include in his inventory any assets of the estate known to him is a breach of his official bond. Bourne v. Stevenson, 58 Me. 499. Or an administrator could be charged with any money belonging to the estate that was received by him erman, 4 How. (Miss.) 240, 34 Am. Dec. 121; Miller v. Helm, 2 Smedes & M. 687; Scott v. Searles, 7 Smedes & M. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 317; Searles v. Scott, 14 Smedes & M. 95; Murphy v. Clark, 1 Smedes & M. 221.

So, where there was a declaration of insolvency of the personalty, and the realty became subject to the payment of debts and assets in the hands of an administrator, the administrator de bonis non could maintain a suit in equity to have a fraudulent sale of realty made by his predecessor set aside in order to have the same applied to the payment of debts. Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87.

So, under How. & H. Miss. Dig. 417, providing that when property, real or personal, of a deceased person shall be sold by order of a probate court it shall be held and remain subject to the amount for which it was sold in the hands of the purchaser or his assignee in the same manner as if a mortgage had been taken on said property, where an administrator sold slaves and took a purchase-money note payable to himself as administrator, and transferred said note for the purchase of other slaves for his personal use, and the vendor had notice from the face of the note that it was property of the estate, the administrator de bonis non of the first estate could recover the note, or could enforce the statutory mortgage on the slaves if his right of action on the note was barred. Miller v. Helm, 2 Smedes & M. 687.

So, under this statute, where an administrator sold slaves of his intestate at private sale and took the notes payable to himself and died without collecting the amount, the administrator de bonis non could maintain a bill to have the sale by the first administrator declared void, or in the alternative to have a statutory lien enforced to recover the purchase money. Murphy v. Clark, 1 Smedes & M. 221.

So where an administrator had sold slaves without any valid order of the probate court, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for the recovery of such slaves or to enforce the mortgage given by the Mississippi statute to secure the purchase money of the property sold by representatives of deceased persons. Prestidge v. Pendleton, 24 Miss. 80.

So, where an administrator sold slaves without an order of court, the sale was void and passed no title, and they could be recovered by the administrator de bonis non from the purchaser by a bill in chancery, and he could recover also from a subvendee. Hull v. Clark, 14 Smedes & M. 187.

Where a widow, who was administratrix and entitled in her own right to one third of the personalty, married again, and her husband, who acquired her interest, managed the business of the estate and sold some of the slaves unlawfully at private sale, it was held, in an action by the heirs to recover a number of the slaves, that as the complainants had an equitable claim to part of the property the cause would be retained in equity. It was said that if there was a remedy at law it could not be enforced by any other person than an administrator de bonis non. Cable v. Martin, 1 How. (Miss.) 558.

Where an estate was insolvent in fact, and former administrators failed to have it declared insolvent, it was the duty of the administrator de bonis non to have it so declared and administered as an insolvent estate, and the land sold to pay debts subject to the widow's right of dower, and a decree allotting dower to the widow on the assumption of the solvency of the estate would not bind the administrator de bonis non where he was not a party to such a proceeding. Yandell v. Pugh, 53 Miss. 295.

Missouri.

In this state an early statute provided for an action by the administrator de bonis non on his predecessor's bond for conversion, or for an account, or for a balance. As to choses in action the early cases held that such notes were the property of the predecessor and subject to any individual claim against him in the hands of the obligors, but such cases are doubtful now.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

Under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 48, providing that if any executor or administrator die his legal representative shall account for, pay, and deliver to his successor all money, real and personal property of every kind, and all rights, credits, deeds, evidences of debt of the deceased, at such times and in such manner as the court shall order on final settlement with such representatives, the property of the estate remaining in the hands of an executor at his death did not go to his representatives, but went to the administrator de bonis non. Booker v. Armstrong, 92 Mo. 49.

In Gamble v. Hamilton, 7 Mo. 489, it was said that the administrator de bonis non would be entitled to money remaining unadministered where its identity could be traced.

But where a party died intestate domiciled in Tennessee leaving property in Missouri, and the administrator in Missouri was also appointed administrator in Tennessee, and the settlement made by him in Tennessee showed that he had accounted to the Tennessee administrator for the Missouri property, and the Missouri settlement showed that all debts were paid, a subsequent administrator de bonis non in Missouri could not maintain an action of detinue to recover any of the property subsequently returned to Missouri, where the transfer by the former Missouri administrator to the Tennessee administrator would have been ordered by the court, and such transfer completed the administration in Missouri on the property. Spradling v. Pipkin, 15 Mo. 118.

In Spradling v. Pipkin, 15 Mo. 118, it was said that if an administrator in Tennessee converted slaves to his own use and brought them to Missouri, such conversion gave the distributee a right to proceed against the administrator in the courts of Tennessee and to assert in equity their claim in Missouri; but it did not authorize the Missouri administrator de bonis non to maintain an action of detinue for such property.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Mo. act 1835, art. 1, § 35, providing that the next succeeding administrator shall proceed against a delinquent predecessor and his securities or either of them, or against any other person possessed of any part of the estate, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for the failure of the former executor to pay over money, effects, and credits in his hands belonging to the estate of the deceased, in pursuance of an order of the county court. State, Darland, v. Porter, 9 Mo. 352.

So, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to maintain an action against his predecessor and his securities, where the letters of the former administrator had been revoked and he had failed to ac-in the settlement of his administrator's account and a failure to present and settle an account, after being cited to do so, would also be a breach of his bond, for which he and his sureties would be liable.

Nor do we think that an administrator de bonis non can maintain an action against the estate of his predecessor for money wrongfully received by him, prior to his appointment as administrator, in the absence of allegation and count for money received as assets and which had been converted to his own use, as the principle of the common law which entitled an administrator de bonis non to those goods only which remained in specie and not administered on by the first administrator was abolished by the system of administration introduced in Missouri. State, Blanton, v. Hunter, 15 Mo. 490.

Where an administrator brought a suit upon his predecessor's bond for failing to account for assets that he had converted to his own use, it was said that if the plaintiff had established this allegation by evidence, the defendants would then have had to show that the property had been legally disposed of. State, Renfro, v. Price, 17 Mo. 431.

In State, Coste, v. Fulton, 35 Mo. 323, it was held that an administrator de bonis non was the only person who could sue for the balance found due in the account of a former administratrix (Mo. Code 1845, §§ 44, 45, showing that the successor of an administrator was made the sole representative of the estate in administration was cited, but the statute was not referred to in the opinion.)

Where an administrator's first annual settlement showed assets to a considerable amount which were liable to the claims of creditors, and he died without making distribution, and an administrator de bonis non was appointed, and creditors brought suit on the bond of the administrator in chief to secure their debt, they were not entitled to recover, but such assets should be held by the administrator de bonis non under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. 77, §§ 46, 49, providing that if all the executors or administrators of an estate die or resign, letters of administration on the goods unadministered shall be granted, and the administrator appointed shall perform like duties and incur like liabilities as the former executor or administrator, and that if any administrator or executor die, resign, or his letters be revoked, he or his legal representative shall account for, pay, and deliver to his successor, or to the surviving or remaining executor or administrator, all money, real and personal property of every kind, and all rights, credits, deeds, evidences of debt, and such papers of every kind of the deceased at such times as the court shall order. State, Collins, v. Dulle, 45 Mo. 299.

And under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. p. 77, §§ 47, 48, the successor of a public administrator who died without having finished an administration of an estate could maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for a conversion and appropriation to his own use of the assets by his predecessor, and it was not necessary to obtain an order of the court before bringing an action. State, Shields, v. Flynn, 48 Mo. 413.

In State, Crane, v. Heinrichs, 82 Mo. 542, it was said that when an executor is removed, the funds of the estate in his hands at the time of his displacement are debts of the estate and should be paid by him only to his successor in office, under Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 48, 49.

So, an administrator de bonis non was entitled to summary process on fifteen days' notice, ordering and adjudging that the money and effects in the hands of his predecessor might be surrendered to him, and to have such order and judgment enforced against his predecessor and his sureties, where an administrator had been removed and there was cash and personal property in his hands, under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. 81, § 67, providing that if an executor or administrator resign or his letters be revoked, the court shall have power to ascertain the amount of money and property in his hands, and to order and adjudge the rendition of the same to his successor, and to enter and order a judgment against him and his sureties, and to enforce the same, first for the amount of money specified in the judgment by execution; second, for all other assets, effects, and papers described in the judgment or order by attachment. Wickham v. Page, 49 Mo. 526.

And in Brown v. Weatherby, 71 Mo. 152, a recovery was allowed by an administrator de bonis non on his predecessor's bond, under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. 81, art. 1, § 67, for failure to deliver to his successor assets of the estate.

And under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. p. 82, § 67, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against a former administrator who had failed to comply with a previous order directing him to make distribution of the fund in his hands among the heirs of the deceased, and the fact that an order of distribution was made and that the debts were all paid did not prevent a recovery. Morehouse v. Ware, 73 Mo. 100.

So, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of money and property in the hands of his predecessor whose letters had been revoked, and for having an order made for the rendition of the same to the plaintiff, under 1 Wagner (Mo.) Stat. p. 81, § 67. Scott v. Crews, 72 Mo. 261.

The case of Scott v. Crews, 72 Mo. 261, distinguished Spraddling v. Pipkin, 15 Mo. 118, saying that case "has no application here; all that it decides is, where the domicile of an intestate, at the time of his death, was in a foreign state, if an administration of his estate here has been finally closed by the payment of all debts against it, and the residue of the assets are transferred and carried into the foreign administration, an administrator de bonis non appointed here cannot recover them though brought again into this state."

Where an administrator de bonis non brought an action on his predecessors' bond for assets which had not been accounted for by them but had been wrongfully converted to their own use, a recovery could be had although the bond had not been approved by the probate court, and it was not a defense to show that certain demands had been allowed against the estate which were barred by limitation. State, Burrough, v. Farmer, 54 Mo. 439.

And where an administrator de bonis non brought a suit upon the bond of his predecessor for failing to account for, pay, and deliver all moneys and property of the estate, it was held that annual settlements made by the predecessor were not final nor conclusive upon the parties interested. State, Daviess County, v. Lankford, 55 Mo. 564.

Where an administrator de bonis non recovered a judgment against plaintiff (a surety) and his co-surety upon the former administrator's bond on account of his failure to account for the assets of the estate, and the administrator in chief had illegally surrendered and delivered up to the co-surety notes belonging to the estate, and such co-surety never paid the same in any manner, the plaintiff was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the administrator de bonis non, and to recover the amount due upon the notes from his co-surety. Cowgill v. Linville, 20 Mo. App. 128.

In Bolton v. Whitmore, 12 Mo. App. 581, a judgment in favor of an administrator de bonis non against the administrator and the sureties on his bond, to compel the administrators to account and pay over, was not reversed, where it was contended that the form of action was not the appropriate one, proof that such money is distinguishable as a part of the intestate's property. If this money withdrawn from the savings bank was, in fact, the property of the intestate at the time of her death, her husband, by receiving it, became a debtor to the estate, and his subsequent appointment and qualification as administrator converted this indebtedness into cash assets in his hands, which, if the allegations of the bill are true, should have been included in his in-

In a controversy between an administrator de bonis non and H., the administrator of his predecessor, an order that H. retain all moneys "for the purpose of paying all administrators and guardians such sums as should be found to be due from the estate of said O'Neill in his capacity of executor, administrator, etc.," was erroneous, as the order evidently was made under the belief that the administrator of the first estate, and other administrators in like situations, ought to be preferred creditors. The court said that the administrator of the first estate must fall into the class of creditors to which the statute assigns him. Gamble v. Hamilton, 7 Mo. 469.

Choses in action.

Where the first administrators surrendered to bankers certificates of deposit without receiving full payment which they had given to the deceased, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against the bankers for the balance, as this was a conversion by the predecessors, and if not accounted for they and their securities were liable on their bond. Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58.

So, where an administrator of a partnership estate was ordered by the probate court to sell the partnership effects at private sale for cash, and he took a note payable to himself for the proceeds of the sale, the right of action on the note was in him alone during his life, and devolved upon his personal representatives at his death, and the administrator de bonis non of the partnership estate was not entitled to the note as part of the partnership assets. McGilway v. Clement, 6 Mo. App. 596, Appx.

An administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action upon a contract made with his predecessor, promising to pay "D., administrator," a certain sum for the hire of a negro, and to return said slave, under Mo. Code Pr. art. 3, providing that every civil action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, as, this promise being made to D., the former administrator, he was either entitled to the benefit of it in his own right, or he was trustee for others, and if he was trustee a suit might be brought in his name for those who were entitled to the money, and if the contract was made to him in his own right he was also the proper person to sue. The court said that "when the property in any of the effects of the deceased has been changed by the original executor or administrator, and has vested in him, in his individual capacity, such effects will go to his own administrator or executor, and not to the administrator de bonis non." (It was contended that Mo. Code 1845, p. 69, art. 1, § 44, providing that if any administrator, etc., shall resign, etc., he shall account for, pay, and deliver to his successor, etc., all money, real and personal property of every kind, all rights, credits, deeds, and papers of every kind of the deceased, and § 45, providing the administrator de bonis non may proceed at law against any person possessed of any part of the estate, gave the administrator de bonis non the right of action. But this statute was not passed on by the court.) Harney v. Dutcher, 15 Mo. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 131.

So, an administrator de bonis non could not recover on a note payable to his predecessor promising to pay B. and C. "as administrators" where he alleged that the note had been lost, mislaid, or destroyed, but he did not state that this occurred while he was in the possession of the note, as the note might have been paid to his predecessors or their assignees or assigned to an innocent purchaser. Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58.

In Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58, it was said: "In Cook v. Holmes, 29 Mo. 61, 77 Am. Dec. 548, the court held that upon Cook's death the legal title to the note vested in his executor, and the suit was properly brought in the name of the executor of Cook. Thomas v. Relfe, 9 Mo. 373, is to the same effect, and, although overruled by Lessing v. Vertrees, 32 Mo. 431, it has not been considered as overruled on that point."

In Thomas v. Relfe, 9 Mo. 373, where the payee brought a suit on notes payable "to R., administrator of the estate of H., deceased," a defense that the letters of administrator had been revoked was insufficient, as the term "administrator" was merely a descriptio personæ, and the notes were the individual property of him to whom they were payable.

And in Lacompte v. Seargent, 7 Mo. 351, where an administrator de bonis non brought suit on a note payable to his predecessor "D., administrator of the estate of A. S., deceased," it was held that his predecessor was the owner of the moneys of the first intestate which came to his hands, and that the defendant in this case was entitled to a credit for any payment made to the predecessor, and also a set-off for goods sold to him individually.

But in Lessing v. Vertrees, 32 Mo. 431, where it was held that a note payable to an administrator could not be garnished for his individual debts Lacompte v. Seargent, 7 Mo. 351, and Thomas v. Relfe, 9 Mo. 373, to the effect that "no principle of law is more generally acknowledged than that the executor or administrator is for every purpose the owner of the moneys of his intestate which have come to his hands,"—were overruled.

An administrator de bonis non was not liable for a failure to collect judgments recovered by a previous administrator and which were assets belonging to the estate, where it was not shown that the debtors were solvent when the successor came into office, or that he had notice of them as existing assets. State, Reyburn, v. Ruggles, 23 Mo. 339.

Nebraska.

Under Neb. Comp. Stat. chap. 123, § 318, providing that when an executor or administrator shall be removed or shall die, or his authority shall otherwise be extinguished, and a new administrator shall be appointed, such new administrator shall be entitled to bring an action upon the bond of the former executor or administrator for any damages sustained by reason of his neglect or refusal, or the neglect or refusal of his representatives, to turn over to such new administrator, pursuant to the order or decree of the probate court or according to law, any estate remaining unadministered, his sole surety appointed as administrator de bonis non on the removal of his principal is liable in the full penal sum of his bond, where the first administrator had in his hands more than that amount at the time of his removal. As the administrator de bonis non could not sue himself, the law treated the amount owing by him on the bond as assets in his hands for the payment of creditors of the estate. Jacobs v. Morrow, 21 Neb. 233.

New Hampshire.

New Hampshire Rev. Stat. 1842, chap. 158, § 2, provides that if administration becomes vacant the judge of probate may grant administration on the estate not already administered, to such person as ventory, and accounted for as administrator. For a failure to do this, he and his sureties were liable upon the official bond.

That a debt due from a person to a testator or intestate becomes, by the debtor's appointment as executor or administrator, assets in his hands, was decided in Massachusetts in the case of Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; and the doctrine of this case has been universally followed by every subsequent decision upon he may think proper, and § 12 provides that no person shall act as administrator until he shall have given bonds to the probate judge to pay and deliver the residue of the estate which shall be found remaining upon the account of such executor or administrator unto such person as said judge by his decree shall limit and appoint. It appears that decisions subsequent to this statute take it for granted that the common-law rule is not in force.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was entitled to prosecute in the name of the judge of probate an action upon the bond of his predecessor, to recover a balance found remaining in his hands on a settlement of his final accounts of administration, as where the balance remained in the hands of a deceased executor unadministered it was peculiarly and legitimately within the province of the new administrator, as part, or the whole of the estate of the deceased testator, of which it was his express and positive duty to take charge. Judge of Probate v. Claggett, 36 N. H. 381, 72 Am. Dec. 314.

And where an executor in New Hampshire sold lands in Vermont as administrator with the will annexed, and the settlement in Vermont showed a large sum in his hands with which he was charged, and the court in Vermont ordered him to pay the same to such persons as the probate court in New Hampshire should direct, the administrator de bonis non of the estate in New Hampshire was entitled to recover on the executor's bond for the balance in the hands of such executor. Judge of Probate v. Heydock, 8 N. H. 491.

An administrator de bonis non was the official successor in the trust, and entitled to receive whatever remained of the estate in his predecessor's hands, on the settlement of the account, and in default of payment was the proper person to maintain an action by a suit on the probate bond. Prescott v. Farmer, 59 N. H. 90.

So, in Judge of Probate v. Lane, 51 N. H. 342, it was said that where there was a breach of an administration bond, the judgment goes for the whole penalty in favor of the probate judge, and if a balance should be found due to an administrator de bonis non an execution should go for his use for that amount, as the security is available for the faithful discharge of the trust at every stage of it.

But where the estate of W had no claim to a legacy, the administrator de bonis non of W was not entitled to recover the same. Seavey v. Roberts, 63 N. H. 621.

New Jersey.

In this state there seems to be no statute affecting the right of an administrator de bonis non to maintain an action for conversion, accounting, or waste, where his predecessor is dead. The early decisions in this state were controlled by the common law, but the subsequent decisions overruled them, and an administrator de bonis non can now collect the whole estate, whether outstanding or in the hands of those who represent the deceased predecessor.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

In Mulford v. Mulford, 40 N. J. Eq. 163, it was held that where all the securities in the possession of Jane W. at the time of her death belonged to the estate of her husband, her executors were required 40 L. R. A.

to account for them or their value to the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of the husband, excepting only so much as had been used in the proper discharge of their duties before they had notice of the fact that the moneys represented by said securities were trust funds. It was said that this conclusion was not sustained by the cases of Brownlee v. Lockwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239; Carrick v. Carrick, 23 N. J. Eq. 364; and of United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 927; but it is in harmony with the conclusions of the chancellor in the case of Boulton v. Scott, 3 N. J. Eq. 231.

So, the legatees of A. could not call on the administrators of A.'s executor for money due them under A.'s will, but such administrators should account with the administrators de bonis non of A., who should account with the legatees. The court said that it was the duty of the administrator de bonis non to collect the whole estate, whether outstanding or in the hands of those who represent the deceased executor, and a settlement by the administrator de bonis non should be of the whole estate unadministered, and should be final. Boulton v. Scott, 3 N. J. Eq. 231.

But in Carrick v. Carrick, 23 N. J. Eq. 364, it was held that where an executor converted property into money and died an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could not maintain an action against the executor of his predecessor for that part of the estate which had been administered by conversion into money, as such right of action vested in the legatee. It was said: "There is no statute in New Jersey affecting this question, as there is in many of the states, and as there is in this state when an executor or administrator is removed for cause."

But see Mulford v. Mulford, 40 N. J. Eq. 163.

And an administrator de bonis non was only responsible for such unadministered assets as he had received, and could not be called upon to account for the maladministration of his predecessor. It was said that he could not call on the representative of the former administratrix for the proceeds of property converted into money in her hands at her death, but only for assets existing in specie. Brownlee v. Lockwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239.

In Brownlee v. Lockwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239, it was held that an administrator de bonis non was not responsible for the maladministration of his predecessor. It was said that Goods of Hall, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 139, "would seem to have an aspect to the contrary. But in that case the suit in the court of law was in the name of the ordinary, and was for the benefit of the next of kin and creditors, and although it is stated that it was brought by the administrator de bonis non, yet it clearly was not a suit by him, and does not establish the position that he could sustain a suit in his own name, or that the assets when recovered would be paid to him."

Where a bond was given by an administrator on the granting of an order of the orphans' court authorizing him to sell land to pay debts, and a judgment was obtained on the bond in favor of the ordinary, it was held, on an application to ascertain how much should be raised on the judgment, that the inquiry as to whether the money when collected should be paid over to the administrator de bonis non to be administered was not involved. Re Given, 34 N. J. Eq. 191.

New York.

In regard to choses in action it seems that the administrator de bonis non cannot recover possession of the same from third parties, where there has the question in that state. Winship v. Bass, 12 Mass. 198; Hobart v. Stone, 10 Pick. 215; Ipswich Mfg. Co. v. Story, 5 Met. 310; Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 558; Chapin v. Waters, 110

Mass. 195; Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552; Tarbell v. Jewett, 129 Mass. 457.

"It is now well settled, whatever may have formerly been the rule of law, that a testator, been a conversion by his predecessor. If he obtains possession and they are assets of the estate and unaccounted for he may maintain an action on them. In 1880 the provisions of the Code authorized a recovery by the administrator de bonis non from his predecessor for a balance, or accounting, or conversion, or maladministration. Prior to this time there were but few decisions on this question, and although in the leading case of Walton v. Walton, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 512, the trial court endeavored to apply the statute, and held that no recovery could be had, the court of appeals allowed a recovery without referring to the statute, but on demurrer to the petition construed the claim to be for unadministered assets, and this was followed by Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 285, where the court held the goods to be unadministered although they were the proceeds of the goods left in specie. In Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 368, following and referring to Walton v. Walton, the court says that an administrator de bonis non could recover under the statute, although Walton v. Walton does not refer to any statute but endeavors to make out that the goods were partially distributed and therefore were unadministered.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was entitled to recover from the executor of his predecessor a mortgage and bond belonging to the estate unadministered. McMahon v. Allen, 4 E. D. Smith, 519.

In Yale v. Baker, 2 Hun, 468, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could sue to recover goods unadministered.

In Buckland v. Gallup, 105 N. Y. 453, it was said that the administrator de bonis non could take any of the goods or effects of the testator remaining in specie; but this rule applied only to such as were distinguishable.

In Re Place, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 217, it was held that an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not chargeable with any moneys collected by his predecessor for which the parties have their remedy against his representatives, but only for such assets as came specifically into his hands and were lost by his neglect.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non of J. W. could maintain an action against the executor of his predecessor to compel an accounting and delivery of assets, where the assets were moneys received in payment of choses in action belonging to J. W., and notes executed by his predecessor to J. W., and real estate bid in by his predecessor on a foreclosure of a mortgage belonging to J. W. It was held that all such property should be considered as partially administered, and, in connection with the allegation in the complaint admitted on demurrer, should be treated as unadministered assets. Walton v. Walton, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 512, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. 428.

In this case the trial court held that the New York statute did not change the rule at common law, and that no action would lie, but the judgment was reversed. The statutes referred to by the trial court are as follows: 8 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 5th ed. 6, providing that the executor and administrator of every person who as executor or administrator shall have wasted or converted to his own use any goods, chattels, or estate of any deceased person shall be chargeable as their testator or intestate would have been; 3 Rev. Stat. 5th ed. 747, providing that an executor of an executor shall have no authority to maintain an action relating to the estate of the testator of the first executor; and 3 Rev. Stat. 5th ed. 162, § 45, providing that if all the executors or administrators shall die or become incapable, or their authority be revoked, the surrogate shall issue letters upon goods unadministered in the same manner as in regard to original letters, and the successor shall have like power and authority. These statutes were not referred to by the court of appeals.

In Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 285, Walton v. Walton was followed, and it was held "that, not only the unadministered property of the testator in specie would, by operation of law, pass to the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, but also the moneys and securities realized on a sale thereof for the purpose of further administration and yet not fully administered, and which have not lost their identity, and can be distinguished from the individual property of the executor, will also so pass."

In Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 362, it was said that an administrator de bonis non was entitled to maintain an action against the representative of his predecessor who had died without applying the assets which had come into his hands, including moneys which he had collected, as such action could be maintained under the statute of New York.

In Kelly v. West, 80 N. Y. 139, under 3 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 6th ed. 85, § 72, providing that whenever it shall appear that the penalty of the bond taken from an executor or administrator or guardian is inadequate a surrogate may revoke the letters granted, where such revocation was made and successors were appointed, and the surrogate directed the prosecution of their predecessor's bond for an accounting and balance, a recovery was allowed. In this case the question of the right of the successor to assets and to pursue the bond was not questioned, but seems to have been taken for granted, but at that time 3 Rev. Stat. 6th ed. 92, § 23, was in effect, providing that whenever directed by the surrogate the bond given by such former executor or administrator shall be prosecuted and a recovery had thereon to the full extent of any injury sustained by the estate of the deceased, by the acts or omissions of such executor or administrator and to the full value of all the property of the deceased received and not duly administered, and the money collected thereon shall be deemed assets in the hands of the person to whom such subsequent letters shall have been issued.

Where an executor was one of a trading firm, and with the knowledge of the firm mixed funds of his testator's estate with those of the firm, and an action was brought by the sole legatee and the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo against the firm for an account of the funds, the chancellor held that the action was properly brought as an administrator de bonis non was the representative of the testator as to all effects not duly administered, and he could seek a discovery of assets in whosever's hands they might be so long as they belonged to the estate. On appeal the decree was affirmed, the court holding that the residuary legatee had the right to pursue the assets. Coit v. Lasnier, 9 Cow. 320.

The decision on appeal did not discuss the question as to whether an administrator de bonis non could maintain the action, but as to whether a recovery should be allowed on the evidence. And it seems to have been admitted that the firm would be liable to the representative for funds retained by the firm.

by making his debtor executor, does not give him the debt, by way of legacy, nor release or discharge it. In this respect he now stands on the same footing with an administrator. But,

In Re Fithian, 44 Hun, 457, it was said that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, authorizing the surrogate to compel the representative of an executor or administrator to account and pay over is not inconsistent with 2 Rev. Stat. 71, §§ 11, 17, 3 Rev. Stat. 7th ed. 2385, 2392, § 60, prohibiting the interference of an executor of an executor with the unadministered assets of the first executor.

In Peck v. Sherwood, 5 Redf. 418, it was said that the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, providing that where an executor, etc., dies, the surrogate court has the same jurisdiction upon the petition of his successor or of a surviving executor or person interested, to compel the executor of the decedent to account for and deliver over any of the trust property which has come into his possession or is under his control, which it would have against the decedent if his letters had been revoked, are new and important.

In Spencer v. Popham, 5 Redf. 425, it was said that under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2805, the successor, or the remaining executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, may compel an accounting of one whose letters have been revoked.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2724, authorizing the surrogate to call an executor or administrator to account where the letters have been revoked, and § 2806, giving the surrogate jurisdiction upon the petition of the successor or of a remaining executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, to compel the person whose letters have been revoked to account for or deliver over money or other property and to settle his account, a removed executor was required to account and pay over the balance to a remaining executor. Re Hood, 104 N. Y. 103.

In Power v. Speckman, 128 N. Y. 354, it was said that under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2805, a successor of an administrator whose letters have been revoked may compel the latter to deliver over money or other property, and is further authorized, with the assent of the surrogate, to prosecute the official bond.

Where the administrator de bonis non attempted to compel an accounting of the administrator of his deceased predecessor, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, it was held that the action was barred within ten years. It seems from the dissenting opinion that this section of the Code was new and took effect in 1890, and the petition was filed in 1890. Pitkin v. Wilcox, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 27.

In Re Latz, 33 Hun, 618, 20 N. Y. Week. Dig. 236, where an administrator de bonis non filed a petition in the surrogate court against the executrix of his predecessor to settle the account and deliver over money which his predecessor had drawn from the bank and never accounted for, it was held that this proceeding was instituted under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, and could be maintained. It was said: "It is not deemed necessary to inquire whether before the Code of Civil Procedure the statute (2 Rev. Stat. 95, § 68) was applicable to the case of a successor to a deceased administrator, or whether there was any statute authorizing the representative of the latter to be cited to account by such successor before the surrogate. There was no statute which required such representative to deliver the trust property over to such successor (2 Rev. Stat. 95, § 71). . . . But as the representative of the next of kin he had an interest in seeing that his predecessor's account was correctly rendered, and for that purpose, and for discovery, it is supposable he could file a bill in equity. . . . although it has been held that at common law the accounting in his action could not extend beyond, but was confined to, as an executor or administrator cannot demand or receive payment of himself, and cannot sue himself, and yet is bound to account for his own debt, that debt must be considered as assets.

the unadministered portion of the estate, inasmuch as there was no privity between the deceased and the succeeding administrator, and as the latter had no right except such as related to the unadministered portion of the assets of his intestate; . . . and that beyond this the remedy was with the next of kin. . . . But that he might by action set aside a fraudulent sale and recover the property so disposed of by the chief administrator. . . . The right of recovery was necessarily confined to the assets remaining unadministered, which might be reached by action at law and in equity as the nature and situation required. In the case at bar it does not appear whether or not the money of the appellant's intestate was converted or in any manner appropriated by the deceased administrator. It was by him taken from the bank. If he converted it to any use it would not now be deemed unadministered property, but if he set it apart and kept it separate from his, and it continued so to the time of his death, it would probably go to the appellant."

This was affirmed in 110 N. Y. 681, on the ground that it was not a final order and therefore no appeal would lie.

Where the administratrix of P., whose inventory showed assets, died without an account, and her executor showed assets amounting to $13,000, but no fund to her credit as administratrix of P. no specific property which could be identified as such, and made a settlement and distributed the surplus, and an administrator de bonis non of P. was subsequently appointed, it was held, on a petition by heirs asking for an accounting by the executor of the funds held by the administratrix of P., that the administrator de bonis non was the party entitled to receive the estate if there was any. Re O'Brien, 45 Hun, 284.

In Van Camp v. Searle, 79 Hun, 146, it was said that an action was maintainable by an administrator de bonis non against the representative of his predecessor who had died without having fully administered the estate which came to him, and that trover, replevin, assumpsit, or other appropriate action could be maintained if there had been a conversion.

Where the will of J. gave property to R., and the executor of R. settled his accounts and was discharged and his resignation accepted on making certain payments, it was said that an administrator de bonis non of R. could pursue the executors of J. if there was any negligence or misfeasance, and he could also hold the executors of R. to account if the estate had been damaged through negligence of the executor. Re Soutter, 105 N. Y. 514.

But in Yale v. Baker, 2 Hun, 468, it was said that the administrator de bonis non could not sue to overhaul the accounts of his predecessors, as they were liable only to the creditors or next of kin.

Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, the successor of an executor could not maintain an action for an accounting against the executrix of her predecessor for any property, except such as came into the respondent's possession or was under her own control. Le Count v. Le Count, 1 Dem. 29.

Where an administrator de bonis non filed a petition asking a surrogate to compel the administratrix of plaintiff's predecessors to account for and deliver certain property, it was held that under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2806, the surrogate had no jurisdiction to direct an accounting where the petition did not allege that property belonging to the decedent's estate came into the possession of the respondent or was under her control. Scofield v. Adriance, 2 Dem. 486.

Where the same hand is to pay and receive money the law presumes, as against the debtor himself, that he has done that which he was legally bound to do, and charges him with the amount as a debt paid. . . . It is sufficient for the present case that the administrator is bound to account for his own debt as a debt paid, and as assets, without other acts

In Breslin v. Smyth, 3 Dem. 251, it was said that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2605, providing that when letters have been revoked the surrogate has jurisdiction upon the petition of the successor to compel the person whose letters have been revoked to account for or deliver over money or other property and to settle his account, specified the persons who may enforce such an accounting.

In Hood v. Hayward, 124 N. Y. 1, it was said that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2608, provides that when letters of an executor or administrator have been revoked the successor may maintain an action upon his predecessor's bond in which he may recover any money or the value of any other property received by the principal and not duly administered by him, and that under 2 Rev. Stat. 85, § 21, the prosecution was by the direction of the surrogate, and that actions under prior statutes other than 1837 were prosecuted in the name of the people.

Choses in action.

Where an executrix and sole legatee converted the estate and loaned the money, taking a note, bond, and mortgage payable to her individually, the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of the first estate could not recover possession of the same from a third party, as the executrix had converted the assets, and had become (if any liability at all was created) personally liable for them. Buckland v. Gallup, 105 N. Y. 453.

So, where an executrix was entitled to the use of the property of the deceased during her natural life, and also to use any part of the principal which might be necessary, and she loaned the money taking a bond and mortgage in her own name and not as executrix, the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not entitled to the same. Caulkins v. Bolton, 31 Hun, 458, 98 N. Y. 511.

And it was said that if the consideration of the bond and mortgage was assets of the estate so as to make the estate of the executrix accountable, it would not follow that the bond and mortgage could be enforced by the administrator de bonis non. Caulkins v. Bolton, 98 N. Y. 511.

In Caulkins v. Bolton, 98 N. Y. 511, it was said: "The grounds on which the cases cited by the appellants (Walton v. Walton, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 512; Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 282) stand, are not in conflict with the doctrine to which I have adverted. Both arose on demurrer, and in both it was admitted that the property in question was assets of the testator, remaining unadministered by the first executor. Walton's Case was an action for an account and payment of assets, consisting of moneys received by the executor in payment of debts due the testator at the time of his death, or debts due from the executor to him, on real estate bid in by the executor for the benefit of the estate on the foreclosure of a mortgage running to the testator, and the court held there was no ground for an account. Luer's Case was for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the defendants to the original executors of Luer's estate as such, and 'payable to them and their successors.'"

So, an administrator de bonis non could not recover a deposit from a bank that had been paid by the bank to the plaintiff's predecessors as widow before she had been appointed administratrix, as the plaintiff had no other rights than those of mere successor, and was concluded by what had previously taken place. Whitlock v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 38 Hun, 460.

But where an administrator holding a mortgage given by him to his intestate was removed, he was required to turn over to his successor as administrator de bonis non the mortgage and also a bank account of the intestate. But the ownership of these assets was not disposed of in this case. The intestate had been an administratrix of a former estate in which she had a life estate, and had transferred all the deposits into her individual name, and it was said that the representatives of her estate would have to account to the representatives under the will of the prior testator. Re Seitz, 13 Misc. 522.

In Gatfield v. Hanson, 57 How. Pr. 331, it was held that the widow and next of kin could not foreclose a mortgage given to an intestate, although one of the plaintiffs was appointed administrator de bonis non during the pendency of the action, as the right of action was in the administrator de bonis non, and his appointment after the commencement of the action would not uphold the same.

Where the executors took a bond and mortgage payable to them "as executors as aforesaid, their survivors, successors, or assigns," the administrator de bonis non could foreclose such mortgage. A demurrer admitted that the plaintiff could recover where the bill alleged that the mortgage was taken and held by the executors as assets, and as the property of the estate of the decedent. The court held that the word "successors" was important. Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 282.

North Carolina.

An administrator de bonis non is entitled to the assets not administered. He may maintain an action for breaches of the bond of his predecessor, and for an account and settlement and for a conversion. Some of the cases holding this are supported by a statute. The administrator de bonis non may recover choses in action belonging to the estate although payable to his predecessor. He may maintain an action to set aside void sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

An administrator de bonis non was entitled to money that his predecessor had deposited for safe-keeping with a surety upon his bond just prior to his death, with instructions to pay the same over to his intestate's estate. Hackney v. Steadman, 46 N. C. (1 Jones L.) 207.

In Taylor v. Brooks, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 139, it was said that upon the death of an administrator the goods of the intestate did not go to the executor or administrator, but to the administrator de bonis non of the intestate.

In Ferebee v. Baxter, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 64, it was said that upon the death of an administrator the duty of settling up the estate devolved on an administrator de bonis non, and the administrator of the administrator would have nothing to do with it except to account for and deliver over to the administrator de bonis non such of the assets as had not been disposed of by the first administrator in the due course of administration.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

A distributee cannot maintain an action for an accounting and distribution of the balance, where the administrator has died or has been removed, as the sole right of action is in the administrator de bonis non. State, Goodman, v. Goodman, 72 N. C. 508; Merrill v. Merrill, 92 N. C. 657; Ham v. Kornegay, 85 N. C. 119; Gilliam v. Watkins, 104 N. C. 180; State, Baldwin, v. Johnston, 90 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 381.

or ceremony. . . . The administrator's own debt being assets, it becomes an item in his administration account, and the question whether such debt is due, and the amount of it, becomes a question of probate jurisdiction in the first instance, to be decided by the judge of probate, on all questions as well of fact as of law, subject to an appeal to this court." Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 558.

In Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256, it was

So, where an administrator resigned, an administrator de bonis non was appointed, and the next of kin of the intestate brought an action on the bond of the original administrator for breaches of the bond and for an account and settlement, it was held that the action could not be maintained by the next of kin but should have been brought by the administrator de bonis non, under N. C. Code, § 1517, providing that whenever the letters of an executor, administrator, or collector are revoked his bond may be prosecuted by the person or persons succeeding to the administration of the estate. It was said: "However it may be elsewhere, under the section of the Code and decisions referred to, it is different in this state, and it is well settled that such an action cannot be maintained by the next of kin, distributees, or creditors." Tulburt v. Hoilar, 102 N. C. 407.

So, where the next of kin brought an action on the administrator's bond after the death of the administrator because he had failed to take into his possession and distribute certain negroes to which his intestate was entitled, it was held that the sole right of action vested in the administrator de bonis non, as that officer was to take charge of all the estate which had not been administered, and to finish whatever had been left undone by the first administrator. It was said that "assets are administered by taking them into possession and paying them over to creditors, or to the next of kin in the course of distribution. Both acts must concur before the goods can be said to have been administered." State, Williams, v. Britton, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 110.

And where the legatee brought an action against the administrator of an administrator with the will annexed charging that the first administrator had made a fraudulent sale of slaves, and asking for an account by the last administrator, it was held that such administrators could not be held to account with any person but an administrator de bonis non. Cannon v. Jenkins, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 422.

And in an action by a distributee against the administrator of an executor charging a fraudulent disposition of the real estate of the testator by the executor, and to vacate a decree and to surcharge and falsify an account, it was held that there should be an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo appointed and made a party defendant to the action, as the right of action vested in him on the death of the executor. Hardy v. Miles, 91 N. C. 131.

Where the university brought an action upon the bond of an administrator for an undistributed surplus, under N. C. Code, § 1504, providing for the distribution of the estate of an alien unclaimed by creditors, next of kin or otherwise, and pending the action the administrator died, it was held that the action could not be continued against his executor by the plaintiff, as the administrator de bonis non was the only party entitled to recover the assets. University of North Carolina v. Hughes, 90 N. C. 537.

Where an administrator de bonis non wasted the estate, his successor as administrator de bonis non of the same estate was entitled to maintain an action upon his predecessor's bond. It was said that such actions could not be maintained in the name of the next of kin, as wasting an estate was not administering it. Lansdell v. Winstead, 76 N. C. 366.

In Duke v. Ferebee, 52 N. C. (7 Jones L.) 10, it was said that if anything was due an estate from the first administrator, it might have been recovered 40 L. R. A.

upon his death from his administrator, provided administration de bonis non had been taken out and suit brought to recover in proper time.

In Badger v. Jones, 66 N. C. 305, it was said that where an administrator de bonis non brought an action for a devastavit on the part of the former administrator for the value of goods wasted, a recovery could be had, as the right of an administrator de bonis non related back to the death of the intestate, and he was bound only by such lawful acts of the previous administrator as were done in the due course of administration of the assets of the estate, and for any devastavit on the part of the administrator the administrator de bonis non ought to recover, by an action on the bond of his predecessor, the value of the goods and effects wasted.

Under N. C. Code, chap. 43, §§ 50, 51, authorizing the sale of real estate on the petition of an executor or administrator for the payment of debts, and making the proceeds of the sale assets for the payment of debts, and directing that the excess shall be paid by the executor or administrator to such persons as would have been entitled to the land had it not been sold, where an administratrix de bonis non cum testamento annexo died before she had completed the settlement of the assets derived from real estate by paying over the excess to the heirs, the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for the balance, and was not concluded as to the amount of debts by the showing made by his predecessor in the proceeding to sell the land. Latta v. Russ, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 111.

In Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290, it was said that an action for devastavit committed by an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo who had died, should be brought in the name of the administrator de bonis non, and that this was well settled in North Carolina, although a different rule prevailed elsewhere.

But the administrator de bonis non of a deceased ward was not entitled to recover in an action against the administrator of a deceased guardian on his bond, moneys which came into the guardian's hands as proceeds of real estate belonging to the ward, sold under a decree of the court for partition, under N. C. New Const., which abolished the distinction between courts of law and courts of equity, as the proceeds of land sold for partition to which an infant was entitled was real estate and the heirs of the infant were necessary parties to this action. State, Allison, v. Robinson, 78 N. C. 222.

In this case State, Reddick, v. Satterfield, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 358, and Latta v. Russ, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 111, were distinguished. It was pointed out that the case of Latta v. Russ was under the statute above quoted. It was said that a different rule prevailed in equity.

Where an administrator in an action for division divided the slaves between the widow and distributees, and in a subsequent action for partition by the distributees sold slaves as commissioner of the court and took notes payable to himself as administrator, the administrator de bonis non was not liable for the neglect of his predecessor to account for the proceeds of the sale, nor for his own failure to collect such notes as came to his hands from the former administration, but was liable for such accounts as he had collected by virtue of his office. State, Roper, v. Burton, 107 N. C. 526.

It was said in this case, when slaves when surrendered as not needed to pay debts, and were di-said: "The case might have been very different, if the defendant had denied that he owed this debt, and had refused to insert it in the inventory, and to account for it as the property of the deceased." And in some other of the Massachusetts cases above cited the rule as laid down contains the qualification, "when the debt is acknowledged," although we are aware of no case in which this has been decided to be the law; and we think, upon principle and vided between the widow and next of kin, and afterwards sold for partition at the instance of the next of kin, they became in a legal sense goods administered, and the liability of the first administrator as such, and that of the sureties on his bond, ceased, and no responsibility attached to the administrator other than as commissioner.

Chosen in action.

Where an executor of a legatee obtained a judgment for a legacy, and died before execution or satisfaction of the same, the right to the legacy of the deceased legatee vested in the administrator de bonis non; but he was not entitled to an execution until he had been made a proper party to the cause. Ellison v. Andrews, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 188.

So, where a note was payable to William B., executor of Richard B., and the executor died, it was held that an action upon the note should have been made by the administrator de bonis non of Richard B., under Battle (N. C.) Rev. chap. 45, § 130, Code, § 1511, providing that every action brought by an executor or administrator upon a cause of action or right to which the estate is party in interest shall be brought in his representative capacity. Ballinger v. Cureton, 104 N. C. 474.

Under N. C. act 1795, chap. 14, § 1, providing for a sale by executors or administrators upon credit, and for bonds with sureties to be taken, and that "such executor, etc., or administrator, etc., shall, after the time of such payment is past, take and pursue all lawful ways and means to recover and receive the money so due as aforesaid, or otherwise shall be chargeable or answerable for the same; and that such moneys, when received, shall be liable to the satisfaction of judgments previously obtained, and entered up as judgments when assets should come to the hands of the executor or administrator,"—a bond payable to an administrator passed at his death to the administrator de bonis non of the first intestate as a part of his estate, and not to the administrator of the first administrator. Cutlar v. Quince, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 60.

In Anonymous, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 18, the question whether an administrator de bonis non could sue upon a bond taken by the former administrator for goods sold which were the deceased's, in the name of himself as administrator, was not decided.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Where a sale of land was made by an administrator which was void, under N. C. Rev. Code, chap. 48, § 61, Acts 1868-69, chap. 113, § 105, providing that a sale of land by the heirs at law within two years after the death of the intestate shall be void as against creditors and administrators, and the administrator had committed a devastavit, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action to set aside a conveyance of real estate made by his predecessor and an heir in order to have the same administered as assets, when the securities on the bond of his predecessor were insolvent. Badger v. Jones, 66 N. C. 305.

Where the administrator de bonis non brought an action alleging that the intestate had made a fraudulent deed of trust, and that there was collusive fraud on the part of his predecessor in a foreclosure of such trust deed, and that the property embraced therein was necessary for the payment of debts, it was held that the deed of trust and the subsequent sale of the property were void for fraud, and that in the absence of personal assets such land of the intestate was liable to be sold to make assets to pay his debts until they were all discharged. Glover v. Flowers, 101 N. C. 134.
40 L. R. A.

So, in Hackney v. Steadman, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 207, it was said that where an administrator of an estate turned over money of the estate fraudulently to another party, the administrator de bonis non appointed after his death could recover the same.

But where a will gave the property, real and personal, to a wife for life, and at her death to the testator's three daughters, and to a child in ventre sa mère, and at his death there were two other children, and his wife was made executrix and took possession of slaves and sold them, the administrator de bonis non could not recover as the sale was held to be a sale in the capacity of executrix, and the purchaser acquired an absolute title. Windley v. Gaylord, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 55.

So, where a widow administered on her husband's estate and sold a slave to a trustee in trust for herself and daughter who were the only next of kin, it was held that this act was a full administration, and after her death an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of trover for possession of the slave. It was held the deed was effectual to divest her title as administratrix, and amounted to "an assent" or delivery to herself and daughter as distributees, and had the same legal effect as the assent of an executor. Quince v. Nixon, 31 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 289.

And where the will of a husband gave his real and personal property to his wife under certain powers and trusts for the use of their children, and the wife as executrix disposed of the property and assented to the legacy given to herself and children, the administrator de bonis non could not recover property which the wife had of her husband's estate as there was nothing which had not been administered. In this case it was said that if the wife had not assented to the legacy to herself and the children, then the legal title would have been in the plaintiff as administrator de bonis non, and if anybody interfered with his rights he had a remedy at law to recover possession. Carson v. Duffy, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 507.

Ohio.

An administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for an accounting, or for the balance in his hands, or for conversion, until a statute giving such a right of action was passed. Such a statute is now in effect in this state. It seems that for choses in action due the estate by the predecessor the administrator de bonis non may recover.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

In Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431, it was said that at common law an administrator or executor who had resigned or been removed was liable to no action at the suit of the administrator de bonis non except for the recovery of such assets as remained in specie.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Ohio act April 7, 1854 (Swan & C. 619), conferring power to maintain an action on the bond of such executor or administrator whose powers have ceased by death or otherwise, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor for failing to render an account, and for failing to administer according to law the money and chattels, and for appropriating to his own use a large amount of assets. It was held that authority, that there is no difference in the rule whether the debt is acknowledged or denied.

In Winship v. Bass, 12 Mass. 198, the indebtedness was not acknowledged. The executor refused to treat his indebtedness to the estate as assets, claiming that it was extinguished by his appointment. The court held that the debt was not extinguished, but must be treated as assets; and that, as his sureties it was not necessary that the amount due the estate from the deceased administrator should be ascertained by the judgment of the probate court before bringing the action. Douglas v. Day, 28 Ohio St. 175.

So, under Ohio Stat. 1831, vol. 29, p. 235 (Swan, 344), providing for a suit by the administrator who may be appointed in the place of any administrator who may have resigned, or been removed, against such administrator for any moneys, assets, rents, or profits that may have been received by such administrator as well as all damage done by such administrator to the estate, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor who had been removed for neglecting to settle, and for the receipt of a large amount of money for which he never accounted. O'Conner v. State, Potter, 18 Ohio, 225.

And where an executor resigned, and administrators de bonis non were appointed, and the executor died, and the administrators de bonis non resigned and an administratrix de bonis non was appointed, she could maintain an action against the administrator of the executor for notes, bills, accounts, rents, and profits received by the executor and converted and disposed of by him to his own use, under Ohio act March 12, 1831, § 25 (29 Ohio Laws, 233, 3 Chase, 1780), providing that when an executor shall resign or be removed, and the administrator with the will annexed appointed, such newly appointed administrator shall be authorized immediately to commence an action on the case against such prior executor and hold him to bail, and in such action to recover moneys, assets, rents, issues, and profits received by such removed executor and not applied according to law, as well as all damages done or committed by such executor in respect to the estate, as this cause of action accrued before the executor died. Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431.

It was said that this case in no wise conflicts with Blizzard v. Filler, 20 Ohio, 479, as there the administrator died in office and there were no provisions in the statute for a suit by the administrator de bonis non against the representative.

And under Ohio Rev. Stat. 1880, § 6020, providing that an executor or administrator appointed in the place of an executor or administrator who has resigned, been removed, or whose letters have been revoked or authority extinguished, shall be entitled to the possession of all the personal effects and assets of the estate unadministered, and may maintain a suit against the former executor or administrator and his sureties on administration bond for the same and for damages arising from maladministration, an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed could maintain a suit upon the bond of his predecessor who had been removed, for the amount found due from him on the settlement of his accounts. The failure of the predecessor to pay such amount was a breach of the bond "to administer according to law" the assets of the estate. Slagle v. Entrekin, 44 Ohio St. 837.

And under 52 Ohio Laws, 31, 1854, providing that in all cases where the powers of an executor or administrator heretofore or hereafter appointed have ceased by death, removal, resignation, or in any other manner, any administrator or coexecutor or coadministrator may maintain an action on the bond of such executor or administrator whose powers have ceased, against any of the obligors thereof or their representatives for any breach of the conditions of said bond, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for the balance in the hands of his predecessor unadministered. Chatfield v. Faran, 1 Disney (Ohio) 488.

So, under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 6020, authorizing an administrator appointed in the place of one who has been removed, not only to maintain a suit against the predecessor and the sureties on his bond, for all the personal effects and assets of the intestate unadministered, but also for all damages arising from the maladministration of such predecessor, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain an action upon these several bonds given by his predecessor who had been removed for assets received by him and converted to his own use. Foster v. Wise, 46 Ohio St. 20.

In Douglas v. Day, 28 Ohio St. 175, it was said that without the aid of the statute no action could be maintained by the administrator de bonis non on the bond of his predecessor for waste.

But an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action for an accounting on the bond of his deceased predecessor under Swan's Stat. (Ohio) pp. 43, 44, § 25, providing that an administrator appointed in the place of an executor or administrator who has resigned, been removed, or whose letters have been revoked, shall be entitled to the possession of all the personal effects and assets of the estate unadministered, and may maintain a suit against the former executor or administrator on the administration bond for all damages arising from the maladministration or omission of the former executor or administrator, as this statute did not apply except where the predecessor resigned, was removed, or where his letters were revoked. Blizzard v. Filler, 20 Ohio, 479.

The same was held in Curtis v. Lynch, 19 Ohio St. 392, deciding that this statute did not give an action against the representative of a deceased administrator who died in office, but left the matter as it stood at common law. It was further held that Ohio act April, 1854, Swan & C. Stat. 619, concerning suits on the bonds of executors and administrators, only conferred power to maintain an action on the bond of such executor or administrator whose powers have ceased. The court said that the plaintiff should look to his remedy on the bond.

Where executors directed by will to hold property in trust for the benefit of Hannah H. for life, the principal to be paid to her children after her death, were given a large discretion, and, believing they had the right, paid the principal to Hannah H., and filed a final account which was confirmed by the court, and two sons of Hannah H. applied for the appointment of an administrator de bonis non, it was held that the account filed could not be disturbed. It was further held that the probate court had no jurisdiction in these kinds of cases to determine whether the executor rightfully or wrongfully paid out this money as contended, and therefore could not say affirmatively that there was an unadministered estate, and could not grant the application for appointment of an administrator. Re Hess, 3 Ohio N. P. 62.

Choses in action.

Where a mortgagor of the testator was appointed executor and was removed, the administrator de bonis non was entitled to proceed upon the mortgage against the removed executor and the land, notwithstanding other and subsequent mortgagees, as the appointment of the mortgagor as executor were liable upon his bond, he need not be removed.

In Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 553, the indebtedness of the administrator was not ac-did not extinguish the mortgage lien. Miller v. Donaldson, 17 Ohio, 264.

And where a will directed that after the expiration of six years the executors should appropriate $10,000 for the erection of a Masonic hall, the application of the money to be under the exclusive control of the executors, and G., the acting executor, paid the principal sum to a contractor and took a bond for the performance of the contract and then resigned, his successor and administrator de bonis non with the will annexed could maintain an action upon the bond for a breach thereof, as this money was paid to the contractor by G. as "executor" of J., and the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo succeeded to the control of this trust and the right to sue for the breach of this bond. Mathews v. Meek, 23 Ohio St. 272.

So, where a recovery by an administrator de bonis non was allowed by statute against the administrator of his predecessor for assets in his hands, it was held that he could recover the value of the promissory notes owing by the executor to the testator, and that the appointment of the executor did not release such claim, and the notes, as they fell due, became assets in the executor's hands as executor, and he was accountable for them as such. Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431.

But where an administrator sold land under an order of court, and received mortgage notes as part of the purchase money, and sold the notes and mortgage to an innocent purchaser and converted the proceeds to his own use, the administrator de bonis non could not recover of the purchaser the notes and mortgage, as (until 88 Ohio Laws, 41, February, 1891, amending § 6182, and 89 Ohio Laws, 148, regulating and restricting the sale of notes taken by an executor or administrator for real estate sold by him), there was no statute in this state in any manner abridging the power of an executor or administrator to sell notes taken by him in the course of administration of the estate payable to himself in his representative capacity. Jelke v. Goldsmith, 52 Ohio St. 499.

Oregon.

Where an administrator sold land and was removed, his successor was not liable for the proceeds of the sale converted by his predecessor to his own use, nor was he liable because he did not collect from his predecessor money misappropriated, but was liable for moneys received by himself. Dray v. Bloch, 27 Or. 549.

Pennsylvania.

Before the act of 1834 an administrator de bonis non could not maintain a scire facias upon a judgment obtained by his predecessor, and could not maintain an action for a balance in his predecessor's hands; but since the act of 1834 an administrator de bonis non can maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for conversion, for an account and for the balance on hand. Since 1834 an administrator de bonis non can maintain an action to avoid a transfer made by his predecessor and is entitled to maintain an action upon all choses in action belonging to the estate.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under Pa. act Feb. 24, 1834, § 31, providing that the administrators de bonis non shall have power to recover from their predecessors or their representatives all moneys and assets in their hands belonging to the estate of the decedent, providing that such suit may be stayed until the acknowledge, but, on the contrary, was strenuously denied.

In Tarbell v. Jewett, 129 Mass. 457, it was said: "The note, therefore, became assets of count is finally settled, an administrator de bonis non was given a direct remedy against the estate of the deceased executor for the balance remaining in the hands of his predecessor after settlement. Bowman's Appeal, 62 Pa. 166.

So, under Pa. act Feb. 24, 1834, § 31, an administrator de bonis non could sue the representative of his predecessor for assets actually converted. Parish v. Brooks, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 154.

And in Croyell v. Blackfan, 1 Pittab. 327, it was held in the court of common pleas that under Pa. act Feb. 24, 1834, an administrator de bonis non who was not appointed until after the confirmation of an auditor's report directing the distribution of the balance in the hands of the superseded administrator to and amongst creditors could recover the fund from his predecessor. On appeal the decision was affirmed by a division of the court.

And in Drenkle v. Sharman, 9 Watts, 485, it was said that the distinction between the right of an administrator de bonis non whose predecessor had died, and the right of one whose predecessor had been dismissed, to the assets belonging to the estate of the decedent, was abolished by Pa. act 1834, and under that act the administrator de bonis non was entitled to the whole assets in either case, and was bound to look after and obtain them, whether in the hands of his predecessor, their representatives, or those of others.

In an action against the administrator of a husband's administrator, for the widow's share, a payment to the administrator de bonis non was a defense although the payment was made previous to Pa. act 1834, § 31, providing that administrators de bonis non shall be the proper persons to receive such funds from their predecessor or their legal representatives, as this applied to cases then existing as well as to others which might thereafter arise. Little v. Walton, 23 Pa. 164.

So, under Pa. act 1834, § 33, providing that in all cases where property, real or personal, of the decedent is sold upon execution, and more money raised than is sufficient to pay off liens of record, the balance shall be paid over to the executor or administrator for distribution, and such money shall be distributed as the real estate would have been, and § 31, providing that an administrator may call for any fund which his predecessor may legally receive, the successor was entitled to the avails of realty left undisposed of by the first administrator. Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 315.

So, in Connelly's Appeal, 1 Grant, Cas. 366, it was held that where an executor was discharged without accounting for a claim in the hands of an agent, and the agent was appointed administrator de bonis non, an heir could not maintain an action against the executor to compel him to account and distribute, as a discharged executor was not to make distribution but simply to pay over the fund to his successor.

But prior to Pa. act 1834, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain a scire facias upon a judgment on his predecessor's bond to recover a balance due from his predecessor to the estate, as an administrator de bonis non could claim nothing but the goods of the intestate remaining in specie, unconverted and unchanged at the time of the death of the original administrator. Potts, Wollerton, v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 361, 24 Am. Dec. 359.

In Allen v. Irwin, 1 Serg. & R. 549, the question whether or not an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain against the administratrix of their predecessor, an action of assumpsit for money had and received by the pre-the estate, from which the liability of the estate to the guardian could properly be met, and it is immaterial that it was not named in the inventory or accounts. . . . The fact that an executor charges himself with his debt in the inventory or account is an important fact; it settles the question that he owes the estate, and the amount of his debt, and, in decease was not decided. It was said that a creditor, legatee, or next of kin could maintain an action for the undisposed surplus of the personal estate.

In Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 815, it was said that before the Pennsylvania act of 1834 an action to recover the balance appearing to be due upon the face of an administration account could not be maintained by the administrator de bonis non.

In Re Montgomery, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 308, it was held that a creditor could have an account from the executor of an executor, but that distribution and payment could only be effected through the agency of an administrator de bonis non.

Chosen in action.

Under Pa. act Feb. 24, 1834, providing that administrators de bonis non are authorized to recover from their predecessors in the administration or their legal representatives, the moneys, goods, and assets remaining in their hands due and belonging to the estate of the decedent, and to sue out writs of execution upon judgments obtained by or in the name of the executors or administrators into whose places they have come, an administrator de bonis non had a right to sue forth a writ of execution on a judgment obtained by his predecessor in the administration. Meiser v. Eckhart, 19 Pa. 201.

And it was not a defense that the defendant had paid the same to the administrator of the administratrix, having notice not to pay the same. Meiser v. Eckhart, 19 Pa. 201.

In Com. v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 479, where an administrator de bonis non recovered a judgment on the bond of his predecessor and died, and a subsequent administrator de bonis non was appointed, the heirs could not maintain an action on the judgment under Pa. act 1834, Stroud's Purd. 364, § 31, providing that an administrator de bonis non shall have power to commence and prosecute actions upon promises made to their predecessors in their representative character, and also to proceed with and perfect all unexecuted executions which may have been issued thereon at the instance of such predecessors.

So, under Pa. act 1834, an administrator de bonis non was properly substituted as plaintiff where his predecessor had recovered a judgment for debt against an agent for loss of money belonging to an estate, as "the object of the statute was to bring into the hands of the administrator de bonis non everything that, when recovered, would go in a course of administration." Lea v. Hopkins, 7 Pa. 385.

And under Pa. act 1834 it was no defense to an action by an administrator de bonis non on a claim due the estate that his predecessor had agreed to offset the same by a note given by him for his own private debt. Miller v. Com. 111 Pa. 221.

Where a will authorized an executor to sell land and invest the proceeds in bonds, the dividends to be paid to his wife for life and at her death the principal to be paid to the children of his daughter, and the executor sold the land and gave the widow the proceeds, and she placed the same in the hands of a party who bought bonds and paid her the income for life, and she died, the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was entitled to recover the bonds from the holder under Pa. act 1834, providing that administrators de bonis non with or without the will annexed shall have power to demand or recover from their predecessors, or their legal representatives, all moneys, goods, and assets remaining in their hands due and belonging to the estate of the decedent. Tucker v. Horner, 10 Phila. 122.

So, where the funds of an estate were deposited by an executor in a bank, the administrator de bonis non was entitled to the same where it was shown to be the property of the estate. Stair v. York Nat. Bank, 55 Pa. 384.

But in Slaymaker v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 103 Pa. 616, it was held that under Pa. act Feb. 24, 1834, Pub. Laws, 77, vesting every administrator de bonis non with power to collect from his predecessor or his legal representatives all assets in his hands, or for which he is liable, that belong to the estate, an administrator de bonis non had no right to a deposit in bank kept by his predecessor in his representative capacity, and the payment of such deposit to the administrator de bonis non was no defense in an action against the bank by the executor of the original administrator.

And under Pa. act 1834, Pub. Laws, 77, an administrator de bonis non could not recover from a bank the amount of a deposit which originally stood in the name of the intestate, but which was drawn out of the bank by his predecessor. Sibbs v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. 153 Pa. 345.

In Sibbs v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. 153 Pa. 345, Meiser v. Eckhart, 19 Pa. 201, was distinguished, as that case holds that an administrator de bonis non may collect an uncollected judgment taken by a deceased administrator for purchase money due the estate which was held to be an uncollected asset.

In Sibbs v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. 153 Pa. 345, the case of Little v. Walton, 23 Pa. 184, was distinguished, as that case holds that the representatives of a deceased administrator may properly pay the unascertained balance due after a settlement of the account to the administrator de bonis non.

In Sibbs v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. 153 Pa. 345, the case of Stair v. York Nat. Bank, 55 Pa. 384, 93 Am. Dec. 759, was distinguished, as in that case the contest was over the ownership or a deposit of which the bank was still the holder, and notice was given to the bank before it parted with the fund, and in that case the claimant successfully attacked and overcame the presumption of ownership arising from the form of the deposit, and established his title.

Prior to Pa. act 1834, where real estate was sold by an administrator, who obtained a judgment upon the purchase-money bond and then died, it was no defense to a scire facias issued on a judgment by the administrator of the administrator that the administrator de bonis non had received payment and given a discharge, as an administrator de bonis non had no control over such a bond given to his predecessor. Kendall v. Lee, 2 Penn. & W. 482.

An administrator de bonis non could not maintain a scire facias on a judgment rendered on the bond of his predecessor, under Pa. act April 4, 1797, 3 Smith, Laws, 396, § 2, providing that when an executor or administrator is dismissed by a decree or order of the court, the court may order him to deliver over and to pay to the successor the goods, chattels, rights, credits, title deeds, and securities of the deceased which came to his or their hands and remain unadministered, and to account with the said successor for all the goods, chattels, rights, and credits which shall have been previously administered, and to pay over the balance which shall remain due from him or them to the said successor in such manner and time as the court shall order. It was held that the cases intended to be provided for in these acts were where letters of administration had been granted without bond, and sureties those cases where the debt has thus been accounted for, great stress has been laid upon the fact. . . . But an executor cannot escape his liability, or change the character of it, by failing to charge himself with his own debt; if he could, then by neglecting his duty there would be no remedy for the estate. Nor is charging himself with it the only way in had been taken but were insufficient, or where executors or administrators were wasting or mismanaging the estate. It was held that an administrator de bonis non was not within the letter or spirit of this act, or else the legislature in the same law would have authorized the orphans' court to dismiss an executor or administrator, and to appoint an administrator de bonis non with all the rights, powers, and privileges of such. Potts, Wolterton, v. Smith, 8 Rawle, 361, 24 Am. Dec. 359.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor

Where an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo filed a bill in equity in the court of common pleas to set aside a power of attorney given by the testator to the executor, on the ground that it was procured by fraud, and further asking for an account of investments made and moneys collected and retained by the defendant thereunder, it was held that a settlement in the orphans' court did not oust the court of common pleas of jurisdiction. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Gazam, 161 Pa. 536.

Rhode Island.

In this state an administrator de bonis non cannot maintain an action for conversion on the bond of his predecessor who has died. He may recover upon contracts made with his predecessor for the estate, as a statute changed the rule that an executor of a deceased executor represents the estate.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under R. I. Pub. Stat. chap. 184, § 27, giving an action to "an administrator appointed to succeed an executor resigning or removed" to recover the goods and effects of the deceased, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor for converting the goods of the estate, as this statute did not give an action on the bond but only for goods and effects remaining to be administered, and the statute only applied where an executor or administrator resigned or was removed, and not where the predecessor died. Scituate Ct. of Probate v. Smith, 16 R. I. 444.

So, in Scituate Ct. of Probate v. Smith, 16 R. I. 444, it was said that the administrator de bonis non could not sue the former administrator or his representative for a devastavit or for delinquencies, nor maintain an action on the former administrator's bond for such cause.

Choses in action.

Where an administrator under an order of court sold real estate and the purchaser failed to complete the purchase, and the realty was again sold at a loss, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against the purchaser for damages for not completing his contract. It was said that R. I. Pub. Stat. chap. 184, § 23, providing that "in no case shall the executor of a deceased executor in consequence thereof become an executor of the first intestate" annulled the old rule that an executor of a deceased executor represents the original testator. McGuinness v. Whalen, 17 R. I. 619.

South Carolina.

It seems that in this state the administrator de bonis non is entitled to the funds in the hands of his predecessor, and may maintain an action for an account and for the balance, unless it is shown that there are no debts and that the fund is ready to distribute, although some dicta intimate that he cannot require his predecessor to account. The cases generally hold that the administrator de bonis 40 L. R. A.

non cannot maintain an action for a chose in action due his predecessor.

Choses in action.

Where an executor leased, by parol, premises for one year, and the will was set aside, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of assumpsit for the use and occupation of the property, as the right of action was in the representative of the executor to whom the administrator de bonis non would have recourse. Boyd v. Sloan, 2 Bail. L. 311.

So, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of assumpsit to recover the price of certain goods purchased at a sale of the intestate's effects, which sale was made by his predecessor who was afterwards removed. It was said that the first administrator was answerable to the administrator de bonis non for all goods which he received of the estate. Ross v. Sutton, 1 Bail. L. 126, 19 Am. Dec. 660.

And where a bond was payable to F., executor of R., and the executor brought an action on the bond, and it was contended that he was the wrongful holder and that payment to him would be no bar to an action brought by an administrator de bonis non of R., it was held that the action was properly brought, and that the bond never was the property of R., but was only the representative of what might have been the property of R. that had been disposed of by his executor and had been administered so that nothing would survive to an administrator de bonis non. Seabrook v. Williams, 3 McCord, L. 371.

It was said in Miller v. Alexander, 1 Hill, Eq. 25, that it was not intended to be said in Seabrook v. Williams, 3 McCord, L. 371, that because an administrator de bonis non could not sue on a note given to the first administrator, therefore he would not be entitled to recover in equity any unadministered balance which might be in the hands of the first administrator.

And a recovery was denied where an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo alleged that his predecessor had on deposit funds in a bank to his credit as said executor, and that the bank paid the same to said executor on his check, knowing that the executor intended to misappropriate and convert the funds deposited by him in his name as executor as aforesaid to his own use, and not to the use of the estate of the testator, and that he did misappropriate such funds. Knobeloch v. Germania Sav. Bank, 43 S. C. 233.

So, where an administrator sold property and took a note of two heirs for the purchase, and made a settlement and died, and one of said heirs obtained possession of the note and was appointed administrator de bonis non, it was held that in equity she was entitled to retain possession of that note, and to set off against it whatever would be the amount coming to her on distribution. Miller v. Alexander, 1 Hill, Eq. 25.

And where N., as executor, recovered a judgment, and the executor was removed, and an administrator de bonis non was appointed and attempted to enforce the judgment, he was bound by an agreement made by his predecessor setting off a claim of the defendant against the estate. Nettles v. Elkins, 2 McCord, Eq. 182.

But in Johnston v. Lewis, Rice, Eq. 40, 33 Am. Dec. 74, it was held that an administrator de bonis non could compel an accounting where the defendant was a surviving partner and had bought property from his predecessor and had not paid for the same, and the defendant would be liable also for which the fact of his indebtedness may appear or be proved; and if it appears, or is proved otherwise, then his liability is established as conclusively as if he had charged himself with the debt in his inventory, and his sureties become responsible if he fails to account for it."

In this state it was early decided in the case of Potter v. Titcomb, 10 Me. 53, that an ad-loss of assets or negligence in collecting debts as surviving partner. It was further held that the administrator de bonis non would be bound by the sale made by his predecessor.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Where a negro either belonged to C. in his own right or as administrator, and he sold her by bill of sale, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of trover for the negro or her increase. Collins v. Bankhead, 1 Strobb. L. 25.

In Spoon v. Smith, 36 S. C. 588, where a creditor brought suit to set aside a judgment which an intestate had confessed in favor of a party who became his administrator, and which judgment was claimed to be fraudulent, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain such action as he was not a creditor.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

In Trimmer v. Trail, 2 Bail. L. 480, it was held that if an administrator was appointed administrator de bonis non the law would transfer the funds in his hands to himself as his successor, and the sureties on his first bond would be discharged, but if another person was appointed as administrator de bonis non the first administrator should pay over the funds in his hands before his sureties were discharged, under S. C. act 1789, Pub. Laws, 494, providing for discharging sureties as follows: "If the securities for administrators conceive themselves in danger of being injured by such suretyship, they may petition the court to whom they stand bound for relief, which court shall summon the administrator to appear, and thereupon make such order or decree as shall be sufficient to give relief to the petitioner."

And where two administrators converted part of their testator's goods into money, and died, and the legatees of the testator brought an action against the representatives of the executors, it was a sufficient defense that they had turned the money over into the hands of an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo. Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 393.

In Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 393, it is said that "the argument for the doctrine that an administrator de bonis non cannot recover from the representative of the first executor, funds in his hands arising from assets of the testator, goes very far back, and is made to rest on the doctrine which is now little better than a legal fiction."

In Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 393, the case of Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123, was distinguished, and the dictum in that case questioned.

In Esterling v. Thompson, 1 Rice, L. 343, it was said that upon the death of an administrator his administrator was not accountable to the creditors of the first intestate, and that against him they had no right of action, but their remedy was against the administrator de bonis non of the first intestate whose duty it was to have an account from the administrator of the first administrator.

Where the surety on an administratrix's bond became the administrator de bonis non on the death of the administratrix, and on proceedings against the administrator de bonis non, who was absent from the state, the decree of the probate court charged him with the balance on account of his administration and with a devastavit on account of his predecessor, and he did not appeal, it was held, in an action by a distributee for his share, that the decree was binding on the administrator de bonis non and his sureties. Lowe v. Carlisle, 38 S. C. 597. 40 L. R. A.

But where an administration was revoked and the administrator accounted showing that he had paid off all the debts, and was entitled to the whole estate through his wife and by purchase from another distributee, an administrator de bonis non could not compel his predecessor to account although there were some old judgments against the estate that were barred by limitation, and the judgment creditors were not parties to the bill. Thompson v. Buckner, 2 Hill, Eq. 499, Riley, Eq. 30.

And where a distributee brought suit for an accounting against the representative of a deceased administrator, it was held that an administrator de bonis non was not a necessary party, as he had no right to call the administrator of a deceased administrator to account for any part of the estate wasted or converted by the deceased administrator. Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123.

In Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123, it was said that "before the statute of distributions, the executor was entitled to the whole personal estate, subject to the payment of debts and legacies. When, therefore, he sold or converted any part of it, this was understood to be a seizing or taking possession in his individual right, as an executor or administrator may now assent to his own legacy. The goods were said to be administered, and no longer in his possession as executor or administrator. If he failed to retain enough of the estate to meet the claims of creditors and legatees, he was liable for a devastavit, as of his own personal debt; and it is certain that the rule of law has not changed since the statute."

In Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 393, Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123, was distinguished, as the point in issue in that case was that where distributees brought suit against the administrator of an administrator they should not be delayed for want of an administrator de bonis non.

Tennessee.

An administrator de bonis non may maintain an action on choses in action obtained by his predecessor. It was held that he could not maintain an action to set aside a void sale of property made by his predecessor (overruling a prior case contra). There was some conflict as to his power to call his predecessor to account and recover on his bond for the balance, a distinction being made between a suit at law and a suit in equity, but under the Code an order can be had requiring an account and for the delivery of the balance to the successor.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

In Thompson v. Childress, 1 Tenn. Ch. 369, it was said that "the nearest analogy in the law to the case before us is that of an administrator de bonis non, and his right to sue his predecessor. Upon this subject, the decisions of our supreme court are not quite as clear and consistent as an inferior tribunal would like to find them. In Shackelford v. Runyan, 7 Humph. 141, it was held that an administrator de bonis non might call his predecessor in the administration to account in a court of chancery, while in Stott v. Alexander, 2 Sneed, 650, 654, there is a dictum to the contrary. On the other hand, in Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed, 411, it was held that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain covenant on the administration bond of his predecessor, which decision is referred to and recognized in Reeves v. Steele, 2 Head, 647. The latest decisions, and the weight of authority are against the power to sue, at any rate upon the bond of the pre-ministrator must inventory and account for any debt due from himself to the intestate, even though he should deny that there was such indebtedness. And in Potter v. Titcomb,

7 Me. 302, it was held that, in order to compel an administrator on his official bond to pay the amount of a debt due from him to the intestate, it is necessary that he should first be decessor; and it is a suit upon the bond that is now before us."

So, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of trover against the representative of the former administrator for money of the plaintiff's intestate collected by the former administrator, where the same could not be specifically distinguished and identified. Stott v. Alexander, 2 Sneed, 650.

And an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on the bond of his predecessor for money received by him which he had failed to pay over to the heirs and distributees, as the duty of administrators de bonis non only applies to such property and effects not administered as remained in specie. Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed, 411.

But in Shackelford v. Runyan, 7 Humph. 141, it was held that an administrator de bonis non could call to account the personal representative of the first administrator. The court said: "However it may be in England, or elsewhere, an administrator de bonis non in our state is clothed with full powers, and subject to all the duties, of the first personal representative, and is embraced and described in our statutes by the general description of administrators, whether by such statutes powers are given, or duties imposed."

And where an administrator de bonis non and the heirs and distributees brought a bill against the executors and sureties of the administrator seeking to collect the balance found due on the last settlement, and to correct all errors therein, it was held that such an action could be maintained. Whitaker v. Whitaker, 12 Lea, 393.

In Whitaker v. Whitaker, 12 Lea, 393, the cases of Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed, 411; Stott v. Alexander, 2 Sneed, 648, and Cheek v. Wheatley, 3 Sneed, 484, were distinguished, as these cases were all actions at law, and "they necessarily, in their investigations, would have ordered a review of the accounts of the former administrator for which the machinery of the lower court is insufficient."

In Coleman v. Raynor, 3 Coldw. 25, it was said that under Tenn. Code, § 2238, providing that where an executor or administrator resigns the court shall order him to pay over and deliver to the new administrator the balance of money, property, and effects in his hands, "all the assets of the estate which came to the hands of the original administrator and remaining in his hands at the time of his resignation are without delay placed in the hands of the new administrator."

Choses in action.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain an action of debt upon a judgment obtained by his predecessor. It was held that Tenn. act 1851, chap. 20, giving an administrator de bonis non the right to a writ of scire facias was only cumulative, and did not take away the right of action on the judgment. Smith v. Pearce, 2 Swan, 127.

So, where a judgment was obtained by an administrator who died, the administrator de bonis non should collect it as assets to be appropriated to pay debts. Brasfield v. Cardwell, 7 Lea, 252.

And where an administrator of an executor brought suit on a note taken by the executor for and sold by him belonging to his testator, it was said that the modern and prevalent opinion is that notes of this kind are assets of the original decedent, and pass to and are sueable by the administrator de bonis non. Abington v. Tyler, 6 Coldw. 502.

40 L. R. A.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

Where the administrator sold the interest of the estate in a slave, which sale was void under Tenn. act 1827, chap. 61, § 1, 2, prohibiting the sale of a slave by an administrator unless he has obtained an order of the court, and declaring such sale null and void, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of trover,—the court saying that an administrator de bonis non is only to administer such assets as remain in specie at the death of the former administrator, and he is not responsible for maladministration or devastavit of his predecessor, and cannot impeach the validity of his acts, and would be bound by an estoppel which would affect his predecessor. It was said that in equity if the former administrator had by collusion disposed of goods of the estate for his own use, his successor might apply to have a fraudulent sale set aside. Cheek v. Wheatley, 3 Sneed, 484.

This in effect overruled Bell v. Speight, 11 Humph. 451, but that case was not referred to in the opinion.

But in Bell v. Speight, 11 Humph. 451, it was held that under Tenn. act 1827, chap. 61, prohibiting an administrator or executor from selling the slaves of the estate he represents without a proper order of court for that purpose, a sale under execution against the intestate after his death where the administrator consented, passed no title, and the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action of trover for the slaves so sold.

Texas.

In this state an action can be maintained under Hart's (Tex.) Dig. art. 1224, by an administrator de bonis non against his predecessor on his bond for an accounting or conversion or waste. Some cases seem to imply the contrary, but they have been distinguished and modified. There is some conflict as to the right of an administrator de bonis non to maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent sale made by his predecessor and realize the assets, but the weight of authority and the latest cases affirm the doctrine.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non may maintain an action against his predecessor on his bond, for the value of the unadministered assets shown in the inventory. Johnson v. Morris, 45 Tex. 463; Martel v. Martel, 17 Tex. 396; Baldwin v. Dearborn, 21 Tex. 446; Boulware v. Hendricks, 23 Tex. 667; Grant v. McKinney, 36 Tex. 62.

Under Hart's (Tex.) Dig. art. 1224, providing that an administrator de bonis non shall have power to settle with the former executor or administrator, to receive and receipt for all such portion of the estate as remains in his hands, and shall have power to bring suit on the bond of his predecessor in his own name as administrator, for all the estate that has not been accounted for by such former executor or administrator an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against his predecessor and the sureties on his bond for assets wasted, converted, and disposed of to his own use. Martel v. Martel, 17 Tex. 391.

In Martel v. Martel, 17 Tex. 391, the case of Murphey v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, was distinguished, saying: "The only point settled in that case is that an administrator de bonis non cannot sustain an action under the 121st section of the act of March 20, 1848, to regulate proceedings in the county court pertaining to estates of deceased persons (Hart's (Tex.) Dig.

charged with the amount in an administration account, by a decree of the judge of probate.

An indebtedness from an administrator to the estate, having been converted into assets by his appointment, is not revived by the death or removal of the administrator, so that it can be sued by an administrator de bonis non. In Tarbell v. Jewett, 129 Mass. 457, it is said:

art. 1230, nor under any other section of that act, nor on general principles, in the district court, to revise the settlement of a former administrator; such proceeding lies at the suit of a creditor, legatee, or distributee only."

So, under Hart's Dig. art. 1224, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action upon his predecessor's bond for failing to deliver over the property in his hands on demand and asking for a settlement of the funds of the estate in his possession. Baldwin v. Dearborn, 21 Tex. 446.

So, under Hart's Dig. art. 1224, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against his predecessor and his sureties for the recovery of the hire of negroes unaccounted for, although the freedom of such negroes had been established since his predecessor ceased to be administrator. It was said that the negroes were not entitled to the profits of their services. Boulware v. Hendricks, 23 Tex. 667.

So, where a surviving partner was administrator, and was removed, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action against his predecessor and his securities on his official bond for assets of the estate consisting of the intestate's interest of the goods of the firm, where the assets were inventoried but unaccounted for, although it was contended that the conversion, if any, was made by the surviving partner, and not as administrator. Grant v. McKinney, 36 Tex. 62.

Where an administrator brought suit on a bond given for community property by the widow who had been removed, it was said this bond takes the place of the wasted property, and a cause of action upon it exists in favor of the party entitled to the administration of such property. The court said that it is upon this theory that the statute regulating proceedings in the matter of decedent's estate authorizes an administrator de bonis non to sue a former executor or administrator on his bond for a devastavit (Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1960), and it was not necessary that a devastavit be first established in the county court. Brown v. Seaman, 65 Tex. 628.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain an action against the executrix of his predecessor for property of the estate, for which his predecessor had not accounted, although such predecessor did not give any bond. It was held that Tex. Rev. Stat. chap. 13, title 37, shows "that it was the purpose of the legislature to make a subsequent administration but the continuation of the former, and to enable the administrator de bonis non to recover of his predecessor, not only such property and funds as remained in his hands, but to recover any loss that may have accrued through his maladministration of the trust. That the remedy can be more conveniently and certainly exercised through the succeeding administrator than when left to the heirs or creditors, is quite apparent." Dwyer v. Kalteyer, 68 Tex. 554.

In Mott v. Ruenbuhl, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 600, it was said that if the estate of an administrator (who had died) was liable at all for money in the hands of such administrator at the time he made his final settlement as administrator it was first to the administrator de bonis non, as it was the duty of an administrator de bonis non to collect and receive from his predecessor all the property of every description in his hands at the date of his removal.

But under Hart's (Tex.) Dig. art. 1028, giving a term of twelve months for closing the succession, and Louisiana Civ. Code, arts. 1179, 1198, providing for an extension of time from year to year not exceeding five years, and the Louisiana law of succession in force until the act of Congress of the republic went into effect, March 16, 1840, and under Tex. act. 1840, Hart's Dig. 1028, providing that should said executor or administrator fail to render his account to the probate court at or before the end of the first term of the probate court after the expiration of twelve months from the grant of letters, or should he fail to pay the creditors according to the order of the probate court, then execution may issue from the probate court in the name of the creditors where the last settlement was made in 1843 and the administrator was removed in 1848, an administrator de bonis non appointed in 1851 could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond, as the estate was closed and there was no one to whom the administrator could account but the heirs or legatees. Murphy v. Menard, 14 Tex. 62.

In Murphy v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, it was held that under Hart's (Tex.) Dig. art. 1230, act March 20, 1848, § 121, providing that anyone interested in the estate of a deceased person may at any time within two years after the settlement by the chief justice of any account of the executor or administrator of such estate have the same revised and corrected, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action for that cause and for wasting the estate, where his predecessor was removed, as it was not intended to provide a remedy for the administrator de bonis non, and he could not maintain an action against the former administrator for maladministration. It was said that art. 1224 made provision for suits by administrator de bonis non against his predecessor, and the cases there provided for were the only ones in which such action could be maintained.

In Murphy v. Menard, 14 Tex. 62, it was said by Wheeler, J., that the case of Murphy v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, does not warrant the proposition that the only action which an administrator de bonis non can have against the former administrator is on his bond, but it holds upon that point that administrator de bonis non can sue the former administrator only in the cases provided for in art. 1224 of the Digest. It was not proposed to give a construction to that article, nor did the case call for it.

In Johnson v. Hogan, 37 Tex. 77, following Murphy v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, an administrator de bonis non brought an action to recover the price of a horse and pony and the hire of certain slaves which it was alleged had come to the hands of the first administrator, and it was held that this necessarily involved a revision of his account, and that this revisory power could not be invoked by an administrator de bonis non.

In Johnson v. Morris, 45 Tex. 463, it was said: "If a contrary doctrine has ever been announced, it has been through inadvertently giving a construction to what is said in the cases of Murphy v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, and Johnson v. Hogan, 37 Tex. 77, without a due observance of the facts in these cases and the questions they involved. In neither of these cases was the court called upon to decide whether a suit might be maintained by the administrator de bonis non against his predecessor and his surety on his bond for property of the estate which came into his possession and upon which he had not administered. But they in effect involved the right of the administrator de bonis non, by suit on his predecessor's bond in the district court to correct and revise the action of the probate court on his accounts."

"We are not aware of any case where it has been held that a debt due from an executor, having once become assets, can be revived, and an action maintained upon it by an administrator with the will annexed; nor of any case where a debt due to the executor has been held not to be extinguished if sufficient assets come to his hands."

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

An administrator de bonis non could maintain an action to recover the proceeds of a note belonging to the estate, which had been fraudulently disposed of by the first administrator. Williams v. Verne, 68 Tex. 414; DeWitt v. Miller, 9 Tex. 239; Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704; Cochran v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 652; Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 643; Burdett v. Silsbee, 15 Tex. 605, same case, Pearson v. Burditt, 26 Tex. 157, 80 Am. Dec. 649; Evans v. Oakley, 2 Tex. 184.

So he could maintain an action to set aside an execution sale fraudulently suffered by his predecessor in collusion with the creditor, as Tex. Rev. Stat. 1959-1961; same as act March 20, 1848, providing that an administrator de bonis non succeeds to all the rights, powers, and duties of the former executor or administrator, except such rights and powers conferred on the former executor by will, as are different from those conferred by this statute, and providing that such administrator may make himself a party to all suits prosecuted by the former executor or administrator of the estate, and may be made a party to all suits prosecuted against the former executor or administrator of the estate. Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704.

And an administrator de bonis non of a vendee could maintain an action against the administratrix of a vendor to set aside a decree obtained by the administratrix which vested the title in such administratrix, if it had been obtained by fraud and collusion, and by the co-operation of plaintiff's predecessor. DeWitt v. Miller, 9 Tex. 239.

So, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action to set aside a sale made by his predecessor, where such sale was fraudulent and procured by the administrator in collusion with the purchaser, as the assets were unadministered, because the acts of the predecessor were not done in due course of administration. Cochran v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 652.

In Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 748, 91 Am. Dec. 336, where an action was brought by an heir to recover land and to set aside an administrator's deed made in pursuance of an order of the probate court, on the ground of a fraudulent confederation between the administrator of the estate and the vendee, the court said: "If the sale of the certificate were fraudulently made, and for that the sale would be canceled, the law regards it as unadministered assets of the estate, and it would properly pass back into the hand of the administrator of the estate, to be disposed of in due course of administration. . . . If necessary, the administrator who makes the fraudulent sale can be removed for that cause, and an administrator de bonis non appointed in his stead."

Burdett v. Silsbee, 15 Tex. 605, same case, Pearson v. Burditt, 26 Tex. 157, 80 Am. Dec. 649, was an action brought by an administrator de bonis non to recover land sold under an order of the probate court, by a former administrator, and the invalidity of the administration, as well as a fraudulent collusion between the administrator and the vendee, were set up as a ground for holding the sale invalid. It was held that in that collateral action the validity of the administration could not be questioned, but that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the land if the fraud alleged was proved, unless defeated by limitation based on adverse possession of the land.

In Evans v. Oakley, 2 Tex. 184, where an administrator had pledged to the defendant, to secure a loan of money to himself, some of the property of the estate, on suit brought by the heirs to recover the property, it was held that they could not maintain it; and, the administrator having died, that the administrator de bonis non would have the right to maintain the action.

But in McDonald v. Alford, 32 Tex. 35, it was held that under Paschal's (Tex.) Dig. art. 1376, providing that when an administrator of an estate not administered is appointed he shall succeed to the rights of his predecessor, except to such rights conferred by the will of the testator as are different from those conferred by this act on executors generally, and such administrators shall have power to make themselves parties to all suits; they shall have power to settle with their predecessor and to receive all such portion of the estate as remains in their hands; they shall have power to bring suit on the bond of the former executor in their own name as administrator for all the estate that has not been accounted for; and they shall proceed to administer such estate as if their administration was a continuation of that of the former executor or administrator,—the administrator de bonis non had no power or authority to impeach or set aside a sale procured by his predecessor under an order of court, although he alleged that it was fraudulent. The only way he could maintain a suit against his predecessor was a suit on his bond to recover property that had not been accounted for.

In McDonald v. Alford, 32 Tex. 35, it was said that in Murphey v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, an administrator de bonis non brought a suit against a former administrator to set aside a final settlement of his accounts as such administrator, and the court said: "The administrator de bonis non could have no interest in the settlement of the account of a former administrator. This duty only extends to effects left unadministered, and his interest is in them alone. He is a mere trustee, is chargeable only in so far as he receives assets, and has no such interest in the estate as will enable him to maintain an action against a former administrator for maladministration, or as will authorize him to prosecute an appeal or other proceeding to have the acts of the former administrator revised and corrected."

So, in Brown v. Franklin, 44 Tex. 559, it was held that an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against his predecessor to annul a sale of real estate made by him under an order of court charged to have been fraudulent, citing Murphey v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673; Johnson v. Hogan, 37 Tex. 80.

The case of Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704, reviews all the Texas cases upon this question, approving the cases of DeWitt v. Miller, 9 Tex. 248; Cochran v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 652; Burdett v. Silsbee, 15 Tex. 605, same case, Pearson v. Burditt, 26 Tex. 157, 80 Am. Dec. 649; and the dictum in Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 748, 91 Am. Dec. 336; and a similar doctrine held in Evans v. Oakley, 2 Tex. 184. It distinguishes Murphey v. Menard, as that action was under a statute to set aside the settlement of the predecessor, which statute applied only to persons interested. The court criticised McDonald v. Alford, 32 Tex. 36, saying: "The court seems not to have considered the averments of fraud" or else "regarded them as showing mere irregularities." The court in Todd v. Willis says the case of Johnson v. Hogan, 37 Tex. 78, "is difficult to understand from the statement of it given in the opinion," and says, in regard to Brown v. Franklin, 44 Tex. 564, "This relief was asked on the ground of combination, collusion, and fraud between the former administrator and purchaser in the approval and allowance of the claim and in making the sale, as well as in its confirmation. From

In Monroe v. Holmes, 9 Allen, 244, it was held that, where an executor had died, leaving the estate unsettled, his administrator could not maintain an action at law against the administrator de bonis non to recover a balance due to the executor, but must present an account to the probate court for settlement. And in Prentice v. Dehon, 10 Allen, 358, it was held the report of the case, this is all we can ascertain in relation to the matters above stated. . . . It seems to us that the two cases cited to sustain the opinion do not support it. . . . That the rule announced in the other cases to which we have referred is the better and sounder rule by which to test the power of an administrator de bonis non."

Vermont.

Choses in action.

Under Vt. Comp. Stat. 338, § 16, providing that an administrator appointed in the place of any former executor or administrator for the purpose of administering the estate not already administered may sue out a scire facias, and have execution on any judgment recovered in the name of such former executor or administrator, a judgment recovered by a former executor who had been removed was assets, and his successor could prosecute the same in his own name by scire facias. Hunt v. Payne, 29 Vt. 176.

But where a wife was made executrix and also trustee, an administrator de bonis non was not entitled to notes left by the testator, that came into the hands of the administrators of the executrix, until after they settled the trust account, and a lien claimed by such administrators was settled. Merriam v. Hemmenway, 26 Vt. 565.

In Davis v. Flint, 67 Vt. 485, where an administrator de bonis non presented a claim against the estate of his predecessor for a note shown in the inventory but not accounted for in the settlement, it was held that the action was improperly brought, as the probate court should determine the accountability of the executrix before any action. The court said: "Nor do we pass upon the question whether the proceeding could be sustained by an administrator de bonis non if otherwise properly brought."

Virginia.

The common-law doctrine applies in this state, and an administrator de bonis non cannot call the representatives of his predecessor to an account for assets converted or wasted. He may, however, maintain an action on choses in action like a judgment obtained by his predecessor on the doctrine that in equity such asset is considered as unadministered. The leading case on the question of converted assets is Coleman v. M'Murdo, which has been frequently followed in the United States, where a statute has not changed the rule.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non could not call the representative of his predecessor to account for assets wasted or converted by such predecessor, as Va. acts 1661-1662, chap. 45, providing that if an administrator die before he hath given an account of the estate, the court should have power to grant administration of the estate not so accounted for to some other person who may call the heirs, executors, or administrators of the former administrator to an account, was repealed by act 1711, chap. 2, § 3, providing for administration de bonis non as at common law. Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51.

So, the administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action against the representatives of his predecessor to recover assets converted by the first administrator. Cheatham v. Burfoot, 9 Leigh, 580.

And in Burnley v. Duke, 2 Rob. (Va.) 102, it was said that an administrator de bonis non could not compel the representative of a former administrator to account for converted assets.

In Cooke v. Harrison, 3 Rand. (Va.) 494, the court declined to intimate an opinion on the question whether an administrator de bonis non could call the representative of the previous executor or administrator to an account and recover from him any balance due from his testator or intestate to the estate.

But under Va. Code 1873, chap. 118, § 24, providing in a contest of a will that a curator shall be appointed, and that upon the qualification of an executor or administrator, the curator shall account with him for and pay and deliver to him such estate as he has in his hands or may be liable for, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo may maintain an action against the curator and his sureties for a debt collected by the curator and unaccounted for. Helsley v. Craig, 33 Gratt. 716.

In Helsley v. Craig, 33 Gratt. 716, the case of Coleman v. M'Murdo was distinguished, as the principles of law in that case did not apply to a curator.

Choses in action.

Where a testator sold land retaining a lien for the purchase money, and died, and after a decree was made directing that the money be paid to the executor he also died, a further decree directing that it should be paid to the administrator of the executor was erroneous because the administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not made a party to the same. Hinton v. Bland, 81 Va. 588.

In Hinton v. Bland, 81 Va. 588, the case of Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51, was distinguished, as there the question was as to the right of an administrator de bonis non to sue the representatives of his predecessor for assets wasted or converted.

In Clarke v. Wells, 6 Gratt. 475, it was said that a sale by an executor or administrator of his decedent's goods and effects must be treated at law as a conversion, yet this rule is subject to exceptions in a court of equity; and it was held that sale bonds not needed to reimburse the first administrator passed to the administrator de bonis non of the first decedent.

In Tyler v. Nelson, 14 Gratt. 214, the same was said to be the rule.

In Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51, it was said that "it was determined in Dykes v. Woodhouse, 3 Rand. (Va.) 287, that an administrator de bonis non was entitled to a scire facias to revive a judgment in favor of a deceased executor or administrator, for a debt due to the testator or intestate, because such judgment did not, as was admitted in the English courts, convert the property of the debt, or amount to an administration."

In Waddy v. Hawkins, 4 Leigh, 458, it was held that an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could recover profits made by a surety of an executrix where such sureties on a motion for a counter security against an executrix obtained an order for the delivery to their possession of slaves that belonged to an estate. The court said: "Supposing he was to be regarded as the agent of Mrs. Hawkins, the executrix; then, as the moneys he had received had never been accounted for and paid to her, she neither had in fact, nor could have, administered them, or converted them to her own use; so that the balance due from Waddy was assets of Hawkins's estate remaining unadministered and unconverted, which, according to the principles of Coleman v. M'Murdo that upon the same principle such an action could not be maintained after the resignation of the executor.

Whether the debt is due to or from the executor or administrator, and the principle is the same in the case of either executor or administrator, the debt as such becomes extinguished by the appointment of the debtor or creditor, belonged to the administrator de bonis non of Hawkins."

Where an agent of an administrator took forty slaves to New Orleans, and received $5,242 as part payment, and there made a new contract for one hundred slaves, and retained the cash as commission, which was ratified by the administrator, and the administrator was removed and the balance of the slaves seized by the court of chancery in Virginia, an administrator de bonis non could not maintain in Virginia an action against the nonresidents for the money due on sale of the forty slaves, as that court had not jurisdiction of the parties. It was further held that jurisdiction could not be obtained through garnishment on the agent by claiming that he was indebted to the nonresidents on account of the sale being incomplete. Hefferman v. Grymes, 2 Leigh, 512.

In Hefferman v. Grymes, 2 Leigh, 512, it was said that if the nonresidents were before the court, the administrator de bonis non might well recover against them in the present action by the very principles established in Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51, as this case falls within that class distinctly treated of there, where the executor had changed the property, as by investing the money in the funds, transferring it from one particular stock to another, or the like, but this being done for the benefit of the estate, and without intention of making the money his own. "In such cases, though the act may amount to a conversion at law, equity, looking at the quo animo, will follow the property, and consider it still unadministered."

Washington.

Where a husband acted as executor of his deceased wife's will, and his executors administered upon all the property including the separate community estate of the wife, and an administrator de bonis non of the wife claimed the right to administer the community estate, it was held that his laches in failing for a year and a half to assert any right barred his claim. Re Hill, 6 Wash. 285.

West Virginia.

Where an executor sold land and took bonds from the purchaser, and the executor was removed, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo was not entitled to the proceeds of the sale, as the bonds or money became administered assets. Wooddell v. Bruffy, 25 W. Va. 465.

Wisconsin.

In this state it seems that under the statute an administrator de bonis non may maintain an action on his predecessor's bond in order to obtain an accounting or balance. It appears in a dictum that he cannot maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent transfer made by his predecessor.

Claims against administrator for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

An administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo could maintain an action in the name of his county judge on his predecessor's bond for failing to make a true and perfect inventory, and failure to administer the sale according to law and the will, and for failing to account, under Wis. Rev. Stat. chap. 104, §§ 6, 7, providing for actions upon such bonds, and § 12 authorizing claims for damages on account of the breach of the conditions of any bond to be prosecuted by an executor, administrator, or guardian in behalf of those he may represent. Golder v. Littlejohn, 23 Wis. 251, 40 L. R. A.

Avoiding sales or transfers made by his predecessor.

In Stronach v. Stronach, 20 Wis. 129, where the heirs brought suit to set aside a pledge fraudulently made by the administrator, it was said "the administrator cannot avoid his own sale or pledge, though he was guilty of a breach of trust in making it. If he dies or is removed, and an administrator de bonis non is appointed, the latter cannot avoid the wrongful sale or pledge by the first administrator. . . . This is the rule except where there are statutory provisions in force authorizing the administrator de bonis non to do what otherwise the creditors, legatees, or distributees alone could do. We have examined our statutes on this subject, and find no provision authorizing an administrator de bonis non to do anything except to administer on the estate or assets remaining undisposed of by the first administrator."

In Golder v. Littlejohn, 23 Wis. 251, the case of Stronach v. Stronach, 20 Wis. 129, was distinguished, as the question there was whether an administrator de bonis non could avoid a wrongful sale or pledge of the property by the first administrator, and the court held as there was no statute authorizing the administrator de bonis non to do so, that the action for such devastavit was properly brought in the name of the heirs of the intestate.

Federal courts.

It seems that in these courts the common-law doctrine applies, and the administrator de bonis non cannot maintain an action for accounting or conversion. The leading case is Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 292, which has been frequently followed and cited. He may maintain an action on choses in action where they can be treated as not administered. Some of the Federal cases construing statutes will be found under the several states.

Claims against predecessor for accounting, balance, conversion, or devastavit.

Under act of Congress Feb. 20, 1846, Rev. Stat. § 976, providing that on the removal of an administrator and the appointment of a successor the court shall further have power to order and require any assets which remain unadministered to be delivered to the newly appointed administrator de bonis non, the successor could not maintain an action upon his predecessor's bond for failure to pay the proceeds of a claim due the intestate and collected by the former administrator. United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 927.

In a subsequent action brought by the administrator de bonis non against the agent of his predecessor who had collected the claim, it was held that such collection was an administered estate and could not be recovered of the agent by the administrator de bonis non. Wilson v. Arrick, 112 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 817.

An administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action on his predecessor's bond for delinquency in failing to prosecute a claim, as for such delinquency the former administrator was responsible to the creditors, legatees, and distributees directly, and not to the administrator de bonis non. Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 292, Rev'g 1 N. M. 507.

Choses in action.

In Lidderdale v. Robinson, 2 Brock. 159, it was said where a surviving administrator ought to have brought agents of the administrator to a settlement of their accounts, that this duty on the death of the surviving administrator devolved on the ad-and is not revived by his death or removal from that position.

No action at law, under the circumstances of this case, could be maintained by the administrator de bonis non against the personal representative of his predecessor, for the reasons already considered, and we think that the complainant can have no better nor greater rights, in this respect, in a proceeding in equity.

The defendant was appointed executrix Sepministrator de bonis non who was also executor of the surviving administrator, and the whole balance due from these agents should be chargeable to him unless he could free himself from the charge of gross negligence for having failed to call them to a settlement.

Where administration was granted in Philadelphia, and a lot in Georgetown, District of Columbia, on which the intestate held a mortgage, was sold, and the purchase money was paid to a third party, and the administrator died, and another administrator was subsequently appointed in New York, it was held that he could recover the funds as an administrator de bonis non. Blydenburgh v. Lowry, 4 Cranch, C. C. 368.

But an administrator de bonis non could not maintain an action of indebitatus assumpsit in his own name for matters chargeable in account and for goods of his intestate sold by his predecessor to the defendant. Calder v. Pyfer, 2 Cranch, C. C. 430. See also Wilson v. Arrick, 112 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 617.

English cases.

Under the English cases an action may be maintained for goods remaining in specie, or money where it can be identified, or choses in action that can be construed to be not administered; but cannot be maintained for choses in action that are administered, or choses in action that have been converted.

Property remaining in specie or unadministered.

Where an administrator died leaving a considerable sum of the intestate's effects in his banker's hands, and the representatives of the administrator refused to deliver the same to the administrator de bonis non, an action was allowed for the same in the archbishop's name. Goods of Hall, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 139.

In Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 292, the case of Goods of Hall, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 139, was distinguished, the court saying that the judgment rendered was undoubtedly founded on the theory that the money in bank was a part of the original intestate's estate in specie, and as such that the administrator de bonis non was entitled to it.

In Duke Rutland v. Duchess Rutland, 2 P. Wms. 206, it was said that "when an executor dies intestate, whatever is his will go to his administrator; whereas all the personal estate of his testator will belong to his administrator de bonis non, etc., and not to the administrator of the executor."

In Atty. Gen. v. Hooker, 3 P. Wms. 340, it was said that if an executor dies intestate all his personal estate, the property whereof is not altered, shall go to the administrator de bonis non, and not to the next of kin of the executor, because from the time the executor dies intestate the first testator dies intestate also, and it was the testator's own fault that he did not, as he might alter the property.

In Lloyd v. Stoddart, 1 Amb. 152, it was said that the executor does not always take the whole personal estate, even at law, for if an executor dies before he has administered, the effects unadministered shall not go to the representative of the executor, but to the administrator de bonis non of the testator in trust for his next of kin.

The administrator de bonis non is entitled to all the goods and personal estate which remain in specie and were not administered by the first executor or administrator, as well as to all debts due and owing to the testator or intestate. Tingrey v. Brown, 1 Bos. & P. 310.

40 L. R. A.

In 4 Bacon, Abr. title Executors, it is said that an administrator de bonis non is entitled to all the goods and personal estate, such as terms for years, household goods, etc., "which remain in specie, and are not administered by the first executor or administrator, as also to all debts due and owing to the testator or intestate."

Where three executors were appointed in India, and one renounced, and one accounted with the other and returned to England, and the one in India remitted the assets to the one in England and then died, a residuary legatee could not maintain an action against the one in England; but the case was ordered to stand over in order that the necessary probate or administration could be taken out in England. Bond v. Graham, 1 Hare, 482, 6 Jur. 620.

In an action against an administrator de bonis non for the balance due on a mortgage and bond, the administrator de bonis non pleaded that he had no assets to be administered, and it was held that he was chargeable where it was shown that there was personal property owned by the deceased at the time of his death and real estate which the administrator de bonis non might have made available as assets under N. S. Rev. Stat. chap. 100, § 20, providing that in case the personal estate shall be insufficient, the judge may at his discretion grant a license for the sale of the whole or such part of the real estate of the deceased as he shall deem necessary. Northrup v. Cunningham, 42 N. S. 188.

Choses in action.

Where an administratrix of an executor brought suit for debt for double the yearly value of land held over, contrary to 4 Geo. II., chap. 28, after notice to quit under a demise from the testator, it was held: "Is not everything unadministered which has not been reduced into the actual possession of the executor, and converted by him? Most certainly in any case in which the plaintiff means to make title, she must take out administration de bonis non. It is not incumbent on those who resist to show that there are debts of the testator unsatisfied, but the plaintiff must show that there are no debts, and that the executor possessed himself absolutely in his own right." Tingrey v. Brown, 1 Bos. & P. 310.

Where the testatrix directed that a leasehold should be sold and the money divided among five persons, and the administrator, claiming that he had become entitled to the leasehold through an arrangement with the legatees, assigned it over for a valuable consideration, on his death it was held to be assets unadministered, and that the administrator de bonis non was entitled to it. It was said that if it had been sold to a party who was ignorant of the real nature of the transaction the sale could not be set aside, but it was clear that the assignment was not done in the character of administrator or in the course of administration of the assets, but was still assets unadministered. Cubbridge v. Boatwright, 1 Russ. Ch. 549.

In Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 306, it was said that "if the executrix of the obligee takes the obligor to husband, that is no extinguishment of the debt . . . [for] he may pay money to her as executrix, because if she lays the money so paid to her by itself, the administrator de bonis non of her testator (if she dies intestate) shall have that money as well as any other goods that were her testator's; for if the goods of the testator remain in specie, they shall go to his administrator de bonis non, be tember 6, 1892. This bill in equity was commenced October 5, 1895. By Rev. Stat. chap. 87, § 19, when a claim has not been presented within the time limited by statute against the estate of a deceased person, this court, if of opinion that justice and equity require it, and that such creditor is not chargeable with culpable neglect in not prosecuting his claim, may give judgment for the amount of the claim against the estate. The only object of this cause in that case it is notorious which were the goods of the testator, and they are distinguishable; and there is the same reason where money is kept by itself, and the husband permits it so to be; but if the husband seizes it, it will be his, and will be a devastavit."

And where a bill was given to S. C. as the administratrix of J. C. for money due to her intestate, the administrator de bonis non could maintain an action upon such bill, on the ground that the money not having been received the bill remained a part of J. C.'s estate, and the right to it devolved upon the persons who afterwards became his representatives. It was said that the decisions in the old cases proceeding upon the principle that contracts made with an administrator were personal to him and that he should sue upon them in his own right and not in his representative capacity, had since been altered. Catherwood v. Chabaud, 1 Barn. & C. 150, 2 Dowl. & R. 271.

In Catherwood v. Chabaud, 1 Barn. & C. 150, 2 Dowl. & R. 271, the case of Barker v. Talcot, 1 Vern. 473, was distinguished, as there the debtor gave a bill to the administrator of his creditor and paid the executor of the administrator, which was held to be a discharge of the debt.

Where an action was brought by an administrator de bonis non upon promises, and one set of counts were on notes given by the defendant to the intestate in which the promises were stated to have been made to the intestate, and another set in which the promises were alleged to have been made to the first administrator, the first counts were barred by limitation, but a verdict was given the plaintiff on the remaining counts, the court saying: "The defendant's objection rests on this broad foundation, that there is no privity between the former administrator and the plaintiff, the administrator de bonis non; but that proposition certainly is not true in its extent. Suppose the former administrator had entered into an agreement for the sale of the lease of a chattel interest belonging to the intestate, and had died before the agreement was completed, the administrator de bonis non stands in such privity of estate that he would be compelled to carry that agreement into execution." Hirst v. Smith, 7 T. R. 183.

Where the administratrix carried on the business of the testator for two or three months repairing carriages, and died, an administrator de bonis non could maintain an action for price of work done by the administratrix, as the presumption was that the work was carried on for the benefit of the estate. The court said: "It has been long ago laid down, that though the executor of an executor represents the original testator, yet that rule does not apply to the administrator of an administrator, and that consequently when the estate of a deceased person has been left unadministered at the death of an administrator, it is necessary, in order to complete the administration, to take out administration de bonis non. Now if the promise was made to the original administratrix as administratrix, the proceeds of the action would be assets, and the present plaintiffs were the proper persons to sue. Moseley v. Rendell, L. R. 6 Q. B. 337, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 111, 23 L. T. N. S. 774, 19 Week. Rep. 619.

Where an executor G., made an infant H., his executor, and died, and during minority administration was granted to the plaintiff, who, as administrator of G., brought an action of debt on a bond made to the first testator, it was held that the action should have been brought as administrator 40 L. R. A.

of the first testator, under 10 Edw. IV. 1, 28 Hen. VIII. 7. Limver and Evorie's Case, 4 Leon. 58.

But where an administrator took a note to himself for rent due the testator on the death of the administrator, the rent note belonged to his administrator and not to the administrator de bonis non of the first. Barker v. Talcot, 1 Vern. 473.

In Anonymous, Skinner, 143, it was held that where "one acknowledges a recognizance, the con-usee makes his executor and dies; the executor, before an extent, assigns the recognizance to J. S. who pays the money to the executor; the executor dies, and administration de bonis non is committed to the next of kin to the first testator, who sues for this recognizance; but Lord Keeper said: It is like the cases where the testator is indebted to A, and B was indebted by bond to the testator; and then the executor assigns B's bond in satisfaction of the debt owing to A, that here the administrator de bonis non shall never recover upon this bond, no more shall he in the principal case upon recognizance."

And where an action was brought by an executor upon a bond to perform an award that the plaintiff should deliver certain goods of which the testator died possessed, and that the defendant should pay unto the plaintiff a certain sum, and the defense was that such sum was attached under the custom of foreign attachment in London, providing that if a suit were commenced against the executor of any person, any debt which was due to the testator tempore mortis sue might be attached, and pleaded that this was attached. It was held "that this was not attachable as the testator's debt, for then the administrator de bonis non might sue for it. And they held it to be like the cases where the executor takes bond for a debt due to his testator, or where he sells the goods, the money for which they are sold cannot be attached; and here the award is made of this sum, in consideration of conveying to the defendant the goods of the testator, and releasing of his debts, which seems to be all one with the other cases. Horsam v. Turget, Vent. 111.

And where an executor possessed of a term let part of it, reserving a rent, and died, and the question was whether the executor should have the rent or the administrator de bonis non, it was held that the executor should have the rent; but when recovered, Hale said it should be assets in his hands. Norton v. Harvey, Vent. 259.

And where an administrator possessed of a term made a lease for years of part of it reserving a rent, and made his executor, and died, his executor could maintain an action of debt for this rent, although it was contended that reversionary part of the term did not come to the executor of the administrator, but did belong to the administrator de bonis non of the first testator. Drue v. Baylye, Freem. C. L. 393, and 402; 2 Lev. 100; Vent. 275; 3 Keble, 298.

In Butler v. Bernard, Freem. Ch. 139, it was held: "An administrator mortgageth the intestate's term, and makes A his executor, and dies. B takes out letters of administration de bonis non to the first intestate, and claims the residuary interest and trust of the term, and prays that he may have the benefit of redemption; but the court decreed the benefit of redemption to A, the executor of the first administrator, who had aliened the whole estate in law of the term, and was not possessed in autre droit, of any part of the interest thereof, but in his own right; and so it shall go to his executor, and not to B, the administrator de bonis non."

statute is to relieve a creditor, under certain circumstances, from the limitation of the statute in regard to the prosecution of claims against the estates of deceased persons. It does not create a cause of action in equity, after the bar of the statute, when there was none at law before.

Nor can the bill be sustained upon the ground, as contended, that this money was received by the defendant's testator charged with

III. Summary.

a. Goods remaining in specie.

An administrator de bonis non, as the name implies, is entitled to all goods remaining in specie and unadministered, and he can recover them wherever he can find them. The following cases hold that he is entitled to all goods remaining in specie or unadministered: Kelly v. Kelly, 9 Ala. 908, 44 Am. Dec. 469; Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111; Turner v. Tapscott, 30 Ark. 312; Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Security Co. 67 Conn. 438; Rowan v. Kirkpatrick, 14 Ill. 1; Hatch v. Caine, 88 Me. 232; Alexander v. Stewart, 8 Gill & J. 226; Smith v. Doe, Dennis, 33 Md. 442; Neal v. Charlton, 52 Md. 496; Haslett v. Glenn, 7 Harr. & J. 17; Scott v. Fox, 14 Md. 388; Marvel v. Babbitt, 143 Mass. 226; Thayer v. Kinsey, 162 Mass. 232; Booker v. Armstrong, 93 Mo. 49; McMahon v. Allen, 4 E. D. Smith, 519; Goods of Hall, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 139; Duke Rutland v. Duchess Rutland, 2 P. Wms. 209; Atty. Gen. v. Hooker, 2 P. Wms. 340; Tingrey v. Brown, 1 Bos. & P. 310.

And where it was money. Getty v. Long, 82 Md. 643; Hackney v. Steadman, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 207.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: State, Burton, v. Tunnell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 182; Newhall v. Turney, 14 Ill. 338; Floyd v. Breckenridge, 4 Bibb, 14; Graves v. Downey, 3 T. B. Mon. 355; Bradshaw v. Com. 3 J. J. Marsh. 622; Oldham v. Collins, 4 J. J. Marsh. 49; Slaughter v. Froman, 5 T. B. Mon. 19, 17 Am. Dec. 33; Carrol v. Connet, 2 J. J. Marsh. 185; Hendricks v. Snodgrass, Walk. (Miss.) 86; Gamble v. Hamilton, 7 Mo. 469; Yale v. Baker, 2 Hun, 463; Taylor v. Brooks, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 139; Ferebee v. Baxter, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 64; Lloyd v. Stoddard, 1 Amb. 152.

Some cases put the rule in this form, that he is only entitled to what remains in specie. Nolly v. Wilkins, 11 Ala. 872; Benton County Ct. Judge v. Price, 6 Ala. 36; Chamberlain v. Bates, 2 Port. (Ala.) 550, 27 Am. Dec. 667; Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721; Whitworth v. Oliver, 39 Ala. 286; Price v. Simmons, 13 Ala. 749; King v. Smith, 15 Ala. 264; Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 73; Abney v. Pickett, 21 Ala. 739; Deans v. Wilcoxson, 25 Fla. 980; Gregory v. Harrison, 4 Fla. 56; Paschal v. Davis, 3 Ga. 256; Bates v. Woolfolk, 5 Ga. 329; Kearney v. Sasser, 37 Md. 264; Gardner v. Simmes, 1 Gill, 425; Hagthorp v. Hook, 1 Gill & J. 270; Gray v. Harris, 43 Miss. 421; Re Place, 7 N. Y. Legal Obs. 217.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Graves v. Flowers, 51 Ala. 402; Hatchett v. Billingslea, 65 Ala. 16; Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326; Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615; Ruff v. Smith, 31 Miss. 59; Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130; Buckland v. Gallup, 105 N. Y. 453; Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431.

b. Choses in action.

It is generally held that an administrator de bonis non can maintain an action on choses in action due the estate, though some cases hold that he cannot maintain an action on notes given to his predecessor, or maintain an action in assumpsit for goods sold by his predecessor, nor recover a deposit made by his predecessor, and that he is not entitled to sale bonds taken by his predecessor. This holding is on the ground that the predecessor has administered the goods.

But the weight of authority is that if the administrator de bonis non comes into possession of the choses in action due the estate for property sold by 40 L. R. A.

his predecessor which has not been accounted for an action may be maintained. Caller v. Boykin, Minor (Ala.) 206; King v. Green, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 133, 19 Am. Dec. 146; Harbin v. Levi, 6 Ala. 399; Barron v. Vandvert, 13 Ala. 232; Barwick v. White, 2 Del. Ch. 284; McFarlin v. Ringer, 51 Ga. 363; Barnett v. Vanmeter, 7 Ind. App. 45; Wahl v. Schierling, 11 Ind. App. 696; Griffith v. Fischli, 4 Blackf. 427; Skillen v. Jones, 44 Ind. 136; Burrus v. Roulhac, 2 Bush, 39; Williams v. Collins, 1 B. Mon. 58; Maraman v. Trunnell, 3 Met. (Ky.) 146, 77 Am. Dec. 167; Woodbridge v. Tilton, 84 Me. 92; Salisbury v. Black, 6 Harr. & J. 294, 14 Am. Dec. 278; Stevens v. Goodell, 3 Met. 34; Minot v. Norcross, 143 Mass. 326; Marvel v. Babbitt, 143 Mass. 226; Morse v. Clayton, 13 Smedes & M. 373; Scott v. Searles, 7 Smedes & M. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 317; McIlvoy v. Alsop, 45 Miss. 365; Kelsey v. Smith, 1 How. (Miss.) 68; Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87; Re Seitz, 16 Misc. 522; Gattfield v. Hanson, 57 How. Pr. 331; Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 232; Ellison v. Andrews, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 188; Ballinger v. Cureton, 104 N. C. 474; Cutler v. Quinoes, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 60; Miller v. Donaldson, 17 Ohio, 264; Mathews v. Meek, 23 Ohio St. 272; Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431; Meiser v. Eckhart, 19 Pa. 201; Lea v. Hopkins, 7 Pa. 385; Miller v. Com. 111 Pa. 321; Tucker v. Horner, 10 Phila. 122; Stair v. York Nat. Bank, 55 Pa. 364, 93 Am. Dec. 759; McGuinness v. Whalen, 17 R. I. 619; Johnston v. Lewis, Rice, Eq. 40, 38 Am. Dec. 74; Smith v. Pearce, 2 Swan, 127; Brasfield v. Cardwell, 7 Lea, 252; Hunt v. Payne, 29 Vt. 178; Hinton v. Bland, 81 Va. 588; Clarke v. Wells, 6 Gratt. 475; Blydenburgh v. Lowry, 4 Cranch, C. C. 308; Tingrey v. Brown, 1 Bos. & P. 310; Cubbridge v. Boatwright, 1 Russ. Ch. 549; Catherwood v. Chabaud, 1 Barn. & C. 150, 2 Dowl. & R. 271; Hirst v. Smith, 7 T. R. 90; Moseley v. Rendell, L. R. 6 Q. B. 337, 40 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 111, 23 L. T. N. S. 774, 19 Week. Rep. 619; Limver and Evoir's Case, 4 Leon. 58.

And the same was said to be the rule in King v. Griffin, 6 Ala. 387; Adams v. Internal Improvement Fund, 37 Fla. 286; Com. v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 479; Abingdon v. Tyler, 6 Coldw. 502; Merriam v. Hemmenway, 26 Vt. 565; Tyler v. Nelson, 14 Gratt. 214; Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51; Heffernan v. Grymes, 2 Leigh, 512; Lidderdale v. Robinson, 2 Brock. 159; Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Sal. 299.

But some cases hold that an administrator de bonis non is not entitled to maintain an action on choses in action obtained by his predecessor.

As where heirs obtained a decree for land conveyed by his predecessor. Morrison v. Page, 9 Dana, 428.

And where a judgment was rendered on the bond of his predecessor prior to the Pennsylvania act of 1834. Poits, Wollerton, v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 361, 24 Am. Dec. 359.

And where the action was in assumpsit for goods sold by predecessor. Ross v. Sutton, 1 Bail. L. 129, 19 Am. Dec. 660; Calder v. Pyfer, 2 Cranch, C. C. 430.

And where the action was for use and occupation of property leased by the predecessor. Boyd v. Sloan, 2 Bail. L. 311.

And where a note was taken by the predecessor for goods sold. Morrison v. Page, 9 Dana, 428.

And where the contract was payable to the predecessor. Harney v. Dutcher, 15 Mo. 89, 55 Am. Dec. 131.

And where the bond was payable to the predecessor. Seabrook v. Williams, 3 McCord, L. 371.

And where the sale bond was taken by predecessor when the common law was in force. Kendall v. Lee, 2 Penr. & W. 482.

a trust in favor of the intestate, because, if this was so, the identity of the trust fund has been lost. There is no attempt here to hold a particular fund or property as charged with the trust. There is no allegation or testimony to the effect that this money can be traced or distinguished from other property or money of the defendant's testator, the original administrator.

The identity of this trust fund, if such it

And where a sale bond was taken by predecessor. Woodell v. Bruffy, 25 W. Va. 465.

And where a rent note was given to predecessor. Barker v. Talcot, 1 Vern. 473. Distinguished in Catherwood v. Chaubaud, 1 Barn. & C. 150, 2 Dowl. & R. 271.

And where a note was given to predecessor individually. McGilway v. Clement, 6 Mo. App. 598. Appx.; Buckland v. Gallup, 105 N. Y. 453; Caulkins v. Bolton, 81 Hun, 458, 98 N. Y. 511.

And where a note was assigned by predecessor. Searles v. Scott, 14 Smedes & M. 94; Jelke v. Goldsmith, 52 Ohio St. 499.

And where a recognizance was assigned. Anonymous, Skinner, 143.

And where an executor assigned part of a term. Norton v. Harvey, Vent. 259; Drue v. Baylye, Freem. C. L. 393 and 402, 2 Lev. 100, Vent. 275, 3 Keble, 298; Butler v. Bernard, Freem. Ch. 139.

And where predecessor surrendered certificates of deposit. Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58.

And where a deposit was paid to predecessor. Whitlock v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 36 Hun, 460; Sibbs v. Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. 153 Pa. 345; Knobloch v. Germania Sav. Bank, 43 S. C. 233.

And where deposit was kept by predecessor. Slaymaker v. Farmer's Nat. Bank, 103 Pa. 616.

And where no unpaid debts against the estate were shown to exist. Bellomy v. Bellomy, 3 Bush, 109.

And where purchase-money notes were given to commissioners for distribution. Saffran v. Kennedy, 7 J. J. Marsh. 188.

And where a mortgage was given to heirs for their claim. Breckinridge v. Waters, 4 Dana, 620.

And where an order of court was not made under the statute. West v. Chappell, 5 Gill, 223.

And where a claim was collected by an agent of the predecessor. Wilson v. Arrick, 112 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 617.

And the same was said to be the rule at common law where a judgment was obtained by the predecessor. Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56.

And where the action was for the purchase price of slaves sold by his predecessor. Gilbert v. Hardwick, 11 Ga. 599.

And the same was said to be the rule where an action was brought by an executor on an award obtained by him. Horsam v. Turget, Vent. 111.

c. Avoiding sales or transfers made by predecessor.

Generally an administrator de bonis non may avoid sales and transfers made by his predecessor which are fraudulent or void or invalid. Ikelheimer v. Chapman, 32 Ala. 678; Swink v. Snodgrass, 17 Ala. 553, 52 Am. Dec. 190; Hopper v. Steele, 18 Ala. 828; Wyatt v. Rambo, 29 Ala. 510, 68 Am. Dec. 89; Deans v. Wilcoxon, 25 Fla. 980; Hardwick v. Thomas, 10 Ga. 266; Chandler v. Schoonover, 14 Ind. 324; Harvey v. State, Rogers, 123 Ind. 260; Forniquet v. Forstall, 34 Miss. 87; Hull v. Clark, 14 Smedes & M. 187; Prosser v. Leatherman, 4 How. (Miss.) 237, 34 Am. Dec. 121; Miller v. Helm, 2 Smedes & M. 687; Scott v. Searles, 7 Smedes & M. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 317; Searles v. Scott, 14 Smedes & M. 94; Murphy v. Clark, 1 Smedes & M. 221; Prestidge v. Pendleton, 24 Miss. 80; Badger v. Jones, 66 N. C. 305; Glover v. Flowers, 101 N. C. 134; Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Gazzam, 161 Pa. 586; Williams v. Verne, 68 Tex. 414; Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704; De Witt v. Miller, 9 Tex. 239; Cochran v. Thompson, 18 Tex. 652; Giddings v. Steele, 28 Tex. 732, 91 Am. Dec. 336; Burdett v. Silsbee, 15 Tex. 605; Pearson v. Burditt, 26 Tex. 157, 80 Am. Dec. 649.

40 L. R. A.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Woolfolk v. Sullivan, 23 Ala. 548; Elliott v. Branch Bank, 20 Ala. 345; Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56; Hackney v. Steadman, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 207; Evans v. Oakley, 2 Tex. 182.

The cases denying his right to avoid the sale generally do so on the ground that the sales were not fraudulent, or refuse it on the ground of estoppel, although some of the cases refuse it on the ground that he is in the place of his predecessor and therefore cannot avoid his acts. The cases denying the right of action are as follows: Bell v. Craig, 52 Ala. 215; Sampey v. Sowell, 93 Ala. 447; Paschal v. Davis, 3 Ga. 256; Bates v. Woolfolk, 5 Ga. 329; Windley v. Gaylord, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 55; Quince v. Nixon, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 289; Carson v. Duffy, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 507; Collins v. Bankhead, 1 Strobb. L. 25; Cheek v. Wheatley, 3 Sneed, 484, Overruling Bell v. Speight, 11 Humph. 451; Brown v. Franklin, 44 Tex. 559, Criticised in Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704; McDonald v. Alford, 32 Tex. 85, Criticised in Todd v. Willis, 66 Tex. 704; Stronach v. Stronach, 20 Wis. 129.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Thomas v. Hardwick, 1 Ga. 78; Spoon v. Smith, 36 S. C. 588.

d. Rule at common law.

1. Where assets have been converted by predecessor.

At common law the administrator de bonis non is not entitled to assets converted by his predecessor, and cannot maintain an action against his predecessor for conversion in order to obtain further assets. In many of the states this is now remedied by statute. The following cases hold that he cannot maintain an action for conversion in the absence of a statute, and some cases hold this without discussing the question of statute. Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111; Bliss v. Seaman, 165 Ill. 422, Affirming 59 Ill. App. 236; Marsh v. People, 15 Ill. 284; Felts v. Brown, 7 J. J. Marsh. 147; Carrick v. Carrick, 23 N. J. Eq. 384; Scituate Ct. of Probate v. Smith, 16 R. I. 444; Brownlee v. Lockwood, 20 N. J. Eq. 239, but see Mulford v. Mulford, 40 N. J. Eq. 163.

And the same was said to be the rule in Graves v. Downey, 3 T. B. Mon. 356.

2. Where there is a devastavit.

At common law an administrator de bonis non cannot maintain an action for a devastavit committed by his predecessor, as only assets unadministered pass to the administrator de bonis non. In the absence of a statute the following cases hold that a recovery cannot be allowed. Brice v. Taylor, 51 Ark. 75; Ludlow v. Flournoy, 34 Ark. 451; State, Oliver v. Rottaken, 34 Ark. 144; Alsop v. Mather, 6 Conn. 584, 21 Am. Dec. 703; Thomas v. Hardwick, 1 Ga. 78; Paschal v. Davis, 3 Ga. 256; Re Richard, 58 Ill. App. 91; Short v. Johnson, 25 Ill. 489; State, Pierson v. Gooding, 8 Blackf. 567; Anthony v. McCall, 3 Blackf. 86; Young v. Kimball, 3 Blackf. 167; Warfield v. Brand, 13 Bush, 77; Waterman v. Dockray, 78 Me. 139; Prosser v. Yerby, 1 How. (Miss.) 87; Judge of Probate v. Green, 1 How. (Miss.) 146; Davis v. Brandon, 1 How. (Miss.) 154; Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130, 43 Am. Dec. 502; Gaskins v. Hammett, 32 Miss. 103; United States, Wilson v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 927; Wilson v. Arrick, 112 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 617; Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. ed. 292.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Chamberlain v. Bates, 2 Port. (Ala.) 550, 27 Am. Dec. 667; Benton County Ct. Judge v.

was, having been lost, the cestui que trust can stand in no better position than other creditors. Goodell v. Buck, 67 Me. 514; Portland & H.

S. B. Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370; Fowler v. True, 76 Me. 43.

Bill dismissed, with costs for the respondent.

Price, 6 Ala. 36; Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721; Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326; King v. Smith, 15 Ala. 264; Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615; American Bd. of Comrs. for Foreign Missions, 27 Conn. 344; Graffenreid v. Kundert, 34 Ill. App. 483; Graham v. State, Reynolds, 7 Ind. 470, 65 Am. Dec. 745.

3. Requiring the predecessor to account.

Generally, in the absence of a statute, an action will not lie by an administrator de bonis non to obtain an accounting of the assets that were in the hands of his predecessor. Nolly v. Wilkins, 11 Ala. 872; Green v. Byrne, 46 Ark. 453; Williams v. Cubage, 36 Ark. 307; Finn v. Hempstead, 24 Ark. 111; State, Oliver, v. Kottaken, 34 Ark. 144; Bradshaw v. Com. 8 J. J. Marsh. 632; Slaughter v. Froman, 5 T. B. Mon. 19, 17 Am. Dec. 53; Oldham v. Collins, 4 J. J. Marsh. 49; Stubblefield v. McRaven, 5 Smedes & M. 130, 43 Am. Dec. 502; Blizzard v. Filler, 20 Ohio, 479; Coleman v. M'Murdo, 5 Rand. (Va.) 51; Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123, Distinguished in Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 363.

And the same was said to be the rule in Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 73; Gregory v. Harrison, 4 Fla. 56; Burnley v. Duke, 2 Rob. (Va.) 102.

And the same was held to be the rule where there were no debts. Thompson v. Buckner, 2 Hill, Eq. 499, Riley, Eq. 53.

And where no statute was discussed. Shackelford v. Runyan, 7 Humph. 141.

And the same was said to be the rule in Easterling v. Thompson, Rice, L. 346.

4. Money and balance due from predecessor.

Generally an action will not lie by an administrator de bonis non for the balance in money due by his predecessor, in the absence of a statute. The following cases hold that an action will not lie: Willis v. Willis, 9 Ala. 721; Byrd v. Holloway, 6 Smedes & M. 323; Gray v. Harris, 43 Miss. 421; Ruff v. Smith, 31 Miss. 59; Potts, Wollerton, v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 361, 24 Am. Dec. 359; Curtis v. Lynch, 19 Ohio St. 362.

And the same was said to be the rule in Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 315.

But a recovery was allowed without discussing the question of statute, in Whitaker v. Whitaker, 12 Lea, 363, distinguishing Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed, 411; Stott v. Alexander, 2 Sneed, 650; Cheek v. Wheatley, 3 Sneed, 484.

Some cases hold that an action cannot be had by an administrator de bonis non for money in the hands of his predecessor. Chamberlain v. Bates, 2 Port. (Ala.) 550, 27 Am. Dec. 667; Sibley v. Williams, 3 Gill & J. 52; Dement v. Heth, 45 Miss. 388; Rives v. Patty, 43 Miss. 338; Prosser v. Yerby, 1 How. (Miss.) 87; Sloan v. Johnson, 14 Smedes & M. 47; Stott v. Alexander, 2 Sneed, 650; Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed, 411.

And the same was said to be the rule in Anderson v. Miller, 6 J. J. Marsh. 508; Thomason v. Thomason, 1 Met. (Ky.) 53.

But a recovery was allowed in the following cases where the question of statute was not discussed: Getty v. Long, 82 Md. 643; State v. Wright, 4 Harr. & J. 148.

e. Where the common-law rule has been changed by statute.

1. Where assets have been converted by predecessor.

Where the common law has been changed by statute an administrator de bonis non is entitled to recover for conversion by his predecessor in order to obtain assets. In some few cases the question of 40 L. R. A.

this being a remedy by statute was not discussed. Nevitt v. Woodburn, 160 Ill. 203; State, Wright, v. Porter, 9 Ind. 342; Stewart v. Phenice, 65 Iowa, 475; De Valengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. 282, 10 L. ed. 457; State, Dittman, v. Robinson, 57 Md. 486; Balch v. Hooper, 32 Minn. 158; State, Renfro, v. Price, 17 Mo. 431; State, Shields, v. Flynn, 48 Mo. 413; Brown v. Weatherby, 71 Mo. 152; State, Burrough, v. Farmer, 54 Mo. 439; Van Camp v. Searle, 79 Hun, 134; Douglas v. Day, 28 Ohio St. 173; Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431; Foster v. Wise, 46 Ohio St. 20; Parrish v. Brooks, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 154.

And it was said that a recovery could not be had where it could not be traced. Tyler v. Wheeler, 160 Mass. 206.

2. Where there is a devastavit.

Where a statute authorized a recovery by an administrator de bonis non for a devastavit, a recovery was allowed. Eubank v. Clark, 78 Ala. 73; Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 327; Glenn v. Billingslea, 64 Ala. 345; Waring v. Lewis, 53 Ala. 615; Banks v. Speers, 103 Ala. 436; Whitworth v. Oliver, 39 Ala. 266; Wilkinson v. Hunter, 37 Ala. 268; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 14 L. ed. 472; Oglesby v. Gilmore, 5 Ga. 56; Veach v. Rice, 131 U. S. 243, 33 L. ed. 163; Graham v. State, Reynolds, 7 Ind. 470, 65 Am. Dec. 745; Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Met. 525; Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619; Cobb v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 57; State, Koper, v. Burton, 107 N. C. 526; Brown v. Seaman, 65 Tex. 622; Dwyer v. Kallteyer, 68 Tex. 554; Golder v. Littlejohn, 23 Wis. 251.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases, although in some of them the question of statute was not discussed. Bowers v. Grimes, 45 Ga. 616; Soutter v. Porter, 105 N. Y. 514; State, Williams, v. Britton, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 110; Cannon v. Jenkins, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 422; Hardy v. Miles, 91 N. C. 131; Lansdell v. Winstead, 76 N. C. 366; Badger v. Jones, 66 N. C. 305; Wilson v. Pearson, 102 N. C. 290; Lowe v. Carlisle, 33 S. C. 567.

A negative holding was had in the following cases: Murphey v. Menard, 11 Tex. 673, Distinguished in Murphy v. Menard, 14 Tex. 62; Johnson v. Hogan, 37 Tex. 77; Disapproved in Johnson v. Morris, 45 Tex. 483.

3. Requiring the predecessor to account.

In most of the states by statute an administrator de bonis non can compel an accounting on the part of his predecessor in order to realize assets. Wilson v. Hinton, 63 Ark. 145; Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17, Overruling Stose v. People, 25 Ill. 600; Hanifan v. Needles, 108 Ill. 403; McDonough v. Hanifan, 7 Ill. App. 50; Browne v. Doolittle, 151 Mass. 595; Fay v. Muzzey, 13 Gray, 53, 74 Am. Dec. 619; Perrine v. Calhoun County Circuit Ct. Judge, 49 Mich. 342; State, Davless County, v. Lankford, 55 Mo. 364; Boulton v. Whitmore, 12 Mo. App. 581, Appx.; Boulton v. Scott, 3 N. J. Eq. 231; Walton v. Walton, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 512; Kelly v. West, 80 N. Y. 139; Colt v. Lasnier, 9 Cow. 320; Re Hood, 104 N. Y. 103; Re Latz, 33 Hun, 618, 20 N. Y. Week. Dig. 235; Le Count v. LeCount, 1 Dem. 29; O'Connor v. State, Potter, 18 Ohio, 225.

And the same was said to be the rule although in some of the cases the question of statute was not discussed. Martin v. Ellerbe, 70 Ala. 326; Shorter v. Hargroves, 11 Ga. 658; Knight v. Lasseter, 16 Ga. 151; Re Fithian, 44 Hun, 457; Peck v. Sherwood, 5 Redf. 416; Spencer v. Popham, 5 Redf. 425; Re O'Brien, 45 Hun, 284; Breslin v. Smyth, 3 Dem. 251; State, Goodman, v. Goodman, 72 N. C. 508; Merrill v. Merrill, 92 N. C. 657; Ham v. Olney, 85 N. C.

119; Gilliam v. Watkins, 104 N. C. 180; State, Baldwin, v. Johnston, 30 N. C. (8 Ired. L.) 381; Tulburt v. Hollar, 102 N. C. 406.

But a recovery was denied on the question of limitation. Pitkin v. Wilcox, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 27; Murphy v. Menard, 14 Tex. 62.

And on the question of pleading. State v. Ferguson, 8 Ark. 172; Scofield v. Adriance, 2 Dem. 486.

And it was said that a recovery could not be had in Yale v. Baker (The question of statute was not discussed), 2 Hun. 468.

4. Money and balance due from predecessor.

Where the common law has been changed by statute the administrator de bonis non is entitled to recover the balance due the estate from his predecessor, in order to administer the same. Brice v. Taylor, 51 Ark. 75; Storer v. Storer, 6 Mass. 390; Palmer v. Pollock, 26 Minn. 433; State, Coste, v. Fulton, 35 Mo. 323; State, Collins, v. Dulle, 45 Mo. 269; Morehouse v. Ware, 78 Mo. 100; Scott v. Crews, 72 Mo. 261; Jacobs v. Morrow, 21 Neb. 233; Judge of Probate v. Lane, 51 N. H. 342; Latta v. Russ, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 111; Slagle v. Entrekin, 44 Ohio St. 637; Chatfield v. Faran, 1 Disney (Ohio) 488; Bowman's Appeal, 62 Pa. 166; Croyell v. Blackfan, 1 Pittsb. 327; Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 315; Connelly's Appeal, 1 Grant, Cas. 366; Trimmer v. Trail, 2 Bail. L. 490; Johnson v. Morris, 45 Tex. 463; Martel v. Martel, 17 Tex. 391; Baldwin v. Dearborn, 21 Tex. 446; Boulware v. Hendricks, 23 Tex. 667; Grant v. McKinney, 36 Tex. 62; Mott v. Ruenbuhl, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 600.

And the same was held where the statute was not discussed. Judge of Probate v. Claggett, 36 N. H. 381, 72 Am. Dec. 314; Judge of Probate v. Heydock, 8 N. H. 491; Prescott v. Farmer, 50 N. H. 90; Villard v. Robert, 1 Strobb. Eq. 393, Questioning Smith v. Carrere, 1 Rich. Eq. 123; State, Crane, v. Heinrichs, 82 Mo. 542.

And the same was said to be the rule in the following cases: Hood v. Hayward, 124 N. Y. 1; University of North Carolina v. Hughes, 90 N. C. 537; Duke v. Ferebee, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 10.

This rule was denied in Stose v. People, 25 Ill. 600, but this case was overruled in Duffin v. Abbott, 48 Ill. 17.

And so it has been held that the administrator de bonis non is entitled to the money in the hands of his predecessor. State, Burton, v. Tunnell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 182; Peckard v. Price, 5 Del. Ch. 239; Nevitt v. Woodburn, 160 Ill. 203; Lane v. State, Harmon, 27 Ind. 106; Myers v. State, McCray, 47 Ind. 293; Musick v. Beebe, 17 Kan. 47; State v. Wright, 4 Harr. & J. 111; Donaldson v. Raborg, 26 Md. 312; Sibley v. Williams, 3 Gill & J. 52; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Met. 194, 39 Am. Dec. 718; Buttrick v. King, 7 Met. 20; Sewall v. Patch, 132 Mass. 326; Foster v. Bailey, 157 Mass. 100; State, Darland, v. Porter, 9 Mo. 352; State, Blanton, v. Hunter, 15 Mo. 490; Wickham v. Page, 49 Mo. 526; Luers v. Brunges, 56 How. Pr. 232.

And the same is said to be the rule in Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. App. Dec. 362; Power v. Speckman, 126 N. Y. 354.

And the same was held where the money was treated as specie unadministered. Hatch v. Caine, 86 Me. 282; Hackney v. Steadman, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 207.

And the same was said to be the rule in Gamble v. Hamilton, 7 Mo. 469.

But a recovery was denied for money where the order of court required by statute was not obtained. Johnson v. Farmers' Bank, 11 Md. 412; State, Dittman, v. Robinson, 57 Md. 486; State, Green, v. Hart, 57 Md. 234.

An a recovery was denied on the ground of estoppel. Thayer v. Kinsey, 162 Mass. 232. I. T.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

S. J. JOHNSON, Admr., etc., of N. G. Hewitt, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

P. C. DOOLEY, Admr., etc., of Laura S. Hewitt, Deceased.

(.....Ark.....)

1. The word "payable," when used in promissory notes and other commercial transactions, means "to be paid" rather than "which may be paid."

2. A note "payable" in specified bonds at par does not become payable in money on the failure of the maker to pay or tender the bonds on the day the note is due, since it does not give him the mere privilege or option to pay in bonds, but makes a positive and absolute promise to pay in the specific funds named.

(February 19, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of an instrument in the form of a promissory note. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to the right to make payment in bonds or stocks instead of money, see also Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Canada & St. L. R. Co. (Ind.) 11 L. R. A. 740; Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths (Tex.) 30 L. R. A. 765.

40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dodge, Johnson, Carroll, and Pemberton, for appellant:

The writing sued on is not a promissory note, but is an agreement to deliver certain property and choses in action by a day certain, to wit: Arkansas levee bonds at the city of Little Rock, Arkansas.

Fry v. Rousseau, 3 McLean, 106; Irvine v. Lowry, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 299, 10 L. ed. 464; Quimby v. Merritt, 11 Humph. 439; Cor v. Peck, 3 Yerg. 485; Wynn v. Harman, 5 Gratt. 163; Thompson v. Sloan, 23 Wend. 78, 35 Am. Dec. 546; Cook v. Satterlee, 6 Cow. 108, 16 Am. Dec. 432.

The contract calls for Arkansas levee bonds to the amount of $1,000, face value; nothing more, nothing less, and all this court can award claimant would be $1,000 in levee bonds, or their value, and nothing more.

Dillard v. Evans, 4 Ark. 176; McChord v. Ford, 3 T. B. Mon. 166; Stucker v. Miller, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 235; Chambers v. George, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 335; Graham v. Adams, 5 Ark. 262; Hawkins v. Watkins, 5 Ark. 482; Chitty, Bills, 152; Rex v. Wilcox, cited in Bayley on Bills of Exchange, p. 10; Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 245; Leiber v. Goodrich, 5 Cow. 186; McCormick v. Trotter, 10 Serg. & R. 94; Lange v. Kohne, 1 McCord. L. 115; Gwinn v. Roberts, 3 Ark. 73; Wallace v. Henry, 5 Ark. 107;

Sims v. Whitlock, 5 Ark. 103; Wilburn v. Greer, 6 Ark. 253; 1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 96.

Where the means of payment provided for is not money, it follows that the damages recoverable are not the amount named, but the value of the medium in money.

1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 96, and cases cited in note; Wallace v. Henry, 5 Ark. 105.

A note payable in merchandise or work is not commercial paper.

1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 101.

A promise to pay levee bonds to the claimant is a contract to deliver certain species of personal property. It is not a negotiable note or commercial paper.

1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, pp. 37, 45; Story, Promissory Notes, §§ 17, 18.

A bond or covenant for $1,000 in levee bonds is payable in levee bonds at their nominal value, regardless of depreciation. If the bonds are not forthcoming the market value must control.

Bizzell v. Brewer, 9 Ark. 58; McKiel v. Porter, 4 Ark. 584; Mitchell v. Walker, 4 Ark. 147; Brodie v. Watkins, 31 Ark. 319; Smithee v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17.

Mr. P. C. Dooley, in propria persona:

The note is for the payment of a fixed number of dollars with interest at a fixed time and place, leaving no uncertainty, nothing for computation or calculation.

Gregory v. Bewly, 5 Ark. 318; Day v. Lafferty, 4 Ark. 450; Gist v. Gans, 80 Ark. 285; Hoy v. Tuttle, 8 Ark. 124, 46 Am. Dec. 309.

The contract is simply in the alternative, and when the privilege it gives is refused, it certainly becomes absolute and the privilege is lost.

Bizzell v. Brewer, 9 Ark. 58; 2 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 163; Plowman v. Riddle, 7 Ala. 775; Stewart v. Donnelly, 4 Yerg. 177; Orr v. Williams, 5 Humph. 423; Gilman v. Moore, 14 Vt. 457; Townsend v. Wells, 8 Day, 327; Edwards v. Morris, 1 Ohio, 524; Crockett v. Moore, 3 Sneed, 145.

When the contract, upon its face, or in its terms, furnishes the means of ascertaining the exact amount due for specific articles or services, debt will lie.

Langtry v. Walker, 6 Humph. 336; 1 Meigs, Dig. p. 418; Marrigan v. Page, 4 Humph. 247; Lawrence v. Dougherty, 5 Yerg. 435.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal is from a judgment of the Pulaski circuit court in favor of appellee, based on the following instrument:

$1,000. Keesville, N. Y., Aug. 3, 1882.

On the first day of January, 1883, for value received, I promise to pay Laura S. Hewitt, one thousand dollars with interest, payable in levee bonds of the state of Arkansas, at par, and at Little Rock, in said state.

N. G. Hewitt.

The case was tried by the court sitting as a jury, and the facts as found by the court are as follows: "The court finds the note executed August 3, 1882, and due January 1, 1883. That N. G. Hewitt died February 6, 40 L. R. A.

1887, and letters of administration were issued on his estate February 19, 1887. The claim was presented in due form of law to the administrator on December 15, 1888, within two years of granting of letters. That the levee bonds and furniture claimed to have been accepted under the agreement of December, 1886, were never, in fact, delivered and accepted in satisfaction of said note, and that the accord was never consummated, though it was agreed upon by the parties; and plaintiff is entitled to judgment for $1,000, and interest at 6 per cent from August 3, 1882." The court declared the law as follows: "The note is for $1,000, with interest at 6 per cent from date, with right of maker to discharge in levee bonds at their face at maturity. Not having been so discharged, the maker was liable for the amount stated in money, and, this never having been paid or settled, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the full amount, and interest from date, and judgment ordered accordingly."

The word "payable," when used in commercial transactions, and in instruments like the one in suit, means "to be paid," rather than "which may be paid." Century, Dict. Payable. Both terms, when used in similar instruments, received an early construction by this court, which has not been departed from and to which we adhere. In Day v. Lafferty, 4 Ark. 450, the suit was in covenant upon the following instrument:

$129.50. By the first of April next, we promise to pay Lorenzo D. Lafferty one hundred and twenty-nine dollars and fifty cents, for value received, payable in current Arkansas Bank notes. Witness our hands and seals this 24th December, 1840.

A plea of tender was set up and a demurrer was sustained to said plea by the lower court, one reason being "that tender was not made on the day of payment." In discussing this, the court, through Judge Dickinson, said: "We consider the law well settled that, if a party covenants to pay in specific articles, he must meet his contract at the time and in the manner specified. Tender cannot be made after the day, unless the damages are capable of being reduced to certainty, by computation; nor can it be pretended that it is possible to do so, in this instance, without the intervention of a jury." In Gist v. Gans, 80 Ark. 309. Chief Justice English, after quoting the above, said: "The effect of this decision is that the obligation sued on was not payable in money but in bank notes, the value of which would have to be assessed as damages." In Dillard v. Evans, 4 Ark. 176, the suit was in debt on a note payable "in the common currency of Arkansas," and it was held that the note sued on was not an obligation for the direct payment of money. See also Hudspeth v. Gray, 5 Ark. 157; Graham v. Adams, 5 Ark. 262; Hawkins v. Watkins, 5 Ark. 482; Wallace v. Henry, 5 Ark. 107; Sims v. Whitlock, 5 Ark. 103; Wilburn v. Greer, 6 Ark. 255, citing Bizzell v. Brewer, 9 Ark. 58. In the case of Gregory v. Bewly, 5 Ark. 318, the writing sued on was as follows:

One day after date we or either of us promise to pay to Hawkins Gregory, executor of the estate of R. T. Banks, deceased, the sum of two hundred and twenty-seven dollars and twenty five cents, with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, until paid, which may be discharged in Arkansas money.

In Hoy v. Tuttle, 8 Ark. 124, the writing sued on was a note in the ordinary form, for $40, with this closing sentence: "This note may be paid in the currency of Arkansas." In these cases it was held that the words "may be discharged," or "may be paid," imported an alternative condition in the writing by which the maker might discharge his obligation for the payment of money at maturity, in the particular funds or property specified, but, if he failed to do so at maturity, the privilege was gone, and the obligation to pay in money or specie became absolute. There is no conflict between these cases and Day v. Lafferty and other cases supra, but a clear distinction, which Judge Sebastian recognizes in Gregory v. Beily, 5 Ark. 318, as follows: "The obligation here sued on is distinguishable from the case of one payable, primarily in common currency of Arkansas."—citing Dillard v. Evans, 4 Ark. 176, and Hudspeth v. Gray, 5 Ark. 157. The obligation in the case at bar was payable primarily "in levee bonds of the state of Arkansas." There is nothing in the record to show that the term "payable" in the obligation sued on was used in any other than the sense in which that term is usually employed in ordinary commercial or other business transactions. The common acceptance of the term, when so used, is "to be paid" as indicated in the beginning of this opinion, and it does not signify any alternative condition, privilege, or option, but the positive and absolute condition of payment at the time, place, and in the specific funds named. The court, therefore, erred in its declaration of law.

We find no other error, but for this the judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for new trial.

Rehearing denied.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1).

G. V. HANKINS et al., Respts.,
v.

Adolph OTTINGER et al., Appls.

(115 Cal. 454.)

1. An agreement by the owners of race horses entered at certain stake races to divide equally all premiums and stake moneys offered by the associations on such races awarded to any of the horses of either is not void as a wagering contract.
2. A horse race given by an association with an offer of a purse by the association to the successful contestant does not become a wager between the competitors because of a provision for dividing the entrance moneys between the first three horses in the race.

(December 31, 1886.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce a contract to divide money earned by running horse races. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Davis & Hill, for appellants:

The contract or arrangement recovered on is unlawful and against public policy. The racing of horses for moneys toward which the contestants contribute is a wagerous undertaking and cannot be enforced in a court of justice.

Whether what Ottinger and Johnson arranged and carried out is expressly prohibited by the statute or not, it is "otherwise contrary to good morals" and against public policy.

Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 355; Bangs v. Dunn, 66 Cal. 73; Edwards v. Estell, 48 Cal. 195; Powell v. Maguire, 43 Cal. 21; Spence v. Harcey, 22 Cal. 342; Forbes v. McDonald, 54 Cal. 99; Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. 472; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 267-272, 26 L. ed. 542-544; Leland v. Talliaferro, N. Y. Trans. App. 9, 1870.

In all cases contra bonos mores the court leaves the parties where it finds them.

Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co. 96 Cal. 517.

Such contracts prove themselves out of court whenever their nature is disclosed.

El Dorado County v. Davison, 30 Cal. 524; Bowman v. Gonegal, 19 La. Ann. 328, 92 Am. Dec. 537; Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 458; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co. 96 Cal. 517; Wyman v. Moore, 103 Cal. 214; People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 140; Hall v. Bergen, 19 Barb. 126.

A sweepstakes is a race in which stakes are to be made by the owners of the horses engaged, and any such race is still a sweepstakes when money or other prize is added.

Such a sweepstakes is gaming, such moneys cannot be recovered. That other valuables are added does not remove the taint. It is still recovering a bet.

Gibbons v. Gouverneur, 1 Denio, 171; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 539; Gahan v. Neville, 2 Cal. 81; Fuller v. Hutchings, 10 Cal. 525, 70 Am. Dec. 746.

The whole transaction is vicious if a part of it is.

McGregor v. Donnelly, 67 Cal. 150; Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 116.

As to all such contracts and the incidents thereto the courts keep their hands off.

Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 174; Hill v. Kidd, 43 Cal. 615; Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110.

Messrs. Rothchild & Ach, for respondents:

The contract was executed, and, even though against public policy, the court will enforce payment of moneys due.

Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732;

NOTE.—As to legality of bets on horse race, see note to Bernard v. Taylor (Or.) 18 L. R. A. 859; also Morrison v. Bennett (Mont.) post, —, 40 L. R. A.

McDonald v. Lund, 18 Wash. 412; Manchester & L. R. Co. v. Concord R. Corp. 66 N. H. 100, 9 L. R. A. 639, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 319; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423; Central Trust Co. v. Ohio C. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 306.

The contract is not illegal or void.

The presumption of law is in favor of the legality of a contract.

Chitty, Contr. 977.

The illegality of an agreement, unless disclosed by the pleadings or the proofs of the party claiming through it, must, in order to be available to the adverse party, be specially pleaded.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald & M. Constr. Co. 44 Neb. 463.

A defense that the contract sued on is in violation of public policy or public law is an affirmative defense, and must be pleaded to enable defendant to introduce evidence in support thereof.

Maitland v. Zanga, 14 Wash. 92; Buchtel v. Evans, 21 Or. 809; Alh Doon v. Smith, 25 Or. 89; Sharon v. Sharon, 68 Cal. 29.

The facts do not show a bet or a wager.

Alford v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58.

Plaintiffs can recover their share of the prize, even though the contract covered sweepstakes.

If the contract is in part bad, as being in violation of law, but good in part, and the good can be separated from the bad, that which is good will be enforced in law.

Jackson v. Shaul, 29 Cal. 267; Granger v. Original Empire Mill & Min. Co. 59 Cal. 679; Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 256; Prost v. More, 40 Cal. 347; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601, 34 Am. Dec. 770; Santa Clara Valley Mill & L. Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387; Corcoran v. Lehigh & F. Coal Co. 133 Ill. 390.

Van Fleet, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended that the contract sued on was without consideration, in that it was a mere wagering venture, which was void as against public policy, and not enforceable in a court of law. The contract, as alleged and found, was substantially this: The plaintiffs and the defendants, both owning race horses, and having them entered in certain stake races about to be given by the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association and the California Jockey Club, made the agreement between themselves that they would pool all premiums and stake moneys offered by said associations on said races, which should be awarded to either or any of their said horses, and divide the same equally—one half to the plaintiffs and one half to the defendants. It was found that one of the defendants' horses was awarded a purse so offered, amounting to $5,480, which defendants now refuse to divide. At common law a wager made in respect to matters not affecting the feelings, interests, or character of third persons, or the public peace, or good morals, or public policy, was valid and its payment could be enforced; but if it was of a kind to affect the interests or character of third persons, or was in relation to a matter which militated against good morals or sound public policy, it was void, and no action in 40 L. R. A.

affirmance of such a contract could be maintained. Whether betting on horse races was of a character to fall within the latter class at common law is a matter about which there is elsewhere some contrariety in the adjudged cases. But so far as this state is concerned, the question has been directly settled in the case of Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110, where it was held that such contracts are void, as contravening good morals, and cannot be enforced by the courts. It is well settled, however, that a bet or wager, such as comes within the rule of public policy and good morals invoked in that case and by the appellants here, is where the parties competing themselves each put up or bet a certain sum or valuable thing, which is to be taken by the winner and forfeited by the loser on the turn of the event. Alford v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532. Such a contract will not be affirmed by the courts, but the parties will be left for redress to their own code of ethics. But the contract presented for consideration was not such a contract. It related solely to purses or stake moneys to be paid by the associations offering them, and covered nothing which the parties themselves might see fit to hazard. There was no wager or bet of their own money to be lost by one and taken by the other, but only that of a third party offered for their competition. This did not constitute the transaction a wager. "There is a clear distinction," says the supreme court of judicature of Indiana in Alford v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58, "between a wager or a bet, and a premium or reward. In a wager or a bet there must be two parties, and it is known before the chance or uncertain event upon which it is laid is accomplished, who are the parties who must either lose or win. In a premium or reward, there is but one party until the act or thing or purpose for which it is offered has been accomplished. A premium is a reward or recompense for some act done; a wager is a stake upon an uncertain event. In a premium it is known who is to give before the event; in a wager it is not known until after the event. The two need not be confounded." That was a case where the winner of a purse offered by a trotting association on a race sued to recover the amount upon the association refusing to pay; the defense of the latter being that the purse was a mere wager, which did not constitute a valid consideration for their promise. It was held that the winner could recover. The distinction between a bet or wager and a premium or purse is thus given in Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532: "A bet or wager is ordinarily an agreement between two or more, that a sum of money or some valuable thing, in contributing which all agreeing take part, shall become the property of one or some of them, on the happening in the future of an event at the present uncertain; and the stake is the money or thing thus put upon the chance. There is in them this element that does not enter into a modern purse, prize, or premium, viz., that each party to the former gets a chance of gain from others, and takes a risk of loss of his own to them. 'Illegal gaming implies gain and loss between the parties by betting such as would excite a spirit of cupidity.' People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. 189. A purse, prize, or premium is ordinarily some valuable thing offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter. He has not a chance of gaining the thing offered; and, if he abide by his offer, that he must lose it, and give it over to some of those contending for it, is reasonably certain." It is betting or wagering on the event of races which is regarded by the law as immoral, and which it undertakes to discourage by refusing its countenance in the way of legal redress to enforce such compacts. Trials of speed between horses, commonly denominated "horse races," are not in themselves, and apart from the improper purposes they may be made to subserve, discountenanced by the law. Nor is the giving of purses or premiums by associations or individuals, not themselves competing for the purpose of encouraging such contests, regarded as contrary to good morals or forbidden. Were these things unlawful our state and district agricultural societies which are fostered and encouraged by the laws of the state, would be compelled to forego one of their most popular and attractive features. The offering of a purse or premium for the fastest race horse is not distinguishable in principle, however it may be otherwise regarded, from the giving of a premium for the best qualities in other respects in the horse, as for draught or breeding purposes, or for the best breed of bulls or cows or other domestic animals. In the one case it encourages the breeding of the animal for his qualities of speed; in the other, it brings out the best draught horse or brood mare, or the most desirable breed of cattle, sheep, or hogs. And competing for such premiums or offerings, whatever may be their designation, is not competing for a bet or wager. As suggested in Altord v. Smith, 68 Ind. 58: "These premiums are certainly not wagers. As well might we call an insurance policy a wager, because it is to be paid on an uncertain event, as to call a premium a wager, because we do not know who will be entitled to it until the event happens." In the present case the evidence shows that the amount found to have been won by defendants was all money offered by the associations. The fact that the latter added to the $5,000 purse the amount of the entrance money, to be divided between the first, second, and third horses in the race, did not tend to impart to the transaction the character of a wager between the competitors. This entrance money had been paid to the associations by the various persons desiring to compete in the race, respectively, not as a wager or bet, which might be withdrawn before the event, but as a fee for the privilege of entering in the race, which became and was the property of the association as much as the principal purse of $5,000. It constituted, in no proper sense, a bet or wager between the parties.

The objection that the evidence does not sustain the finding that defendants were partners in the transaction is untenable. Under the evidence, the court was fully justified in finding the existence of that relationship; 40 L. R. A.

and also that Ottinger was authorized to enter into the agreement in behalf of the partnership.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: Harrison, J.; McFarland, J.

Rehearing in banc denied. Beatty, Ch. J., dissenting.

(In Banc.)

COLFAX MOUNTAIN FRUIT COMPANY, Respt.,

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Appt.

(118 Cal. 848.)

1. The liability of a carrier for passenger-train service continues to destination, under a contract to receive and forward fruit by such service to a connecting station on its road and from there "to forward" the property to destination, but providing that "its responsibility as a common carrier is to cease at the point where the freight leaves its road."

2. Variance between pleading and proof is not ground for reversal when no objection was made in the trial court.

(McFarland, J., dissents.)

(October 22, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Placer County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of a carriage contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William F. Herrin, with Mr. Foshay Walker, for appellant:

The instructions once having been given to the carrier to whom the forwarder delivers the goods, any failure in matter of complying with them on the part of the connecting carrier, either in transporting the goods in accordance therewith, or conveying the necessary information to the next connecting carrier, is alone chargeable to the particular connecting carrier at fault.

Nanson v. Jacob, 12 Mo. App. 127.

If the road of the company connects with other roads, and goods are received for transportation beyond the termination of its own line, there is superadded to its duty as a common carrier that of forwarder by the connecting line; that is, to deliver safely the goods to such line—the next carrier on the route beyond.

Myrick v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 U. S. 102, 27 L. ed. 325.

If more is expected from the company receiving the shipment, there must be a special agreement for it.

Where an express company agrees to forward a package to a point beyond the terminus of its route, the contract expressly limiting its liability to that of forwarder, and through charges not having been paid, the liability of the company as a common carrier ceases at the end of its route.

NOTE.—As to liabilities of connecting carriers, see also Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Mulford (Ill.) 35 L. R. A. 599, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.

Reed v. United States Exp. Co. 48 N. Y. 462, 7 Am. Rep. 561; Van Santvoord v. St. John, 6 Hill, 157; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co. 18 Vt. 121; Elmore v. Naugatuck R. Co. 23 Conn. 457, 63 Am. Dec. 148; Dillon v. New York & E. R. Co. 1 Hill, 231; Hempstead v. New York C. R. Co. 28 Barb. 485; Knott v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 98 N. C. 78; Berg v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 30 Kan. 561; Deming v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 25; Shiff v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 16 Hun, 278; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Richardson, 53 Kan. 257; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tennant (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 761; Wehmann v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. 58 Minn. 22; McEacheran v. Michigan C. R. Co. 101 Mich. 264; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Allcorn (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 186.

Messrs. Ben. P. Tabor and Charles Tuttle for respondent.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, and judgment went for plaintiff. This appeal is prosecuted from such judgment.

The important question presented here for consideration is, Does the judgment follow the findings of fact? And the determination of that question is dependent upon the construction to be given a certain contract entered into between the parties to the action. This contract was in the form of a shipping order, made out by plaintiff, and the parts thereof material for our consideration are as follows:

Shipping Order, Southern Pacific Company.
Colfax Station, October 24, 1890.

Delivered this day by the undersigned to the Southern Pacific Company the property herein described, in apparent good order, except as noted, to be forwarded with as reasonable despatch as its general business will permit to Ogden station, and there delivered in like good order, . . . on payment of charges, subject to the following conditions and agreements indorsed hereon: Consignee, marks and destination: Sgobel & Day, New York. [Here follows a description of the property consisting of fresh fruit.] Care C. & N. W. via Erie Dispatch, New York. Passengers train service, U. P. 32,009. Agent Southern Pacific Company will please forward, subject to conditions and agreements indorsed hereon. [Signed] C. M. F. Co., Shippers.

This printed contract, at the time of being signed and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, had indorsed upon the back thereof, among other printed conditions, the following: "That the company agrees to forward the property to the place of destination named, but its responsibility as a common carrier is to cease at the station where the freight leaves this road, where the property is to be delivered to connecting roads or carriers." It seems that the characters "U. P. 32,009" meant Union Pacific car No. 32,009. Defendant transported the car in question by passenger train over its road to Ogden, and there delivered it to the Union Pacific Railway Company, the next connecting carrier, with a request that the last-named company "and its connection between Ogden and New York City should, until the arrival of said car at final destination, accord to it passenger train service." After delivery to the Union Pacific Company,—but on what line does not appear,—delay occurred in the transmission of the car, so that it was three days overdue on arrival at New York, and in consequence the fruit suffered decay, and was sold at a loss to plaintiff. This loss forms the basis of the judgment rendered.

It is contended by plaintiff that by the contract, which has been substantially set forth, defendant undertook to furnish passenger-train service for the car of fruit from Colfax to New York, and that the connecting lines were its agents for this purpose. It is claimed by defendant that under the contract, upon delivery of the car of fruit at Ogden to the Union Pacific Company, with instructions for continued passenger-train service, defendant's obligation under the contract terminated. There is no question but that the defendant had the power to enter into a contract with plaintiff, whereby it bound itself to carry this fruit from Colfax to New York city by passenger-train service. Such is the law everywhere, and this principle is directly recognized by § 2201 of the Civil Code, which, in effect, provides that the liability of a common carrier who accepts freight for a place beyond his usual route ceases upon delivery of the freight at the end of his route in that direction to some other competent carrier carrying to the place of address, or connected with those who thus carry, unless he stipulates otherwise. There is no authority in the contract justifying the construction that its terms demanded "passenger service to Ogden, and a request simply to connecting carriers for passenger service thereafter." A shipper desirous of through passenger-train service would hardly be satisfied with such a contract. By that construction there would be no obligation upon the part of the Union Pacific Company to give passenger service, and its refusal to furnish it would create no liability either against it or defendant. The defendant's implied contract demanded that it deliver the fruit to the Union Pacific, with instructions to further transport it, but there would be no implied contract that this fruit should have passenger-train service thereafter. The law demanded no such request from defendant. The contract upon its face contains no covenant that a request for passenger-train service should be made by defendant of the Union Pacific Company. As to such service, the contract before us bears but one of two constructions: either it was an agreement upon the part of the defendant to furnish such service to Ogden, or an agreement to furnish such service to New York city. The contract is a printed form, and is evidently used for regular freight service. It is also apparent that it is used for all freight service, whether or not the freight is transported beyond its own lines of road. For these reasons apparent inconsistencies arise as to some of its provisions. If the defendant agreed to transport this fruit to New York, there can be no question but that it also agreed to give it passenger train service; for that the fruit was to have such service as far as the defendant agreed to carry it is and must be conceded. The contract is unilateral in form, and in three distinct and separate places therein we find an agreement as to the transportation of this freight: (1) Defendant agreed to forward it to Ogden station from Colfax, "with as reasonable despatch as its general business would permit." (2) Defendant agreed to forward it "subject to conditions and agreement indorsed hereon." (3) The defendant agreed to "forward the property to the place of destination named." The first provision is an agreement to carry the fruit from Colfax to Ogden; the second provision is clearly one to carry the fruit from Colfax to one of two places,—Ogden or New York; the third provision is one to carry the fruit from Colfax to Ogden, or from Colfax to New York, or it is an agreement to forward the fruit from Ogden to New York. It will be observed that the verb "carry" or "transport" is not used in this contract, but that the verb "forward" is used in the three provisions cited. It cannot be questioned that the defendant, in agreeing to forward the fruit, as the word is used in the first two instances found in the contract, stood in the position of a common carrier towards the plaintiff, and not in the position of a "forwarder." It must be true that it was treating with plaintiff in that capacity; and it is equally true that by the use of the verb "forward" it was understood by both parties that the defendant was to carry or transport the fruit. This is manifest when it is considered that the route from Colfax to Ogden is its own, and that the property was to be taken over that route by it. Hence, as a common carrier, it agreed to "forward" the fruit over its own road; in other words, carry or transport it. This brings us to a consideration of the meaning of the word "forward," as used in the last provision cited. When contracting parties use the same word three times in a contract, and in the first two instances its meaning is plain, other things being equal, it should be given the same meaning when used the third time. Any doubt or ambiguity as to the intention of the parties in the use of the word under such circumstances should be solved in favor of the construction conceded in other portions of the contract. Especially should such construction obtain when the word is a verb, and in each instance purports to deal with the same property. It follows that, if the verb "forward," as used in the contract, means to carry or transport in two instances, it not being apparent that any other meaning was intended when used a third time, we will give it the same meaning when so used. Upon such construction the last clause of the contract we have quoted binds the defendant to carry or transport the fruit to "the place of destination named;" and that place was New York. It certainly cannot be contended that it was Ogden station, for it was shipped to New York. By the contract it was consigned to Sgobel & Day, New York. The contract in terms, declares its "destination" to be New York; freight was agreed to be paid upon it to that city; and the particular common carriers that were to transport it to that point are set forth upon the face of the contract. The provision of the contract which we have just been considering, quoted in full, is as follows: "That the company agrees to forward the property to the place of destination named, but its responsibility as a common carrier is to cease at the station where the freight leaves this road, when the property is to be delivered to connecting roads or carriers." Taking this provision alone, its natural and reasonable construction is an agreement to carry and transport this car of fruit from Colfax to New York. It is plain that the word "forward" is not used in its technical, commercial sense, and that by its use the defendant did not intend to assume the duties of a "forwarder." In the first place, the defendant, as a common carrier, received property consigned to New York, was bound by implied contract to forward that property from Ogden; hence the provision from such standpoint has no force. Second. If the agreement was simply to "forward" from Ogden to New York, all the latter portion of the provision has no force and effect; for, if the defendant was acting simply as a "forwarder" of freight, he would assume no liability as a common carrier after the fruit left Ogden. Section 2201 of the Civil Code so provides in terms. Third. This clause of the provision clearly applies to all freight handled by defendant, whether that freight be consigned to a point upon or beyond its route; hence the word "forward" must necessarily be deemed to be used in the sense of "transport" or "carry." If the provision be construed as alone referring to the forwarding of freight by defendant over another route, it would be inharmonious and inconsistent with the clause which follows, wherein it is provided that when the property is to be delivered to connecting roads or carriers defendant's liability as a common carrier ceases. By this clause of the provision it is clearly implied that property is "forwarded" to the place of destination when not delivered to connecting roads or carriers. For these reasons also we conclude that this provision of the contract contains an agreement to transport and carry this freight from Colfax to New York. The clause following, to the effect that it shall be relieved from liability as a common carrier while the goods are in transit between Ogden and New York, in no way effects the question under consideration, for the liability here sued upon is not the liability of a common carrier, but a liability incurred for breach of a special contract. By this conclusion the three provisions of this contract we have had under consideration are consistent and harmonious, and due force and effect are given to each. The defendant's contract being to carry this freight to New York, it necessarily follows that it was to give it passenger-train service to that point. It failed to render such service; hence there was a breach, and a loss resulted to plaintiff by reason of that breach. The contract between the parties, as stipulated at the trial, varied from that alleged in the complaint, but it seems no objection was made by the defendant on this ground in the court below at any stage of the proceeding, and for this reason we will not now reverse the judgment upon the ground of such variance. We find no substantial error in the record. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

"(*) When freight is destined off or beyond the line of the Southern Pacific Company, agents will be careful to note that the name here inserted is the station at which freight leaves the road."

We concur: Van Fleet, J.; Harrison, J.; Temple, J.; Henshaw, J.

I dissent: McFarland, J.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Harry NICHOLS, Appt.,

v.

Cornelius PECK.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

Frank HUTCHINSON.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

Levi HUTCHINSON.

(70 Conn. 439.)

1. A barway connecting a right of way by prescription with a highway may be cut down by the owner of the easement to the grade of the highway when that is lawfully lowered by the public authorities.
2. The right of passage through a barway as part of a right of way by prescription is not lost by failure to use it for eleven years after the barway has been made impassable by the lowering of a highway with which it connected, by the public authorities, and the use as a substitute under an implied license of another barway about 70 feet distant.
3. A conclusion as to an ultimate fact, drawn from certain specified evidential facts which are legally incompetent to support it, is a proper subject of review on proceedings in error.
4. The chaining and locking of a gate is a sufficient revocation of an implied license to use it arising from the owner's acquiescence for eleven years in its use by one who had a right of way across the premises, after a barway at some distance from it, through which he had a right to enter the highway, had been made impassable by the lowering of the highway by the public authorities.
5. One answering in the negative when asked if he had "a regular right of way" over a farm, without being informed of the purpose of the inquiry and with no intention of misleading, is not estopped to claim that he has a way by prescription as against a purchaser of the premises who does not appear to have relied upon the statement.

(March 24, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from judgments of the Court of Common Pleas for Hartford County in favor of defendants in actions brought to recover damages for trespass on plaintiff's real estate. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to the effect of nonuser of an easement, see Welsh v. Taylor (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 536, and note.

40 L. R. A.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Cornelius J. Danaher, for appellant:

The court has found that the plaintiff, Nichols, was, at the time of the acts complained of, the owner and possessor of the lands described in the complaint, and that the acts complained of were committed by the defendant.

From these acts the law implies damage, and consequently the plaintiff's right to recover.

Miller v. Bristol, 12 Pick. 550; Swift's Digest, 105, 512-514, 519; Riley v. Gourley, 9 Conn. 154.

The lowering of the highway gave defendant, Peck, no right to make the change of 73 feet.

3 Kent, Com. 557; 2 Bl. Com. 36.

In Newkirk v. Sabler, 9 Barb. 652, it is said that if a public highway is impassable, a traveler may go over the adjoining land. But this would not extend to a private way, for it is the owner's fault if he do not keep it in repair.

Taylor v. Whitehead, 2 Dougl. 745; Henn's Case, W. Jones, 296; Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Wms. Saund. 321.

Even a plea justifying under such a condition, if it would be a justification, is not pleaded in this case, and consequently falls in the same category as any other matter beyond the issues in the case.

Greenthal v. Lincoln, 67 Conn. 376.

That the defendant had a right of way 73 feet north of the point where we claim the trespass was committed is without the issue.

Greenthal v. Lincoln, 67 Conn. 376.

Easements lie only in grant.

6 Am. & Eng. Eng. Law, p. 143.

It must be a fixed way along definite lines.

Johnson v. Lewis, 47 Ark. 66; Jones v. Percival, 5 Pick. 485, 16 Am. Dec. 415; Plimpton v. Converse, 44 Vt. 166.

A way ex vi termini imports a right of passing in a particular line.

Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. 168; 3 Kent, Com. 551; Sargent v. Ballard, 9 Pick. 251; Davies v. Stephens, 7 Car. & P. 570; Livett v. Wilson, 3 Bing. 119; 3 Kent, Com. 444; Dodge v. Stacey, 39 Vt. 568; Tracy v. Atherton, 36 Vt. 508; Campbell v. Wilson, 3 East, 294.

A right of way by prescription must be uninterrupted, adversely used, and held for the requisite length of time.

Hill v. Crosby, 2 Pick. 466, 13 Am. Dec. 448; Blake v. Everett, 1 Allen, 248.

And the same must have always been used without change or variation.

Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord, L. 264, 13 Am.

Dec. 741; South Branch R. Co. v. Parker, 41 N. J. Eq. 489; Russell v. Napier, 82 Ga. 770, 10 L. R. A. 484; Curtis v. La Grande Hydraulic Water Co. 20 Or. 34; Shrewsbury v. Brown, 25 Vt. 197; Cotton v. Pocasset Mfg. Co. 13 Met. 429; 3 Kent, Com. 596.

If the boundaries are not fixed by deed, they are fixed by the use of the way, and the use must be for a period of at least fifteen years.

George v. Cox, 114 Mass. 382.

Any entry on lands of another, unless justified, is a trespass.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 570; 1 Bouvier, Law Dict.

There certainly is no plea of right of way by necessity, and even if there was, it would not avail the defendant, for the fundamental requisite of a right of way by necessity is absent here. That is, the common ownership of plaintiff's and defendant's lands.

Woodworth v. Raymond, 51 Conn. 70; Tracy v. Atherton, 35 Vt. 52, 82 Am. Dec. 621.

Nor was there a plea of license, and if the defendant relied upon license, it is absolutely necessary that he plead it.

Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178; Lockhart v. Geir, 54 Wis. 133; Senecal v. Labadie, 42 Mich. 126; Ruggles v. Leure, 24 Pick. 187; Practice Act, p. 16, § 6; Practice Act, Forms, pp. 231, 238.

The defenses are entirely aside from the issue in the record.

Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178; Practice Act, rule 4, § 6; Greenthal v. Lincoln, 67 Conn. 376.

If the court should find from the facts set forth in the finding, that the said Peck had the license to enter upon said land, and that said license should not be pleaded, then the license could not have carried with it any interest in the land.

Statute of Frauds, 1866; Cooley, Torts, 306; Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439.

And was therefore revocable at will.

Cooley, Torts, 305; Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439; Wood v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 334.

The act of the said Nichols in chaining up the lower barway, so-called, is a fact from which the court can find a revocation of the license.

Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 466; Cooley, Torts, 304.

A way, whether public or private, is the right of going over another man's land.

2 Bl. Com. 84; Hart v. Chalker, 5 Conn. 818.

The extent of a right which is acquired in the land of another is determined by the use of the land in question.

Shrewsbury v. Brown, 25 Vt. 205; Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 48.

The owner of the land retains all the title he ever had, with the right of passage, and may vindicate every damage to his property by an action of trespass.

Lade v. Shepherd, 2 Strange, 1004; Stevens v. Whistler, 11 East, 51; Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 103, 6 Am. Dec. 216.

A user of more than fifteen years is proper evidence of a grant, but then it proves a grant only commensurate with the user. It is this alone which determines what the terms of the grant were. It is the letter of the grant.

40 L. R. A.

Hart v. Chalker, 5 Conn. 814; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69; South Branch R. Co. v. Parker, 41 N. J. Eq. 489; Ballard v. Dyson, 1 Taunt. 297; Stanley v. White, 14 East, 322; Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. H. 301; Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 321.

Selection of a right of way made by one to whom the right is conveyed, without designating the right, is conclusive as to his right, and will preclude his subsequent claim of a right to change a locality.

Palfrey v. Foster, 47 La. Ann. 939; Illinois C. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 154 Ill. 550; Green v. Goff, 153 Ill. 534.

To entitle a person to a right of way by prescription, he must show an uninterrupted adverse user for the requisite length of time, and that he has always used the same without change or variation.

Lawton v. Ritters, 2 McCord, L. 264, 18 Am. Dec. 741; Jones v. Percival, 5 Pick. 485, 16 Am. Dec. 415; 3 Kent, Com. 551; Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. 168.

Ways by prescription depend upon the character of the user.

Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 331; Robbins v. Wolcott, 19 Conn. 367.

A common ownership of plaintiff's and defendant's lands is a fundamental prerequisite for the creation of a way of necessity.

Woodworth v. Raymond, 51 Conn. 75; White v. Bradley, 66 Me. 263.

Convenience alone is not sufficient to create or continue a way.

Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302.

Individuals can acquire an easement only by grant or by prescription.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 340; Lovell v. Smith, 8 C. B. N. S. 120.

An easement is within the statute of frauds, and consequently cannot be acquired by a verbal agreement.

Pitkin v. Long Island R. Co. 2 Barb. Ch. 221, 47 Am. Dec. 820; Gen. Stat. § 1866.

Plaintiff did rely, and he had the right to rely, on Peck's statement, that he had not a right of way.

This was a fault on the part of Peck, and one which will result in injury to the plaintiff if Peck is permitted to say that he has a right of way by prescription, across said land of the plaintiff.

Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 24 L. ed. 743; Sweeney v. Pratt, 70 Conn. 274; Preston v. Mann, 25 Conn. 127.

When one of two innocent persons—that is, persons each guiltless of an intentional wrong—must suffer a loss, it must be borne by that one of them who by his conduct—acts or omissions—has rendered the injury possible.

North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill, 362; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Butchers' & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125; Grinnold v. Haven, 25 N. Y. 595, 82 Am. Dec. 380; Exchange Bank v. Monteath, 26 N. Y. 505; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 262, 268; Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 12 Am. Rep. 111; Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 24 L. ed. 743; Holmes v. Cromwell, 73 N. C. 613; Anderson v. Armstead, 69 Ill. 452; Voorhees v. Olmstead, 3 Hun, 744; Clark v. Coolidge, 8 Kan. 189; Kuhl v. Jersey City, 23 N. J. Eq. 84; Rice v. Bunce, 49 Mo. 231, 8 Am. Rep. 129;

Blair v. Wait, 69 N. Y. 113; Manufacturers' & T. Bank v. Hazard, 30 N. Y. 226; Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 266.

Mr. Charles H. Sawyer for appellees.

Baldwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1885 the defendant Peck had acquired, by an adverse user of forty years, a prescriptive right to a way about 48 rods in length, over a farm now owned by the plaintiff, between a certain lot called the "Jones Lot," which was wholly inclosed by that farm, and the highway. The way was not defined by any worn track, but had always been traveled in substantially the same course, running for half its length through a narrow swale, and connecting with the highway through a certain barway. In that year the grade of the highway was solowered by the town authorities as to make the barway useless, whereupon the then owner of the farm closed it, and opened a new entrance from the highway, by a barway set over 70 feet south of that formerly existing. For seven years thereafter the defendant used the new barway as belonging to his way, adversely, under a claim of right. Then the plaintiff bought the farm, and for four years more Peck continued to use the new barway, with his express approval. At the end of that period the plaintiff chained up and padlocked the gate of the barway, and now sues Peck for breaking the chain in order to get access to his lot.

The owner of land which is subject to a right of way is not bound, unless by virtue of some agreement, to keep the way in repair, or to be at any expense to maintain it in a passable condition. The owner of the right of way may repair it, and do whatever is reasonably necessary to make it suitable and convenient for his use. When the old barway became useless, it was therefore the right of Peck to lower it, and alter the level of his way to correspond with the new grade of the highway. Smith v. Rome, 19 Ga. 89. He preferred to make use of another barway set up by the owner of the farm, over 70 feet distant from the prescriptive bounds of his way, and to this no objection was made for eleven years. When the plaintiff chained up the gate, however, and locked it, he sufficiently manifested his intention that this use should be continued no longer, and effectually revoked any license implied from his previous conduct. "Res ipsa loquitur." Fool v. New Haven & N. Co. 28 Conn. 214, 223. A way by prescription, which runs in a defined course to a fixed point, is no more subject to variation by parol agreements, or by acts and conduct, than if it had been created and so described by deed. The finding of the trial court that the way used from 1885 to 1896 was substantially the same as that used from 1845 to 1885 is an inference from facts which do not warrant it. The law cannot regard a way joining a highway through a certain gate as substantially identical with a way joining it through another gate 70 feet distant. A conclusion as to an ultimate fact, drawn from certain specified evidential facts which are legally incompetent to support it, is a proper subject of review on proceedings in 40 L. R. A.

error. Winsted Hosiery Co. v. New Britain Knitting Co. 69 Conn. 565, 575; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 70 Conn. 159. The right of way which existed in 1895 exists still. The disuse of part of the way which followed the change of the grade of the highway arose from circumstances which exclude any inference of an intent to abandon that part, unless by exchanging it for another way, the right to which should be equally secure. Such an abandonment might have been presumed, if Watrous, who owned the farm in 1885, had then given Peck a deed of the right to use the new barway, or had Peck's user been continued adversely, and under a claim of right, for fifteen years. But so long as it had no other justification than an implied license, or acquiescence for a shorter term, it could not avail to extinguish his original prescriptive right. Different rules might apply where one location of a highway is abandoned for another substituted for it, by acts of dedication, since a dedication once accepted is irrevocable. Jones, Easem. § 429. The defendant's remedy, when he found the gate chained against him, was to have recourse to the way he owned, and cut it down, at the point where the old barway was, to the grade of the highway. Reignolds v. Edwards, Willes, 282. The entrance from the old barway became impassable by the lawful act of the public authorities. The owner of the farm only closed it after it had thus become useless. Had he, without such cause, wrongfully closed it, in order to prevent its lawful use by Peck, and then allowed him for eleven years to pass through the new barway, it may be that in such case the latter could not have been excluded from that mode of access to his way, unless reasonable notice of the intended revocation of license had been previously given. Hamilton v. White, 5 N. Y. 9. But, as things stood, the defendants were guilty of a technical trespass in forcing their way through.

With respect to the claim of estoppel, it is found by the trial court that, before the plaintiff bought from Watrous, he asked Peck if he had "a regular right of way" over the farm, to which he replied in the negative; but that he was not informed of the purpose of the inquiry, and answered it with no intention of misleading, nor did it appear that the plaintiff relied upon the statement in completing his purchase. The question, being, not whether he had a right of way, but whether he had a regular one, was calculated to direct his attention only to the particular description of his right, and he might well have thought that a way acquired by adverse user was not entitled to the name of "regular." No estoppel can be founded on his reply. Danforth v. Adams, 29 Conn. 107. We perceive no reason for bringing separate suits against the Hutchinsens. If the plaintiff desired to establish his title against them also, he should have joined them as co-defendants with Peck. The three suits will be treated as consolidated in this court, and costs taxed in favor of the appellant in one only.

There is error in the judgment appealed from.

The other Judges concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

WESTERN & ATLANTIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,v.
J. C. MORRISON.

(.....Ga.....)

*1 Where, in the trial of an action for damages against a railroad company for personal injuries, the evidence as to the company's alleged negligence was conflicting, it was legitimate for the plaintiff's counsel to argue to the jury that the failure of the defendant to introduce and examine as a witness one of its employees, who was present at the time when the injuries in question were sustained, was a circumstance from which an inference could be drawn that, if this employee had been introduced, and been examined, he would have testified to facts prejudicial to the defendant. This is so, whether the counsel's contention as to this matter was, under all the circumstances in proof, well founded or not; nor was such argument out of order because defendant's counsel had caused the employee in question to be present in court, so that he could have been introduced and examined by the plaintiff's counsel.

2. If, in view of the entire evidence, it was incumbent upon the court to give to the jury any instruction with reference to the defendant's failure to examine such employee as a witness, it was certainly right to refuse to give in charge a request to the effect that the production of the employee in court by the defendant was sufficient to relieve it of any presumption or inference that, in case he had been examined, he would have sworn to facts showing negligence on the part of the defendant.

3. There was no material error in admitting evidence; the requests to charge, so far as pertinent and legal, were covered by the general charge given to the jury; there was, in view of the entire charge, no error in those portions of it complained of in the motion for a new trial; and the verdict was warranted by the evidence.

(Stimmons, Ch. J., dissenting.)

4. It will impart no strength to a defense for the defendant to produce a witness not examined by himself, call attention to his presence, and put him at the service of the plaintiff for examination; but, where this is done, such strength as the defense really has on the evidence before the jury is not subject to be impaired or discounted by any inference to its disadvantage similar to that which might have been drawn from the absence of this witness, had he not been produced or accounted for. If more evidence were needed to establish it, the defense would fail for that reason; if more were not needed, it could not, under these circumstances, be required. No unfavorable inference or presumption could arise from mere failure to examine the witness, and such failure was not legitimate matter for comment by counsel.

(August 5, 1897.)

*Headnotes by LUMPKIN, P. J.

NOTE.—The discussion by the opinions in the above case of the presumptions or inferences to be drawn from failure to examine a witness who is present in court is so full that no attempt to analyze L. R. A.

ERROR to the Atlanta City Court to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Payne & Tye for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Van Epps, Ladson, & Leftwich for defendant in error.

Lumpkin, P. J. :

We shall not discuss in detail the numerous grounds of the motion for a new trial, the overruling of which is the error complained of in the present bill of exceptions. It is a case where an employee of a railroad company, upon conflicting evidence, obtained a recovery for personal injuries. There are no important questions of law involved, except those specially dealt with in the headnotes. The plaintiff's right to a verdict did not turn upon any presumption of negligence raised by law against the defendant. It was a case in which he introduced evidence tending to prove the company's alleged negligence, to which it replied with evidence tending to show due diligence on its part; and it was therefore simply a matter for the jury to determine upon which side the evidence preponderated.

It appears from the record that one Waters, who was an employee of the defendant in the capacity of fireman at the time when the injuries in question were sustained, and who had excellent opportunities for knowing the truth of the matter, was not introduced as a witness at the trial. He was, however, at the instance of the company, present in court, and this fact was known to the plaintiff's counsel. The latter, in his argument to the jury, contended that the failure of the defendant to introduce and examine this witness was a circumstance from which an inference could be drawn that, if he had been so introduced and examined, he would have testified to facts prejudicial to the defendant. The court was requested to compel the plaintiff's counsel to desist from making such an argument, on the ground that it was improper and illegal, and was also requested to declare a mistrial because of such "improper argument." The court held that the argument was not improper, and refused to declare a mistrial because of it. It was urged here that these rulings were both erroneous, for the reason that when the defendant produced the witness in court, so that he could have been introduced and examined by the plaintiffs, if he had chosen to do so, there could be no proper inference that he knew anything which would be detrimental to the company. The court also refused to charge the following written request presented by counsel for the defendant: "As plaintiff's counsel have argued that as only the engineer was examined as a witness, and not the fireman, that this was a circumstance from which the jury might infer that, had the fireman been introduced, this testimony might have shown negligence on the part of the company, I charge you that when the defendant company, in open court, tendered this fireman Waters as a witness to be introduced by plaintiff, if he desired, this was sufficient to relieve defendant of this presumption." While the arguments of counsel should be confined within legitimate bounds, they should not be too greatly restricted. In Spence v. Dasher, 68 Ga. 432, Jackson, J., said: "Counsel should have ample latitude in argument, and this court will not interfere when it is allowed by the presiding judge, except in cases of clear abuse of discretion and serious damage to the party complaining." Again, in Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 278, Justice Blandford remarked: "Counsel are allowed the largest liberty in the argument of cases before juries, and whether the argument be logical or illogical, or whether the inferences and deductions drawn by them are correct or not, this court will have no power to intervene." And in Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 659, the same justice remarked that a certain argument made by counsel "may have been very illogical, but the court could not prevent counsel from drawing illogical deductions from testimony which had been introduced." These are only a few of the instances in which it has been held that considerable latitude is to be allowed counsel in discussing their cases before juries. It is one thing for an attorney to contend that "such and such" a proposition is true, or that "such and such" an inference is deducible from a given state of facts or circumstances, and quite a different thing for the judge to inform the jury that the positions taken by the attorney are correct. If the law imposed upon the judge the duty of interfering with arguments before juries whenever, in his opinion, the reasoning of counsel was unsound, we apprehend that interruptions of this sort would be very frequent indeed.

note the question will be made. For presumption from spoliation of evidence, see note to Hay v. Peterson (Wyo.) 34 L. R. A. 581.

It is not necessary to rule in the present case that the contention of plaintiff's counsel as to the effect of the defendant's failure to introduce the witness Waters was well taken. It was, after all, a matter to be passed upon by the jury. Nor do we think the argument upon this matter was out of order because the defendant's counsel had caused Waters to be present in court so that he could have been introduced and examined by the plaintiff's counsel. Presumptively, all persons will tell the truth when sworn to do so, but we know from experience that it is frequently unwise to call as a witness one who, for any good reason, is likely to be biased or prejudiced in favor of the opposite side. Every lawyer who has had much practice in the courts is well aware of this, and generally declines, unless compelled by circumstances so to do, to call a witness whom he has reason to believe is hostile to his client or friendly to the latter's adversary. Theoretically, one party may be under as much obligation as the other to introduce a witness who was present at a transaction or occurrence in dispute, and failure to do so may be said to cut as hard against the one as the other, or that it should not cut against either, when the witness is in court and ready to be examined; but in spite of all the reasoning and refining which may be had on this subject, and notwithstanding intimations and expressions to the contrary by learned judges, the great fact remains that a large number of witnesses are, for various reasons, more or less biased, and it certainly is true that a party may with more safety introduce a friendly witness than one who is otherwise,—not, necessarily, from a desire to have perjury committed in his favor by the former, or from a fear that it will be committed against him by the latter, but because, as everybody knows, there is much in the manner in which a witness testifies, a great deal often depending upon his emphasis, upon the clearness or uncertainty of his recollection, upon his animus, and upon a hundred other things which cannot well be described, but can readily be imagined, all of which, without bringing him into the attitude of swearing falsely, affect and qualify the force of what he says. The above-mentioned theoretical rule is therefore too broad for universal application, and the lawyer who does not recognize that this is so is apt to make serious blunders in introducing testimony.

As an illustration of the matter with which we are now dealing, suppose there was a matter of fact in controversy between A and B the truth of which was known to no other persons except these two and C a brother of B. A goes on the stand and gives his version of what occurred. B, in his turn, gives an entirely different version, but does not introduce as a witness his brother, C, though the latter is present in court. Is it not a proper matter for contention by A that B failed to introduce his brother because he knew that the brother's testimony would prejudicially affect B's case? And if B's counsel should reply to this, "Why did not A introduce C, unless he feared C's testimony would be detrimental to his case?" could not A properly make reply, "I do not care to go into my opponent's family for a witness?" Other such instances might be given, but it is enough to say that in almost every trial the acts or conduct of either party, bearing directly upon the questions at issue, are legitimate matters of comment. Very frequently, of course, arguments of the nature above indicated should be given little weight, and in each case their value must necessarily depend upon the particular facts and circumstances in proof. We are of the opinion that the judges should have as little to say about matters of this kind as possible. They should not restrain counsel so long as their arguments are kept within reasonable and proper bounds, and they should also be careful not to usurp the functions of the jury in accepting or in disregarding what the counsel have to say. We therefore think, in the present case, that it was certainly right for the judge to refuse to give in charge the request above quoted. It was not for him to say what effect the production of the employee in court by the defendant ought to have had, and he was surely right in declining to instruct the jury that this, of itself, would be sufficient to relieve the defendant of any presumption or inference that, in case he had been examined, he would have sworn to facts showing negligence on its part.

We do not think the case of Davis v. Central R. Co. 75 Ga. 645, relied on by the Chief Justice in support of his dissent, when this case was decided, is controlling upon the question in hand. No point was raised in that case as to the propriety of any argument submitted by counsel, nor did this court, in deciding that case, review any charge, or refusal to charge, by the trial court with respect to the failure of the defendant company to introduce its fireman as a witness. The plaintiffs evidently relied mainly, if not entirely, upon the legal presumption of negligence raised by law against the defendant, and, the verdict being against them, they sought a reversal of the judgment denying them a new trial. We understand their contention to have been that the railroad company could not successfully and completely demonstrate its diligence, and thus overcome the legal presumption against it, without calling as witnesses both the engineer and the fireman who were employed on the locomotive by the running of which the plaintiffs' bull was killed. This court held, as matter of law, that the testimony of a single witness, viz., the engineer, was sufficient to acquit the company of negligence, if the jury chose to believe that witness, and Justice Blandford said they had the right to do this if they thought proper. It is true he did remark that "under the circumstances of this case, the fireman being present and open to plaintiffs, no inference could be drawn against defendant because he was not sworn;" but we are constrained to regard this remark as being merely obiter, the matter to which it relates not being one upon which it was necessary to pass. The real point ruled in that case was that a railroad company, sued for the killing of live stock, and being required to overcome a legal presumption of negligence, was not obliged, in order to do this, to call and examine as witnesses all of its employees who were or might have been cognizant of the facts of the occurrence. The decision rendered holds simply that, in such a case, the company may, if it so desires, rest its defense upon the testimony of a single employee, taking the risk of his being discredited by the jury; and, if the jury choose to believe him, the mere fact that the company did not introduce another of its employees was not, of itself, sufficient cause for setting aside the verdict and awarding a new trial. It will be noted that the headnotes in that case were made by the reporter, and that the opinion itself was the only official utterance of the court. We repeat that, in determining what effect the decision of that case should have on the case now in hand, it must not be overlooked that there was no question whatever with reference to the argument of counsel or to the court's charging, or refusing to charge, as to what weight or importance the jury should attach to the nonintroduction by the defendant of its fireman as a witness.

We deem it unnecessary to the purposes of this discussion to comment at length upon the decision of this court in the case of Anderson v. Savannah Press Pub. Co. (recently decided) 28 S. E. 216, to which, we are inclined formed, the Chief Justice will refer in his dissenting opinion. We are unable to find in that case any intimation of a principle in conflict with what is here laid down; and, if the opinion of Justice Atkinson therein contains anything at all relevant to the present question, it supports the view of the same entertained by the majority, for the reason that in that case the rule is distinctly recognized that the nonproduction of evidence within the control of a party may authorize the jury to make inferences unfavorable to such party. The Chief Justice will, in his dissenting opinion, also refer to the cases of Washington v. State, 87 Ga. 12, and Johnson v. State, 88 Ga. 606, and make certain extracts from the opinion therein. Read with reference to the questions under discussion in those cases, it is hoped that the language then used was appropriate and pertinent; but, whether so or not, it is difficult to perceive how it can throw much light upon the present controversy, since the question it involves could not possibly have been in mind when those cases were being considered. It is not desired to comment further upon them except to say that in the former, which was a case of arson, the language of the writer which the Chief Justice will quote was used in endeavoring to establish the proposition that the trial judge erred in allowing the solicitor general in his argument to the jury to state "that frequent burnings had occurred throughout the country," and make this statement the basis of an argument for a strict enforcement of the law; and in the latter the question under discussion was whether an admission by the accused resulted, either from a failure of his counsel to examine the state's witnesses concerning a fact which the court had ruled to be inadmissible, or from a failure to introduce the same witnesses in behalf of the accused, for the purpose of proving this identical fact, after their exclusion as witnesses for the state. Immediately following that portion of the writer's opinion in the Johnson Case which the Chief Justice will quote are the following words: "Let us sum up the matter in a nutshell: The solicitor general offered to prove a fact by one witness, and stated he could prove it by several others. The opposing counsel objected to the testimony, and the court sustained the objection. Then, because this counsel declined to examine these witnesses on the very matter which, at his instance, the court had ruled was not then a proper matter for investigation, and because he refused to introduce these witnesses as his own and examine them about this very matter, it is argued that he thus admits for his client the truth of the thing he had induced the court to rule out. It would be dangerous, indeed, to object to testimony and succeed in having the objection sustained, or to decline to introduce hostile witnesses, if either of these things resulted in establishing, as against the party so objecting or declining the truth of that which from his standpoint and in the opinion of the court was inadmissible altogether." We do not think that any decision of this court, upon a careful examination thereof, will be found contrary in principle to what is now decided upon the point in controversy.

Judgment affirmed.

Simmons, Ch. J., dissenting:

The controlling question presented for determination in this case is whether, under the circumstances attending the trial, the defendant can properly be said to have forfeited all right to have the merits of his defense passed upon in the light of the evidence submitted, unprejudiced by any imputation of bad faith and duplicity on its part, or was unjustly and undeservedly forced to go before the jury under the cloud of a suspicion that it had wilfully endeavored to conceal and suppress the truth, in the hope that it might thus be able to impose upon the court and jury and perpetrate a fraud upon its adversary.

Obviously, the solution of this question must depend upon whether or not the familiar maxim, Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatores, as now liberally interpreted and applied, can be invoked in a case such as that with which we are called upon to deal. As a general rule it is the privilege of a party to rest his case upon such evidence only as he may deem proper and expedient to offer in his behalf. "All the law requires is sufficient proof; and a party is not bound to introduce all the witnesses to the facts." Jackson v. State, 77 Ala. 25, citing Patton v. Rambo, 20 Ala. 485. "It is the privilege of a suitor to call every person as a witness who may give material evidence in his favor, and, if he omits to do so, he does it at his peril; but there is no duty, and an omission to call all that are within reach does not necessarily imply a fraud, or a design to suppress the truth, or to impose a falsehood upon the jury." Bleeker v. Johnston, 69 N. Y. 309. As a matter of course, the evidence relied on must be competent and admissible, under the established rules of practice, one of which is that the best or highest evidence is always required. "This rule does not demand the greatest amount of evidence which can possibly be given of any fact; but its design is to prevent the introduction of any which, from the nature of the case, supposes that better evidence is in possession of the party;" and "where there is no substitution of evidence, but only a selection of weaker, instead of stronger, proofs, or an omission to supply all the proofs capable of being produced, the rule is not infringed." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 82, citing numerous authorities. Nor is a party under any obligation to aid his adversary "in making out his case" (Carter v. Chambers, 79 Ala. 232, citing McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106); and a bare suspicion that the defendant, if legally called upon to do so, would be unable to vindicate himself, does not amount to substantive proof of facts it is necessary for the plaintiff to affirmatively establish, and cannot supply the place of competent evidence (Meagley v. Hoyt, 125 N. Y. 771; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Brown, 91 Va. 668; Diel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37 Mo. App. 454). "To so hold would be substituting conjecture for proof." Arbuckle v. Templeton, 85 Vt. 206. Indeed a defendant may, and frequently does, rest his defense on what he considers the weakness of his adversary's testimony, as he interprets it, or on the exculpatory features it presents." Carter v. Chambers, 79 Ala. 232. In a word, a party is ordinarily left entirely free to conduct his cause in such manner, not contrary to the prescribed rules of practice, as he may deem best calculated to promote his interests. To this general rule there is but one exception, viz.: that principle of law which the maxim above quoted was intended to expound,—"Every presumption is made against a wrongdoer." Broom, Legal Maxims, 938. While under no duty to aid his adversary in making out his case, a party is not at liberty, by a resort to questionable means, to throw obstacles in his path. Hence, "if a man destroys a thing that is designed to be evidence against himself, a small matter will supply it," said Holt, Lord Ch. J., in [Anonymous] 1 Ld. Raym. 781. "This rule is evidently based on the principle that no man shall be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong." Chamberlayne's Best, Ev. § 412. Nor does it matter that resort is had to passive, rather than to active, measures calculated to defeat the ends of justice. Thus, wilfully withholding evidence is treated as an equivalent to an attempt to suppress or destroy it. Lawson, Presumptive Ev. 120 et seq.; Broom, Legal Maxims, supra. Especially, when the evidence withheld is primary, and weaker proofs are relied on; "for when it is apparent that better evidence is withheld, it is fair to presume that the party had some sinister motive for not producing it, and that, if offered, his design would be frustrated." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 82. "The conduct of a party in omitting to produce that evidence, in elucidation of the subject-matter in dispute, which is within his power, and which rests peculiarly within his own knowledge, frequently affords occasion for presumption against him, since it raises a strong suspicion that such evidence, if adduced, would operate to his prejudice." Starkie, Ev. p. 75. Accordingly, it has become a fixed rule that "the nonproduction of papers, essential in the trial of a cause, which are proved to be in the possession of one of the parties, unexplained, raises a presumption that they contain something which would tend to the disadvantage of the party retaining them if they were produced." Eckel v. Eckel, 49 N. J. Eq. 587. And since the privilege has been conferred upon parties of testifying in their own behalf, the rule has been extended so that "when one party to an action has in his exclusive possession a knowledge of facts which would tend, if disclosed, to throw light upon the transactions which form the subject of controversy, his failure to offer . . . [himself as a witness] may afford presumptions against him." Kirby v. Tallmadge, 160 U. S. 379, 40 L. ed. 463. To the same effect, see Payne v. Crawford, 102 Ala. 388; Heflebower v. Detrick, 27 W. Va. 16; McDonough v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 92; Leeper v. Bates, 85 Mo. 228; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 117 Mo. 261; Throckmorton v. Chapman, 65 Conn. 442. But "the silence of a party to an action against whom damaging facts are called out in evidence is not equivalent to an admission of their truthfulness" (Enos v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 4 S. D. 640), nor will it have the effect of shifting the burden of proof (Werner v. Litzsinger, 45 Mo. App. 106). For thus applying the rule in cases where the party himself has an exclusive knowledge of material facts in controversy, but nevertheless declines to testify, there is much reason; for wilfully withholding evidence locked in one's breast tends as effectually to cast a suspicion upon the righteousness of his cause as would the suppression of documentary evidence securely hidden away in a secret drawer, or guarded by the locks and bars of a private vault. However, in a case where a person, not a party to the cause, is not produced as a witness, although probably cognizant of facts material to the issue, this rule may or may not be justly invoked, and therefore due caution should be observed in its application. Ordinarily, the failure to call as a witness one who is equally within the control of both parties will be no ground for any presumption against either party. Diel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 37 Mo. App. 454; State v. Rosier, 55 Iowa, 517; Miller v. Dayton, 57 Iowa, 423, 426, 427; State v. Cousins, 58 Iowa, 250; Horowitz v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. 18 Misc. 24; People v. McWhorter, 4 Barb. 438. Certainly, "the mere omission of a party to a civil action to call a witness who, at the most, has no other or better knowledge of the matter in dispute than those who are produced and give evidence, is not necessarily suspicious." Bleeker v. Johnston, 69 N. Y. 312. And to the same effect, see Will's Circumstantial Ev. 141, 142. "Whatever inferences may be drawn against a party by reason of his failure to produce evidence in his control are allowable only on the theory that he wilfully withholds such evidence." Cartier v. Troy Lumber Co. 138 Ill. 534, 14 L. R. A. 470. "The noncalling of a witness . . . will not justify an arbitrary presumption of suppression." 2 Whart. Ev. § 1267. Even though there be "a conflict of testimony, the nonintroduction by either party of a witness who, if he was called, could shed light on the matter in controversy, does not warrant a presumption in favor of either plaintiff or defendant. It only warrants a presumption against both" (19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 72, note); for, as was pertinently remarked in Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, if a person be "within reach of the process of the court," either party may, with abundant reason, be said to have "equal facilities for bringing . . . [him] into court as a witness; and the mere fact that either . . . [fails] to do so . . . [raises] no presumption that . . . [this person] would testify against their particular theory" of the case. The rule in question must be given "a reasonable construction;" and, "where the witness is 'subject to the call of either party,' no inference can be drawn from a failure to produce him." Taylor, Ev. 9th ed. 183⁴, note. In this view Mr. Lawson also concurs. Lawson, Presumptive Ev. 135, 137. "The presumption is always in favor of honesty and fair dealing, and remains available to the party in whose favor it arises, until overcome by countervailing evidence." 1 Rice, Ev. pp. 96, 97. Hence "it is error" to indulge any unfavorable "inference merely from the fact that a party fails to call a certain witness. No prejudice should arise from such failure, unless the witness be a material one, and presumptively under the special control of the party." 8 Rice, Ev. § 158. Especially in the administration of criminal law is the rule "to be cautiously applied, and only in cases where it is manifest that proofs are in the power of the accused, not accessible to the prosecution." Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 316, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

The rule which authorizes unfavorable inferences to be drawn against a party who resorts to dishonest methods in the conduct of his cause rests upon the ground of "natural equity." Chamberlayne's Best, Ev. § 411. Such inferences can be indulged only upon the idea that they frequently become "essential to the pure administration of justice." Greenl. Ev. § 82; 1 Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 408. Where the reason of the rule ends, the rule itself must end also. Therefore it "ceases to operate when no presumption of fraud, or of sinister purpose, can arise." Jackson v. State, 77 Ala. 25. As where, for instance, a person not called would have been incompetent to testify (Adams v. Main, 3 Ind. App. 232); or could not do so with propriety (Gardner v. Benedict, 75 Hun, 204), or where a person had been subpoenaed, and was absent through no fault of a party (Weatherford, M. & N. W. R. Co. v. Duncan, 88 Tex. 611; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Alexander, 89 Hun, 449), or could not be found (McGuire v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 42 N. Y. S. R. 824). A reasonable construction and just and intelligent application of the rule is to be found in the decisions of the supreme court of Louisiana. In Day v. New Orleans P. R. Co. 35 La. Ann. 694, where the plaintiff sought to recover for stock killed at night by one of the defendant's trains,—relying, perforce, upon circumstantial evidence only,—it was held that "the failure of a railroad company to introduce the testimony of its employees who were on the train at the time of the accident raises a presumption of negligence against the company." The defendant knew the particular train which killed the stock, and the names and identity of those of its employees who were on that train and witnessed the occurrence in question, and therefore had it peculiarly within its power to produce evidence in regard thereto. The plaintiff, on the other hand, was at a great disadvantage; for, while the process of the court was at his command, his ability to ascertain the names and whereabouts of the witnesses to the facts was by no means the same as that of the company, which could hardly have been expected to furnish him, in advance of the trial, with any information on the subject. In Petz v. St. Charles Street R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 541, it did not, however, satisfactorily appear that the defendant was attempting to suppress evidence, and the court correctly held that the rule announced in Day's Case applied only where it was shown that persons in the employ of the defendant, but not produced as witnesses, were present and saw what occurred, or where it was "made evident that they had knowledge which the employer desired to conceal." And in the later case of Sauer v. Union Oil Co. 43 La. Ann. 699, this position was adhered to. All that appeared as suggesting any reason why a certain employee of the defendant should have been called was that the plaintiff testified that this employee "was within 25 feet of him when he was struck" on the head by a piece of machinery alleged to have been defective. Accordingly, the court said: "It is not shown that . . . [this employee] remained in the employ [of the company], or was accessible, or was even living at the time of the trial; nor is there any showing that he was observing plaintiff when the accident occurred. It is plaintiff's case that needs additional proof, not defendant's. There is no ground for the application of any presumption in such a case." Under facts similar to those appearing in Day's Case, 35 La. Ann. 694, Judge Caldwell, in a case before the United States circuit court of appeals, held that the defendant's "failure to produce the engineer as a witness to rebut the inferences raised by the circumstantial evidence would justify the jury in assuming that his evidence, instead of rebutting such inferences, would support them." Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 10 U. S. App. 640, 54 Fed. Rep. 481, 4 C. C. A. 454. Analogous cases, in which the rule seems to have been understood and correctly applied, are The Fred M. Laurence, 15 Fed. Rep. 685, where the facts concerning a collision between two vessels were in dispute, and Schmier v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 558, where an infant was injured by the running of defendant's locomotive. In Bent v. Lewis, 88 Mo. 462, the rule was invoked against the plaintiff, who relied "on evidence circumstantial in kind and of a vague and indefinite character, when, by his own admission, he . . . [had] it in his power to produce positive and direct proof of the facts." In Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 156, and Id. 95 Mich. 77, the plaintiff absented herself from the trial although she was the only person able to give direct and positive testimony concerning the effect of a fall she received, which she alleged was the result of the defendant's negligence, and the court justly held that her unexplained absence authorized an unfavorable inference as to the justice of her cause, since she voluntarily chose to rely on circumstantial, in lieu of direct, proof that this fall, rather than other natural causes, produced the peculiar affliction from which she suffered. On the other hand, there are decisions which more than justify the observation that, "however salutary, and in general equitable, the maxim, Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatores, must be acknowledged to be, it has been made the subject of very fair and legitimate doubt whether it has not occasionally been carried too far." Chamberlayne's Best, Ev. § 414. Apparently, without regard to whether the evidence could properly be said to be within the exclusive control of one party, and not accessible to his adversary, it has been held that an unfavorable presumption arises merely from the nonproduction of an employee (Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 127 N. Y. 40; Wimer v. Smith, 22 Or. 469), or husband (Toomey v. Lyman, 40 N. Y. S. R. 611), or father of the prosecutrix (Rice v. Com. 102 Pa. 408), or father and grantor whose deed is attacked (Hall v. Vanderpool, 156 Pa. 132), or alleged paramour of a party, in a libel for divorce on the ground of adultery (Kenyon v. Kenyon, 88 Hun. 211). It has even been held that, as the "plaintiffs had a right to call upon defendants to produce" certain documentary evidence in their exclusive possession, "and not having given them that notice, the defendants . . . [were] entitled to whatever benefit . . . [might] be derived from that omission." Prick v. Barbour, 64 Pa. 120. And in Seward v. Garlin, 33 Vt. 584, it was held that an unfavorable inference would arise from the failure of a party to interrogate a witness concerning a matter as to which "the party himself had testified, and that such omission might "be weighed by the jury as a circumstance tending to show that the testimony of the party upon such point . . . [was] not true." The supreme court of West Virginia seems to have adopted the arbitrary rule that the duty of calling a witness accessible to either side invariably devolves exclusively upon the party carrying the burden of proof, and that a failure to produce such a witness, unless explained, "raises the conclusive presumption that . . . [his] testimony, if introduced, would be adverse to the pretensions of such party." Union Trust Co. v. McClellan, 40 W. Va. 405.

To hold that, merely because a person be in the employ of one of the parties, he belongs to or is "evidence within the exclusive control" of such party, "not accessible to the other side," offends reason and perverts the truth. "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, . . . shall exist within the United States." To swear in behalf of his master is not—at least, ought not to be—a duty within the scope of a servant's employment. So it cannot be arbitrarily assumed that his employer has hired or purchased outright his testimony, and therefore controls or owns it absolutely. Nor, ordinarily, can a party's relatives logically be considered as being in his exclusive possession, and unavailable as witnesses to his adversary. An omission to call a relative is not necessarily even suspicious; certainly it does not amount to substantive or persuasive proof of an attempt to suppress evidence. There may often be cogent reasons, into which no improper motive enters, why a party may not wish to vouch for the credit of a person who, through perhaps no fault of his own, happens to be related to him, by blood or marriage, in a more or less remote degree. Only in a measure more absurd is the arbitrary rule that it is incumbent upon a party claiming under a deed to call as a witness his grantor, in the event the other side may choose to make an attack upon its validity. By a parity of reasoning, one's tailor becomes one's bounden witness if, perchance, one's clothes become the subject-matter of controversy in a contest with one's adversary. None of the other very remarkable decisions last above cited can with profit be seriously discussed.

A review of the Georgia decisions bearing on the subject now under investigation shows that, thus far, this court has succeeded admirably in steering clear of the judicial blunders into which some of the courts of this country have fallen. In Doe, Hollis, v. Roe, 36 Ga. 468-473, Walker, J., announced the general rule that "a party has the right to select such competent testimony as he may see proper, and if he can, by any legal testimony, establish the truth of his allegations, the jury should not be told that the introduction of such testimony, rather than some other testimony which the opposite party insists would be stronger, is a circumstance against the party. Parties have the right to introduce legal testimony to establish the truth of their cases. If the evidence be competent, pertinent to the issue to be tried, and makes clear the point in controversy, this is sufficient, and the jury ought not to be told that it is of an unreliable character." The exception to this general rule, viz., that "failure to produce evidence within the power of a party" raises a presumption "that the evidence if produced, would be prejudicial to the party," was recognized and correctly applied in Nicol v. Crittenden, 55 Ga. 497. "The evidence showed that Kimball had made to Crittenden a bill of sale for the property in dispute, or for a part of it at least; that bill of sale was not produced on the trial, and no attempt was made to account for its nonproduction." See page 501. So, also, in Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 225, where it appeared that a receipt contained "the contract in the main on which the issue in the case" depended, the court properly held that if this paper was in the "possession of defendant or his counsel, and not produced, counsel for plaintiff . . . [might] call the attention of the jury to the fact as a suspicious circumstance, unless the court had ruled that it need not be produced." Again, in Gainesville, J. & S. R. Co. v. Wall, 75 Ga. 282, where the plaintiff sought damages for the killing of a cow by one of the company's trains, it was held: "Where the engineer and fireman were always present on the engine, but only the former was sworn as a witness, and the absence of the latter was not accounted for, this was a circumstance from which the jury might infer that, had the other witness been introduced, his testimony might have shown negligence on the part of the company." This was a case similar to that of Dry v. New Orleans P. R. Co., discussed above, where it was peculiarly within the power of the defendant to produce direct and positive evidence of the facts in issue. This is true, also, of the case of Hoffer v. Gladden, 75 Ga. 532, where it was said that "failure to produce testimony is a badge of fraud, where the bona fides of the transaction is in issue, and witnesses who ought to be able to explain it are in reach." There, certain creditors attacked as fraudulent a mortgage executed by their debtor, a corporation. "The same counsel represented the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee," but neither the latter, nor any officer or agent of the mortgagor, was present to testify, nor did counsel offer in evidence the interrogatories of his clients, although it was peculiarly within their power to explain the suspicious circumstances under which the mortgage was executed, if in fact it evidenced a bona fide transaction. On the other hand, there are a number of cases reported wherein it was ruled that this exception to the general rule did not apply. One of these is Schnell v. Toomer, 56 Ga. 168, in which it was said: "Where it does not appear that the party holds back evidence within his power to produce, the nonproduction of more full and definite evidence that he presents, raises no presumption against him." Another is the case of Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Gray, 77 Ga. 440, in which the subject is fully and intelligently discussed by Mr. Justice Hall. His statement of the rule governing a case wherein it appears that a party has wilfully withheld or suppressed evidence is now to be found embodied in § 5163 of our new Civil Code. As to the application of that rule, he says: "Ordinarily, and except in specified cases, one credible witness would be deemed sufficient to establish a fact. Code, §§ 3754, 3755. Generally it would seem that all persons having knowledge of the transaction need not be produced. . . . and that an inference unfavorable to the party repelling . . . [a disputable presumption relied on by his opponent] would not be warranted because he failed to produce on the trial all persons who were cognizant of the facts from which the presumption to be rebutted arose. . . . The objection here urged seems to be as to the deficient quantity rather than the quality of the testimony. That all the evidence which would have repelled the presumption raised by the casualty against the railroad was not produced, would, upon principle, scarcely seem to warrant a presumption that the company purposely withheld" evidence from the jury. "The principle relied on in this case is, at most, an exception to the general rule, and should be resorted to only in cases where the facts are similar to those in which it has been recognized and enforced." Neither the engineer nor the fireman was produced. It appeared, however, that the former had left the service of the company, had removed to another state, and could not be located; "and that the fireman, at the time the damage was done, was on the bottom of the tender, attending to his duties, and could not have seen the animal [plaintiff's cow] on the track as the train approached it." Our decisions are all fully in accord with the doctrine, above announced, that, where it does not appear that a party is acting in bad faith in selecting and offering the evidence upon which he elects to rely, no unfavorable inferences can be drawn against him. Thus, in Harrison v. Kiser, 79 Ga. 588, it was held that the defendant could not be said to be withholding evidence simply because she did not produce a written contract in her possession, when the plaintiff himself had proved that the writing contained a stipulation the effect of which would be to relieve her from all liability. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kane, 92 Ga. 188-193, 22 L. R. A. 315, it was ruled that, as the plaintiff herself had alleged a fact upon which the company based its defense, "the defendant consequently had a right to rely upon this allegation as an admitted fact, and no unfavorable inference could therefore be drawn against the company because of any failure on its part to call as witnesses its own employees to prove this fact." And, in order to remove any suspicion as to his good faith in conducting his cause, it is always the right of a party to explain his failure to call as a witness a person who, though shown to be cognizant of facts material to the issue, is not produced by him. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Garner, 91 Ga. 27. If the foregoing decisions can possibly be regarded as failing to dissipate all doubt as to the law on this subject which obtains in Georgia, a casual examination of the recent case of Anderson v. Savannah Press

Pub. Co. (Ga.) 28 S. E. 216, in which Mr. Justice Atkinson, in behalf of a full bench as at present constituted, pronounced the opinion of the court, will suffice to relieve the matter of all difficulty.

In the present case, the plaintiff, who, at the time of the injury complained of, was in the employ of the defendant in the capacity of "coupler and switchman," testified: "Dora Maner was my conductor. . . . The balance of the crew were Lawrence Milam, engineer; Wallace Waters, fireman; Mullins, coupler; and one Mr. Pitman was the other helper." Though he knew each and all of these persons perfectly well, the plaintiff did not undertake to assign any reason why he could not have secured the presence in court of any one of them whom he may have desired to appear as a witness in his behalf,—did not even pretend that any one of them was inaccessible to him. He did call as a witness Mullins, the coupler, and elected to stand on the latter's testimony, in addition to his own, with respect to the cause of the injury. The company introduced its conductor, who had, if anything, even a better opportunity than did the plaintiff's witness to observe everything that occurred; also its engineer, who was charged with negligently running its locomotive, and certainly ought to have known the manner in which it was run; also Pitman, the helper, who was at the time on the engine, and had equally as good an opportunity to know the truth in this regard. In addition, the defendant put upon the stand a number of expert witnesses, whose testimony tended to show that it was a physical impossibility for the casualty to have happened from the causes and in the manner testified to by the plaintiff and his witness. The defendant did not, however, introduce its fireman, Waters, who, upon the occasion in question, appears to have been at his post of duty on the engine. There was no showing on the part of the plaintiff that this witness had, at any time prior to or up to the date of the trial, been inaccessible to him. Indeed, the plaintiff closed his case without any attempt to show that Waters was within the jurisdiction of the court, or longer in the company's employ, or within its reach, or even in life. This being so, could it be said, with any degree of honesty and fairness, that a reasonable suspicion of duplicity and cunning artifice hung over the defendant, and cast a legitimate doubt upon the righteousness of the cause it was endeavoring to sustain?

This inquiry, though it seems naturally to suggest itself in this connection, is not, however, the precise question presented by the case at bar. Consequently it need not be discussed, as any attempt to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion in regard thereto might be considered as partaking of the nature of "obiter." It further appears from the record now before us, under the certificate of the presiding judge, that "counsel for defendant, just before the close of testimony for defendant called into the court-room a witness who had been sworn and put under the rule. When he appeared in the presence of the court and jury, counsel for defendant stated: 'This is the fireman of the crew, and we tender him to the plaintiff only to relieve ourselves from the presumption that would be against us if we did not produce him. If we put him up, it would be cumulative.'" At the risk of being understood as undertaking to decide a question not presented, it may here be remarked, parenthetically, that the closing sentence of the above statement was grossly improper. See Johnson v. State, 88 Ga. 606. This fact should not, however, influence our decision of the point actually made. Johnson v. Slappey, 85 Ga. 576; Bennett v. State, 86 Ga. 401-405, 12 L. R. A. 499. The question is: The plaintiff having declined to avail himself of the opportunity thus presented of adding to the evidence already introduced by him, did the mere failure of the company to itself put Waters on the stand indicate and furnish proof of an intention on its part to wilfully suppress the truth, or to withhold from its adversary the means of possessing himself of evidence by which the truth could be established? The correct answer to this question is to be found in the decision rendered by this court in the case of Davis v. Central R. Co. 75 Ga. 645, wherein it was said: "If the fireman had not been accounted for by the defendant, then the jury, on the trial of the case, might have inferred that he had been kept away because he knew something which might have been damaging to defendant. . . . But, under the circumstances of this case, the fireman being present and open to plaintiffs, no inference could be drawn against defendant because he was not sworn." As the official report sufficiently indicates (and as the record of file in this court conclusively shows), there was in that case, as in the present, "a painful, square conflict" in the testimony. Nevertheless, as it had a right to do, the company chose to rely upon a single witness,—its engineer,—though its fireman was also at hand. It was insisted by the plaintiff in error that the company, in order to fully vindicate its diligence, was under a positive legal duty to also introduce its fireman; but the court held that this was not so. Quite naturally, this decision called for the expression of some legal reason upon which it could rest. Accordingly, the rule of law was invoked that, unless certain evidence be peculiarly within the control of one of the parties and inaccessible to the other, no duty devolves itself upon the one rather than upon the other to produce such evidence or to lay it before the jury, and a mere failure to do so will not justify an unfavorable inference against either party. Incidentally, of course, this involved the decision of the collateral question presented by the peculiar facts of that case, viz., whether a person in attendance upon the court as a witness, and known to both sides, can properly be said to be accessible to either, not under the exclusive control of one only of the parties. The decision in that case follows the doctrine laid down in Emory v. Smith, 54 Ga. 273, which was a suit defended by an executrix, who "was present in court at the trial," but was not introduced as a witness. It did not appear that she had any personal knowledge of the facts in controversy, and consequently it could not with fairness be said that her failure to offer herself as a witness amounted to a wilful attempt to withhold evidence from the jury. Accordingly it was held reversible error for the trial judge "to charge the jury, in effect, that if the executrix could, by going on the stand as a witness, clear up any doubts there might be in the case, the jury might take her failure thus to be a witness into consideration, and might infer from such failure against her." Commenting upon this branch of the case, McCay, J., pertinently remarked: "The plaintiff had a right to call her; why not put the presumption on him also?" In Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 473, it was held: "There is no invariable presumption of law that evidence is true because a party does not rebut it when in his power. Nor is a party to the cause bound to offer himself as a witness at the peril of having everything taken against him which he might, as a witness, contradict." The trial judge was requested but refused to charge "that if a party has it in his power to deny or rebut evidence which tends to disprove his case, and does not do so, the presumption is that such evidence is true,—the propounder, Jacob S. Davitte, being in the court and attending the trial, but not testifying in the case." It did not appear that this party had any better knowledge of the facts in issue than did the witnesses upon whose testimony he chose to rely, nor that he had an exclusive knowledge of facts he desired to conceal. Therefore this court held that the trial court properly refused to charge as requested. The decision rendered in Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, is also in point. There the court held that the omission of the accused "to avail himself of the privilege allowed by statute to make a statement to the jury . . . [was] not a matter to be considered by them in determining defendants' guilt," and it was error for the trial judge to charge that the jury might take that fact into consideration, in passing upon the case.

The position taken by this court in the cases above cited is in perfect accord with outside authority. Thus, in Seovill v. Baldwin, 27 Conn. 316, a leading case which has been extensively cited as laying down the correct rule, it was held: "The omission of a party to call a witness who might equally have been called by the other party is no ground for a presumption that the testimony of the witness would have been unfavorable. The jury have no right to presume anything as to his knowledge of any facts important to the case." In Bates v. Morris, 101 Ala. 282, it was ruled that "where a person, whose evidence would be competent for either party in an action, was in court during the trial and equally accessible to both parties, it is error to charge the jury that they could draw an unfavorable inference against one of the parties for failing to call such person as a witness; and this is true notwithstanding the witness referred to was the husband and grantor of the claimant in a claim suit, where the transfer from him is attacked as fraudulent." The reasoning employed by Chief Justice Stone, who pronounced the decision of the court, is simply unanswerable. The following brief extract from the opinion filed by him will suffice to justify this broad assertion: "The husband was in court, accessible to either party, and a competent witness to the same extent for the one party as for the other; and it is difficult to assign any just reason for imputing the failure to examine him as a witness, as a matter of evidential inference, or as ground of unfavorable presumption for or against the one party, which would not apply to the other." For other cases precisely in point, see Pollak v. Harmon, 94 Ala. 420; Haynes v. McRae, 101 Ala. 318; Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 3; Nelms v. Steiner Bros. 113 Ala. 562-576; People v. Sweeney, 41 Hun, 833-843.

It cannot be said in the present case that the defendant, having "more certain and satisfactory" proof within its power, relied upon evidence of a "weaker and more inferior nature" (Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Gray, 77 Ga. 444; Haynes v. McRae, 101 Ala. 318; Mooney v. Holcomb, 15 Or. 639; Wills, Circumstantial Ev. 142); for "all the evidence was the same in degree, and that of the absent defendant [fireman] would but have been cumulative" (Bleeker v. Johnston, 69 N. Y. 812). Of course, an unfavorable inference may arise where it appears that a party "in selecting his witnesses to reply to" evidence introduced on the other side deliberately "chose those who did not know the material facts, rather than those who did, though the latter were equally accessible. Stevenson v. State, 88 Ga. 575. The same is true where a person having full and positive knowledge of the matter in question is not called as a witness, though within reach of the defendant who introduces no direct proof whatever in reply to positive evidence adduced against him, but confines his defense to an attempt to successfully attack the credit of the witnesses sworn in behalf of his adversary. Hunt v. State, 81 Ga. 140-143. As was said by Lord Mansfield in Blatch v. Archer, 1 Cowp. 63: "It is certainly a maxim that all evidence is to be weighed according to the proof which it was in the power of one side to have produced, and in the power of the other to have contradicted." Obviously, however, this maxim can have no application to a case, like the one at bar, where both parties deliberately declined to avail themselves of identically the same evidence, equally within the power of either to introduce; for the omission of the one party to offer such evidence is fully met and evenly counterbalanced by a like omission on the part of his opponent. Suppose the interrogatories of a material witness, sued out at the instance of one party, had been duly returned into court, but were not introduced by such party, nor by his opponent, though equally accessible to the latter, or suppose it appeared on the trial that one of the parties had in his possession a paper which would probably throw light on the issue, which, though he did not elect to introduce it in his own behalf, he produced and tendered to the opposite side, who, without even glancing at the contents of the paper, declined to lay it before the jury; in neither event would there be ground for suspicion that either party was endeavoring fraudulently to suppress the truth or to gain an unconscionable advantage over the other. On principle, the present case cannot be distinguished, for the plaintiff was afforded full opportunity to "examine" the witness tendered him and thus ascertain his evidentiary contents. This, counsel for the plaintiff deliberately made his election not to do, fearing, as he practically confesses in his written argument presented to this court, that the "bearded stranger" convoyed "inside the bar," and indentified by defendant's counsel, "with unsworn lips" (but standing in his place) "as the one who was fireman on the engine on the night of the injury," would not testify to facts prejudicial to the company, and that the latter, in thus offering this witness to its adversary, planned to entrap the plaintiff into a misadventure. Nevertheless, counsel for the plaintiff, in argument before the jury, insisted, with unbecoming inconsistency, "that the thing that showed that plaintiff had the best end of this case was the production of Waters by the defendant, and defendant's failure to put him up as a witness; . . . that the failure by defendant to introduce Waters as a witness was an inference of negligence on defendant's part, and a presumption that Waters knew something which, if he told, would hurt defendant's side." Defendant's counsel promptly "requested the court to stop plaintiff's counsel from making such an argument, as it was improper and illegal," and "also requested the court to order a mistrial by reason of this improper argument." But "the court held that plaintiff's counsel had the right to make such an argument, and allowed plaintiff's counsel to proceed with his argument on this line, and refused to declare a mistrial, or correct or stop plaintiff's counsel from further argument on this line." Subsequently, at the proper time, defendant presented to the court, in writing, a request to charge, expressed in language which was appropriate and entirely in accord with the law as above announced, to the effect that "when the defendant company, in open court, tendered this fireman, Waters, as a witness to be introduced by plaintiff, if he desired, this was sufficient to relieve the defendant" of the unfavorable presumption insisted on by plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury. Not only was this request refused, but the trial judge failed to give its equivalent, or, indeed, any charge whatsoever upon the subject.

The duty of a trial judge in cases where counsel oversteps the bounds within which it is his legal duty to confine his professional zeal is thus plainly pointed out in § 4419 of the Civil Code: "Where counsel, in the hearing of the jury, make statements of prejudicial matters which are not in evidence, it is the duty of the court to interpose and prevent the same; and, on objection made, he shall also rebuke the same, and by all needful and proper instructions to the jury endeavor to remove the improper impressions from their minds; or, in his discretion, he may order a mistrial, if plaintiff's attorney is the offender." The question, therefore, resolves itself into the inquiry whether or not, as is claimed, the plaintiff's counsel, "in the hearing of the jury [made] statements of prejudicial matters which [were] not in evidence." It must not be overlooked that "counsel should have ample latitude in argument." Spence v. Dasher, 68 Ga. 432. To confine counsel to the restricted realms of logic would be a practical denial of this privilege. So it was said in Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 659, that "the court could not prevent counsel from drawing illogical deductions from testimony which had been introduced." As a matter of course, facts not proved cannot be discussed; only "illogical conditions from facts proved may be insisted on (Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 278); for there is a line of practice in this state to the effect that counsel are not at liberty to "travel outside the case." See Young v. State, 65 Ga. 595; Wade v. State, 65 Ga. 756; Johnson v. Slappey, 85 Ga. 576; Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Powell, 89 Ga. 601; Port Royal & W. C. R. Co. v. Davis, 95 Ga. 293. This rule was thus stated by Mr. Justice Lumpkin in Washington v. State, 87 Ga. 15, 16: "It is the well-settled policy of this court that counsel in the argument of cases should confine their remarks to the law and the evidence, and that in no instance should they be permitted to comment upon extraneous facts prejudicial to the interests or rights of a party, over his objection, unless such facts be of a kind of which judicial cognizance may be taken without proof." The following instances in which the above rule has been invoked will serve to illustrate its intent and meaning, and throw some light upon the question whether or not it is applicable to the facts of the case at bar. In Bailey v. Ogden, 75 Ga. 877, counsel for plaintiff insisted upon a right to comment, in his argument before the jury, "upon the law that, when a paper under which a party claimed rights was proved to exist and the same was not offered in evidence, the legal presumption was that it contained something adverse to the" interests of such party: but the trial judge stopped him saying: "All the evidence concerning a will in this case was ruled out on your motion, and, unless you consent for that to go in, you are not authorized to discuss that question, and the jury cannot consider it." The ruling of the trial judge was upheld by this court. In Blackman v. State, 78 Ga. 592, where before the jury was impaneled, the defendant made a motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses, and the court delayed the case and sent for and procured such witnesses, but on the trial they were not introduced, it was held error to permit state's counsel, over objection, "to refer in his argument to what defendant, in his motion for continuance, had said he could prove, and to mention that the defendant had failed to make such proof, and insist upon this as an evidence of guilt." A new trial was ordered by this court solely upon the ground of the error thus committed. In Robinson v. State, 82 Ga. 535, it was held that state's counsel had no right to "argue to the jury from the omission of the accused to make a statement;" it having been previously ruled in Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, that no unfavorable inference could properly be drawn from such omission. In Johnson v. State, 88 Ga. 609, the solicitor general "argued that the fact that accused's counsel, after hearing the testimony of the prosecutor that . . . [certain witnesses in attendance upon the court] had seen him with a hundred dollar bill [a material fact in the case], failed thereafter to introduce them as witnesses for the accused to disprove this statement, was a conclusive admission that the witnesses did see him with the bill." In dealing with this point, Mr. Justice Lumpkin, speaking for this court, said: "We feel constrained to allow the accused another hearing. The conclusions drawn by our able, gifted, and eloquent Brother Wright from the premises stated were unauthorized, and were highly injurious to the accused." The case of Chase v. Chicago, 20 Ill. App. 274, is also in point, and may be referred to as persuasive authority. The plaintiff did not introduce as a witness her husband. He was, however, present in court. Counsel for defendant, after characterizing plaintiff's case as "a blackmailing scheme to extort money out of the city," turned upon her counsel and demanded: "Why didn't you put Mr. Chase upon the witness stand, John Gibbons?" Twice echoing this demand, counsel continued: "I will tell you why. Because you knew that that old, gray-haired man would not perjure himself for you, and you could not perpetrate this fraud and conspiracy with his assistance." The report of the case describes this scene as having been "dramatic." The appellate court added a fitting finale by ordering a new trial on the sole ground that this argument was improper. The case of Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, is, upon its facts as well as the principle involved, so analogous to the case at bar, it may likewise be cited in this connection. The evidence disclosed that one Boman was an eyewitness to the tragedy under investigation, but, though present in court, he was not called to the stand by either side. "One of defendant's counsel, in his argument, said, in substance, that the state had failed to examine . . . [this] eyewitness to the homicide, and who knew more about it than anybody else present at the time of the killing, and that this was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in favor of the defendant." On objection by the solicitor, the court ruled that this argument was improper, and "to this action of the court the defendant duly excepted." See pages 10, 11, 112 Ala. Dealing with this point the reviewing court said (page 23, 112 Ala.): "It was proper to restrain the counsel of the defendant from the proposed argument to the jury, that the failure of the state to examine Boman as a witness was a circumstance for their consideration. The argument was not legitimate, whether applied to the state or to the defendant; and with equal propriety, if there had been propriety in it, it could have been applied as well to the one as to the other. Boman was in court, as accessible to the one party as to the other; and all that can be properly said is, that neither party deemed it necessary to place him on the stand, adding his testimony to that which had been adduced."

To allow counsel in the present case, after expressly declining the aid of the additional testimony tendered him, to attempt to make capital out of the fact that this identical testimony was not offered by the other side, would seem not only opposed to reason and justice, but violative of the policy of the law as declared in the rule that the best, or highest, evidence of any given fact is required. So long as it was within the power of the plaintiff to show absolutely and conclusively what the fireman knew and would testify in regard to the casualty under investigation, the plaintiff could not, without infringing this imperative rule of evidence, rely upon a mere inference or conjecture as to what this eyewitness of the occurrence would swear if put upon the stand. There is another rule of law which may, without discussion, be adverted to as having a bearing upon the present case, because limiting in a measure the right of counsel to indulge in argument of questionable propriety. "It is the duty of attorneys at law . . . to employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to them, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never to seek to mislead the judges or juries by any artifice or false statement of the law." Civ. Code, § 4427. It cannot be deemed the intent and policy of the law, in expressly conferring any given privilege upon a suitor, to attach thereto a condition that, if such privilege is exercised by him, his conduct will be regarded with distrust and the righteousness of his cause looked upon with suspicion. As the writer had occasion to remark in the recent case of McBride v. Publishing Co. (Ga.): "No unfavorable inference can arise against a party so long as he is acting strictly within his legal rights." For instance, a defendant has a legal right to demur to his opponent's petition; to file inconsistent pleas; to object to illegal evidence when offered; to cross examine his opponent's witnesses at length, or only as to a single point, or not at all; to make a motion for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case; to stand on the case as made out by the latter, or attempt to vindicate himself by the introduction of competent evidence. His election to avail himself of any or all of these legal rights cannot be regarded as furnishing the basis for any inference that he resorts to these means of defense only because he knows that, upon the real merits of the case, he cannot but fail. For counsel to argue to the jury that they should reach their conclusion by resort to a test or process not sanctioned by law is not only "traveling outside the case," but falls little short of contempt of court. It is not the right of a party or his counsel to arraign the law itself and attack its wisdom; certainly not when such party voluntarily goes into court and asks that the law—as it stands, and not as he may think it should be—shall be fairly, impartially, and correctly administered. There was, in the present case, not a scintilla of evidence even vaguely tending to show a disposition on the part of the defendant to withhold or suppress the truth. As has been seen, the law itself did not supply, in lieu of such proof, any presumption or inference whatsoever upon which counsel could rely as a basis for his attack upon the defendant concerning its motive in not introducing all the evidence within its reach. Accordingly, the good faith of the latter in selecting and offering the evidence upon which it elected to stand was not ever so remotely brought into issue, and a totally unfounded suspicion in regard thereto could serve as no proper guide to the jury in reaching their conclusion upon the questions actually presented and legitimately before them for determination. That the unwarranted argument of plaintiff's counsel was calculated to unduly prejudice the defendant's cause there can be no reasonable doubt; that it actually had this effect is evidenced by the fact that, although the great preponderance of proof was apparently on the side of the defendant, the jury nevertheless returned a verdict which utterly repudiated its claim that its defense was righteous and meritorious."

Maggie HENDERSON, by Next Friend, Plff.
in Err.,
v.

DADE COAL COMPANY et al.

(189 Ga. 568.)

*1. As a general rule persons in charge of a state convict, whether their custody and control of him be lawful or otherwise, are not liable in damages for a criminal tort committed by him while at large, although his being at large was by their permission, or because of their negligence in failing to keep him safely confined. Ordinarily, under such circumstances, the convict's wrongful act would be too remote a consequence of his keeper's misconduct in the premises to render them responsible to the person injured. This rule would, of course, be varied if they were in any way connected with the perpetration of the tort, or had reasonable grounds for apprehending that it would be committed.

2. The present case falls within the general rule, and not within the exception indicated. Its material facts are summarized, and the conclusion therefrom stated, in the next note.

3. That a "felony" convict, about thirty-seven years old, who had been continuously in the penitentiary for about twelve years, and who had five times escaped therefrom, was "a man in robust and vigorous health, immoral, brutish, devilish, of vicious habits, of violent passions, prone to desire for sexual intercourse," and a person "not restrained by any convictions of right and wrong, or governed by any principles of morality," and that "all of these conditions and things" concerning him "were well known, and were understood" by his custodians, "or ought to have been, because of what they knew of his said person, history, character, and surroundings," did not, without more, afford such cause for apprehending that he would, when an opportunity occurred, commit the crime of rape upon an unprotected woman, as to subject his custodians to liability in damages for the perpetration by him of this offense at a time when, because of their fault, he was at large and in the unrestrained control of his own movements.

(March 12, 1897.)

*Headnotes by LUMPKIN, P. J.

NOTE.—For a case in which negligence was held to exist in respect to allowing a man of savage and vicious propensities to be where he might 40 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Atlanta City Court to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion. Messrs. Watkins & Dean, Dean & Dean, N. J. Hammond, and T. A. Hammond, for plaintiff in error:

It is immaterial what is the intermediate cause between the act complained of and the injurious consequence, if such act is the efficient and proximate cause and the consequence was the probable result.

1 Sutherland, Damages, § 37.

Any wrongful act which exposes one to injury from rain, heat, fire, water, the known vicious disposition or habits of animals, or any other natural cause, under circumstances which render it probable that such an injury will occur, is the primary, efficient, and proximate cause if harm ensues.

1 Sutherland, Damages, ¶ 38; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ind. 846, 49 Am. Rep. 168.

The innocent or culpable act of a third person may be the immediate cause of an injury, and still an earlier wrongful act may have contributed so effectually to it as to be regarded as the efficient and concurrent responsible cause.

1 Sutherland, Damages, § 40.

The mere circumstance that there have intervened between the wrongful cause and the injurious consequence, acts produced by the volition of animals or of human beings, does not necessarily make the result so remote that no action can be maintained.

1 Sutherland, Damages, p. 28, § 17.

It need not be certain that such damage will ensue. It is required that the act have a tendency and be likely to cause such damages, but not that they be certain to follow; in this respect they are generally contingent and by possibility may not happen.

1 Sutherland, Damages, p. 47, § 27.

The party who commits a trespass or other wrongful act is liable for all the direct injury resulting from such act, although such resulting injury could not have been contemplated as the probable result of the act done.

3 Sutherland, Damages, p. 714, note 3, § 1244; Durham v. Musselman, 2 Blackf. 96, 18 Am. Dec. 183; 1 Sedgw. Damages, ¶ 129; Addison, Torts, 8d ed. p. 5; Henry v. Dennis, 98 Ind. 452, 47 Am. Rep. 382; 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1084.

The proximate cause of any injury may in general be stated to be that act or omission which immediately causes, or fails to prevent, an injury, an act, or omission occurring or concurring with another, if which had not happened, the injury would not have been inflicted, notwithstanding the latter.

Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & S. Co., 90 Tenn. 858, 18 L. R. A. 518; Andrews v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 669; Putnam v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 47 Hun, 439; Bunting v. Hogsett, 139 Pa. 363, 12 L. R. A. 268; Clyde v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 59 Fed.

cause injury, see Dean v. St. Paul Union Depot Co. (Minn.) 5 L. R. A. 442.

Rep. 894; Knapp v. Sioux City & P.R. Co. 65 Iowa, 91, 54 Am. Rep. 1; Campbell v. Stillwater, 52 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 569; West v. Ward, 77 Iowa, 323; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 24 Or. 276 and 293, 22 L. R. A. 635 and 640; Ryan v. Miller, 12 Daly, 17; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land, Transp. & Mfg. Co. 27 Fla. 1, and 157, 17 L. R. A. 33, and 65; Powers v. Thayer Lumber Co. 92 Mich. 583; La Duke v. Ezeler Twp. 97 Mich. 450; McKeller v. Monitor Twp. 78 Mich. 485.

There is a plain difference between a wrongful act and its consequences, for when a wrongful act is done the wrongdoer must answer for all the proximate consequences, although he may not have foreseen or anticipated the particular form or character of the resulting injury.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 544; Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussetts, 86 Tex. 708, 24 L. R. A. 642; Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 131; Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251; Baxter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 87 Iowa, 488; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott, 19 U. S. App. 291, 59 Fed. Rep. 237, 8 C. C. A. 109, 23 L. R. A. 654; Gibson v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 65 Vt. 213; Bigelow, Torts, 277; Henry v. Dennis, 93 Ind. 452, 47 Am. Rep. 384.

Courts cannot be ignorant of the nature of men, and must attribute to them the ordinary passions and weaknesses inherent in human nature. It has been expressly adjudged that courts may presume that domestic animals will act in conformity to their usual propensities and habits, and, surely there is stronger reason for extending this principle to beings of reason, intelligence, and affections.

Whart. Neg. §§ 100, 107; Smethurst v. Proprietors of Independent Cong. Church, 148 Mass. 261, 2 L. R. A. 695; Weick v. Lander, 75 Ill. 93; Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 512; Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. 381, 10 Am. Dec. 234; Moore v. Central R. Co. 47 Iowa, 688; Forney v. Geldmacher, 75 Mo. 113, 42 Am. Rep. 392; Lowery v. Manhattan R. Co. 99 N. Y. 153, 52 Am. Rep. 12; Schroder v. Crawford, 94 Ill. 357, 34 Am. Rep. 236.

If defendant's animal breaks enclosure, he is liable to plaintiff, whether guilty of negligence or not.

Bigelow, Torts, 275, and note.

A depot company incorporated for the purpose of furnishing depot and station-house accommodations for carriers is guilty of negligence in allowing the continuance in its depot of an employee, or its tenant renting a room in which to check parcels, who is a man of savage and vicious propensities and in the habit of attacking and beating people; and it will be liable for injuries to one who is, without his own fault, attacked and beaten by such employee.

Dean v. St. Paul Union Depot Co. 41 Minn. 360, 5 L. R. A. 442.

Whether the trespasser who draws the crowd after him is responsible for the injuries done by it depends upon whether his act was of the nature to attract a destructive crowd, and this is a question for the jury.

Fairbanks v. Kerr, 70 Pa. 86, 10 Am. Rep. 40 L. R. A.

664; Henry v. Dennis, 93 Ind. 452, 47 Am. Rep. 378; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 136; Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Pindar, 53 Ill. 447, 5 Am. Rep. 57; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 228, 7 Am. Rep. 69.

It is a question for the jury as to whether defendant's negligence was the proximate cause.

Olson v. Chippewa Falls, 71 Wis. 558; Yeaw v. Williams, 15 R. I. 20; Clemens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. 366, 14 Am. Rep. 460; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bates, 16 Kan. 252; Perry v. Southern P. R. Co. 50 Cal. 578; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Muthersbaugh, 71 Ill. 572; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Page v. Bucksport, 64 Me. 51, 18 Am. Rep. 239.

Defendants' contract placed the defendants in such relation to the state as to create certain legal duties, the failure to observe which gives cause of action to this plaintiff.

Code 1882, §§ 2953, 2954; Western & A. R. Co. v. Strong, 52 Ga. 461; City & Suburban R. Co. v. Brauss, 70 Ga. 377; Grenade v. Hardaway, 73 Ga. 526.

If the penitentiary companies are not corporations then they are either joint-stock companies or partnerships. In either event, the members thereof are liable for the acts and torts of each other done in the course of business.

1 Bates, Partn. §§ 72, 73; Dacey, Partn. p. 467; Hawes, Parties to Actions, 89 (13); Roberts v. Johnson, 58 N. Y. 618; Barbour, Parties to Actions, 2d ed. p. 350, note.

Mr. S. Wright also for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Ellis & Gray, for defendants in error:

Where a sheriff negligently permits one in his custody under an indictment for an assault with a deadly weapon upon B, with intent to inflict a bodily injury, to escape and go at large, and such person makes a further assault upon A, and threatens to take his life, whereby A is put to expense in having him bound over to keep the peace, A cannot maintain an action on the case against the sheriff for the escape, nor for damages from the subsequent acts of the escaped prisoner, as they are not the natural and probable consequence of the escape.

Hullinger v. Worrell, 83 Ill. 220.

Damages traceable to the act, but not its legal or natural consequence, are too remote and contingent.

Western Railway of Alabama v. Mulch, 97 Ala. 194, 21 L. R. A. 316; Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 361; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 656; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Barker, 4 Colo. 344, 34 Am. Rep. 89.

Messrs. John L. Hopkins & Sons, Bishop, Andrews, & Hill, and Burton Smith also for defendants in error.

Lumpkin, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The declaration now under review discloses one of the very saddest cases with which it has ever been our fortune to deal. The plaintiff, Miss Maggie Henderson, was, at the hands of a brutal convict, subjected to injury, wrong, and agony, both mental and physical, a recital of which would make one of the darkest pages in our reports. Every member of this bench was deeply moved and affected by the account which the declaration gives of her blighted life. There is not, perhaps, in the annals of litigation a story of wrong which appeals more pathetically for human sympathy. Were we to follow the instincts of our hearts, we would be under the strongest impulse to sustain the plaintiff's action; but as magistrates, under the solemn duty of enforcing what we conscientiously believe to be the law of the case, we are compelled to hold that the trial court did not err in sustaining the various demurrers alleging that no cause of action was set forth. Omitting any mention of numerous questions the decision of which is not, in the view we take of the case, in the least degree essential to its determination, we shall confine ourselves to a very brief discussion of the proposition announced in the headnotes, from which the nature of the case, so far as now material, will be readily apprehended. The case, at least, depends upon the question whether the custodians of such a convict as is described in the third headnote are legally responsible in damages for the consequences of crimes committed by him while at large, and in the unrestrained control of his own movements, by their permission, or because of their negligence in failing to keep him safely confined. We have no doubt that, as a general rule, a criminal tort committed by such a convict would be too remote a consequence of his keepers' misconduct in the premises to render them responsible to the person injured. While cases may arise in which this general rule should be varied,—as where it appears that the custodians of the convict were in some way connected with the perpetration of the tort, or had reasonable grounds for apprehending that it would be committed,—nothing is alleged in the present declaration to bring this case within such an exception. The direct and proximate cause of the injuries inflicted upon Miss Henderson was the independent action of the convict himself. He, though vicious, brutal, and infamous, was nevertheless an accountable human agent. While, according to the plaintiff's averments, he was not restrained by any convictions of right and wrong, nor governed by any principles of morality, the declaration does not attempt to allege that he was not a rational person, fully amenable to the laws both of God and man. That he was prone to a desire for sexual intercourse did not, by any means, render him an exception to a law of nature which universally prevails in the animal kingdom, whether as applied to human beings or animals of lower orders. Vile as this man was, it cannot be held that the defendants could reasonably have anticipated that he would, upon the first opportunity, assault and ravish any defenseless woman whom he might encounter. He was equally liable to commit some other heinous crime; and they were not bound to presume that he would commit any crime at all. The state requires the lessees of convicts, at the expiration of their terms, to furnish them transportation to the counties in which they were convicted. Thus the law clearly contemplates that these criminals shall be set at liberty in the very communities whence they came. It can hardly be questioned that scores, perhaps hundreds, of convicts, just as bad as the one now under consideration, are, from time to time, set at large by the law's command. If there was reason to apprehend that convicts of this depraved type would, upon regaining their liberty, commit such crimes as that complained of in the present case, it would seem that the true policy of the law would be to keep them imprisoned during their lives. That such is not the policy of the law is due to the fact that reason for apprehending such outrages does not really exist.

The true rule applicable in a case like the present was recognized and stated by this court in the case of Perry v. Central R. Co. 66 Ga. 751, wherein it was said that, in order to entitle a party to recover damages on account of the negligence of another, it should appear that the damages were the natural and proximate result of such negligence; "for should it appear that but for the intervention of a responsible third party, the defendants' negligence would not have caused damage to the plaintiff, then the defendant is not liable to plaintiff, for the reason that the causal connection between negligence and damage is broken by the interposition of an independent, responsible human action." In support of this doctrine, Judge Stewart, who presided in the place of Chief Justice Jackson, disqualified, cited Field, Damages, §§ 13, 32, 52, 53, 78; Wayne [Mayne], Damages, § 25; Whart. Neg. § 134; Wait, Act. & Def. title Damages. It is true that in the case just cited the action was based upon a tort of an altogether different character, but the principle announced controls the case at bar. The case of Belding v. Johnson, 86 Ga. 177, 11 L. R. A. 53, also has some bearing upon the question at issue, it being there held that the death of the plaintiff's husband, who was killed by a man under the influence of liquor, who, when in this condition, was violent and dangerous, was not occasioned by the act of a barkeeper who had furnished liquor to the slayer when he was already drunk, and had failed to protect the deceased from the homicidal assault made upon him in the barkeeper's place of business. Although the latter violated a penal statute of this state in so furnishing the liquor, it was, in effect, held that he was not bound to anticipate that this unlawful conduct on his part would result in a homicide. A somewhat similar question was dealt with in Shugart v. Egan, 83 Ill. 56, 25 Am. Rep. 359. There the person furnished with the intoxicating liquors was himself, in consequence of abusive language used to another, assaulted and killed. In a sense, the furnishing of the liquor was an indirect cause of his death, but the court held it was not the efficient and proximate cause. In a case decided by the supreme court of Minnesota (Swinfin v. Lowry, 37 Minn. 345), it appeared that a minor person of the age of eighteen upon invitation of the defendants, drank intoxicating liquors with them and their friends at divers saloons several times during the same evening, some of the liquor being ordered and paid for by the defendants themselves. "He became intoxicated and quarrelsome, and committed an assault upon plaintiff, resulting in serious injury to him," but "was not incited thereto by the defendants, and it was his own voluntary act. In an action against them by the plaintiff for damages on the ground that the assault was the result of their acts in furnishing the liquor supplied to the minor," the reviewing court held "that the damages were too remote, and were not to be deemed the natural and proximate result of the alleged wrongful acts of the defendants." A case which, upon its facts, is still more closely in point, is that of Hullinger v. Worrell, 83 Ill. 220. It was there held that a sheriff who negligently permitted the escape of a prisoner in his custody under an indictment for an assault with intent to murder was not liable in damages for the consequences of a subsequent assault by the escaped prisoner upon the same person upon whom the indictment in question charged that the original assault had been committed. This decision was based explicitly upon the proposition that the act of the prisoner, after regaining his liberty, was not the natural and probable consequence of the escape. Cases more or less resembling the foregoing are quite numerous, but it would not be helpful to multiply citations on this line. The rule of law that damages arising ex delicto are not recoverable unless they spring from the negligence or misconduct of the defendant is as well settled as any legal principle. The difficulty arises in its application to given cases. We have been unable to find any case precisely like the present, but our minds have, without difficulty, reached the conclusion that none of the lessees of penitentiary convicts named as defendants can be made liable for the crime committed in this instance. Nothing they did or omitted was its efficient or proximate cause. It was the independent act of another, not standing in any relation to the defendants which would render what he did imputable to them. The court below was right in sustaining the demurrers and dismissing the action.

Judgment affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

George M. WELTY, Appt.,
v.

H. R. JACOBS et al.

(171 Ill. 624.)

1. A contract will not be specifically enforced unless it has such mutuality that it may be enforced by either party.
2. Particular stipulations of a contract will not be specifically enforced apart from the rest of the contract, where they do not clearly stand by themselves, unaffected by other provisions.
3. An injunction against the proprietor of a theater will not be granted, to prevent his breach of a contract to furnish the theater and its equipment, including light, heat, music, ushers, etc., to the manager of a company for a certain time, and to prevent him from furnishing the theater to a rival company during that period; nor can the contract be partly enforced by injunction limited to the use of the building and furnishings.

(February 14, 1898.)

NOTE.—For mandatory injunction to compel specific performance of contract, see note to Moundville v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 20 L. R. A. on page 187.
40 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Superior Court for Cook County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to enjoin defendants from opening an opera house with another show during a week for which it has been leased to complainant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bulkeley, Gray, & More, for appellant:

The court below erred in dismissing the bill of complaint for want of equity, for the reason that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law, or, because the contract is of such a nature that a court of equity will not enforce it.

Lacy v. Heuck, 12 Week. L. Bull. 209.

A court of equity will enforce specific performance of a contract indirectly by enjoining a breach of its negative covenants when from the nature of the contract it could not enforce specific performance directly.

2 High, Inj. 2d ed. §§ 1184, 1150 et seq.; Lumley v. Wagner, 1 DeG. M. & G. 604; Montague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. 189; Great Northern R. Co. v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 5 DeG. & S. 138; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 516; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Union Button-hole & E. Co. Holmes, 253; Fredericks v. Mayer, 13 How. Pr. 566; Daly v. Smith, 6 Jones & S. 158; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423; Wells, Fargo, & Co.

v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 517; Wells, Fargo, & Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 469; Wolverhampton & W. R. Co. v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 16 Eq. 483.

If the case is one in which the negative remedy of injunction will do substantial justice between the parties, by obliging the defendant either to carry out his contract or lose all benefit of the breach, and the remedy at law is inadequate, and there is no reason or policy against it, the court will interfere to restrain conduct which is contrary to the contract, although it may be unable to enforce a specific performance of it.

Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Union Button-hole & E. Co. Holmes, 253; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rogers, 43 N. J. Eq. 811; Bernstein v. Meech, 180 N. Y. 354; Long v. Beard, 4 N. C. (Taylor's N. C. Term Rep. 256) 684; Warner v. McMullen, 181 Pa. 370; Brush Electric Light Co.'s Appeal, 141 Pa. 574; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 491, 69 Am. Dec. 718; Hubbard v. Miller, 27 Mich. 15, 15 Am. Rep. 153; Guerand v. Dandeleit, 32 Md. 561, 3 Am. Rep. 164; Spiet v. Lambdin, 45 Ga. 319; Leavers v. Cleary, 75 Ill. 349; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74, 18 L. ed. 580; German-American Inest. Co. v. Youngstown, 68 Fed. Rep. 456; New York Academy of Music v. Hockett, 2 Hilt. 218; Schmitt v. Cassilius, 31 Minn. 7; Butler v. Burleson, 16 Vt. 176; McClurg's Appeal, 58 Pa. 51; Manhattan Mfg. & Fertilizing Co. v. New Jersey Stock Yard & Mkt. Co. 23 N. J. Eq. 161; Legg v. Horn, 45 Conn. 415; Ellsler v. Brooks, 22 Jones & S. 73; Cort v. Lassard, 18 Or. 221, 6 L. R. A. 653; Lanahan v. Heaver, 79 Md. 413; Frazier v. Miller, 16 Ill. 48; Morris v. Thomas, 17 Ill. 112; Franklin Teleg. Co. v. Harrison, 145 U. S. 459, 36 L. ed. 776. Messrs. Partridge & Partridge, for appellee N. D. Newell:

The complainant was guilty of such laches in filing his bill as to preclude him from relief in equity.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 976.

The complainant utterly failed to show compliance on his part with the contract.

He who seeks the aid of equity to enjoin the violation of an agreement, or for the protection of his contract rights, must himself come into court with clean hands, and to entitle himself to relief he must have carried out, so far as possible, his own part of the contract.

2 High, Inj. § 1119; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1407; Bernstein v. Meech, 180 N. Y. 354.

Profits were recoverable as damages in a suit at law.

Dennis v. Marfield, 10 Allen, 138.

Mr. James E. Purnell, for appellee H. R. Jacobs:

This contract is in violation of Hurd's Rev. Stat. (Ill.) chap. 38, § 261.

Where a contract is contrary to statute it is void, and the courts will not aid it by injunction.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 872, ¶ 49; Workingmen's Bkg. Co. v. Rautenberg, 103 Ill. 460, 42 Am. Rep. 26; Fennell v. Ridler, 5 Barn. & C. 406; Smith v. Sparrow, 4 Bing. 84; Northrup v. Foot, 14 Wend. 248; Smith v. Wilcox, 24 N. Y. 353, 82 Am. Dec. 302; Story v. Elliott, 8 Cow. 27, 18 Am. Dec. 423; Lindenmuller v. People, 33 Barb. 548; Brunnett v. 40 L. R. A.

Clark, Sheldon, 501; Com. v. Weidner, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 437.

The consideration upon the part of the appellant is that he was to produce his company for the purpose of giving performances commencing on Sunday, December 29, 1895. If that portion of said contract was illegal and in violation of the statutes, then the whole contract is void.

Henderson v. Palmer, 71 Ill. 579, 22 Am. Rep. 117; Tenny v. Foote, 95 Ill. 99.

To entitle a party to an injunction pendente lite in this class of cases, the plaintiff must bring himself clearly within the principles upon which exceptional jurisdiction rests.

Injunction is only issued where the injury is irreparable from breach of contract.

Strobridge Lithographing Co. v. Crane, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 24.

Carter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill for an injunction filed December 28, 1895, in the superior court of Cook county, by the appellant, in which he alleged that he was a theatrical manager and proprietor; that on April 9, 1895, he entered into a written contract with H. R. Jacobs, manager, and representing M. J. Jacobs, proprietor, of the Alhambra theater, in Chicago, to play his company in the "Black Crook" at such theater for seven consecutive nights, commencing December 29, 1895; that Jacobs was to furnish the house, well cleaned, lighted, and heated, together with the stock, scenery, and equipments contained therein, stage hands, stage carpenter, fly men, regular ushers, gas man, property man, janitor, ticket seller, doorkeepers, orchestra, house programmes, licenses, billboards, bill posting, distribution of printed matter, usual newspaper advertisements, and the resources of the theater in stage furniture and properties not perishable; that Welty was to furnish a company of first-class artists, to the satisfaction of Jacobs, together with special scenery, calcium lights, etc., and also, ten days in advance, certain printing, prepaid and free from all charges, consisting of a variety of bills, etc.; that appellant was to receive 60 per cent of the gross receipts up to $5,000, and 70 per cent on all over $5,000; that if the company should not prove satisfactory to Jacobs, whose judgment was to be conclusive, or if the company should prove not to be as represented, then Jacobs should have the right to cancel the contract by giving appellant at least one week's notice, by mail or otherwise; that appellant's company was not to appear at any other house in the city prior to the date of the performance specified; that if, by any unforeseen accident, fire, or for any reason whatever, Jacobs could not furnish the house for said performance the contract was to become null and void. The bill further alleged that appellant had kept and performed all his covenants; that he had tendered the printing as required, and that he was ready to furnish a satisfactory company; that he had received no notice from Jacobs that his company was not satisfactory nor as represented, and had been given no notice of the termination of his contract as therein provided; that within the then last thirty days Jacobs had entered into a contract with U. D.

Newell for the Alhambra Theater for the same week that appellant's contract provided for; that Newell claims to be the manager of another company, also engaged in producing the "Black Crook;" that Jacobs and Newell were combining and confederating to injure and defraud appellant, as Newell had agreed to produce the play for a less percentage than appellant; that appellant had forty performers under contract, and would be obliged to pay them their salaries whether they performed or not, and that he could procure no other place for his performance during said time, and would be compelled to remain idle at great expense; that the money value of his contract could not be determined, either actually or approximately, in any other manner than by carrying out and fully performing it according to its conditions; that Jacobs and Newell had announced their intention of keeping appellant out of the possession and use of said theater; that appellees were financially irresponsible. The bill prays for an order enjoining appellees from hindering appellant and his company from taking possession of the Alhambra theater, its appurtenances and stage property, and from hindering, delaying, interfering with, or preventing appellant from producing said play in accordance with said contract, and also restraining appellees from using or occupying said theater, its stock, scenery, and equipments, during said period of seven days, and from allowing any other person or company to use or occupy the same; and also restraining and enjoining appellees from refusing to furnish to appellant, during such period, the usual and necessary light, heat, music, regular stage hands, stage carpenter, etc., and for general relief. The injunction was granted, and served on appellees December 28, 1895. On December 30, 1895, a rule was entered on appellees to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of court in violating this injunction. The next day an order was entered modifying the injunction so as to permit Newell to produce the play at the Alhambra theater and Jacobs was ordered to pay into court 60 per cent of the entire receipts received by him at the Alhambra for the week, and to pay to Newell 30 per cent of such receipts, and the cause was continued to January 3, 1896. On that day both appellees answered, replication was filed, and Newell moved for a dissolution of the injunction. Appellee Jacobs in his answer admitted the making of the contract with appellant, but denied that appellant's company was satisfactory or as represented, and alleged that he had notified appellant thereof, and had canceled the contract; denied all combination to injure appellant; admitted that he had made a contract with Newell for the same week he had formerly contracted to appellant; denied that appellant had furnished the printing as required; and that he was without remedy except in a court of equity. Appellee Newell in his answer alleged that he had been informed that appellant's contract had been canceled; that on November 29, 1895, he had made a contract with Jacobs to play the Tompkins Black Crook Company in the Alhambra for seven successive nights, beginning December 29, 1895, the contract being in all particulars like appellant's, except as to the percentage of receipts; that as early as December 27, he had removed to the Alhambra a number of articles belonging to his company, and had taken possession of the same; alleged various communications and negotiations between all the parties to this suit from December 16 until the bill was filed; that, becoming alarmed that Jacobs would close up the Alhambra entirely during that week, he (Newell) had procured an injunction from the circuit court on December 27, 1895, and had it served on Jacobs the same day, restraining Jacobs from closing up the theater during said week and excluding his company from presenting their play; charges appellant with laches and bad faith in suppressing all information in regard to such first injunction, and alleged that appellant's contract was in violation of the statutes, which forbid any amusement or diversion on Sunday, so that specific performance could not be enforced.

40 L. R. A.

The cause was heard by the court, and a decree entered finding that the injunction had been violated by appellees, and that under the order modifying the injunction there had been paid into court $1,184.75; that the equities were with the appellees; and that the appellant had a complete and adequate remedy at law, and that the injunction was improvidently issued; and the bill was therefore dismissed, and the money ordered returned to Jacobs. Appellant appealed, and asked that the money be retained in the clerk's hands pending the appeal, which was allowed, and the money ordered left with the clerk until the final determination on appeal. The appellate court affirmed the decree, and appellant has further appealed to this court.

There was no sufficient proof that Jacobs canceled his contract with Welty on any of the grounds stipulated in it, and the question is not whether Jacobs was justified in violating the contract, but whether his bill of complaint for equitable relief can be sustained or he should be remitted to his action at law. Strictly speaking, the bill was not one for specific performance, but for injunction only. It is clear from its allegations and the authorities bearing upon the question that specific performance of the contract could not be decreed. It is not, and cannot be, contended that appellant could have been compelled, by any writ the court could have issued, to occupy the theater with his company of actors and give the performances contracted for, any more than a public singer or speaker can be compelled specifically to perform his contract to sing or speak. Negative covenants not to sing or perform elsewhere at a certain time than a designated place have been enforced by the injunctive process, but further than this such contracts have not been specifically enforced by the courts, by injunction or otherwise. Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604; Daly v. Smith, 6 Jones & S. 158. In Lumley v. Wagner there was an express covenant not to sing elsewhere than at the complainant's theater, and the injunction was placed on that ground.

But it is urged that negative covenants may be implied as well as expressed, and, when necessarily implied from the terms of the contract, they will be enforced in like manner; citing the follow cases: Mon- tague v. Flockton, L. R. 16 Eq. 189; Great Northern R. Co. v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 5 De G. & S. 188; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 516; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Union Button-hole & E. Co., Holmes, 253; 2 High. Inj. 2d ed. § 1150; Fredricks v. Mayer, 13 How. Pr. 566. While there was a negative covenant in the contract under consideration against Welty, it is not important to consider whether or not appellant might have been enjoined from performing elsewhere than at Jacobs' theater at the time in question. For it is manifest he could not have been compelled to perform at said theater. Before a contract will be specifically enforced there must be mutuality in the contract, so that it may be enforced by either; and, as this contract was of such a nature that it could not have been specifically enforced by appellee Jacobs, it should not be so enforced by appellant. Lancaster v. Roberts, 144 Ill. 223; Fry, Spec. Perf. §§ 440, 441; Waterman, Spec. Perf. § 196; Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 411.

But it is urged that courts of equity will by injunction restrain the violation of contracts of this character in many cases where they cannot decree specific performance, and the following among other cases are referred to: Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 3 Fed. Rep. 423-429; Wells, Fargo, & Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 15 Fed. Rep. 561, and 18 Fed. Rep. 517; Wells, Fargo, & Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 469. Without determining whether there may not be exceptional cases not falling within the general rule, we think the rule is as stated in Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 180 Ill. 42, and the authorities there quoted. It was there said (page 60, 180 Ill.): "The bill of complaint in the case, though not strictly a bill for the specific performance of a contract, is, in substance, a bill of that kind. In 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1841, it is said: 'An injunction restraining the breach of a contract is a negative specific enforcement of that contract. The jurisdiction of equity to grant such injunction is substantially coincident with its jurisdiction to compel a specific performance. Both are governed by the same doctrines and rules; and it may be stated, as a general proposition, that wherever the contract is one of a class which will be affirmatively specifically enforced, a court of equity will restrain its breach by injunction, if this is the only practical mode of enforcement which its terms permit.'" It is plain that, as a general rule, to enjoin one from doing something in violation of his contract is an indirect mode of enforcing the affirmative provisions of such contract, although such an injunction may often fall short of accomplishing its object. It is obvious from what has been said and from the authorities that to enjoin appellee Jacobs, as prayed in the bill, from refusing to furnish the usual and necessary light, heat, music, regular stage hands, stage carpenter, ushers, equipments, etc., provided for in the contract, would be the same, in substance, as to command him to furnish them, and without them the use of the theater building would seem to be of little use. It is practically conceded by counsel for appellant that this part of the contract could not be specifically enforced as prayed, or otherwise, in equity; but it is contended that this part of the contract is merely incidental to the more important part of it, which was the right to occupy and use the theater and its furnishings, and give therein the performances provided for, and to exclude from a like occupation and use the other appellee, Newell, and that the injunction was proper for that purpose. This would have been an indirect method of enforcing a part performance of the contract, and courts will not enforce specific performance of particular stipulations separated from the rest of the contract, where they do not clearly stand by themselves, unaffected by other provisions. Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 604. Even if such a decree might have been sustained, we are satisfied the sound legal discretion of the court was not violated in refusing it, or in dissolving the injunction after it was granted. Appellant's remedy, if any he had, was at law.

The judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO,
& ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appl.,
v.

Thomas F. MAHONEY, Admr., etc., of Oscar
P. J. Romich, Deceased.

(148 Ind. 186.)

1. A contract by which an employee assumes all liability for injuries by reason of the employer's negligence or otherwise is not against public policy.

2. Notice of a contract between an express company and a railroad company to the effect that the former will hold the latter harmless against claims by the express company's employees for negligence of the railroad company or otherwise is chargeable to one of such employees who goes upon the tracks of the railroad company in the course of his employment under the license given to the express company by the contract.

3. An assumption of risks by express contract of a local employee of an express company includes the risk of injuries by cars of a railroad company with which the express company does business.

4. A release by an employee of an ex-

NOTE.—As to public policy respecting contracts against liability for negligence in cases which do not involve the liability of carriers or any other 40 L. R. A. similar liability, see also Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 30 L. R. A. 193, and other cases cited in footnote thereto.

press company of all liability for injuries sustained by negligence of the employer "or otherwise" includes the liability of the express company to hold a railroad with which it does business harmless against claims by the express company's employees for injuries, and precludes an action against the railroad company for causing his death by suddenly closing the opening between parts of a train while he was passing between them.

(April 22, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Howard County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. O. Ross, George W. Funk, and Bell & Purdum for appellant.

Messrs. M. F. Mahoney, Kistler & Kistler, Blackledge & Shirley, F. Winter, and M. Winfield, for appellee:

No error can be predicated upon the ruling upon the demurrer to the complaint, as the facts alleged to be omitted in the complaint are fully found by the special verdict.

Ross v. Banta, 140 Ind. 123; State, Marks, v. Vogel, 117 Ind. 188; Martin v. Cauble, 72 Ind. 67; Douthit v. Douthit, 133 Ind. 26; Reddick v. Keating, 129 Ind. 128; Fuller v. Cor, 135 Ind. 46; 1 Woolen's Digest, p. 585.

The complaint is good against general demurrer. Each paragraph contains the averment that the deceased was killed by the carelessness and negligence of the appellant and without fault upon his part.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 108 Ind. 551; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Chester, 57 Ind. 297; Jones v. White, 90 Ind. 255; Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Wynant, 100 Ind. 160; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Krinning, 87 Ind. 351; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 104 Ind. 526, 54 Am. Rep. 334; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 44; Deller v. Hofferberth, 127 Ind. 414; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Berkey, 136 Ind. 194; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Keely, 23 Ind. 133; Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 44 Ind. 76; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Seiby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Cauley, 119 Ind. 142; 2 Woolen's Digest, § 14604; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Darling, 130 Ind. 378; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning, 131 Ind. 535; Stewart v. Pennsylvania Co. 130 Ind. 242; Wabash v. Carrer, 129 Ind. 552, 13 L. R. A. 851; Pennsylvania Co. v. Horton, 132 Ind. 189; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404.

The record affirmatively shows, in the special verdict, the fact that these contracts were executed and in force at the time of the death of the appellee's decedent.

Nixon v. Campbell, 106 Ind. 47; Davis v. Reamer, 105 Ind. 318; Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 54 Am. Rep. 312; Fouser v. Cunningham, 21 Ind. 200.

The paper purporting to be an affidavit set out in the third paragraph of answer as a part 40 L. R. A.

of the contract alleged to have been entered into by appellee's decedent is not signed by appellee's decedent, and is no part of the alleged contract.

Avery v. Dougherty, 102 Ind. 443, 52 Am. Rep. 630; Bayless v. Glenn, 72 Ind. 5; Cotton v. State, Roberts, 64 Ind. 573.

The contract of appellee's decedent was only that the express company should not be liable to him or his personal representatives. It did not relieve appellant from responsibility to appellee or his personal representatives for an injury caused by appellant's negligence.

Brewer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 483; Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422.

It is not averred in the answer, or shown in the contract of appellee's decedent, that he had notice or knowledge of the contract between the express company and appellant, or that, to his knowledge, said contract formed any part of the consideration of the contract between him and the express company.

Brewer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 483; Kenney v. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422.

It is not shown in the answer that appellant at any time had notice or knowledge of the contract between appellee's decedent and the express company.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93.

Contracts to relieve in advance for liability for negligence should be strictly construed. The contract of appellee's decedent cannot be extended by construction to liability of the express company for negligent acts of appellant assumed by force of its contract with appellant.

Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422; Perkins v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 196, 82 Am. Dec. 281; Blair v. Erie R. Co. 66 N. Y. 313, 23 Am. Rep. 55; Mynard v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 180, 27 Am. Rep. 28; Roesner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 732; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471; Purdy v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 409; Runt v. Herring, 2 Misc. 105; Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Eijfort, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 600; Mancy v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 49 Ill. App. 105; Jacksonville S. E. R. Co. v. Southworth, 135 Ill. 250; Hissong v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 91 Ala. 514; Louisville & N. A. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Pearey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1025.

In the absence of the contract effective to put appellee's decedent in a different relation, he is to be considered as being rightfully upon the tracks of appellant and entitled to protection against its negligence.

Blair v. Erie R. Co. 66 N. Y. 313, 23 Am. Rep. 55; Brewer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 483; Pennsylvania Co. v. Woodworth, 26 Ohio St. 585; Union P. R. Co. v. Nichols, 8 Kan. 505, 12 Am. Rep. 475; Yeoman v. Contra Costa Steam Nav. Co. 44 Cal. 71; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315; Hammond v. North Eastern R. Co. 6 S. C. N. S. 130, 24 Am. Rep. 467; Chamberlain v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 11 Wis. 248.

Hackney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In December, 1894, Oscar P. J. Romick was an employee of the Adams Express Company, at the city of Logansport, caring for express matter entering and going from said city on the line of the appellant's railway. Between 2 and 3 o'clock on the morning of the 13th of said month, while passing from the south side of appellant's two parallel tracks, near the passenger depot, and from the express company's storeroom to the north side of said tracks, said Romick entered between two cars of a passenger train, separated by a space of from 6 to 10 feet, just as additional cars were driven against those of one division of said train, and he was caught and crushed between said two cars. From his injuries he died, and the appellee, charging the appellant with negligence in driving in said additional cars without warning and without a watchman at the point of the cut in the train, sued the appellant for damages.

The appellant's third answer to the complaint alleged a special contract between the appellant and said express company, whereby the former agreed to carry upon its passenger trains the express matter and messengers of the latter, said express company supplying its own servants, and handling the express matter by its own agents; that, as a part of said special contract, the express company agreed "to assume all risks of loss or damage that may arise out of or result from its operations under this agreement, and to save and hold harmless" the railway company "against the same, and especially to protect" it "against claims that may be made upon it for loss or damage either to the employees of the" express company, "or the property in its charge, whether the loss may occur through the gross negligence of the" railway company "or its employees, or otherwise." It was alleged also that between Romick and the express company existed the following contract: "Whereas, O. P. J. Romick, the undersigned, has made application to be employed by the Adams Express Company, as a servant of said company at a stipulated rate of compensation for his services, which rate said company is willing to pay only if the undersigned will assume all risks of said employment, and release said company therefrom, as hereinafter set forth. Now, therefore, in consideration of such employment, to be given by said company, and the compensation to be paid therefor and in consideration of $1, lawful money of the United States, paid by the Adams Express Company, to the undersigned, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, hereby covenants and agrees that in no case shall said company be liable by reason of any act or negligence of its agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or otherwise, causing any injury to his person or property, or causing his death, while he shall remain in its employ; and he accepts said employment with full knowledge and notice of all the risks involved therein, which he assumes. And the undersigned hereby releases said company from any and all liability for and in respect of any such damage, injury, or death, by reason of negligence or otherwise." Said contract was signed by said Romick, was duly attested, and had appended thereto the following statement, made and sworn to by said Romick concurrently with said contracts:

"State of Indiana, Cass County. O. P. J. Romick, being duly sworn, says that he is the individual who executed the foregoing release and contract; that he has read or heard read the same before execution, and understands that, by signing such contract, he has released the Adams Express Company and all other carriers employed by it from all liability to him for his death or personal injury from any cause, whether negligence of either of said companies, or their servants or agents, or otherwise." Upon motion of the appellee, the trial court struck out said contracts as exhibits to said answer and the allegations of the answer pertinent to said contracts, and thereafter sustained a demurrer to said answer, which answer, denuded of said allegations, was not more than an admission of the injuries, and a denial of negligence. These rulings are urged as error, and appellee's learned counsel concede in oral argument that if the language of the contracts is sufficiently direct and comprehensive to include a release, on his part, of a right of action for injuries from the appellant's negligence, said rulings were erroneous, and the judgment should be reversed.

It had been urged in the briefs for appellee that a contract of release from the results of negligence was void, as against public policy, and the following authorities were cited in support of that proposition: Roegner v. Hermann, 8 Fed. Rep. 782; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471; Western & A. R. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 169, 44 Am. Rep. 630; Johnson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 86 Va. 975; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548; Hissong v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 91 Ala. 514; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1035; 1 Cent. L. J. 465; Arnold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 386; Jacksonville S. E. R. Co. v. Southworth, 135 Ill. 250; Purdy v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 209; Maney v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 49 Ill. App. 105; Newport News & M. V. Co. v. Eifort, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 600; Runt v. Herring, 2 Misc. 105. These authorities probably sustain the proposition stated when applied to exemption against negligence in the discharge of a public or quasi-public duty, such as that owing by a common carrier to an ordinary shipper, passenger, or servant. In a recent decision of this court, however, that of Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93, we recognized the well-established rule that railway companies, although public or common carriers, may contract as private carriers, such as that of transporting express matter for express companies, as such matter is usually carried, and in that capacity may properly require exemption from liability for negligence as a condition to the obligation to carry. See also Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791; Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 508; Bates v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 24 U. S. App. 539, 66 Fed. Rep. 506, 30 L. R. A. 161; Coun v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374; Forepaugh

v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 128 Pa. 217, 5 L. R. A. 508; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 U. S. App. 152, 70 Fed. Rep. 201, 17 C. C. A. 62, 80 L. R. A. 193; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 365, 5 L. R. A. 846; Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. 10 Wash. 311; Griswold v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 58 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115.

Contracts of exemption from such liability have been upheld for many years in the courts of New York, without regard to the distinction between exemptions from those duties arising from the obligations of common carriers and those which the carriers are not required to perform, but may perform upon terms prescribed by them. In that state, however, impressed perhaps by the question of public policy which in other states defeats contracts of exemption from the consequences of neglecting quasi public duties, it has been held that contracts of exemption must be strictly construed, and with all presumptions indulged against an intention to exempt liabilities for negligence. Some of these cases are Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422; Breuer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 483; Mynard v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 180, 27 Am. Rep. 28. In the early case of Wells v. Steam Navigation Co. 2 N. Y. 204, it was held however, that the right to contract for a restricted liability existed with reference to private carriers.

Learned counsel for the appellee insist that the rule of strict construction should be applied to the contracts before us, and that, under the rule, the contract between the Adams Express Company and the appellant is one of indemnity only; that the contract between Romick and the express company exempted only the express company, and extended but to the ordinary risks of the employment with that company, not including the negligence of that company or of the appellant; and that, in construing the contract between Romick and the express company, the sworn statement of Romick should be cast out, because it does not contain his signature, and because it was not embodied in the contract. The only reason assigned, in the motion, for striking out the exhibits, was that they were void as against public policy. This reason upon the authorities we have cited, was not sufficient, and should not have prevailed; but if the exhibits, for any other reason, should have been stricken out, the ruling was probably harmless. There was no separate specification in the motion directed to the verified statement of Romick, and it went out under the general motion. There is no contention that the exhibits should have been stricken out, because not the basis of the answer, and therefore not properly capable of becoming a part of the answer by exhibit; nor is it claimed that they were immaterial to the answer upon the theory thereof. The latter claim could not be sustained under the rule recently announced in Atkinson v. Wabash R. Co. 143 Ind. 501, where it was said that "it is settled that where averments or matter in a pleading are in any way material, they ought not to be struck out on motion, and the recognized test of their materiality is to inquire whether they tend to constitute a cause of action or defense. If they do, they are not irrelevant, and ought not to be suppressed,"—citing authorities. That the exhibits tended to constitute and to support a cause of defense is without serious doubt, and, when we observe the character of attack made upon them in this court, their sufficiency to constitute a defense is the question, and not whether they tend to do so. In other words, the argument here is that which would apply to a demurrer, and has no place upon the motion. While regarding the ruling upon the motion as an error for which the judgment should be reversed, the force and effect of the contracts will necessarily arise upon another trial, and seem now to arise upon the appellant's motion for judgment on the special verdict, it having been found that Romick's only rights upon and about the tracks and right of way, on the occasion of his injury, were by the terms of said two contracts, not including the verified statement. In an interpretation of the language employed in the contracts, we are to be controlled by the usual rules for the ascertainment of the intention of the parties, looking to the words in their ordinary meaning, and not by the rule of strict construction here insisted upon, and that adopted in New York, with reference to contracts restricting liability of common carriers. As said in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 36 U. S. App. 152, 17 C. C. A. 62, 70 Fed. Rep. 201, 30 L. R. A. 193: "The burden is on the party who seeks to put a restraint upon the freedom of contracts to make it plainly and obviously clear that the contract is against public policy."

We have held the contracts before us not against public policy, and we must therefore subject them to the same tests of interpretation that other lawful contracts should receive. As between the express company and the appellant, their contract, saving the latter from liability for injuries to the former's servants, could not, in its very nature, be more than an assumption or indemnity, as there could be no waiver of a right belonging to another, standing independent of them. But it yet remains to determine whether Romick stood independent of the contract and the parties thereto. That contract, whether an assumption, indemnity, or waiver, included the demand sued upon in this case, for it covered a claim for damage to an employee of the express company, alleged to have occurred through the negligence of the railroad company, taking the very words of the clause quoted above from that contract. By the provisions of that contract, the rights of the express company were fully measured. Its only right to be upon the tracks and right of way, through and by its servants, was by the provisions of that contract. Its license came only from the contract, and the appellee introduced the contract in evidence to show the right of his decedent to be upon the tracks. The express company operating by servants, was present on the occasion in question, by Romick, its agent. His rights were those of the express company, and could not be greater. He was there by the license given the express company, and he could not accept the license and reject the condition upon which it was granted. It is said, however, that it does not appear from allegation or proof that he knew of the conditions upon which the license was given, and we are aware that it was decided in Brewer v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 59, 11 L. R. A. 483, that the express agent must have notice of the contract of exemption to be bound thereby. But with what reason can it be said that the railroad company should have given notice to the employees of the express company of the particular provisions of the contract under which they were admitted upon, and permitted to use, the property of the railroad company? Since the contract is the basis of rights which he assumes and exercises, it should rather be said that he must inform himself of its provisions. Unlike the theory of the holdings in New York, our court holds such contracts as standing, not upon the relationship of a common carrier, but as existing only in the private agreements of the parties. Therefore, when Romick took employment with the express company he was obliged to know that his rights and privileges did not depend upon the law as to common carriers, nor upon public or quasi-public duty of the railroad company, but that they rested upon private contract, to which he became subject in the performance of his duties for the express company in its relations to the appellant. He did not therefore occupy a position with relation to the railroad company independent of the contract between said two companies, but was chargeable with knowledge of the limitation upon the appellant's liability. If we accept the construction of the contract between the companies that it was an assumption or an indemnity, which supplied a liability to the appellant for any claim it might be required to pay on account of an injury inflicted, and we then look to the contract between Romick and the express company, we find that he there assumed all the risks of the employment, released the express company from any and all liability on account of his injury or death from negligence or otherwise, and agreed that in no case should the express company be liable for his death or injury from any act or negligence of any agent, servant, or employee of such company or otherwise. While it is not clear that the words "agents, servants, or employees," used in this contract, related directly to the appellant, since it was but in a limited sense an "agent, servant, or employee" of the express company, yet when we have charged the decedent with notice of the contract between the two companies, creating an obligation on the part of the express company to pay for the injury or death of its employees, the last clause in his contract is more than a general restatement of what is particularly stated before. He "released said company from any and all liability for and in respect of any such damage, injury, or death, by reason of negligence or otherwise." The words "such damage, injury, or death" refer to the stated damage to property, injury to person, or to his death, but they are not confined to the special negligence previously stated, but to negligence generally or otherwise. The word "otherwise" includes such liability as might arise from any other cause or in any different manner. A contract assuming or releasing the employer from the ordinary risks of a service would be a useless ceremony, for it could but do that which the law does without it. Giving the parties credit for a purpose to create an effective and rational contract, we would naturally look for a purpose not already accomplished; and, when we consider the two contracts before us in the light of such an object or purpose, we gather strength in the conclusion that the parties were contracting against unusual risks and liabilities. The word "otherwise," as it is twice employed in Romick's contract, must be deemed to include some liability not expressly mentioned, or such as might arise out of the relations of the parties, and within the general scope of his service and connection with them. Giving the word such force, it would reach liabilities beyond those expressly mentioned, and beyond those claims for damages, injuries, or death arising from the ordinary hazards of the service, for such claims present no liability. It would include "all the risks involved," ordinary as well as extraordinary; and it would include the assumption by the express company in favor of the appellant. So that to treat the contract with the railroad company as a release, accepted by the decedent, and acted upon, or as an assumption or indemnity, the decedent, by his contract, took the place of the express company, assumed its liability, and released it from the same. Appellee's decedent could not collect for the death a sum which the decedent, by the terms of his contract, agreed to release and assume.

We do not understand that a statement under oath may not be an affidavit without the signature of the affiant. Turpin v. Eagle Creek, & L. W. L. Gravel Road Co. 48 Ind. 45; Bonnell v. Ray, 71 Ind. 141; 1 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 315, and authorities there cited. We offer no suggestion as to the effect of the statement, with proper allegations as to the construction of the contract in case of ambiguity, but its relevancy to the defense pleaded was such that it should not have been stricken out, but should have received construction upon demurrer. In view of the fact that the special verdict contains findings relative to the contracts which were not within the issues, we do not make any direction as to the motion for a venire de novo, and for judgment in favor of the appellant.

The judgment of the Lower Court is reversed, with instructions to overrule the appellee's motion to strike out parts of the answer.

Motion to modify mandate overruled June 18, 1897.

Oslander K. RITCHEY et al., Appts.,
v.

Mary E. WELSH.

(.....Ind.....)

1. A way of necessity is created on the partition of lands, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, if such way would have been created in favor of one of the parcels by its conveyance or devise by the common ancestor.

NOTE.—As to right of way by necessity, see cases collected in note to Logan v. Stogdale (Ind.) 8 L. R. A. 58; Kingsley v. Gouldsboro Land Improv. Co. (Me.) 25 L. R. A. 502.

2. A way of necessity once selected cannot be changed by either party without the consent of the other.
3. The right to locate a way of necessity belongs to the owner of the land over which it is to pass, provided he exercises it in a reasonable manner, having due regard to the rights and interests of the owner of the dominant estate; but if he fails to select it when requested the party who has the right thereto may select a suitable route, having due regard to the convenience of the owner of the servient estate.
4. The offer of a substitute for a right of way by necessity in favor of one over another parcel of lands partitioned, which would consist of a private way over other lands that constituted no part of the estate held in common, need not be accepted by the owner of the right of way.

(January 4, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jasper County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to establish a right of way of necessity. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Seller & Uhl and R. W. Marshall, for appellants.

Messrs. Frank Folts, Charles G. Spiller, and Harry R. Kurrie, for appellee.

When a complaint is good on one of two theories the trial court is permitted to construe it upon the theory most clearly outlined by the facts stated, and require a trial on such theory.

Batman v. Snoddy, 132 Ind. 480; Monnett v. Turpie, 133 Ind. 431.

There is nothing in the record that shows that the title to any part of the estate was put in issue in the partition action. And the nature of the action does not put the title to land affected by it in issue. Neither does it put in issue any appendant right to any title.

Gullett v. Miller, 106 Ind. 75; Davis v. Lennen, 125 Ind. 185; Baumgardner v. Edwards, 85 Ind. 117.

A way of necessity is not an interest or an estate in the land over which it passes. It is no part of that title, but it is only a part of the title, as an incident of the dominant estate.

Davidson v. Nicholson, 59 Ind. 411; Morgan v. Moore, 3 Gray, 319; Sanray v. Hunger, 42 Ind. 44; Sedgwick & Wait, Trial of Title to Land, §§ 132, 147; Moore v. Crose, 43 Ind. 30.

A way of necessity, so far as it concerns the servient estate, is a mere privilege, which continues so long as the necessity which creates it exists.

Home v. Richards, 4 Call. (Va.) 441, 2 Am. Dec. 574; Snyder v. Warford, 11 Mo. 513, 49 Am. Dec. 94; Nesbitt v. Trumbo, 39 Ill. 116; Washb. Easements & Servitude, 2d ed. p. 3; Atkins v. Bordman (Mass.) 4 Lead. Cas. Am. Law of Real Prop. p. 216; Taylor v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411, 5 Am. Dec. 107.

A way of necessity arises in the broad equitable ground that every transfer of property is presumed to include the enjoyment of the property, so far as the owner possesses the right of enjoyment himself, and if the incidents that are essential to its enjoyment are not specifically mentioned, they are presumed to pass as a part of that which is expressly granted.

"Whoever grants a thing is supposed to tacitly grant that without which the grant would be of no effect."

Broom's Legal Maxims, 196; Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 403, 55 Am. Dec. 464; Collins v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 39, 38 Am. Dec. 61; Taylor v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411, 5 Am. Dec. 107.

The appellee had a right to assume that the conveyance included a way, in view of the necessity, and especial mention of a way would have been mere surplusage.

Atkins v. Bordman (Mass.) 4 Lead. Cas. Am. Law of Real Prop. p. 193; Pernam v. Wead, 2 Mass. 203, 8 Am. Dec. 43; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362; Ellis v. Bassett, 128 Ind. 118; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 402, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, pp. 41, 88, 85.

When the appellants permitted appellee to use and occupy this particular way described in the complaint for a number of years, and to erect a gate on her own land in reference thereto, with the maintenance of the gate at the other end of the route that had been erected by the common ancestor, the way became selected, and is not subject to change except with her consent.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 106; Lawton v. Tison, 12 Rich. L. 88; Miller v. Gartock, 8 Barb. 153.

When the location is once fixed it binds both the dominant and servient owner.

Atkins v. Bordman (Mass.) 4 Lead. Cas. Am. Law of Real Prop. p. 200; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Smith v. Lee, 14 Gray, 473; Wynkoop v. Burger, 13 Johns. 222; Karmuller v. Krotz, 18 Iowa. 352; Garraty v. Duffy, 7 R. I. 476; Kraut's Appeal, 71 Pa. 64; Jennison v. Walker, 11 Gray, 427; Jones v. Percival, 5 Pick. 485, 16 Am. Dec. 415; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 51 Am. Rep. 154; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 2d ed. p. 223, § 10.

The appellant has the right to select the way in the first instance, but even then he must select one that is practicable.

Monks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by appellee against the appellants to enforce a way of necessity. The demurrer to the complaint was overruled. The court made a special finding of facts, and stated its conclusions thereon in favor of appellee, to each of which appellants excepted. Final judgment was rendered in favor of appellee. The errors assigned, and not waived, call in question each conclusion of law and the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the complaint. It appears from the special finding that Mary C. Ritchey died intestate, the owner of a body of land bounded on the west and south by a highway; that afterwards, in 1887, partition was made of said real estate, so that the real estate allotted to each was bounded on the west or south by said highway. The 18 acres set off to appellant Oslander K. Ritchey was 36 rods wide north and south, and divided the 53 acres set off to Samuel W. Ritchey, husband of said deceased, from the 29 acres set off to appellee. Afterwards said Samuel W. Ritchey died the owner of said 53 acres, and in 1891, in an action for partition, the same was divided in such a manner that the part set off to appellant Osiander K. Ritchey was between the public highway and the part set off to appellee, so that the tract set off to appellee could not be reached from a public highway over said 53 acres, except by crossing over the part thereof set off to said Osiander K. Ritchey. No mention was made in said partition proceedings of a way from appellee's tract to any highway. Samuel W. Ritchey occupied said 53 acres from the time the same was set off to him until his death, and entered from the highway through a gate on the part of said land afterwards set off to said appellant Osiander K. Ritchey, going over the land in the most convenient route. After the partition of the 53 acres, a gate was still maintained upon said land at the highway for the convenience of appellee, she going thence north to a point west of the southwest corner of her said tract; thence east to her land. The part of the 53 acres set off to appellee was not fenced in until 1893, when she erected a gate at the southwest corner thereof, and has since used said gate, and a route extending directly west therefrom to the east line of the southwest quarter, and thence south to the gate at the highway, the entire way so used being upon the part of said 53 acres set off to appellant Osiander K. Ritchey, and with his consent. Appellant Osiander K. Ritchey, before the commencement of this action, offered to appellee the privilege of passing over the 18 acres which were set off to him in the partition of his mother's land, in 1887, from north to south. By the way so offered, appellee could go from the 25 acres set off to her in the partition of her father's land, in 1891, to the 29 acres set off to her in the partition of her mother's land, in 1887, which last-named tract was bounded on the west by a highway. Appellants insist that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint, and in each of the conclusions of law; because—"First, a right of way of necessity does not arise out of partition proceedings; second, appellee had another way offered before this action was commenced; third, appellants had selected another way."

It is settled law that if one conveys a part of his land in such form as to deprive himself of access to the remainder, unless he goes across the land sold, he has a way of necessity over the portion conveyed. This is because the law presumes an understanding of the parties that the one selling a portion of his land shall have a legal right to access over the part sold to the remainder, if he cannot reach it in any other way. If the part conveyed is in such form that the grantee cannot reach the same except over the part not conveyed, such grantee has a way of necessity thereto over the land of the grantor not conveyed for the reason that the law presumes that one would not sell his land to another without an understanding that the grantee should have a legal right of access thereto over the part not conveyed. Collins v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 39, 38 Am. Dec. 61, and cases cited; Stewart v. Hartman, 46 Ind. 331, 341, 342; Logan v. Slogdale, 123 Ind. 372, 376, 377, 8 L. R. A. 58; Ellis v. Bassett, 123 Ind. 118, and cases cited; Kimball v. Cocheso R. Co. 27 N. H. 448, 59 Am. Dec. 387; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Pernam v. Wead, 2 Mass. 203, 3 Am. Dec. 43; Pinnington v. Galland, 9 Exch. 1; White v. Bass, 7 Hurlst. & N. 732; Washb. Easem. 164, 166. These presumptions prevail over the ordinary covenants of a warranty deed. Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray. 297, 64 Am. Dec. 76. The rights of the grantor and grantee would not be different or any more extensive if by the terms of the deed express provision was made for such way of necessity (Viall v. Carpenter, 14 Gray, 126; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362; Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray, 297, 64 Am. Dec. 76); the law thus giving effect to such grant according to the presumed intent of the parties. Appellants contend that this right of a way of necessity can only exist when there is a grant by one owning both the dominant and servient estate. This right, however, has not only been raised between parties to the conveyance of one or more parts of land, when the part granted or retained can only be reached over the other part, but also where a part of a tract of land has been sold or set off on execution or by an executor or administrator. Ellis v. Bassett, 123 Ind. 118; Pernam v. Wead, 2 Mass. 203, 3 Am. Dec. 43; Taylor v. Townsend, 8 Mass. 411, 5 Am. Dec. 107; Russell v. Jackson, 2 Pick. 574; Schmidt v. Quinn, 186 Mass. 575; Smyles v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 217; Houston v. Frearson, 8 T. R. 50. It has been held that such a right exists in partition proceedings in favor of any tract allotted which is not accessible except over the part or parts of the tract allotted to others. Viall v. Carpenter, 14 Gray, 126; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362. See also Goddard, Easem. Bennett's ed. 348. Under the authorities it is clear that if the parts of said real estate allotted to appellant Osiander K. Ritchey and appellee, respectively, had been conveyed or devised to them by Samuel W. Ritchey, their common ancestor, a way of necessity would have been created in favor of the part conveyed or devised to appellee. The reason for the doctrine of a way of necessity is thus stated in Collins v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 39, 38 Am. Dec. 61: "And although it is called a way of necessity, yet, in strictness, the necessity does not create the way but merely furnishes evidence as to the real intention of the parties. For the law will not presume that it was the intention of the parties that one should convey land to the other in such manner that the grantee could derive no benefit from the conveyance; nor that he should so convey a portion as to deprive himself of the enjoyment of the remainder." The reasons given to support a way of necessity, in case of a grant, support such a rule with equal force, when there is partition of land by deed or by a proceeding in court. In Viall v. Carpenter, 14 Gray, 126, the lands of a testator were so divided by proceedings in the probate court that parcels of land set off to some of the devisees were not accessible from the highway without crossing one of the parcels set off to other devisees. The committee making the division made no express provision concerning the parcels of land which they assigned in severalty. The court held that the right of way of necessity attached to the lands assigned without any express provision therefor. The court said; "The court do not doubt that, by the division of the real estate of Thomas Carpenter, deceased, in the probate court, his heirs, to whom specific portions of that estate were assigned, acquired a right of way to those portions over other lands which had been their ancestor's. And whether they acquired this right solely as of necessity, without any provision therefor in the language of the division, or by the effect of the language used by the committee in the making the record of the division, seems to us to be unimportant.

A reservation, in terms, of a way of necessity' would confer no further right than would be conferred by operation of law, without those words." In Ellis v. Bassett, 128 Ind. 118, a part of the land of an estate fronting on the highway was set off to the widow in a proceeding for a partition, and afterwards the administrator, by order of court, sold the remainder. It was held that the purchaser had a right of way of necessity over the part set off to the widow. This court said: "A right of way, upon a severance of the estate by partition between heirs, sometimes arises when it would not exist in case of a conveyance of one portion of the premises." Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362, fully sustains our conclusion that the doctrine of a way of necessity applies in partition of lands made by deed or by proceedings in court. The presumption is, unless the contrary clearly appears from the record in the partition case, that the shares were allotted with the understanding that the parcel allotted to appellant Osiander K. Ritchey was subject to the easement of a way of necessity in favor of the parcel set off to appellee. Appellee's right to a way of necessity is the same as if provision had been made therefor in the report of the commissioners and decree of the court. Viall v. Carpenter, 14 Gray, 126; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362. Appellants contend that they had the right to choose where the way should be located. When no prior use of the way has been made, and the same is to be located for the first time, the owner of the land over which the same is to pass has the right to choose it, provided he does so in a reasonable manner, having due regard to the rights and interest of the owner of the dominant estate. But, if the owner of the land fail to select such way when requested, the party who has the right thereto may select a suitable route for the same, having due regard to the convenience of the owner of the servient estate. Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. 507, 510; Russell v. Jackson, 2 Pick. 574; Capers v. Wilson, 3 McCord, L. 170; Goddard, Easem. Bennett's ed. 348, 350. When the way is once selected, it cannot be changed by either party without the consent of the other. Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 35 Am. Dec. 302; Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. 507, 510; Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 23; Goddard, Easem. Bennett's ed. 351.

It is shown by the special finding that Samuel W. Ritchey, the one from whom said appellants and appellee inherited their respective interests in said 53 acres of land, entered upon the part thereof afterwards set off to appellant Osiander K. Ritchey through a gate at the highway, going thence over the land on the most convenient route; that after the partition was made appellee had access to the 25 acres set off to her over the part of said 53 acres set off to said appellant on the route set forth in the special finding, and that she erected a gate upon her said 25 acres where she entered thereon from said way, and that the way was so used with the consent of said appellant. This was clearly a selection of the way over said appellant's land to the land of the appellee by the agreement of both parties. The way having been selected and used by the agreement of both parties, said appellant could not afterwards, without appellee's consent, change the route, and require said appellee to use the way offered over the 18 acres set off to him in the partition of his mother's land, in 1887. Appellee was not entitled to a way of necessity over said 18-acre tract, which divided her 25 acres from her 29 acres, for the reason that it was no part of the estate owned by said appellant and appellee as tenants in common. She would have no more right to insist on a way of necessity over land of said appellant, other than that inherited by them from their father, than one receiving a grant of land from another could claim a way of necessity over the land of a stranger. Even if there had been no selection of a way by both or either of said parties, we do not think said appellant could compel appellee to accept a private way over said 18-acre tract. Said appellant could not deprive appellee of her right to a way of necessity over the land set off to him by offering her a private way over other lands owned either by himself or others. If he had opened a public highway, running from the existing highway over said 18-acre tract or any other land, so that appellee could thereby have access to the 25-acre tract, there would have been no necessity for a way. But no such case is presented by the facts found.

Appellants next insist that the complaint is to enforce an oral contract between said appellant Osiander K. Ritchey and appellee for a private way, made pending a petition for partition, and that the special finding does not find that there was such an agreement. It is true that the complaint alleges that, when the commissioners filed their report of the partition of the lands of Samuel W. Ritchey, said appellant and appellee agreed that appellee should have a private way from the land set off to her over the land set off to said appellant to the highway, but, disregarding the allegations concerning such agreement, the averments were sufficient to entitle appellee to a way of necessity over the lands set off to appellant. The cause was tried, and a judgment rendered, upon the theory that the complaint sought to enforce a way of necessity. There was no error in the court so treating the complaint. It follows, therefore, that the court did not err in its conclusions of law nor in overruling the demurrer to the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

George MILLER, Appl.,
v.
STATE of Indiana.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Cruel and unusual punishment is not made by an indeterminate sentence, not more than the maximum nor less than the minimum prescribed by statute for the specified crime.
2. The constitutional right of an accused person to trial by jury is not violated by taking away from the jury the right to fix his punishment.
3. Judicial power is not given to a board of managers of a reformatory by authorizing them to shorten the term of service of a convict in case of his reformation, where his sentence is indeterminate between the maximum and minimum prescribed by statute.
4. The failure of the court to assess disfranchisement as part of the punishment of a convict is not an error of which he can complain.
5. The remedy for refusal by the trial court to furnish a transcript of the stenographer's notes to a person convicted of crime is an application to the supreme court for an order requiring it to do so.

(Howard, Ch. J., and Jordan, J., dissent.)

(March 8, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for St. Joseph County convicting him of burglary. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Talbot & Talbot, for appellant:

This law contravenes that part of that section of our Constitution which provides: "All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense."

Ind. Const. art. 1, § 13, Bill of Rights, being Rev. Stat. 1894, § 61.

The legislature has no power to make the length of a convict's term of imprisonment depend on anything but the offense of which he has been convicted.

If the legislature had intended to pass an act making the maximum term the punishment in all cases, it would have provided that the court should sentence for the maximum term by statute provided, and then would have conferred power on the board of managers to parol and discharge.

People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 256, 14 L. R. A. 285; State, Atty. Gen., v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629.

This act, if upheld, will make the punishment of a convict depend upon other things than the nature of the offense of which he has been convicted, viz.: his conduct subsequent to his conviction; under § 10 of the act, on the determination of the board of managers; that he is incorrigible or that his presence in the reformatory is detrimental to the welfare of the other inmates; under § 11, on the ability of the prisoner or his friends to furnish the board with satisfactory evidence that arrangements have been made for the convict's honorable and useful employment for at least six months while upon parole, in some suitable occupation, failing in which he cannot be paroled, but must serve the maximum term provided for his offense; under § 12, his age, nativity, nationality, education, the nature or history of his parentage, occupation, and early social influences as seem to indicate the constitutional and acquired defects and tendencies of the prisoner, his physical condition, his improvement or deterioration of character, all alterations affecting the standing or situation of such prisoner, any subsequent facts of personal history which may be brought to the knowledge of the superintendent.

Any charge of any character which may be made against any prisoner is thus made to effect the duration of his term of imprisonment.

No man shall have criminal punishment inflicted upon him for anything but a crime of which he has been convicted after trial and public conviction on an impartial and public trial in the county in which the crime is charged to have been committed, in which trial he shall have had an opportunity to meet his accusers and to prove any defense which he might have.

Ind. Const. §§ 58, 61.

This act is in violation of § 58 of the Constitution in this: It makes the punishment of the prisoner depend upon the determination of a board of managers, arrived at in an ex parte manner and upon hearsay evidence in a county other than that in which the offense was committed, without giving him a trial by an impartial jury, in deprivation of his right to be heard by himself and counsel.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 812, 342, 343.

This act conflicts with § 161 of the Constitution, which is as follows: "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, in circuit courts, and in such other courts as the general assembly may establish." Burns's Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 161.

A court is the sitting or meeting of persons legally appointed for the judicial determination of any cause.

1 New Rev. Encyclopædic Dictionary, p. 1818, sub. B, ¶ 4.

A court is a place where justice is judicially administered.

Co. Litt. 58; 3 Bl. Com. 23; White County Comrs. v. Gwin, 136 Ind. 562, 22 L. R. A. 402; Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569.

It attempts to confer judicial powers upon the board of managers and general superintendent of said reformatory.

Neither the governor nor the legislature can select persons to assist the courts in the performance of their judicial duties.

State, Hovey, v. Noble, 118 Ind. 850, 4 L. R. A. 101.

The legislature has no power to confer judicial authority upon master commissioners.

Shoultz v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 878; 5 American Lawyer, p. 252.

The act in question contravenes that constitutional provision prohibiting the vesting of judicial power in a ministerial body, as well as that constitutional provision providing that all punishments shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

NOTE.—As to suspension of sentence of prisoner, see note to People v. Cummings (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 285; also State v. Voss (Iowa) 8 L. R. A. 767; People, Forayth, v. Monroe County Court of Sessions (N. Y.) 23 L. R. A. 856; Re Webb (Wis.) 27 L. R. A. 366; State v. Crook (N. C.) 29 L. R. A. 280.
40 L. R. A.

People, Henning, v. Allen, 29 Chicago Legal News, 176.

Mr. F. M. Jackson, also for appellant:

In every government there are three sorts of powers: The executive, the legislative, and the judicial.

When the legislative and the executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty. Again, there is no liberty, if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers. Were it joined with the executive power, the judge might behave with all the violence of an oppressor.

Montesquieu, Spirit of Laws, chap. 6 (1748).

In the law under consideration it will not be questioned that this board of managers is purely an administrative body, and not a judicial body, and any attempt of the legislature to confer judicial authority upon an administrative body will be held unconstitutional under art. 3, § 1, of the Constitution (Rev. Stat. 1894, 96.)

The administration of law implies the judicial function.

The judicial function implies question and debate; and, in this sense, it includes a bar, trained and skilled in the principles and processes of the law. A body of men, trained to the knowledge and practice of the law, learned in its principles and processes, to interpret the law to society; to guide the business of society and its members; to look to the intelligent and faithful course of judicial proceedings; and to stand, charged with the holy office of the administration of God's justice among men.

Donovan, Modern Jury Trials, p. 551.

Under the new régime, the board of managers may find that the court and jury trying the cause were mistaken, and change the punishment from a term in the reformatory to the maximum term in the state prison. Or, in like manner, the defendant may have proof positive at home in his own county, where his friends and neighbors live, that he had never before been convicted of anything, that he had always borne a good reputation, and, if given an opportunity to be heard and cross examine the witness against him, may show the testimony to be unreliable and worthless. Yet, this new tribunal is given power to determine that fact adversely to the defendant, in his absence without his consent, and upon any kind of evidence, and the witnesses are not required even to go through the formality of taking an oath before giving their evidence.

Trial by jury as contemplated by the Constitution is an indispensable part of the machinery of justice.

The hard sense and courageous firmness of English juries more than once preserved the liberties of the English people against the combined attack of the King and his servile judges.

Trial of Penn and Mead, 6 How. St. Tr. 951.

Right of trial by jury must be preserved inviolate as it was in use when the Constitution of the state was adopted; but this relates only to trials in criminal cases and suits at common law.

40 L. R. A.

Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756.

Messrs. Thomas W. Slick, William A. Ketcham, and Merrill Moores for the State.

McCabe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was charged in the indictment with burglary and larceny, on May 3, 1897. On a trial of the charge, the jury found him guilty of burglary by their verdict, reading thus:

We, the jury, find the defendant, George Miller, guilty of burglary, as charged in the indictment, and that his age is eighteen years.

John Valentine, Foreman.

And the following judgment was rendered upon said verdict, to wit: "And the defendant, being asked if he has any legal cause to show why the judgment of the court should not be pronounced upon the verdict of the jury, stands mute; and thereupon it is considered and adjudged by the court that the defendant be, and is hereby, sentenced to the custody of the board of managers of the Indiana Reformatory or at such place as may be designated by said board of managers, as guilty of the crime of burglary, and that he be confined therein for a term of not less than one year or more than fourteen years, as a punishment for said offense, according to the rules and regulations established by such board of managers, and that the sheriff of this county is charged with the execution of this sentence." The errors assigned call in question the action of the circuit court in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial, and in refusing appellant's request to be furnished with a longhand transcript of the evidence given in said cause at the expense of St. Joseph county. The ground specified in the motion for a new trial is that the verdict is contrary to law.

The objection to the verdict would perhaps be fatal, in that it would be contrary to and unauthorized by law as it stood prior to April 1, 1897, because it does not "state . . . the amount of fine and fix the punishment to be inflicted." Rev. Stat. 1894, § 1906 (Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 1887; Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1837). But it is contended on behalf of the state that the verdict is not contrary to, and is authorized by, law, to wit, § 8 of the reformatory act, approved February 26, 1897 (Acts 1897, p. 69). That act does authorize just such a verdict and judgment in such a case. The learned counsel for appellant contend, however, that so much of the reformatory act as authorizes such a verdict and judgment is unconstitutional. The section in question reads thus: "In all cases of felony tried hereafter before any court or jury in this state, if the court or jury find the person on trial guilty of a felony, it shall be the duty of such court or jury to further find and state whether or not the defendant is over sixteen (16) years of age and less than thirty (30) years of age. If such defendant be found to be between said ages, and he be not guilty of treason or murder in the first or second degree, it shall only be stated in the finding of the court or verdict of the jury, that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, naming it, and that his age is that found by it or them to be his true age, and the court trying such person shall sentence him to the custody of the board of managers of the Indiana Reformatory to be confined at the Indiana Reformatory or at such place as may be designated by such board of managers where he can be most safely and properly cared for, as guilty of the crime found in such finding or verdict, and that he be confined therein for a term not less than the minimum time prescribed by the statutes of this state, as a punishment for such offense, and not more than the maximum time prescribed by such statutes therefor, subject to the rules and regulations established by such board of managers, and it shall be the duty of the board of managers of said reformatory to receive all such convicted persons, and all existing laws requiring the courts of this state to sentence such persons to the penitentiaries or prisons of this state are hereby modified and changed so as to make it the duty of such courts to sentence such prisoners to the Indiana Reformatory. The board of managers may terminate such imprisonment when the rules and requirements of such reformatory have been lived up to and fulfilled, according to the provisions of this act." The next section makes it the duty of the clerk of the court in which the case is tried, where there is a conviction, to send along with the commitment a record containing a copy of the indictment or information filed in the case, the name and residence of the judge presiding at the trial, the names of the jurors and witnesses serving at the trial, with a statement of any fact or facts which the presiding judge may deem important or necessary for the full comprehension of the case. Section 11 provides that "the said board of managers shall have power to establish rules and regulations under which prisoners in the reformatory may be allowed to go upon parole outside the reformatory building and inclosure, but to remain while on parole in the legal custody and under control of the board of managers and subject at any time to be taken back within the inclosure of said reformatory; and full power to enforce such rules and regulations to retake and imprison any inmate, so upon parole, is hereby conferred upon said board, whose order, certified by its secretary, and signed by its president, with the seal of the reformatory attached thereto, shall be a sufficient warrant for the officers named in it to authorize such officer to return to actual custody any conditionally released or paroled prisoner: . . . provided, that no prisoner shall be released on parole until the said board of managers shall have satisfactory evidence that arrangements have been made for his honorable and useful employment for at least six months while upon parole, in some suitable occupation." The 12th section provides for certain rules by which the reformation is to be sought by the board of managers, among which is a record in which is to be entered every fact connected with the history of every prisoner when he enters the reformatory, together with his subsequent conduct affecting his standing, and any facts or personal history which may come to the knowledge of the general superintendent officially, bearing upon the question of parole or final release of the prisoner. And the section then provides: "And it is hereby provided that whenever in the opinion of the board of managers any prisoner on parole has violated the conditions of his parole or conditional release, by whatever name, as affixed by the managers, he shall by a formal order entered in the manager's proceedings, be declared a delinquent, and shall thereafter be treated as an escaped prisoner owing the service to the state and shall be liable when arrested to serve out the unexpired term of his maximum possible imprisonment, and the time from the date of his declared delinquency to the date of his arrest shall not be counted as any part or portion of time served." Section 18 provides that "it shall be the duty of the general superintendent to keep [in communication, as far as possible, with all prisoners who are upon parole, and when in his opinion any prisoner has for one year so conducted himself as to merit his discharge, and has given evidence that is deemed reliable and trustworthy, that he will remain at liberty without violating the law, and that his final release is not incompatible with the welfare of society, the general superintendent shall make a certificate to that effect to the board of managers, and after written notice to all of the managers, the board shall, at the next meeting thereafter, consider the case of the prisoner so presented; and when said board shall find that said prisoner has so done, he shall be entitled to his final discharge."

40 L. R. A.

It is contended on behalf of appellant, first, that these provisions violate § 16 of art. 1 of the Bill of Rights in our Constitution, providing that "cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense." Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 61 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 61; Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 61). Frequent attempts have been made in this court to reverse judgments in criminal cases because the punishment adjudged was cruel and excessive. But it has invariably been held that, no matter how harsh and severe it might seem to this court, yet, if it was within the limits prescribed by statute for the punishment of such crimes, this court could not interfere nor reverse the judgment. Siberry v. State (Ind.) 47 N. E. 458; Ledgerwood v. State, 134 Ind. 91; McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 838; McCulley v. State, 62 Ind. 428; Shields v. State (at this term) 49 N. E. 351. In none of these cases was the validity of the statute questioned. In the last case cited, this court said: "It is also urged as a reason for reversal that the punishment is excessive. The only limitations to the power of the legislature to fix the punishment for crimes are those imposed by the Constitution of this state and the United States. Section 16 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, which provides that cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted, has reference to the statute fixing the punishment and not to the punishment assessed by the jury within the limits fixed by the statute. If the statute fixing the punishment is not in violation of said section of the Constitution, then any punishment assessed by a court or jury within the limits fixed by the statute cannot be adjudged excessive by this court, for the reason that the power to declare what punishment may be assessed against those convicted of crime is not a judicial power, but a legislative power, controlled only by the provisions of the Constitution."

The question, then, is whether the provisions of the act quoted authorize the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment. The legislation was an attempt on the part of the legislature to obey the mandate contained in § 18 of art. 1 of the Constitution, demanding that "the Penal Code shall be founded on the principles of reformation, and not of vindictive justice." And yet the duty to carry out one provision of the Constitution does not authorize the legislature to violate another. The question still remains: Does the statute inflict cruel and unusual punishment? The appellant was convicted of burglary, and the punishment prescribed therefor by the Criminal Code of 1881 was imprisonment in the state prison for any determinate period, at the discretion of the jury, of not less than two years and not more than fourteen years. Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894, § 2002 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1929; Horner's Rev. Stat. 1897, § 1929). Under that statute, if the evidence had shown that the appellant was guilty of breaking into an old outhouse, with intent to commit a felony, though he found nothing therein on which to commit the felony, and though the outhouse was practically worthless, yet the jury, in their uncontrollable and unbridled discretion, could send him up to the state prison for fourteen years, and he would be without remedy. Certainly, that is more cruel punishment than that provided by the reformatory act. Under the law prior to that act, when the ponderous iron doors of the prison close on the convict, it not only shuts him in, and shuts out the bright angel of liberty, but it also shuts out of the convict's heart all hope, which is the anchor of the soul, because in the absence of such legislation he is utterly powerless by any amount of good conduct or penitence to assuage or mitigate the severity of his punishment. Is it at all strange that, with liberty and hope gone, the convict's heart should break, or that he should, in his helpless condition settle down to the belief that society was his bitter hating enemy; and thus brooding over the subject through the long years of his prison toil without recompense, and tears all in vain, is it at all strange that he should, at the expiration of his term, come out of prison the bitter-hating enemy of society? Clearly not. It was to remedy this manifest evil to society and to the criminal classes themselves that the legislation in question was enacted. So that, when the convict is brought within the prison walls, if his crime be not treason or murder in the first or second degree, the hope of liberty is not shut out of his heart, the anchor of his soul is not taken away, but society whispers in his ear the brotherly message, through the statute in question, that "the restoration of your liberty is largely in your own hands." "Your own good conduct and reformation may restore you to liberty and to society as a useful citizen, even before you have served the minimum or shortest time fixed in the Criminal Code for the punishment of your crime, namely, in one year after your imprisonment begins," because the minimum term of imprisonment prescribed by the Criminal Code for a large majority of the felonies falling within the reformatory act is two years, and some three years. The minimum term in a small number is three years, and in a still smaller number it is one year, and in a very few cases it is six months. And we are gravely told by appellant's learned counsel that this act violates the Constitution in placing it within the convict's power, by good conduct, fidelity, and trustworthiness while on parole, to mitigate the severity of his punishment by being restored to liberty conditionally, and, it may be, finally discharged, long before the very shortest term he would be compelled to serve under the old law, because such provision is cruel punishment. To say so would require us to turn back the hands on the dial of human progress a hundred years. To call these provisions "cruel punishment" is to mock at all humanizing efforts. It is to cast a stigma on all our benevolent institutions, which stand as noble monuments of the goodness of the human heart. In short, it is to deny the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

40 L. R. A.

Appellant's contention, substantially, though not in words, that that part of the act authorizing a judgment for the maximum term of imprisonment specified in the section of the Criminal Code under which he was convicted must be looked to alone in determining the question whether the punishment prescribed is cruel or not, is not tenable. The whole of the act bearing on the question of punishment must be looked to in construing the different parts. In upholding the constitutionality of a similar act of the Illinois legislature, the supreme court of that state, in the course of a very learned opinion, said: "We think that the judgment and mitimus in this case must be read and interpreted in the light of and under the restrictions imposed by the statute upon which they are based. The statute provides that, although the sentence is a general sentence to imprisonment, yet that 'such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime for which the prisoner was convicted and sentenced.' This provision, and others of like import, being read into the judgment and mitimus, we think that it should be regarded that the judgment and commitment in this case were for twenty years, that being the maximum term provided by law for the crime of burglary." People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 420. In Woodward v. Murdock, 124 Ind. 439, involving the validity and construction of the act of 1883, relating to shortening the prisoner's term by deductions therefrom, this court said, on page 444, 124 Ind., that "the law allowing him credit for good time entered into the judgment as if written therein, and, therefore, by the very language of the judgment the appellant's time expired on the 18th day of December, 1889." And so here the reformatory act may be read into the judgment wherever necessary to make the meaning of the judgment clear or make it effectual. In construing this provision of the Constitution in Hobbs v. State, 183 Ind. on pages 408, 409, 18 L. R. A. 774, this court said: "The second point, that the act is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution that 'cruel and unusual punishment shall not be inflicted,' has the merit of possessing some originality; but the position assumed seems to be without authority to support it. We have been unable to find but a single instance in which this provision of the Constitution has been in question before this court, and then the question was regarded as possessing no merit, and was disposed of without serious consideration. This provision of the Constitution is found also in the Constitution of the United States in the same words, and Mr. Story, in his work on the Constitution, says: 'It is an exact transcript of a clause in the Bill of Rights framed at the revolution of 1688.' He says, further, that 'the provision would seem to be wholly unnecessary in a free government, since it is scarcely possible that any department of such a government should authorize or justify such atrocious conduct. It was, however, adopted as an admonition to all departments, . . . to warn them against such violent proceedings as had taken place in England in the arbitrary reigns of the Stuarts.' . . . The word 'cruel,' when considered in relation to the time when it found place in the Bill of Rights, meant, not a fine or imprisonment, or both, but such as that inflicted at the whipping post, in the pillory, burning at the stake, breaking on the wheel, etc. The word, according to modern interpretation, does not affect legislation providing imprisonment for life or for years, or the death penalty by hanging or electrocution. If it did, our laws for the punishment of crime would give no security to the citizen. Neither is punishment by fine or imprisonment 'unusual.' The same doctrine was applied to a similar constitutional provision, in upholding the constitutionality of the reformatory act of Illinois, in all material respects like our own, in the case of People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 420; also in George v. People, 167 Ill. 447. The only plausible objection that could be urged in reason to the act as to the character of the punishment when mitigated as provided in the act is that it is too mild, instead of being cruel. That, however, is a legislative, and not a judicial, question. Nor do we think the act conflicts with that clause of § 16 of the Bill of Rights requiring the punishment to be proportioned to the nature of the offense. The supreme court of Illinois on that point says: "We think that from the fact that the statute here in question imposes the maximum term of imprisonment provided by law for the crime for which the prisoner is convicted, it does not follow that such statute is in violation of the constitutional requirement that all penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense." People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 420. The same doctrine was in effect held in George v. People, 167 Ill. 447. We therefore hold that the act does not violate § 16 of the Bill of Rights.

It is also contended that the act violates § 13 of the Bill of Rights, in that it does not allow the defendant a trial by jury, because, as is contended, it makes the punishment depend upon the determination of a board of managers, arrived at in an ex parte manner, and upon hearsay evidence, in a county other than that in which the offense was committed. But the trial and finding of the guilt or innocence of the accused are authorized to be by a jury in the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed. But, because the jury are not allowed to fix the amount of the punishment which is to be inflicted, it is contended that the reformatory act deprives the accused of a jury trial, in violation of said § 13 of the Bill of Rights. This very objection to a similar act, under a similar constitutional provision in the Constitution of Illinois, in People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, supra, at page 422, 148 Ill., was held not good. It was there said: "Nor is it true that a prisoner on trial for burglary and larceny, or for any other violation of the criminal law, has a constitutional right to have the quantity of punishment fixed by a jury. At common law the jury either returned a special verdict, setting forth all the circumstances of the case and praying the judgment of the court thereon or a general verdict of guilty or not guilty. The punishment was fixed by the court, and governed by the laws in force. Bl. Com. bk. 4, p. 361. . . . The constitutional right of trial by jury is limited to the trial of the question of guilt or innocence, and we think there can be no question of the validity of the sections of the statute to which we have made reference in this connection." The supreme court of Illinois again decided the same way in 167 Ill. 447, in George v. People, supra. We therefore conclude that the act does not deprive the defendant of a jury trial, in violation of the Constitution. The only difference between the procedure in felonies under the reformatory act and that under the Criminal Code prior thereto is that the jury only find whether the defendant is guilty, and his age, but do not, as before, also fix the punishment. The judge now fixes not only the punishment as to imprisonment, but as to all other penalties prescribed by the section of the Criminal Code with the violation of which the defendant was charged. In this case, the court, in addition to the imprisonment, ought to have adjudged as part of the punishment that appellant be disfranchised and rendered incapable of holding any office of trust or profit for some determinate period. In fixing the imprisonment, the court has no discretion, but must adjudge the same as fixed by the reformatory act. The amount of fine or length of disfranchisement is to be determined and fixed by the court in its discretion, within the limits fixed by the statute prescribing the punishment for the particular offense. No question, however, has been made as to the failure of the court to assess disfranchisement as a part of the punishment. And it is settled that such failure is not an error of which appellant can complain. State v. Arnold, 144 Ind. 651, 659, and authorities there cited.

It is next contended that the act violates § 1 of article 7 of the Constitution, providing that "the judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, in circuit courts, and in such other courts as the general assembly may establish." And that it violates § 1 of article 3, providing that "the powers of the government are divided into three separate departments: the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial; and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this Constitution expressly provided." Appellant's contention on this point is thus stated by his counsel: "It attempts to confer judicial powers upon the board of managers and general superintendent of said reformatory, by permitting them to consider and determine whether or not he has ever before been convicted of a felony; whether or not the jury who found the prisoner's age were or were not mistaken; what his personal history has been; whether or not it has been good or bad; and what his conduct has been in the reformatory; and, taking these things into consideration, determine the length of time for which the prisoner shall be confined or punished." None of these considerations have anything whatever to do with the defendant's guilt, nor with the question as to what judgment should be pronounced upon a finding or verdict that he is guilty of the crime charged in the indictment, nor with the amount or quantity of punishment to be inflicted on him by the judgment. The Constitution of Illinois, as to the division of the powers of government, is precisely like ours; and the supreme court of that state, in George v. People, 167 Ill. 447, as to the point now in question said: "It is also claimed that the act is unconstitutional, because it attempts to devest the judicial department of certain of its powers, and confer those powers on the executive department, in violation of article 3 of the Constitution." After quoting that article, the court proceeds: "It may be conceded that it is beyond the power of the legislature to invest ministerial officers with judicial powers. If the act therefore confers upon mere ministerial officers judicial powers it cannot be sustained. . . . While it might be a difficult matter to draw a line of distinction between judicial and ministerial functions which would fit every case which might arise, yet we think it can be determined from the authorities, without much uncertainty, to which the duties conferred on the prison board and the warden properly belong." Then the court goes into an exhaustive review of the authorities upon that subject, the statute there and ours being practically the same, and the court then says: "After due consideration, we have reached the conclusion that it does not confer judicial power on the warden or the prison board." To the same effect is People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory, 148 Ill. 420. The same conclusion was reached by the supreme court of Ohio in upholding a reformatory act of that state similar to our own, in State, Atty. Gen. v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629-650; Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144; Conlon's Case, 148 Mass. 168. Both of the latter cases uphold the constitutionality of a similar statute in Massachusetts. In the case in 167 Mass. it is said: "It is suggested, again, without argument, that Stat. 1895, chap. 504, under which the defendant was sentenced, is unconstitutional. This statute requires the sentence in certain cases to be for a term of not less than two and a half years, and not more than a maximum fixed by the court, and not longer than the longest term fixed by law for the punishment of the offense. Such a sentence is in effect a sentence for the maximum fixed by the court, unless a permit to be at liberty is issued as provided by § 2." So that the judgment of guilty and sentence is complete and effective, so as to warrant and require the convict to remain in prison to the end of the maximum term fixed in the judgment of conviction, unless ministerial or administrative officers, the board of managers acting under the authority of the act, shall shorten the term of service in case a reformation of the convict is effected. The power to do this is not judicial power, but is a purely ministerial or administrative power. It is no more the exercise of judicial power than the power of the governor to "grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after conviction." Const. art. 5, § 17. Nor is it the exercise of the pardoning power. Pardon is remission of guilt; amnesty, oblivion, or forgetfulness. Anderson, Law Dict. 745. The act of the board only shortens the term prescribed by the sentence, and leaves the conviction of guilt unaffected. The act of the board of managers in shortening the term of imprisonment is the exercise of the exact same kind of power authorized by act 1888, § 8238 (Burns's Rev. Stat. 1894), it which it is provided that for the first year of good conduct of the convict he was allowed a credit of one month, two, three, and four months for the second, third, and fourth years, respectively, and five months additional for each succeeding year. These credits, thus shortening very materially the term of the sentence, are given, not by the court, nor by the governor under his power of pardon, but purely and simply by administrative officers,—the prison board. And, although such laws have been in force in this state for over a quarter of a century, it has never been suggested that they either conferred judicial powers on administrative officers, or interfered with the judgments of courts or the pardoning power of the governor. On the contrary, the validity of such legislation was upheld by this court in Woodward v. Murdock, 124 Ind. 439, supra. We therefore conclude that the act does not violate the section of the Constitution referred to.

The only other error alleged is the court's refusal to furnish appellant with a longhand manuscript of the evidence, he having made a proper showing, bringing himself within the provisions of the statute requiring the court to so furnish such manuscript at the expense of the county. But such refusal was after the trial and judgment, and therefore the court's action did not affect the trial. The seventh ground for a new trial specified in the Criminal Code is "error of law occurring at the trial." This error did not occur at the trial. Nor does the error fall within any of the other eight grounds specified in the Criminal Code for a new trial. Nor does it furnish any ground for a distinct assignment of error in this case. We have no means of knowing that the evidence, if it were here, would not abundantly sustain and uphold every act of the court leading to the judgment, except the unsupported statement of his counsel. The presumption of law is that the judgment of the trial court was right until that is overcome by a showing in the record. The remedy of the appellant was an application to this court for an order requiring the circuit court to furnish the transcript at the expense of the county on a proper showing.

Judgment affirmed.

Jordan, J., dissenting:

While I yield due respect to the majority opinion of this court, still I cannot concur therein so far as it sustains the constitutional validity of the provisions of the act of 1897 herein involved, which require the court, without exercising any judicial discretion whatever, to impose an indeterminate sentence on a person convicted of a felony, or which, rather, commands the court, in effect, to turn the convicted person over to the custody of the board of managers of the Indiana Reformatory Prison, there to be confined as provided by the provisions of the act, not beyond the maximum limit of imprisonment fixed by the statute defining the offense. Article 3 of our Constitution distributes the powers of the government into three separate departments,—the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial,—and denies the right of any person charged with official duties under any one of these departments to exercise any of the functions of another, except as in the Constitution expressly provided. Any attempt to deprive one department of its rights and powers under the Constitution must be carefully watched and guarded, and no encroachment of one upon the powers of the other can be permitted; otherwise, the constitutional rights of the citizen may be frittered away, and the maintenance of a Republican form of government be impaired. The statute defining the offense of which the prisoner in the case at bar was convicted provides, as a part of the punishment to be inflicted, imprisonment for a term not less than two nor over fourteen years. The law involved recognizes the existence of the provisions of this penal statute, but nevertheless proceeds to divest both the jury and the court of the power of exercising judicial functions in determining, between the minimum and maximum limits, what the term of imprisonment shall be. Not only are the trial, conviction, and sentencing of a person convicted of the commission of a crime a judicial duty, but also, in my opinion, is the right to assess the punishment, and thereby fix the term of imprisonment provided, within the limits of the statute, a judicial function, of which the court wherein the accused is tried cannot be deprived by the legislature. The provisions of the various sections of our Penal Code relating to crimes classed as felonies by the law are expressly recognized by the statute in question as still existing; especially is this true in regard to the limits of imprisonment. Certainly, the right to apply the law as it then exists is the peculiar province of the court or jury in the trial of a criminal cause. Consequently, the right to determine and decide as to the extent to which a convicted person shall be punished by imprisonment under and within the limits of an existing law cannot be wrested from the court and jury and lodged elsewhere. The provisions of the statute under consideration wholly rob the court of all judicial discretion in regard to the term of imprisonment, and in imperative language require it to sentence the prisoner to the custody of the board of managers of the reformatory for an indefinite term. While the constitutional validity of the statute which simply lodges in the court, where a person accused of crime is tried, the power of assessing the punishment, instead of leaving it with the jury trying the case, may be conceded, but when a law goes beyond this, and deprives both the jury and the court of this power, as does the one in dispute, certainly it must be held to infringe upon the constitutional rights of the accused, which he has, to demand, in the event of his conviction, that his punishment be judicially determined under the existing law, which he had been convicted of violating, and which prescribed the penalties for its violation. The trial cannot be said to have ended until his punishment is determined and adjudged by the court. A statute of the state of Michigan which did not go to the extent of the one here involved, leaving, as it did, the question of an indeterminate sentence to the discretion of the court, was held to be invalid. People v. Cummings, 88 Mich. 249, 14 L. R. A. 285. A similar statute in Ohio, which also made the question of imposing an indeterminate sentence one of judicial discretion, was upheld. State, Atty. Gen., v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629. The decisions of the supreme court of Illinois cited in the majority opinion, whereby the validity of a law similar in some respects to the statute now in controversy was sustained, are, in my opinion, neither satisfactory nor convincing in their reasoning. The effect of these decisions is also impaired from the fact that they were rendered by a divided court.

That the validity of a law providing for the parole, under prescribed rules and regulations, of prisoners who have been sentenced for a definite term of imprisonment, before the expiration of their terms, may be sustained, I think may be conceded; but that is not the vital question presented for decision in the case at bar. The feature in the statute which leads me to condemn it as antagonistic to the Constitution is that which unquestionably divests the judiciary of its rights and powers to a certain extent; and to this extent, and in this respect, the law, in my judgment, is invalid, and cannot be sustained; and this must be true without regard to the question of whether it invests some ministerial board or person with judicial functions. The doctrine is universally affirmed that courts, being a co-ordinate branch of the government, are not, within their sphere, subject to legislative control. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 114, 116. But, under this statute, the court, in respect to the terms of imprisonment, is wholly controlled by the will of the legislature. It is not permitted to decide what, in its judgment, under the circumstances in the particular case, ought to be the term of imprisonment within the limits provided by law. The man who is convicted of the theft of a pie or a plug of tobacco of the value of 10 cents must be turned over to the prison officials to be restrained of his liberty for the same period as one who has committed the heinous offense of stealing his neighbor's hogs or sheep, of the value of $24. The court can exercise no discretion and decide in accordance with the dictates of his own judgment. This is so evident that a mere reading of the statute is sufficient to condemn it in this respect.

It is insisted that the legislature has the power to provide that the term of imprisonment for the crime of burglary shall be fourteen years, and no less, and that the judgment of the court in the case at bar in effect inflicted the maximum term of imprisonment, which was fourteen years. While the power of the legislature to declare that the punishment for the crime of burglary shall be imprisonment for the term of fourteen years in the state's prison and no less, may be conceded, how or in what manner can this concession lend any support to sustain the validity of the statute? As heretofore stated, the law under which appellant was convicted extends the limitation of imprisonment from two to fourteen years, and, if it can in reason be said that the trial court in this case simply inflicted the maximum punishment provided by the law defining the offense of burglary, then it certainly may be asserted that, in doing so, the court responded solely to the command of the statute in controversy, and not, under the circumstances in the particular case, to the dictates of its own judgment as to what the term of imprisonment should be within the limitation provided by an independent statute. The law may be said to be crude and half-baked in its provisions, and possibly open to objections which have been urged against it, that it will in some cases result in great injustice. While these are matters which do not address themselves to a court, still, as the law is to be upheld, they may be mentioned as proper for legislative consideration in the future. As to whether, in the event a minor is convicted, imprisonment for his offense in the county jail may be substituted for imprisonment in the state's prison, as provided by Rev. Stat. 1881, § 1883, Rev. Stat. 1894, § 1902, is a question which, under the act in controversy, is left to judicial construction. Equally so is the question as to whether a fine and disfranchisement shall be adjudged as a part of the punishment by the act, where the same are provided as a part of the punishment by the penal statute which the accused person has been convicted of having violated. This law is certainly more sweeping in its provisions than any other on the same subject enacted by sister states which has come under my observation. It seems to be impressed with the impracticable and sentimental idea of certain theorists who believe that a greater justice will be meted out to the convict, and his condition bettered, by incarcerating him within the walls of a prison for an indeterminate period, without any regard to the circumstances surrounding the offense of which he has been convicted, there to remain until he can secure his liberty by ingratiating himself into the good graces of the board of parole.

I have endeavored somewhat briefly to state the reasons which I consider the cardinal ones for holding the law invalid, and, in my opinion, it should be so adjudged, without regard to the question of expediency or the results which may follow. These are questions which, as a general proposition, should exert no control over courts in reaching a conclusion in a case involving constitutional rights.

Howard, Ch. J., dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the conclusion that the Indiana reformatory act, as interpreted by the majority of the court, is constitutional. That act, as construed by the court, requires that the appellant, for the crime of burglary, should receive an indeterminate sentence of imprisonment, not to be for less than two years nor more than fourteen years. The best defense that can be made of the legality is that it is, in effect, a sentence of imprisonment for fourteen years. Yet it must be plain that the legislature did not intend this result, else it would have said so, and omitted all reference to the minimum time. The clear meaning of the act, if, indeed, it does provide for an indeterminate sentence, is, rather, that the sentence should be for some time more than two years, and less than fourteen years, such time to be finally determined by the board of managers of the reformatory. That, however, would be to substitute for the judgment of the court trying the case the judgment of the administrative officers appointed to carry out the sentence. Such an interpretation of the act makes it a plain invasion of the constitutional functions of the judiciary. If, on the other hand, it should be conceded that the sentence is, in effect, a sentence of imprisonment for the maximum period of fourteen years, then we have the anomaly that there is no gradation in the crime of burglary; that the ragged boy who lifts a latch and steals a loaf of bread for his suffering mother, brothers, and sisters is to receive his fourteen years, quite the same as the crime-hardened reprobate who breaks into a banking house, and carries off the life earnings of aged and helpless depositors. Such a construction, however, cannot be in harmony with the provision of the Constitution that "all penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense." As I look upon it, the law may be upheld by an obvious construction, and one in harmony with every provision of the Constitution; and, if this can be done, it is, of course, our duty to give to the act such construction. The act provides for confinement in the reformatory "for a term not less than the minimum time prescribed by the statutes of this state as a punishment for such offense, and not more than the maximum time prescribed by such statutes therefor." Is it not a reasonable interpretation of these words to say that their meaning is that the court, after hearing and considering all the facts and circumstances, should fix a definite term of imprisonment, somewhere between the minimum and maximum times provided by the statutes? That would be quite in harmony with the practice under the law as it was formerly understood. The statute in relation to burglary prescribes as a part of the punishment that the convicted person "shall be imprisoned in the state prison not more than fourteen years nor less than two years." No one ever knew a court, under this statute, to say to a defendant: "You have been convicted of burglary, and you will be imprisoned therefor not more than fourteen nor less than two years." It was, on the contrary, well understood that, while the statute made the punishment indeterminate between certain limits, the court, in its sentence, must name a determinate term of imprisonment within such limits, so that in every case, as required by the Constitution, the penalty "shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense." So interpreted, the act of 1897 would be in harmony with the Constitution, and would also serve to accomplish all the beneficent designs intended by the legislature. As interpreted by the court, the act seems to me to make a mere figurehead of the trial judge, and transfer the constitutional discretion and judgment of the judiciary to officers of the administrative department of the government; punishing also the culprit, not according to the degree of the offense of which he is convicted, but according to his conduct in the reformatory and the probability of his receiving remunerative employment after he gets out.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

O. R. SHULTZ

v.

A. P. GRIFFITH, Appt.

(103 Iowa, 150.)

1. A traveler going into a yard of a feed and livery barn which is open to patronage by the public and at which his team is being kept for the night, in order to see that his buggy, which was left in the yard, has been put in the barn, and to get some articles from it, when this is done between 8 and 8½ o'clock in the evening while employees are working at the barn, is not a trespasser or doing an unlawful act within the meaning of Code, § 1485, so as to preclude his recovering from the proprietor for injuries received from a dog which attacks and bites him.
2. Negligence of a party bitten by a dog is immaterial, under Code, § 1485, on the question of the liability of the owner of the dog, unless that negligence amounts to an unlawful act.
3. One who harbors a dog on his premises as owners usually do with their dogs is to be deemed the owner under a statute respecting the liability of owners for injuries done by dogs.
4. Future pain and anguish cannot be considered in assessing damages under a pleading which alleges pain and injury in the past tense only.

(October 12, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Bremer County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries inflicted by a dog. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Ruddick, for appellant:

The jury might well find that a reasonable person would not go to the buggy in the dark without first giving information to defendant or his servants of such purpose, and that to do so was negligent.

Rusch v. Davenport, 6 Iowa, 454; Banning v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 89 Iowa, 80.

There was no liability on part of defendant unless he was the owner of the dog. The statute does not say that those who harbor dogs shall be liable to the party injured, but only owners are so liable.

O'Harra v. Miller, 64 Iowa, 462.

It was error to permit the jury to put their fancy on the wing to imagine future agony and allow for it in the verdict.

Meier v. Shrunck, 79 Iowa, 17.

Messrs. Gibson & Dawson for appellee.

Given, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The following facts are undisputed: Defendant was the keeper of a feed and livery barn open to patronage by the public. The plaintiff was traveling by team, and on the evening of October 2, 1894, he left his team and buggy in care of the defendant, to be kept in said barn over night, for which he paid 75 cents. When the team was put in the barn, the buggy was left standing near by in the barn yard. Between 8 and 8½ o'clock that evening plaintiff went into the barn yard for the purpose of seeing that his buggy was put under shelter, and of getting some articles belonging to him therefrom. While at the buggy he was attacked and bitten on the leg by a dog, which caused a painful wound. The only dispute as to facts are whether defendant's employees at work at the barn knew of plaintiff's presence before he was bitten, and the identity and ownership of the dog, and the extent of the injury. In the view we take of the case, it is not material to plaintiff's right to recover whether his presence was known to defendant's employees or not. We think the jury was warranted in finding under the instructions that defendant owned the dog that did the biting, and that plaintiff was injured to the extent returned.

2. We have said the jury was warranted in finding as it did under the instructions, but the question remains whether the court erred in giving or refusing instructions in any of the particulars complained of. The court instructed that "under the laws of the state of Iowa the owner of any dog attacking or attempting to bite any person without fault or negligence upon the part of the person injured shall be liable to the person so injured for all damages done by his dog, except when the party injured is doing an unlawful act." Appellant does not complain of this instruction, and, as will be seen hereafter, could not reasonably do so. Following this, the court instructed to the effect that, if the jury found

NOTE.—As to liability of owner of animal for injuries inflicted by it upon person coming on the owner's premises, see note to Conway v. Grant (Ga.) 14 L. R. A. 196.

40 L. R. A.

the facts to be as we have stated them above, then "that his going on said premises for said purpose at the time he states he did go there was not unlawful, and you should not so find it to be." Appellant asked an instruction, which was refused, as follows: "The defendant would be bound to keep the property until the next morning, and, if the plaintiff wished to take possession before that time he should ask permission of defendant, and if he went upon the defendant's premises to intermeddle with the property so left, without permission of defendant, he would be doing an unlawful act, and your verdict must be for the defendant." The instruction given is correct, and there was no error in refusing that asked. The barn and yard were places to which the patrons of the business were invited to come at seasonable hours. Plaintiff went there before 8½ o'clock in the evening, and while defendant's son and a hired hand, with a lighted lantern, were at work at the barn. He went there to see that his buggy was put under shelter, and to get some article belonging to him from the buggy. Surely the time was seasonable, the purpose proper, and therefore the act was not unlawful. Though the property was in the care of defendant, plaintiff was not a trespasser in going to it when and for the purpose that he did, without permission, and it is, therefore, immaterial whether defendant's employees knew of his presence or not.

3. The court instructed that "negligence is the failure or omission to do that which an ordinary prudent and cautious man would do under similar or like circumstances." Appellant contends, and correctly so, that this is an incomplete definition, and that the words, "or doing something that a reasonable person would not do," should be added. The question of negligence involved in this case, under the instruction first referred to, was of commission, and not omission. These two instructions taken together, were more favorable to appellant than he was entitled to, and therefore not prejudicial to him. Section 1485 of the Code makes the owner of the dog "liable to the party injured for all damages done by his dog, except when the party is doing an unlawful act." Negligence by the injured party, whether of omission or commission, does not exempt the owner of the dog from liability, unless that negligence amounts to an unlawful act. We think the court erred in giving any instruction on the subject of negligence, as mere negligence, not amounting to an unlawful act, is no defense. These instructions were more favorable to appellant than he was entitled to, and therefore not prejudicial to him.

4. On the question of the ownership of the dog the court gave this instruction: "If you find from the weight of the evidence introduced on the trial that the dog was in the possession of the defendant, and that the defendant was harboring him on his premises, as owners usually do with their dogs, then he will be deemed to be the owner of the dog, within the meaning of the law." It is true that under said § 1485 it is only owners of dogs that are made liable, but possession and harboring, as owners usually do, have been held to be sufficient evidence of ownership. See O'Harra v. Miller, 64 Iowa, 462. There is no error in this instruction.

5. On the question of damage the court gave this instruction: "(11) If you find for the plaintiff, then in assessing his damages you may allow him such sum as, under the evidence, you find will compensate him for the wound he received as shown by the evidence, if any: the pain and anguish, mental and physical, if any, which he has suffered, or which the evidence shows it is reasonably certain he will hereafter suffer, if shown by the evidence, and caused by the injuries received." Appellant contends that no claim is made in the petition for future pain and anguish, and that, therefore, the court erred in submitting that as an element of damage. It is alleged in the petition that by reason of the wound "plaintiff became sick, sore, and lame, and suffered great bodily and mental pain and anguish, and continued to suffer for a long time thereafter; that plaintiff has suffered great pain and loss of time, and was put to great expense." These allegations are all in the past tense, and do not even inferentially allege or claim damages for future pain or anguish. Appellee cites Meier v. Shrunck, 79 Iowa, 22. In that case the plaintiff alleged that he was not yet recovered from injuries, and we held that was a sufficient allegation to warrant the court in submitting the question as to future damages. Appellee contends that the fair import of this ruling is that, when the petition does not show a recovery, future damages may be submitted to the jury. Its import plainly is that the claim is only to be submitted when the petition alleges that there has not been a recovery. Appellee contends that evidence of future disability was admitted without objection, and therefore the instruction was proper. Whether that would justify the instruction we need not determine, as we do not find that such evidence was introduced. True, plaintiff testified to his condition up to and at the time of the trial, but there is no evidence whatever to show that that condition would continue. Even his attending physician was not asked whether the injuries were such as to cause future pain or anguish. Our conclusion is that the court erred in instructing the jury to consider future pain and anguish in assessing damages, and that appellant was prejudiced thereby.

For this reason the judgment of the District Court is reversed.

Rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

TRUSTEES OF KENTUCKY FEMALE ORPHAN SCHOOL, Appt.,

v.

City of LOUISVILLE *et al.*SAME, Appt.,

v.

Henry A. BELL, Sheriff, etc.

(.....Ky.....)

1. A school for the free education of female orphan children is a charitable institution and an educational institution not used or employed for gain, within the meaning of a constitutional provision exempting such institutions from taxation, although it is under the control of a particular religious denomination and receives day pupils who are required to pay for their tuition if able to do so, the money received being used in carrying on the work of the institution.

2. An exemption of an educational institution from taxation will include property held by it for rent, the income of which is used for the work of the institution, unless there are qualifying words which show, or tend to show, that only property used by the institution or connected with it is to be exempted.

(DuRelle and Guffy, JJ., dissent.)

(May 23, 1898.)

APPEALS by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendants in suits brought to enjoin the collection of taxes on plaintiffs' property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stone & Sudduth, for appellant:

Under the act of March 11, 1862, the property owned by the Kentucky Female Orphan School "shall be exempt from all taxes whatever so long as it exists as a school of charity."

The charters and grants of or to corporations or amendments thereof, and all other statutes, referred to in the first section of the statute of 1856, which the legislature reserved power to amend or repeal, unless a contrary intent be therein plainly expressed, were only such charters and acts of incorporation as were granted thereafter.

There was no reservation of power to repeal an amendment enacted after the statute of 1856, which granted an exemption from taxation to a corporation, whose charter or act of incorporation was enacted prior to that statute.

Franklin County Ct. v. Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370; Johnson v. Com. 7 Dana, 343; Farmers' Bank v. Com. 6 Bush, 127; Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Green & B. River Nav. Co. 79 Ky. 73; Henderson v. Strangers' Rest Lodge No. 13, I. O. of O. F. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1041; Com. v. Railroad Companies, 95 Ky. 60; Com., Franklin County, v. Farmers' Bank, 97 Ky. 590; At- water v. Woodbridge, 6 Conn. 223, 16 Am. Dec. 46; Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 430, 19 L. ed. 495; Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 439, 19 L. ed. 498; St. Vincent's College v. Schaefer, 104 Mo. 281; Northwestern University v. People, Miller, 99 U. S. 809, 25 L. ed. 387; St. Anna's Asylum v. New Orleans, 105 U. S. 362, 26 L. ed. 1128.

Section 170 of the Constitution was prospective only.

New Orleans v. Poydras Orphan Asylum, 32 La. Ann. 859; New Orleans Female Orphan Asylum v. Houston, 37 La. Ann. 68; State, Dosenbach, v. St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy, 116 Mo. 575; Scotland County v. Missouri, I. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 128; State, Hacussler, v. Greer, 78 Mo. 188.

It has always been the policy of this state to exempt from taxation charitable and educational institutions.

Ky. Act. Dec. 17, 1825 (2 Morehead & Brown Stat. § 1080); Ky. Rev. Stat. 1852, chap. 58, art. 1, § 1; Gen. Stat. chap. 92, art. 1, § 3, pp. 709, 710, original ed. of 1878; Com., Franklin County v. Farmers' Bank, 97 Ky. 590.

Section 170 of the Constitution exempts appellant from taxation.

An exemption from taxation embraced county and municipal taxation.

Johnson v. Com. 7 Dana, 338; Farmers' Bank v. Com., 6 Bush, 127; Elizabethtown & P. R. Co. v. Elizabethtown, 12 Bush, 236; Franklin County Ct. v. Deposit Bank, 87 Ky. 370; Louisville v. Com. 1 Duv. 298, 85 Am. Dec. 624.

While, ordinarily, statutes of exemption are to be construed strictly, where the exemption inures to the benefit only of the person or corporation whose property is exempted from taxation, this rule does not apply, where the state is benefited, or the person or corporation for whom the exemption from taxation is made renders public services, or a fair equivalent to the state in any other manner.

25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 159, 160; State, Sisters of Charity, v. Chatham Twp. 52 N. J. L. 373, 9 L. R. A. 198; State v. Ross, 24 N. J. L. 497; State v. Fisk University, 87 Tenn. 241; University of the South v. Skidmore, 87 Tenn. 155; Methodist Episcopal Church, South v. Hinton, 92 Tenn. 188, 19 L. R. A. 289.

Under the former Constitution of this state the right to exemption from taxation was not always tested by the power of the legislature to levy a tax to support the institution whose property was claimed to be examined.

Barbour v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 82 Ky. 655; Com. v. Masonic Temple Co. 87 Ky. 353; Lancaster v. Clayton, 86 Ky. 376; Clark v. Louisville Water Co. 90 Ky. 525; Henderson v. McCullagh, 89 Ky. 452; Higgins v. Prater, 91 Ky. 6.

"Institution" in a statute exempting property of charitable institutions from taxation, signifies an organization which is permanent in its nature, as contradistinguished from an

NOTE.—As to taxation of schools established as charitable institutions, see also Philadelphia v. Overseers of Public Schools (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 600; 40 L. R. A.

also note to Book Agents of Methodist Episcopal Church, South v. Hinton (Tenn.) 19 L. R. A. 299.

undertaking which is transient or temporary. It designates corporations or other organized bodies created to administer charities, and exempts the property which they own or use for their charitable purposes, and that only.

Humphries v. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201; Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist., 90 Pa. 21; Donohugh v. Library Co., 86 Pa. 806; Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso., 125 Pa. 572; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565; Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 132; Wesleyan Academy v. Wilbraham, 99 Mass. 599.

Farms, the products of which are used for the support of the school, have been held exempt in—

People, Seminary of Our Lady of Angels, v. Barber, 42 Hun. 27; Monticello Female Seminary v. People, 106 Ill. 398, 46 Am. Rep. 702; Willard v. Pike, 59 Vt. 202; New Haven v. Sheffield Scientific School, 59 Conn. 168; Mount Hermon Boys' School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 139.

The property of institutions of purely public charity and of education is not confined or limited to that which is actually occupied or used.

Louisville v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 90 Ky. 409, 9 L. R. A. 629; Nobles County v. Hamline University, 46 Minn. 316.

The usual form used in statutes of exemption is to provide that the corporation shall be exempt, without stating its property shall be exempt, which follows as a matter of course.

Elizabethtown & P. R. Co. v. Elizabethtown, 12 Bush, 233; Com. v. Railroad Companies, 95 Ky. 60.

In appellant's exemption the language employed is "the property owned."

This language was clearly prospective, and comprehended all property thereafter acquired and owned up to the value limited in subsequent amendments to appellant's charter, first to $200,000 and afterward to $400,000.

Washburn College v. Shawnee County Comrs., 8 Kan. 344; County Comrs. v. Colorado Seminary, 12 Colo. 497.

Mr. Laf. Joseph for appellees.

Hazelrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question involved in this appeal is whether or not certain real estate, situated in the city of Louisville, and belonging to the Kentucky Female Orphan School, located at Midway, in Woodford county, is exempt from state, county, and municipal taxation, under the provisions of the Constitution on that subject. The petitions of the trustees, seeking to enjoin the collection of the taxes, were dismissed on demurrer, and the facts to be considered are therefore undisputed. It appears that the appellant was incorporated by the Kentucky legislature in 1847, and its trustees were given the ordinary powers, rights, and privileges of trustees of any other seminary of learning or academy in the state, with power to acquire by purchase, donation, etc., lands and other property to the extent of not exceeding \$50,000. This limit has been increased to \$400,000 by subsequent legislative enactment. Section 7 of the charter provides "that the beneficiaries of the institution shall be female orphan children; and the board of trustees shall have power to determine the number that shall at any time be admitted into the institution; and out of any number of applicants, they shall decide which shall be admitted; and shall also prescribe the time for which each beneficiary shall remain in the institution; and shall admit no one under nine years of age; and shall permit no one to remain longer than four years." Section 8 is as follows: "That the board of trustees shall be the guardian of each beneficiary of the institution until she shall arrive at the age of eighteen years; and shall have all such power to control the conduct and actions of each beneficiary, as guardians now have by law to control the conduct and actions of their wards." Section 9: "That pay pupils may be admitted into the institution, the number and terms of admission being decided by a majority of the board of trustees." A charter amendment of March, 1863, provides that the property owned by the Kentucky Female Orphan School, at Midway, Woodford county, shall be exempt from all taxes whatever so long as it exists as a school of charity." And by further amendment (March 3, 1876) it is provided that the trustees shall fill vacancies in their board with "persons who are members in, good standing of some congregation of the Church of Christ in the state of Kentucky." It is alleged in the petition that the real estate sought to be sold for taxes was acquired by devise many years ago, and had been continuously rented out, and the annual income used solely for the purpose of educating female orphans at its institution of learning at Midway; that its property, both real and personal, from which it derives any income, including that in Louisville, constitutes an endowment fund for the purpose of carrying on its school of charity; that the pupils received are boarded and educated, and when they are indigent, and not otherwise provided for, are also clothed, wholly or in part, by the appellant, while attending its institution; and that no part or parcel of its property has ever been used for gain by it or any person, and its income has always been devoted solely to the cause of education. The provisions of the Constitution upon which the claim to exemption is based are as follows: "Sec. 170. There shall be exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes; places actually used for religious worship, with the grounds attached thereto and used and appurtenant to the house of worship, not exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ acre in cities or towns, and not exceeding 2 acres in the country; places of burial not held for private or corporate profit, institutions of purely public charity, and institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education; public libraries, their endowments, and the income of such property as is used exclusively for their maintenance; all parsonages or residences owned by any religious society, and occupied as a home and for no other purpose by the minister of any religion, with not exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ acre of ground in the towns and cities, and 2 acres of ground in the country appurtenant thereto; household goods, etc.; and all laws exempting or commuting property from taxation other than the property above mentioned shall be void. The general assembly may authorize the incorporated city or town to exempt manufacturing establishments from municipal taxation, for a period not exceeding five years as an inducement to their location."

Upon the admitted facts, and they are attested in the current history of this beneficent institution, we are of opinion that the appellant is an institution of "purely public charity," within the meaning of the foregoing constitutional provision, as well as an institution of education "not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education." The name of the appellant is a significant index to its character, and the provisions of its charter sufficiently indicate its aims and purposes. It is true that "pay pupils may be admitted into the institution," but manifestly this is merely that the "pay" may be devoted to the general and main purpose of educating and supporting those who are unable to provide for their own support and education. It is an exception, as is clearly inferable from the insertion of the provision, and not the rule, that pay pupils are admitted. An instructive definition of a "purely public charity" is found in Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565, and is thus stated: "(1) Whatever is done or given gratuitously in relief of the public burdens or for the advancement of the public good is a public charity. Where the public is the beneficiary the charity is public; and where no private or pecuniary return is reserved to the giver, or to any particular person, but all the benefit resulting from the gift or act goes to the public, it is a purely public charity, the word 'purely' being equivalent to 'wholly.' (2) A denominational school property, vested in trustees, for the purpose of affording encouragement to the education of youth, is a purely public charity, although the school is not open in the same way to the general public as to persons connected with the religious denomination, but the general public are admitted as vacancies occur, and when admitted, upon the same terms with all other pupils. (3) An institution founded and endowed as a purely public charity does not lose its character as such, under the tax laws, if it receives a revenue from the recipients of its bounty sufficient to keep it in operation." A most satisfactory discussion of this question is found in the case of Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 21, where a testatrix, by her will, provided for the establishment of an asylum whose object should be the maintenance and education of (1) white female orphan children who shall have been baptized in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the city of Philadelphia, or in the state of Pennsylvania, and (2) all other white female orphan children, without respect to any other qualification, except that the orphan children of clergymen of that church should have the preference. The discussion of the right to tax the property of the asylum takes a wider range than is needed for the purposes of this 40 L. R. A.

case, but it is pertinent particularly to cases being considered in connection with the present one, and we therefore quote liberally from it. The reasoning of the court in that case is as follows: "It is conceded that the devise in question has created a charity which is public in the strict sense of that expression. But it is urged that it is not purely public, and hence that to apply the language of the act to this particular case would be a violation of the constitutional provision. Now, it must be conceded, and it has been decided, here and elsewhere, that the word 'purely' is not to have its largest and broadest significance when used in this connection. In the opposing line of thought it is admitted that the word is to have a limited meaning. It is not contended that a charity, to be purely public, must be open to the whole public, nor to any considerable portion of the public. Without doubt an asylum for the support of fifty blind men or an equal number of paupers would not be obnoxious to the objection that it was not 'purely public.' A charity for the maintenance of disabled seamen, or of aged and infirm stonemasons, resident in the city of Philadelphia, would undoubtedly be a purely public charity. And so, also, would a charity for the education and maintenance of the children of such persons. And if such a charity should be limited to the white female orphan children of such persons between the ages of four and eight years, such limitations, though they would very greatly restrict the class and the number of the beneficiaries, would constitute no valid objection to the purely public character of the charity. But seamen and stonemasons are only designated classes of persons, distinguished by their occupations. A charity for the support of poor widows, or indigent old men, or the insane poor of a city, county, borough, or township would be equally a purely charity, no matter how small would be the number of the beneficiaries or how limited the class. Why, then, would not a charity for the support of poor Episcopalians, Catholics, Jews, or Presbyterians of a state or city be purely public, or a charity for the education and maintenance of the orphan children of such persons? No private gain or profit is subserved; the objects of such a charity are certain and definite, and the persons benefited are indefinite within the specified class. The circumstance that the beneficiaries are to be of a particular religious faith is only of importance as designating the class. It indicates a certain portion of the whole community who are to be recipients of the charity. It has the same effect in this respect as the words seamen, stonemasons, blind persons, poor widows, etc., in the cases already mentioned, for the purpose of defining the class of persons who, as distinguished from all other persons in the community, are to enjoy the benefit of the donor's bounty, the legal effect is the same, whether the words used be seamen, Episcopalians, blind persons, Catholics, poor widows, Jews, stonemasons, or Presbyterians. The argument that to sustain, as purely public, a charity in favor of persons of a particular religious faith, would be to maintain sectarianism is of no weight. It is not discrimination in favor of a sect, for it is treating all sects alike. It is not even extending a preference to sectarians; it is merely recognizing them as a class of persons. We see no reason why that community which ranges persons into classes, so far as this subject is concerned, may not be a community of religious faith, as well as of occupation, condition in life, sex, color, age, disability, physical or mental, or nationality. As to the meaning of the word 'purely,' when used in this connection, we concur in the construction which was given by the supreme court of Ohio in the case of Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229, that, 'when the charity is public, the exclusion of all idea of private gain or profit is equivalent in effect to the force of "purely," as applied to public charity in the Constitution.' See also Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306, and Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Assn. 125 Pa. 572. In the latter case the court (page 579, 125 Pa.) said: "It will be seen from the foregoing that the object of the association is to improve the temporal, moral, and religious welfare of young females who are obliged to earn their own support, and that, as a means to this end, it furnishes them with food and lodging, not as paupers, but for a compensation which, while it does not compensate, aids in defraying the expenses, and thus preserves the self-respect of the recipients, while to others who are unable to pay, temporary shelter is furnished free, and aid extended to them in the way of procuring employment. All this and much more is done by a band of devoted women, who labor unselfishly, in season and out of season, giving their time and labor freely, and supplying the annual deficit in the treasury by contributions from themselves and their friends. There is no element of gain in the object or operations of this association. It is a public charity, and I regard it as a short-sighted policy in the city of Philadelphia to seek to burden such an institution with taxation." Again the court observes (page 581, 125 Pa.): "In the case in hand the stamp of charity is indelibly fixed upon the association. It appears in its charter and is developed at every stage of its proceedings. Does the mere fact that it charges a small sum to a portion of those who feed at its table and enjoy the shelter of its roof, destroy its character as a purely public charity? . . . This whole subject was carefully considered in Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 306. This was the case of the Philadelphia Library, an institution maintained by the annual contributions of members, from the income derived from such property as has been given to it, and from fees paid for the use of the books. The test in that case was the object of the corporation. That was found to be the general public good, and not private gain."

Regarding as settled that the appellant is such an institution as is entitled to the exemption under the terms of the Constitution, the question remains: What is meant by the word "institution" in the instrument? The chancellor seems to have conceded that appellant was an institution of purely public charity, and an institution of education, such as is contemplated by the Constitution, but argues that, if the different educational or charitable institutions of the state see fit to invest their endowment funds in real estate in the city, then to grant the appellant's contention might secure substantially the exemption of all the realty in the city. He therefore limited the meaning of the word "institution," and held it to embrace only local property, buildings, grounds, etc., so situated as to constitute part of the institution itself. While the imaginary case put is altogether improbable, and can afford but slight clue to the meaning of the language used, it must be admitted the word "institution" is often used in the sense pointed out by the chancellor. Thus, in Appeal Tax Ct. v. St. Peter's Academy, 50 Md. 845, in discussing the use of this word in the exemption statute, the court said: "The term 'institution' is sometimes used as descriptive of the building, establishment, or place where the business or operations of a society or association are carried on, and at other times it is used to designate the organized body." The words under discussion there were 'hospitals or asylums, charitable or benevolent institutions, so far as used for the benefit of the indigent and afflicted, and the ground which the buildings used as such hospitals, asylums, charitable or benevolent institutions actually cover.' It was held that the language was appropriately descriptive of a building, establishment, or place where the operations of an association or corporation are conducted, but wholly inappropriate as the designation of organized corporate bodies or associations. In the case of Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 240, the constitutional provision was: "But burying grounds, public schoolhouses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose . . . may be exempt," etc. It was held that, in a statute providing for the exemption of "all lands connected with public institutions of learning not used with a view to profit," the word "institution" was used as descriptive of the establishment of a place where the business or operations of a society or association is carried on; but, in another section of the statute, where the property referred to is described as belonging to the institution, the word was used to designate the organized body. This case is instructive, also, in considering the feature first discussed, the court saying that the word "charity," in its legal sense, . . . "includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art;" and it was held that schools established by private donations, and which are carried on for the benefit of the public, and not with a view to profit, are institutions of purely public charity, within the meaning of the Constitution which authorizes such institutions to be exempt from taxation. The court further said: "The maintenance of a school is a charity. Gifts for the following purposes have been declared to be charities: For schools of learning, free schools, and scholars of universities (2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1160); to establish new scholarships in a college (Atty. Gen. v. Andrews, 3 Ves. Jr. 683); to found and endow a college (Atty. Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. Jr. 714);" etc. In the case of Nobles County v. Hamline University, 46 Minn.

316, the act considered provided that all "corporate property belonging to the institution, both real and personal, is and shall be free from taxation;" and to the claim that "only the university itself, and the necessary grounds for its use" was exempt, the court replied as follows: "The third proposition is based upon an untenable attempted distinction between the 'institution' and the 'corporation.'"

The 'institution,' although sometimes used as descriptive of the establishment or place where a business is carried on, properly means an association or society organized or established for promoting some specific purpose.

The institution, as distinguished from the corporation, has no being, and is incapable of owning property. Had it been intended to limit the exemption to property directly used and occupied by the university, different language would have been used." Many other cases are cited by counsel, falling upon the one side or the other in the definition and use of this term, according to the language of the statute to be construed; and upon the whole it would seem that when the statute exempts the "institution" from taxation, and no qualifying words are used showing or tending to show that only the property "used" by the institution or "connected" with the institution, is to be exempt, then the associated entity—the corporate being—with its estate as an entirety, is embraced by the word "institution." The exemption of the institution would thus embrace its endowment fund and property, in whatever form these assets might be found. This is precisely what we find in the section under consideration, so far as reference is made to "institutions of purely public charity." Thus, "there shall be exempt from taxation institutions of purely public charity," and there is to be found no qualifying clause or expression anywhere in the entire section. There is no allusion to "buildings," or "grounds" used by or connected with "institutions of purely public charity," as is the case in many of the authorities referred to by counsel.

Finding no exception to the rule indicated, that where an "institution" of the character named is exempted, the charitable being, including necessarily the whole of its estate, is to be exempted, and having determined the Kentucky Female Orphan School to be an institution of purely public charity, we might rest here with our investigation. But it is proper in this case, and necessary in some of the others connected with it, to consider the succeeding clause of the section: "And institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education." Here it may be said, and with a show of technical accuracy, that whatever is meant by the words "institutions of education," something is meant which may be used or employed by a person or corporation. And this can more fitly be said of the buildings and appurtenant grounds than of the corporate being. For example: We may appropriately say that the buildings, establishment, or place where the business of the corporation is carried on shall not be "used or employed for gain by any person or corporation," while it would be rather inappropriate to say that the organized corporate body shall not be used or employed by any person or corporation. On the other hand, the clause "and the income of which is devoted," etc., could hardly mean income from the buildings, grounds, etc., but rather the income of the corporate body. Besides, we may notice that the attention of the framers of the section was called directly to the question of exempting the grounds attached to and appurtenant to certain places and houses used for certain purposes, but failed to provide any such limitation with respect to charitable and educational institutions. Perhaps a brief reference to the origin of these provisions in our Constitution may be of assistance here. As originally proposed, the section on the point involved only included the clause "institutions of purely public charity." There was no reference to institutions of education eo nomine; and, upon a suggestion that institutions of this character ought to be provided for, it was argued at length by a distinguished delegate that the language already in the proposed section fully covered the question. In support of this position, that "institutions of purely public charity" embraced institutions of education not operated for private gain, a distinguished delegate read on the floor of the convention copious extracts from the Pennsylvania cases cited. While not controverting this position, the particular friends of education argued that the Kentucky courts might not adopt the Pennsylvania construction, and secure the insertion of the clause as it now appears in the section, in order to make it certain that educational institutions not controlled for private gain, and the income of which was devoted to that cause, should be exempt. And while the endowments of some of the more prominent institutions of learning in the state were referred to during the discussion as fit subjects for exemption, if there was any objection raised or difference of opinion suggested as to the propriety of the proposed exemptions, there seems to have been no record of it. We are aware that the weight to be given the declarations of members of the convention is not to be taken as controlling. Mr. Endlich says of these declarations: "They give us no light as to the views of the large majority who did not talk; much less of the mass of our fellow citizens whose votes at the polls gave that instrument the force of fundamental law." Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 510. Yet, confessedly, it must be a source of satisfaction to those who are called on to ascertain the intention of doubtful provisions to find the conclusions arrived at to be in accord with, and not in opposition to, the views of the framers of the law so far as expressed. We think, therefore, a proper construction of the language used in the section requires the exemption of the entire property of this institution, wherever situated, and in whatever form its investments may be found.

This construction of the language of the Constitution is in accord with the long-settled policy of the state. By the Kentucky act of December 17, 1825 (2 Morehead & Brown, Stat. p. 1080), it was provided: "Hereafter the trustees or managers of such schools or seminaries of learning within this commonwealth shall not be bound to list such lands for taxation or to pay any taxes on the same. Nor shall any taxes be demanded by the state for any such land, so long as the same shall absolutely and bona fide belong to a seminary or school of learning." This statute, and the public policy it recognized and enforced, was continued in Rev. Stat. 1852, chap. 58, art. 1, § 1, as follows: "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the commonwealth of Kentucky, that lands held by a school or seminary shall not be subject to taxation, or to forfeiture, for any cause whatsoever." And the same policy, exempting all the property of institutions of learning, was continued in the General Statutes as follows: "The real estates and investment devoted to public schools, seminaries, universities, colleges, court-houses, clerks' offices, jails, public graveyards, lunatic, orphan, and deaf and dumb asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, widows' and orphans' asylums, foundling asylums." Gen. Stat. (original ed. 1872) pp. 709, 710, chap. 92, art. 1, § 3. And the Hewitt revenue law of 1886 provided: "The following property shall be exempt from taxation: Public schools, churches, and all property of seminaries, asylums, hospitals, infirmaries, and colleges and all other funds devoted to charitable purposes, . . . except those owned by joint-stock companies or associations which declare dividends; provided that nothing herein shall be construed as exempting any property which is used or employed for gain of any person, nor any property of which the products, rents, or uses are not devoted solely to the objects of the institution, as distinguished from personal gain of the individuals connected with the institution." Under these statutes we are not aware that endowments of asylums, colleges, etc., not operated for the personal gain of individuals connected with the institution have ever been taxed; and it is inconceivable that an intention to reverse the policy of the state in this respect should have been declared in language so poorly expressive of such intention. As said by the Supreme Court in United States v. Ryder, 110 U. S. 729, 28 L. ed. 308: "The revisers would not have proposed, nor would Congress have made, such a fundamental change in the law . . . without employing more appropriate terms for that purpose than those which the section contains. It will not be inferred that the legislature, in revising and consolidating the laws, intended to change their policy, unless such intention be clearly expressed." Except for the constitutional enactment, the contention of the appellees that such exemptions would be subversive of the principles announced in the bill of rights might be of some force; but the constitution must be held to be consistent with itself, and the policy adopted must be carried out. But, even before the present Constitution was adopted, this policy was recognized and enforced in the courts. In Higgins v. Prater, 91 Ky. 18, in sustaining a tax for the agricultural and mechanical college, this court said: "Other institutions of an educational character and which do not constitute a part of our common-school system have for years been supported by general taxation. . . . The framers of it

[our Constitution] and the people adopting it were not moved by a fear of too much education, but of too little." In Zable v. Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, 92 Ky. 91, 18 L. R. A. 668, it is said: "It is the duty of the state to care for its indigent orphans, and, if done by another, he renders what is properly a public service; and the legislature may therefore, without regard to the extent of it, exempt the property devoted to such use from taxation."

We have already considered, perhaps sufficiently, the nature of this institution, but, in view of the appellee's appeal to the bill of rights, it is not improper to note from the yearbook of the institution (1892) the objects it has in view. "The primary object of this institution is to educate such orphan girls as cannot obtain an education in any other way, and to qualify them for teaching. . . . We receive three classes of girls, as follows: (1) Destitute orphans, who have no relatives or friends to aid them; (2) orphans destitute of means and of relatives able to aid them, but whom churches or benevolent societies are willing to sustain at the school; (3) orphans who have some means, but not enough to support them in other schools. Precedence is given to the first class, and as many of them are received as the proceeds of the endowment will justify." If this be not an institution of "purely public charity," and entitled to the aid of the state, one can hardly be found in the state. Other reasons for the exemption are urged by the appellant, but it is deemed unnecessary to consider them.

For the reason given, the judgments are reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Du Relle and Guffy, JJ., dissenting:

We dissent from the opinion of the majority in these cases, and will state briefly the grounds of dissent. The question for decision is whether real estate in the city of Louisville, owned by the appellant, is exempt from state, county, and city taxation, under the provisions of § 170 of the Constitution of Kentucky. The other questions made in argument were not passed on in the opinion of the court, and need not be considered here.

The exemption is claimed under § 170 of the present Constitution, which, so far as applicable to the question in this suit, is as follows: "Sec. 170. Property Exempt—Cities may Exempt Manufactories. There shall be exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes; places actually used for religious worship, with the grounds attached thereto and used and appurtenant to the house of worship, not exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ acre in cities or towns, and not exceeding 2 acres in the country, places of burial not held for private or corporate profit, institutions of purely public charity, and institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the cause of education, public libraries, their endowments, and the income of such property as is used exclusively for their maintenance; all parsonages or residences owned by any religious society, and occupied as a home, and for no other purpose, by the minister of any religion, with not exceeding $\frac{1}{2}$ acre of ground in towns and cities and 2 acres of ground in the country appurtenant thereto." In connection with this section we must consider certain other sections of the Constitution, in so far as they indicate the purpose of the instrument, and shed light upon the section under consideration. It should be remembered that there is nothing corresponding to this section in the Constitution of 1850. The same may be said of the provisions of § 3, which is as follows: "Sec. 3. All men, when they form a social compact are equal; and no grant of exclusive, separate public emoluments or privileges shall be made to any man or set of men, except in consideration of public services; but no property shall be exempt from taxation, except as provided in this Constitution; and every grant of a franchise, privilege, or exemption shall remain subject to revocation, alteration, or amendment." Section 5 contains this provision: "No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious sect, society, or denomination; nor to any particular creed, mode of worship, or system of ecclesiastical polity; nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, to contribute to the erection or maintenance of any such place, or to the salary or support of any minister of religion; nor shall any man be compelled to send his child to any school to which he may be conscientiously opposed." In this connection we quote the corresponding provision of the old Constitution (§ 5, art. 13, of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of 1850), as follows: "Sec. 5. That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; that no man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; that no human authority ought, in any case whatever, to control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and that no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious societies or modes of worship." Section 171 of the present Constitution provides: " . . . Taxes shall be levied and collected for public purposes only. They shall be uniform upon all property subject to taxation, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax." And § 174 contains the following: "All property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, unless exempted by the Constitution."

It is evident from the provisions quoted that the policy of the new instrument was intended to be different from that of the old in the matter of exemptions from taxation. The change is significant, when, in connection with § 5, we consider the provision in § 3 that "no property shall be exempt from taxation except as provided in this Constitution," the provision in § 171 that taxes shall be levied and collected for public purposes only and shall be uniform upon all property subject to taxation, and the provision of § 174 as to uniformity of taxation of corporate property with that of individuals. The policy of the new Constitution was to do away with exemptions. Out of deference to the supposed views of the religious element of the community, certain specific exemptions were made, and, while we do not contend that these should necessarily be strictly construed, they should certainly not be extended by implication to any property not fairly within the meaning of the Constitution. Except in so far as the Constitution provides, nothing can be exempted from taxation which might not be supported by taxation. Undoubtedly the exemption of any property works an increase of the burden on property which is not exempted, and the placing of a burden upon property, by taxing it to a greater extent in order to exempt other property, is to that extent a taking of property without just compensation. With these principles in mind, the construction of § 170 is simple. First, public property is exempted; next, places actually used for religious worship, with the ground attached, with a limitation upon the extent of the ground; next, places of burial not held for private or corporate profit; next, institutions of purely public charity; and then, in the same clause, institutions of education not used or employed for gain by any person or corporation, and the income of which is devoted solely to the support of education. The case in which the main opinion of the majority was rendered turned upon the construction of this phrase, "institutions of purely public charity and institutions of education not used or employed for gain." And the first question is, What is meant by "institutions?" Undoubtedly, in the latter part of the clause, the word "institution" is used to denote the physical, corporal property employed for the purpose of education; and it is a cardinal canon of construction that where, in one part of a clause of a statute, a word having two meanings is undoubtedly used in one sense, it will be construed to be used in the same sense in the other parts of the section, unless such construction is forbidden by the context. It is practically admitted in the opinion that the words "used or employed for gain" apply, and can apply, only to the tangible property employed for the purpose of education. We can conceive of no reason for attributing to the phrase a different meaning when used as to institutions of purely public charity. If it had been intended to exempt the endowment of institutions of public charity and institutions of education, it may fairly be argued that the same phrase would have been used which is used in the succeeding clause as to public libraries, whose endowments are exempted, together with the income of such property as is used exclusively for their maintenance, and this is done as to libraries in express terms. So, in the next succeeding clause, as to any parsonage or residence owned by a religious society, and occupied as a home, and for no other purpose, by the minister of any religion. Further, the lands attached to places used for religious worship, and the lands appurtenant to parsonages, are limited in extent. But, in this case, institutions of purely public charity are construed to mean the corporations which conduct such institutions, and all property belonging to such corporations is exempted from taxation. We cannot assent to such a construction. Such a conclusion would lead, not only to manifest injustice in the matter of placing burdens upon the other property in a community, but would lead corporations conducting such institutions to select, for the purpose of investment, those cities and towns which had the highest tax rate, in order to benefit by the advantage thereby given in competition for tenants. For, just in proportion as the surrounding property is subjected to a greater tax, is a greater bonus given to the corporation which owns the exempted property, a part of which bonus it can afford to give in the shape of a reduction of rent whereby to entice tenants away from the owners of the surrounding property. Just in proportion to the increase of exempted property held by such corporations in a city or town, must the tax rate become higher, and the inducement greater to such corporations to invest their surplus there. And this leads to further injustice. The tenants of such a corporation, induced to become such by a reduction of rent, are thereby enabled to undersell their neighbors, who are compelled to contribute their just proportion towards bearing the burden of taxation placed upon the property they occupy. Is it conceivable that the Constitution was intended to work such injustice?

It is matter of state history, which this court can and ought to take knowledge of, that the present Constitution was proclaimed to the people as putting a limit upon exemptions. Legislatures no longer were to work their will by exemptions in favor of the particular sect which the majority happened to favor, or to pool their issues in favor of a number of sects, whose adherents might constitute a majority. Specific exemptions were made in favor of property devoted to certain uses, which were supposed to furnish an excuse, if not a reason, for relief from the common burden. With great ingenuity, limitations more apparent than real were placed upon these exemptions, and the finished instrument was spread before the people as an enduring check upon the power of future legislatures to tax one man's property for the purpose of exempting another's. Moved by these and similar representations, the people voted by a majority of some 140,000 that this instrument should be their fundamental law. And with what result? To fasten upon their necks a burden of constitutional exemptions which can only be removed by a new constitutional convention or a constitutional amendment; to place limitations, not upon the legislative power to grant exemptions, but upon their own power to refuse, control, or repeal them. It is to no purpose to cite the language of the debates. Endlich says, of the declarations of members of a convention: "They give us no light as to the views of the large majority who did not talk, much less of the mass of our fellow citizens whose vote at the poles gave that instrument the force of fundamental law." Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 510. And everyone who knows anything of conventions and legislatures knows that the declarations of the speakers not only do not represent the convictions of those who do not speak, but frequently do not give the real views of the speakers themselves. Speeches in such bodies are not even supposed to be made for the mere purpose of declaring the views of the speakers, but for the purpose of influencing the votes of the listener. Hence, another than the real reason for the advocacy of a provision is often given, and another than the true interpretation of the language of a section is too often suggested in argument. Members who are in the minority strive for the substitution of less definite language than that proposed by the majority, with the purpose of taking their chances in the courts. But it is not by the declarations, more or less sincere, of the individual members of the convention, nor the understanding of the majority, that the instrument obtains validity or its meaning is to be ascertained. It is the votes of the plain people which give it force and effect, and from this fact flows the wise rule of constitutional construction, universally acknowledged by the courts since the foundation of the government, though too often disregarded in practice, that the language of such an instrument is to be construed according to its ordinary and common meaning, and that sense is to be given its provisions which was understood by the people whose ballots made it organic law.

Applying this test to the provision in question, we find a sectarian charity school, operated by a corporation created by special act which provided "that the institution shall be located in the town of Midway, in the county of Woodford." It comes to this court claiming exemption from taxation upon property situated in Louisville which is leased to tenants for various purposes, and the rents from which are applied to carrying on the institution at Midway. Waiving the question whether the charity thus provided for is purely public, about which there is grave doubt, the question arises, How many Kentucky voters had an idea that they were authorizing the exemption of houses in Louisville, the rents of which were used to carry on an institution at Midway? That the word "institution," in this section, was understood by the people to denote the physical property used for the charitable or educational object, there can be little doubt. Not one voter in a thousand would imagine that, in speaking of an institution not used or employed for gain by a person or corporation, the word "institution" was used to mean a corporation. It would instantly occur to the average man that the words used could not have been intended to provide for the case of a corporation not used for gain by a corporation, and that the thing meant by "institution" was the land and house and appurtenances used for the conduct of the charity, or for the educational purpose. If it was not so meant by the framers of the instrument, it must have been intended to deceive the people. So, the income of an institution of education must be limited to the income which is derived from the tuition fees. Authority is abundant in favor of the construction here stated. "Property from which a revenue is derived is not exempt. Property used exclusively as a general dispensary is exempted; but lots and buildings thereon, when an investment, the income of which is to be applied to the purposes of the dispensary, and stocks and public securities held by it, are subjects of taxation. The fact that the rents and revenues of a property owned by a charitable corporation are devoted to the charitable purposes for which the corporation was organized, will not exempt such property from taxation. It is only when the property itself is actually and directly used for charitable purposes that the law exempts it from taxation." 1 Desty, Taxn. 119. And again: "A building of a benevolent society is liable to taxation to the extent of the value of the rental received. The building of a benevolent society leased for pecuniary profit is taxable, although built with funds that were exempt, and into which the rents are paid. Where the property of a benevolent society was leased for business purposes, and an income derived therefrom, its status as taxable property is thereby fixed." 1 Desty, Taxn. 120. "Where a statute exempts from taxation property devoted to religious, educational, or other purposes, or exempts the property of a corporation, the exemption will be confined in the former case to property used exclusively for such purposes; in the latter, to property necessary to the objects of the company's incorporation." 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 162. "Unless the terms of the statute are explicit to the contrary, a general exemption of the property of educational institutions will be confined to property actually and exclusively used by the institution for its legitimate purposes. If the property is used for other purposes, the fact that the proceeds of such use are devoted to carry out objects of the institution is immaterial." Id. pp. 165-167. And see Washburn College v. Shawnee County Comrs. 8 Kan. 350, and County Comrs. v. Colorado Seminary, 12 Colo. 497. An exemption to one is a tax upon others, and the language of the Constitution should not be strained to authorize such an act of injustice. This court has said: "As a general rule, the test of the right to exempt property is the existence of the right to levy a tax to foster such property. The levy of a direct tax upon the whole people of the state, to be paid to this corporation to forward the objects stated in their charter, would be declared at first blush unconstitutional, and yet that is what is indirectly done by the exemption. If the same power exercised by this corporation had been conferred upon a designated individual, it would strike anyone as palpably beyond legislative authority. But there is no difference in principle between the corporation and an individual. If there is the power to exempt the one, there is unquestionably the power to exempt the other." Barbour v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 83 Ky. 654.

It would be unprofitable to discuss the many collateral questions which have been urged or suggested. The claim of contract exemption seems to us to have little merit, and is not relied on in the opinion of the majority. The question whether a corporation would be exempt, under § 170, which was created for the purpose of education, to be imparted by the corporators, with a provision devoting the surplus revenue to charity, after providing a liberal salary for the corporators, does not properly arise in this case. It may be mentioned that the reasoning of the opinion in Burd Orphan Asylum v. Upper Darby School Dist. 90 Pa. 21, much relied on in support of the opinion of the majority upon the question of what is a purely public charity, has been questioned by the same court in Philadelphia v. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572, 23 L. R. A. 545; the reasoning of the latter case being in direct conflict with that of the former. The importance of the main question in this case can scarcely be overestimated. It is not a mere question of the taxes sought to be collected upon Louisville property belonging to the female orphan school, as the most casual glance at the statistics given in the census reports will show. Behind the little Midway school stalk great sectarian corporations, "rich beyond the dreams of avarice," directed, no doubt, by honest and devoted men, but, as corporations, demanding, as of right, from the state and the municipality privileges which no good citizen ought to ask for himself. The result is to be deplored, not only as it works an increase of the burden of taxation, already sufficiently onerous, upon the masses of the people, but in the inevitable reaction against corporations, formed for worthy objects, but which seek to profit by injustice.

Rehearing denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Anna S. LORING et al.

v.

Loring HILDRETH et al.

(.....Mass.....)

1. Persons yet unascertained and unborn are not deprived of their rights without due process of law by making them defendants in a bill to remove a cloud upon title, and having them represented by a guardian ad litem as provided by Stat. 1897, chap. 522.

2. A deed of trust which was never delivered does not amount to a declaration of trust merely because it was recorded by the grantor, when there is nothing to show that he intended to create any trust, except as the deed provided.

3. A cloud on title may be removed in equity although the defendants have not done

NOTE.—As to judicial proceedings affecting the rights of unborn children, see also Nelson v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (Tex.) 11 L. R. A. 391; and 40 L. R. A.

Kent v. Church of St. Michael (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 381.

or threatened to do anything in opposition to the title of the plaintiff.

(February 25, 1898.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court of Essex County for the opinion of the full bench of a suit brought to remove cloud from title to certain real estate. Decree for plaintiffs.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Huntington & Fitz, for plaintiffs:

The plaintiffs are in possession of the premises, taking the rents and profits, and have no complete and adequate remedy at law.

Clouston v. Shearer, 99 Mass. 209; Martin v. Graves, 5 Allen, 601; Russell v. Deahon, 124 Mass. 342.

The trusts set out in the trust deed were never perfectly created in the way the settler intended to create them, viz. by a transfer of the legal title to a trustee; and the incomplete voluntary conveyance cannot be sustained as a declaration of trust.

The trust deed was not delivered.

Loring v. Whitney, 167 Mass. 550; Barnes v. Barnes, 161 Mass. 381.

It was retained by George B. Loring, who remained in possession of the premises as before, until he conveyed them some time later to his wife and daughter through the medium of his brother.

Equity will not help a volunteer to enforce an intention to create a bounty, manifested by an imperfect gift or conveyance.

Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. J. 656; 1 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. in Eq. p. 382 [923], and notes.

In order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlement must have done everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, was necessary to be done in order to transfer the property and render the settlement binding upon him.

Milroy v. Lord, 4 DeG. F. & J. 264; War-ringer v. Rogers, L. R. 16 Eq. 340; Richards v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11; Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474; Re Breton, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 416; Re Shields, 53 L. T. N. S. 5; Hayes v. Alliance British F. Life & F. Assur. Co. Ir. L. R. 8 C. L. 149; Hartley v. Nicholson, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 277.

In some of the English cases there seems to have been an inclination to relax the rule and hold that an assignment which was ineffectual to pass the legal title might yet take effect as a declaration of trust, and the donor declared a trustee for the party designed to be benefited.

Richardson v. Richardson, L. R. 8 Eq. 686; Morgan v. Malleson, L. R. 10 Eq. 475; Baddeley v. Baddeley, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 113; Kor v. Hawks, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 822.

But these decisions have all been overruled or questioned in the cases above cited.

In this country the latest decisions of our courts have followed and sustained Milroy v. Lord.

Dickerson's Appeal, 115 Pa. 198; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428; Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Govin v. De Miranda, 83 Hun, 414; Beater v. Beater, 117 N. Y. 421, 6 L. R. A. 403; Wadd v. Hazleton, 137 N. Y. 215, 21 L. R. A. 693; Flanders v. Blandy, 45 Ohio St. 108; Pope v. Burlington Sav. Bank, 40 L. R. A.

56 Vt. 284, 48 Am. Rep. 781; Stone v. King, 7 R. I. 358, 84 Am. Dec. 557; Lloyd v. Brooks, 34 Md. 27; Lane v. Ewing, 31 Mo. 75, 77 Am. Dec. 632; Landon v. Hutton, 50 N. J. Eq. 500; Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227; Cummings v. Bramhall, 120 Mass. 552.

But if the imperfect instrument of conveyance can be construed to be a declaration of trust in order to effectuate the supposed intention of the settler, the intention must be evinced by acts which admit of no other interpretation than that the settler had ceased to be and others had become the beneficial owners of the property.

Landon v. Hutton, 50 N. J. Eq. 200; Heartley v. Nicholson, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 279; Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. Jr. 39.

A voluntary covenant or agreement will not be enforced or effect given to an imperfect gift because of the existence of a meritorious consideration.

Notes on Ellison v. Ellison. 1 White & Tudor, Cas. in Eq. 382 [923]; Phillips v. Frye, 14 Allen, 38; Buford v. McKee, 1 Dana, 107; Hayes v. Kershaw, 1 Sandf. Ch. 258; Badgley v. Votrain, 68 Ill. 25, 18 Am. Rep. 541; 1 Lewin, Tr. Flint's notes, 8th ed. 83; Acts 1897, chap. 522.

The law only operates on real estate within the commonwealth.

United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. ed. 192.

As to persons within the jurisdiction of the court and within reach of process, but on whom actual service had not been made, service by publication in a proceeding in rem is clearly sufficient.

As to the constitutionality of the act with respect to nonresidents, see—

Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 816, 33 L. ed. 918; Jackson, Hart, v. Lamphire, 3 Pet. 280, 7 L. ed. 879; Parker v. Overman, 18 How. 187, 15 L. ed. 318; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101; Langdon v. Sherwood, 124 U. S. 74, 31 L. ed. 344; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 338, 33 L. ed. 909; Eberling v. Dreyer, 149 N. Y. 460; Dillon v. Heller, 39 Kan. 599.

The right of the state to authorize proceedings in rem by which persons unborn shall be bound has been so often recognized by the legislature without any question being raised as to the constitutionality of the proceeding, that it seems too late to raise any such question now.

Pub. Stat. chap. 178, §§ 9, 35, 62, 63, 70; Stat. 1882, chap. 6; Pub. Stat. chap. 120, § 20; Pub. Stat. chap. 141, § 21; Crippen v. Dexter, 13 Gray, 330; Pub. Stat. chap. 144, §§ 13, 14; Stat. 1889, chap. 466, §§ 1, 2; Stat. 1885, chap. 288; Morse v. Hill, 136 Mass. 60; Stat. 1888, chap. 420; Stat. 1839, chap. 442; Pub. Stat. chap. 142, §§ 13-17.

Mr. R. D. Weston-Smith, for defendants:

In the absence of statute, courts of equity have no authority to make any decrees except such as operate strictly in personam.

Any statute authorizing a court to render such a decree against a defendant who had not been actually served with process, or who had not appeared in the cause, would be clearly unconstitutional.

Rand v. Hanson, 154 Mass. 87, 12 L. R. A. 574; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 10; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896.

The proceeding contemplated by the Statute of 1897, chap. 522, so far at least as it looks to an adjudication on the claims of persons who are unascertained, not in being, unknown, or out of the commonwealth, is substantially a proceeding in rem; and it is well settled that as against nonresidents or unknown persons it is within the constitutional power of the legislature to authorize the making of a decree in rem establishing the title after notice by publication, such notice being deemed constructive service.

Constructive service is held to be sufficient because the res, the title to which is in controversy, is within the jurisdiction of the court, and because the notice given enables parties whose rights may be affected by the proceeding to come in and defend. The constitutionality of such constructive service is sustained on the express ground that it enables persons who are interested to come in and defend if they see fit.

Arndt v. Griggs, 184 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918; Langdon v. Sherwood, 124 U. S. 74, 31 L. ed. 344; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896; Dick v. Foraker, 155 U. S. 404, 39 L. ed. 201; Lynch v. Murphy, 161 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 688; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 40 L. ed. 691.

There are various probate proceedings in which the rights of persons unascertained or not in being are determined after the appointment of a guardian ad litem.

Morse v. Hill, 136 Mass. 60.

The proceedings of probate courts, however, in dealing with the estates of deceased persons, are in many respects peculiar and furnish no safe analogy.

Cases which constitute exceptions to the general rule, and in which it has been held that persons not actually before the court can be bound by the decree, may apparently be divided into four classes:

1. Cases in which the parties are extremely numerous, and where "sufficient persons are before the court honestly, fairly, and fully to try the general right."

Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. §§ 94-135; Hills v. Barnard, 152 Mass. 67, 9 L. R. A. 211; Hills v. Putnam, 152 Mass. 124; Smith v. Williams, 116 Mass. 510.

2. Cases in which the parties whose interests are to be concluded are represented by an executor or administrator.

Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. §§ 140, 141, 148, 203.

3. Cases in which absent persons are represented by a trustee.

Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. §§ 143, 149, 150, 207, 217.

4. Cases in which it has been held that a first tenant in tail in esse represents subsequent estates and interests.

Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. §§ 144, 147, 198, 202.

All these exceptions rest on the theory of representation.

All persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of a suit, are to be made parties to it either as plaintiffs or defendants, so that there may be a complete decree which shall bind them all.

Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. § 72; Crease v. Babcock, 10 Met. 525; Jewett v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 566.

The trusts declared in George B. Loring's trust deed were effectually created.

We insist on the importance of carrying out the declared intention of the settlor to affect the property with a trust, as distinguished from his intention to make himself or any other person a trustee. That the trust shall be established is in most cases the settlor's one paramount object. That the trust shall be administered by any particular person is a matter of very trifling consequence. The intention, therefore, to affect the property with a trust should, if possible, be carried out, even though the intended settlement be voluntary.

Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. Jr. 140; Airey v. Hall, 3 Smale & G. 315; Parnell v. Hingston, 3 Smale & G. 337; Arthur v. Clarkson, 35 Beav. 458; Kekewich v. Manning, 1 DeG. M. & G. 176; Richardson v. Richardson, L. R. 3 Eq. 686; Morgan v. Malleon, L. R. 10 Eq. 475; Baddeley v. Baddeley, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 118; Jones v. Jones, 23 Week. Rep. 1; Fox v. Hawks, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 822; Adams v. Adams, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 185, 22 L. ed. 504; Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 908; Moore v. Page, 111 U. S. 117, 28 L. ed. 873; Sanford v. Finkle, 112 Ill. 146; Hunt v. Johnson, 44 N. Y. 27, 4 Am. Rep. 631; Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Neel, 54 Pa. 9; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192; Crooks v. Crooks, 34 Ohio St. 610; Brookbank v. Kennard, 41 Ind. 339; Majors v. Everton, 89 Ill. 56, 31 Am. Rep. 65; O'Neil v. Greenwood, 106 Mich. 572.

Notice to Anna S. Loring, one of the beneficiaries, was sufficient to establish the trust in favor of all, in analogy to the doctrine that delivery of a deed to one of several grantees is a sufficient delivery to the use of all.

Perry v. Holden, 22 Pick. 269; Hubby v. Hubby, 5 Cush. 516, 52 Am. Dec. 742.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity to remove a cloud upon the title to land in the possession of the plaintiffs, who claim to be the owners thereof. The cloud consists in the record of a deed of trust from the late George B. Loring to the late John A. Loring, in trust "during the life of Anna S. Loring, wife of said George B. Loring, and of Sally P. Loring, the daughter of said George B. Loring, to pay over to them one half part to each of the net rents and profits thereof, and at the death of either of them the said Anna S. or Sally P. Loring to convey her one-half share in the said estate to her heirs at law, or to make such disposal of it as she shall direct by will." There were further provisions, not now material. This deed was signed and put on record by said George B. Loring, and it was also signed by said Anna S. Loring to release dower and homestead, but it was never accepted by the grantee, and, upon the facts found at the hearing, it was never delivered. Barnes v. Barnes, 161 Mass. 381. It was held by us in Loring v. Whitney, 167 Mass. 550, that the existence of this deed and record constituted such a cloud that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept a title. The present bill accordingly is brought to remove that cloud.

The first question to be considered is whether the requisite parties are properly before the court, and the only doubt is whether parties unascertained and now unborn, who are contingently interested, can be so represented before the court that a decree affecting their rights can be entered. Stat. 1897, chap. 522, provides that in cases like the present a guardian ad litem may be appointed to represent such parties, and that the suit shall be deemed to be a proceeding in rem against the land, and that a decree establishing or declaring the validity, nature, or extent of the plaintiff's title may be entered, which decree shall operate directly on the land. There is no doubt that the statute is sufficient in its terms to cover the present case, and all requisite steps under the statute have been duly taken. The question, then, remains whether the statute is constitutional, under the 12th article of the Declaration of Rights, which provides that no subject shall be deprived of his property "but by the law of the land;" and the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property "without due process of law." It is contended for the defendants that no constructive service of process can reach these persons yet unascertained and unborn. It is conceded that there may be a good constructive service upon nonresidents and unknown persons, because such service enables them to come in and defend; but it is contended that this rule does not extend so far as to include persons unascertained and unborn, and that no sufficient service can be made upon them, and that, therefore, the provisions of Stat. 1897, chap. 522, do not fulfil the constitutional requirement of due process of law. If this argument were to prevail, it would often happen that the settlement of a title to land would have to remain in abeyance for an indefinite period of time, in cases where possible contingent interests were shown to exist. If a deed purporting to create such interests were inadvertently or fraudulently put on record, if such a deed were stolen, or even forged, and put on record by the thief or forger; nay, even if a forgery were committed in the registry of deeds by making what appeared to be a record of such a deed, when in fact no such deed or form of deed existed,—the courts would be powerless to inquire into and determine the facts, because parties purporting to have possible contingent interests could not be brought in or represented. In this way a title might be tied up for an indefinite period, by an unauthorized or criminal act, with no power in the courts to afford a remedy. Such a result should not be reached, except upon most stringent reasons of necessity. In Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen, 466, the constitutionality of Stat. 1861, chap. 174, § 1, authorizing compromises of controversies respecting estates in the hands of executors, administrators, guardians, and trustees was expressly declared. The court said: "Such contingent rights and interests are duly protected by the provision which requires the 40 L. R. A.

court to appoint some suitable person, whose duty it shall be to represent them in all proceedings under the statute, and by the requirement that the court shall adjudge, on due examination and inquiry, that the proposed award or compromise is just and reasonable in its effect on all contingent interests in the estate in controversy." This decision has stood unchallenged for thirty-five years, and we are satisfied that it rests on sound reasoning. The only difference in principle between that case and this, which has been suggested, is that the present proceeding is not in any sense one for the benefit of the defendants who are unascertained or not in being, but is strictly adversary to them. But this distinction does not vary the principle. The necessity which has been found to exist for acting upon the view that such statutes are constitutional, is illustrated by various other statutes which have been cited to us by counsel on both sides, relating to various proceedings in the probate court, to partition of lands, to the sale of property subject to contingent remainders, and to the determination of ancient conditions and restrictions. These have the effect to show that it has long been assumed and understood that the legislature has power to pass statutes under which such interests may be affected.

It is also contended by the defendants that, although the deed of trust was never delivered, still the execution and recording of it by Mr. Loring amounted to a sufficient declaration of trust. It is conceded that under the late English cases there was no sufficient declaration of trust to be enforced against Mr. Loring, or persons deriving title from him. Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264; Richards v. Delbridge, L. R. 18 Eq. 11; Moore v. Moore, L. R. 18 Eq. 474; Re Breton, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 416; Re Shield, 53 L. T. N. S. 5; Bottle v. Knockner, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 161; Ex parte Todd, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 186.

But it is contended that these decisions proceed upon too narrow a ground, and that, although the trust deed of Mr. Loring shows no intention to make himself a trustee, and although there was no valuable consideration, yet that he intended to affect the property with a trust, and that this intention ought to be carried out. The answer to this view is that the deed shows no intention to create a trust, except in the manner provided. If his intention could not be carried out modo et forma, then, so far as appears, there was no intention. The trust fails because there was no intention to create one which can be carried out. It often happens that charitable trusts fail because they cannot be carried out in the mode intended, if there was no intention that they should be carried out in any other mode. See Teale v. Bishop of Derry, 168 Mass. 341, 38 L. R. A. 629, and cases there cited. So here. The deed shows no intention outside of the mode and form adopted by the deed, and this fails because the deed itself was never delivered. In Adams v. Adams, 21 Wall. 185, 22 L. ed. 504, the court resorted to testimony outside of the deed itself to ascertain the grantor's intention, and there found an intention to create a trust. If resort were had in the present case to outside circumstances, no support is found for the view that the grantor intended to create a trust independently of the deed. Numerous decisions from other states are cited for the plaintiffs, which confirm us in the view that we should not undertake to complete and carry out the trust, which the donor himself clearly abandoned.

We have no doubt of the jurisdiction of the court to enter a decree removing the cloud upon the title, there being no adequate remedy at law. Barnes v. Barnes, 161 Mass. 381; Russell v. Barnstow, 144 Mass. 130; Clouston v. Shearer, 99 Mass. 209; Burns v. Lynde, 6 Allen, 305, 312. The fact that these defendants have not done or threatened to do anything in opposition to the title of the plaintiffs does not prevent the giving of the relief prayed for.

Decree for the plaintiffs.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Thomas KINGSTON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

FORT WAYNE & ELMWOOD RAIL-WAY COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

1. In defense of a claim for loss of wages and future earnings in an action for personal injuries, defendant may show any facts concerning plaintiff's habits and conduct which may throw light upon the probability of his securing employment, and the character and continuity of the same.

2. The intoxication of a passenger standing on the running board of a street car will not absolve the company from exercising care toward him, nor prevent his recovering damages in case he is injured by its negligence.

(March 10, 1897.)

NOTE.—Intoxication as affecting negligence.

I. Intoxication no excuse.

II. When it amounts to contributory negligence.

a. Generally.

b. With relation to trespassers.

c. With relation to persons injured at crossings.

d. With relation to passengers.

e. With relation to persons injured on highways, streets, etc.

f. With relation to miscellaneous matters.

III. Effect when there is negligence on both sides.

IV. Question for the jury.

V. Presumption and burden of proof.

VI. Intoxication as evidence of negligence.

a. Admissibility.

b. Weight and sufficiency.

VII. Employment of persons having habits of intoxication.

I. Intoxication no excuse.

Intoxication does not excuse the omission to use the same care and prudence which are required of a sober man under the same circumstances to protect himself against injury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 82 Ala. 204, 104 Ala. 241, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372; Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 42 W. Va. 133, 33 L. R. A. 69; Welty v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 106 Ind. 55; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Evans, 71 Tex. 361, 1 L. R. A. 476; Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 84 Md. 506, 36 L. R. A. 213.

Self-imposed disability by intoxication affords no more excuse in the law of negligence than it does in the criminal law. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 723, 25 L. R. A. 287.

A man cannot voluntarily place himself in a condition whereby he loses such control of his brain or muscles as a man of ordinary prudence and caution in the full possession of his faculties would exercise, and by such loss of control contribute to an injury to himself, and then require of one ignorant of his condition recompense therefor. Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 67 Mich. 380; Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 366, 23 L. R. A. 758.

If his intoxication contributes to his injury as a proximate cause it is a complete bar to an action for any damages sustained in consequence thereof. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 366, 23 L. R. A. 758.

40 L. R. A.

The question in an action for personal injury alleged to have been caused by negligence is whether or not the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant or the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, and not whether the plaintiff was at the time intoxicated, drunkenness on his part not relieving the defendant from liability if guilty of negligence, and the question whether he was drunk or sober not affecting the question of his liability if his want of ordinary care contributed to the injury. Denver Tramway Co. v. Reid, 4 Colo. App. 53.

Thus, the fact that a person injured by being run over by a street car was intoxicated at the time, and that he was negligent because of such intoxication, affords no excuse for such negligence, and does not prevent it from being a bar to a recovery of damages for the injuries received. Weeks v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 32 La. Ann. 615.

And the intoxication of a person killed while driving along the railroad track does not excuse his negligence in failing to get off of the track, though his getting on the track in the first instance was due to the negligence of the railroad company. McDonald v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 75 Wis. 121.

So, the fact that a person walking upon a railroad track not at a public crossing but at a place which was no part of the public highway, was drunk, does not relieve him from his duty to use every care and precaution, and all diligence, against any injury which might be done him. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wilkerson, 46 Ark. 513.

And the intoxication of a trespasser on a railway track who is killed by a train at a curve in a cut does not exempt him from the consequences of his contributory negligence where it was unknown to the persons in charge of the train, and they had no reason to anticipate that he was on the track in such a condition. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Womack, 84 Ala. 149.

So, refusal to instruct the jury in an action against a city for damages sustained by reason of a defective highway, that a city is not bound to keep its streets safe and convenient for intoxicated persons, or that, if the person injured was intoxicated at the time, he will be presumed to have been negligent, is not error, where the court had charged that the person injured could not recover if anything else than the negligence of the city contributed to cause the accident, or if it occurred

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by its negligence. Reversed.

In any part through his own negligence; and that if he was intoxicated it was a circumstance to be considered as bearing upon the question of due care on his part. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402.

And the fact that a minor who had arrived at years of discretion was grossly intoxicated at the time of the sale of chloroform to him by a druggist, which he drank, and then died, does not render the sale the proximate cause of his death. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474.

II. When it amounts to contributory negligence.

a. Generally.

No greater degree of care is required to be exercised by an intoxicated man for his own protection than by a sober man, however, and if one's conduct is characterized by a proper degree of care and prudence it is immaterial whether he was drunk or sober. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Drake, 33 Ill. App. 114.

The mere fact of intoxication of a person injured is not evidence of negligence per se which will prevent a recovery for the injury. Newton v. Central Vermont R. Co. 80 Hun, 491; Tompkins v. Oswego, 40 N. Y. S. R. 4; Lynch v. New York, 47 Hun, 524; Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Sawy. 290; Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175. And see principal case.

It is immaterial whether a person suffering a personal injury from the negligent act of another was drunk or sober at the time, where no want of common care and prudence can be imputed to him. Ward v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 85 Wis. 601.

The condition of the plaintiff in an action for a personal injury, with reference to intoxication, is of no importance where his own negligence did not contribute to the injury complained of. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Reason, 61 Tex. 618; Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Phinazee, 93 Ga. 488; Maguire v. Middlesex R. Co. 115 Mass. 299; Meyer v. Pacific R. Co. 40 Mo. 151. And see Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Chambers, 81 Md. 371, set forth infra, II., 3.

And the intoxication of a person injured will not affect his right to recover for the injury where it was not the proximate cause thereof. Meyer v. Pacific R. Co. 40 Mo. 151; Davis v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 8 Or. 172.

The mere fact of the intoxication of a person injured does not establish want of ordinary care upon his part. The jury must determine whether the intoxication contributed to the injury, and if it did not it is of no importance. Ditchett v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 5 Hun, 165, Reversed on other grounds, 67 N. Y. 425; Newton v. Central Vermont R. Co. 80 Hun, 491.

But no recovery can be had in an action for a personal injury where the person injured was intoxicated and the intoxication contributed to bring about the injury. Lynch v. New York, 47 Hun, 524; Bradley v. Second Ave. R. Co. 8 Daly, 289; Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 67 Mich. 380.

Or where it was the proximate cause of the injury. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 266, 23 L. R. A. 758.

And one who voluntarily uses intoxicating drinks until he becomes helpless, or his powers are so far impaired that he is unable to exert the necessary efforts to avoid danger, is guilty of negligence when he places himself in a position of danger. Chicago City R. Co. v. Lewis, 5 Ill. App. 242; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.

And the same rule applies where he stupefies and 40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moore & Moore for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Conely & Taylor for defendant in error.

deadens his intellectual powers so that he is unable to foresee and guard against danger. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.

And refusal to instruct the jury in an action for a personal injury, that if they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence and improvidence at the time of the occurrence, and that they contributed to the injury, she was not entitled to recover, is error where there was evidence that the plaintiff was intoxicated at the time. Brand v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. 8 Barb. 368.

Drunkenness is not a defense in an action for negligence by way of contributory negligence, unless it was the substantial cause of the injury; but if a person drinks under such circumstances that a reasonably prudent man can foresee that he is putting himself in such a condition that the injury may probably happen, his drunkenness will be no defense. Davis v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 8 Or. 172.

And an instruction in an action for damages for a personal injury, that the fact of the intoxication of the person injured alone would not prove contributory negligence unless it amounted to imbecility, is erroneous as liable to mislead the jury. Fitzgerald v. Weston, 52 Wis. 354.

It is not necessary that a person should be so drunk as to be imbecile before his conduct will be affected by his intoxication, and before it can be taken into account by a jury in determining the question of his contributory negligence. Fitzgerald v. Weston, 52 Wis. 354. But see Seymer v. Lake, 66 Wis. 651, set forth infra, V.

So, after the intoxication of a person bringing an action for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligence of another has been established, it is not necessary that the jury should further find that as a result thereof he became careless and reckless in regard to his safety, to defeat his recovery, as an intoxicated person might become neither reckless nor careless, and at the same time might so far lose control of his muscular action as to be unable to avoid injury. Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315.

And an instruction in an action for damages for personal injuries, that ordinary care is that care which might be reasonably expected of one in the situation of the person injured at the time of the accident, is erroneous where there is evidence from which the jury might infer that he was not sober when the accident occurred. Buesching v. St. Louis Gaslight Co. 6 Mo. App. 85.

b. With relation to trespassers.

A trespasser upon a railroad track, who was killed by a passing train at a place where he could not be seen in time to stop the train to prevent striking him, is not exempt from the consequences of his contributory negligence in being upon the track by the fact of his intoxication, where it was unknown to the persons in charge of the train, and they had no reason to anticipate that he was in such a condition. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Womack, 84 Ala. 149.

And one who voluntarily becomes drunk, and falls down or lays down in a state of insensibility on a railroad track, so that he is injured by a passing train, cannot recover for injuries so received, though there may have been contributory negligence on the part of the employees of the road. Southwestern R. Co. v. Hankerson, 61 Ga. 114; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 47 Ill. 408; Denman v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 26 Minn. 357; O'Keefe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 467; Price v.

Long, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, on October 10, 1891, owned and operated a horse railway in the city of Detroit. The plaintiff went upon one of its cars on that date, for the purpose of being transported as a passenger. It was what was called a "summer car," open on both sides, with a step or running board, consisting of one board, extending the length of the car. The Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 84 Md. 506, 36 L. R. A. 213.

Unless its servants wilfully caused his death, or were guilty of such gross neglect as amounted in law to a wilful neglect of duty. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 47 Ill. 408; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Symphkins, 54 Tex. 615, 38 Am. Rep. 632.

And he cannot recover for injuries because of being run over while so lying on the track, though the company was negligent in using an engine without a headlight, and though in the absence of such negligence he might have been seen and his injury avoided. O'Keefe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 467.

So, one who while intoxicated goes upon a railroad track at the usual and ordinary time of the running of trains thereon, and is injured by a passing train, is guilty of contributory negligence. Whalen v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 60 Mo. 323.

And a railroad company is not liable for the killing of a person who goes upon its tracks in a state of intoxication for the purpose of walking home thereon, and lies or falls down upon the track, and is run over, unless the company or its servants in charge of the engine running over him had knowledge that he was on the track in time to prevent the accident. Yarnall v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 575.

And no recovery can be had for the killing of a person found lying on a plank between the rails of a railroad track by a track walker who notified him that a train was coming on presently, which notice he acknowledged but remained where he was, and was afterwards killed, where there was no evidence to justify the inference that he was sick, and his conduct in lying on the track appeared to be either the result of intoxication or mere recklessness. Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Boswell, 82 Va. 932.

So, evidence that a person injured by being struck by a railway train walked upon the railroad track 300 yards, although there was a street or road upon the side of the same which he could have used, and that he was not paying attention to anything and had been drinking and might have been intoxicated, and that the alarm whistle sounded for a distance varying, according to the different witnesses, from 200 yards to 20 feet from the place where the injury was inflicted, does not warrant the court in assuming that the negligence of such person was slight only. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 178.

And a person who was killed by being run over by an engine and tender upon a railroad track while in a state of semi-intoxication, who turned from a path of safety and descended a bank several feet high and crossed a ditch on a plank across the main track just ahead of an engine, turning and walking slowly and heedlessly up the track, was guilty of such contributory negligence as will bar a recovery, where he could not, in the exercise of ordinary care, have failed to see the engine and tender back up to a point near the crossing a little east of where he was, and stand there waiting for a train to clear the switch so that it could pass through, and he lived near by and was familiar with the surroundings. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Harman, 83 Va. 553.

And one who, while incapable of protecting himself from the voluntary use of intoxicants, enters upon a train of cars from which he is forbidden, and without the knowledge or consent of the conductor, cannot hold the railroad company to any duty beyond ordinary care to protect him from injury while upon the train, and to leave him in a reasonably safe condition. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Evans, 71 Tex. 361, 1 L. R. A. 478.

And one who while in a state of intoxication goes upon a street-car track and falls or tumbles, unable to support himself, from intoxication, and is injured by being run over by a car, is guilty of contributory negligence which will prevent a recovery therefor. Button v. Hudson River R. Co. 18 N. Y. 248.

And one who while intoxicated walks out on a railroad trestle to a position of great peril, and is there killed by a train, cannot be held free from contributory negligence. Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 87 Wis. 195, 23 L. R. A. 203.

Reasonable care and diligence are all that are required to be exercised by a railroad company toward one who goes upon its tracks at a place other than at a crossing in such a condition from intoxication as not to be able to take care of himself or to heed the warnings of an approaching train. Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 84 Md. 506, 36 L. R. A. 213; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Wood, 86 Ala. 164.

And it is not the duty of a railroad company by whose train a trespasser has been injured while intoxicated to give any account in an action for such injury of the manner in which the injury occurred. Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 84 Md. 506, 36 L. R. A. 213.

The mere fact that a person is guilty of negligence in going on a railway track while so intoxicated that a warning whistle would not arouse him and enable him to escape injury, however, will not relieve the railroad company from liability for his death caused by being run over by a railway train if the engineer saw him or could by due diligence have seen him in time to stop the train. Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 525.

But, except at public crossings and within the limits of cities or towns, a railroad company is under no obligation to keep a special lookout for intruders or trespassers on its tracks, and is only bound to use reasonable diligence after they are or ought to have been discovered; and the intoxication of the trespasser imposes no increase of diligence, unless the officers in charge of the company's train has knowledge of it,—the same rule applying, in the absence of such knowledge, to an intoxicated man as to a sober one. Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Wood, 86 Ala. 164.

An instruction in an action against a railroad company for killing a person upon a railroad bridge, that if the deceased went thereon in an intoxicated condition about schedule time for the train to pass, this would constitute gross negligence, is calculated to mislead the jury, and is erroneous, where it appears that the train causing the death was a special running out of schedule time, and faster than the regular train usually ran. East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Winters, 85 Tenn. 240.

c. With relation to persons injured at crossings.

One who places himself, in a state of intoxication, upon a railroad track, and is struck by a train having a headlight and giving the required warning, cannot recover therefor. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Galbreath, 63 Ill. 433.

And a person injured while attempting to cross a railroad track cannot recover for such injury where from partial stupor from drink, or from reckless temerity, he undertakes to cross with the plaintiff, being unable to secure a seat, stood on the running board, and claims that the conductor in charge of the car negligently pushed him off, causing the injury complained of,

The defendant claims that the plaintiff was intoxicated, and either jumped or fell off. On the trial, before a jury, the defendant had verdict in its favor. Plaintiff claims that he was train in full view, if he had before looked along the track. Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Riley, 47 Ill. 514.

And no recovery can be had against a railroad company for running over and killing a man who recklessly ventured upon a crossing in front of an advancing train being fully apprised of the approach of the train, or, if not so, it was for the want of the simple precaution of looking and listening, the deceased being addicted to hard drink, and being probably under the influence of liquor at the time, where it appears that the night was still though dark, and that the train was lighted up, and there was a bright headlight with nothing to obstruct the view for some distance. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 70 Ill. 102.

So, no recovery can be had against a railroad company for the killing of a person who was stupefied and confused by liquor, and, knowing that the trains passed irregularly, stood upon the track after dark and was struck by a slowly moving locomotive having a lighted headlight. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Hanford, 36 Mich. 537.

The intoxication of a person who was struck and injured by a detached car at a railway crossing, however, is not material in an action for such injury, where the car was detached for the purpose of making a running switch, and he watched and waited until the train passed, after which he drove on not supposing or having reason to expect or think that the detached car was following the train. Ward v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 85 Wis. 601.

But where a three-horse team, the management of which was entrusted by the owner, who was riding in the wagon and was drunk, to a person riding one of the horses, who was also drunk and incapable of managing them, to the owner's knowledge, became frightened at a train of cars while passing along a highway running parallel with the railroad, and was struck by the train at a crossing upon which they ran and the owner and team were injured thereby, the proximate cause of the injury was the fright of the horses, and not the failure of the person in charge of the train to give the statutory signals at the crossing where the injury occurred. Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 37 W. Va. 180, 18 L. R. A. 519.

And a person who is stupefied with liquor, who, seeing a locomotive slowly backing up, and misjudging as to the rapidity of its approach, attempts, with utter recklessness of consequences, to pass before it, and in doing so is knocked down and crushed under the wheels, cannot recover for the injury. Brand v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. 8 Barb. 388.

But an instruction in an action for the death of a person by being run over while crossing a railroad track, that evidence that he had been slightly intoxicated, but that he was not drunk at the time of the accident, raises no inference of want of ordinary care and prudence, is not error, though the court might have gone further and submitted the circumstances of the drinking and the degree of intoxication, which the jury would have had a right to consider upon the question of due care. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, Chambers, 81 Md. 371.

So, no recovery can be had against a street-railway company for running over and killing a man whose faculties were blunted with intoxication, and who did not exercise proper care and prudence in crossing the track, where the driver used all the care, diligence, and exertion in his power to prevent the accident, and knowledge of the inebriated condition of the person killed was not brought home to him. Weeks v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 32 La. Ann. 615.

And the intoxication of a person injured, while attempting to cross a railroad track, which was the cause of his going upon it, may be considered in an action for the injury on the question of contributory negligence. Hankinson v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 41 S. C. 1.

d. With relation to passengers.

An intoxicated man has the right to ride upon railway trains so long as he keeps quiet and does not interfere with others, and the fact of his intoxication does not absolve the company from its duty to observe due care for his safety, or relieve it from liability for an injury to him caused by the sudden jerking of the car at a station where the train had stopped and the station had been announced, while he was in the act of getting off. Millman v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 642.

And the intoxication of a passenger on a railroad train, who is injured upon alighting, though proper to be considered by the jury upon the question of contributory negligence, does not exonerate the company from liability, the question depending upon his ability to act with proper care and judgment in and upon the train, and in getting on and off. Millman v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 4 Hun, 409, 6 Thomp. & C. 585, Affirmed in 66 N. Y. 642.

So, the intoxication of a passenger on a railway train who was injured by the company's negligence should not count against him as disqualifying him to avoid the consequences thereof if the circumstances were such that a prudent man could not have avoided them by the exercise of ordinary diligence. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Phinazee, 93 Ga. 488.

And the intoxication of a person injured by being put off of a train while in motion will not prevent a recovery therefor unless it directly contributed to cause the injury, and in consequence thereof he did not exercise ordinary care and prudence. Meyer v. Pacific R. Co. 40 Mo. 151.

So, intoxication is not necessarily evidence of contributory negligence where the intoxicated party, who was a passenger upon a boat landing at a pontoon upon a dark night, there being no light upon the boat except one lantern in the hands of a deck hand, fell into the river through a space between the pontoon and the boat, which was from 18 inches to 2 feet wide, and was drowned, the space being due to the fact that the boat had not landed in its usual position. Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 523.

And the intoxication of a person injured by being thrown from the platform of a horse-car will not prevent his recovery against the company on account of the negligence of the driver, unless his intoxication contributed to the injury. Maguire v. Middlesex R. Co. 115 Mass. 239.

But a passenger on a railway train, who sustains injuries in leaving the train while in motion because sufficient time has not been given for that purpose, cannot recover where he drank intoxicating liquor before taking passage, and such drinking had contributed at all to such injury. Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 67 Mich. 380.

And where a passenger upon a railroad train arrives at his destination, and leaves the train and returns and lies down in such proximity to the railway track as to endanger his life from moving not intoxicated at the time of the injury, and, even if he were, he had a right to ride standing on the running board, and that if he was guilty of no neglect, and was pushed off the car by the negligent conduct of the conductor, he was entitled to recover. Complaint is made of the admission of certain evidence, and of the refusal of the court to give certain re-trials, and is injured or killed, he cannot claim immunity from the rule of contributory negligence, because he was then drunk, unless the facts show such negligence or want of care upon the part of the servants of the railroad company as would render it liable notwithstanding his own negligence. Rozwadowskie v. International & G. N. R. Co. 1 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

And one who drinks beer immediately before taking passage upon a railway train, and subsequently drinks whisky at a station at which the train stops, and voluntarily sits in a light, loose chair in a caboose which has seats for half a dozen passengers where they would be safe from falling out of the open side door, who is thrown from such open side door and injured while the train is running down grade, along short curves at the rate of 35 miles an hour, the chair standing within 3 inches of such open door, is guilty of contributory negligence but for which the injury would not have occurred, and is not entitled to recover therefor. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 79 Va. 241.

It is the duty of a railroad company after it has, through its conductor, notice that a passenger is riding on the platform of a car in such a state of intoxication as to be heedless of the danger to which he is exposed, however, to use the ordinary precautions for his safety, such as calling his attention to the danger and the rules of the company forbidding such exposure, and inviting him to go inside the car, and it is his duty to comply with such invitation. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 366, 23 L. R. A. 758.

And a railroad company is responsible for the death of a passenger caused by his falling off the rear steps of a car while in motion where he was in a state of unconsciousness, and the servants of the company knowingly and negligently permitted him to remain on the rear steps of the car in a place of danger, though he exercised no care for himself. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Carr, 47 Ill. App. 368.

But if a passenger voluntarily becomes intoxicated the law does not impose the duty upon the carrier to place a guard over him and prevent him from injuring himself or placing himself in a position of danger, and where he places himself in such a position, before the carrier can be held liable for a resulting injury it must be proved that the agents or servants operating the train actually knew of his condition and perilous position. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Carr, 47 Ill. App. 363.

And knowledge on the part of a newsboy, engaged in a private enterprise, of the intoxication and perilous position of a passenger sitting upon the steps of a moving car, from which he fell and was killed, is not notice to the company which will render it liable for such killing. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Carr, 47 Ill. App. 363.

Evidence in an action against a railroad company for the death of a person from falling from the steps of a car while in motion, that the conductor surmised that he was intoxicated from a remark made by him, and that a station agent saw him on the rear platform of a car as the train passed his station, and that he was supporting his head in his hands with his elbows resting on his knees, does not show knowledge on the part of the agents and servants of the railway company of his condition and perilous position which would require them to stop the train or remove him in order to relieve the company from liability for his death. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Carr, 47 Ill. App. 363. 40 L. R. A.

So, there is no such privity between a railroad company and a disorderly passenger as to make the company liable on the principle of respondeat superior for the breaking of the arm of another passenger caused by drunken and quarrelsome men intruding in a car in great numbers at a station and engaging in a general fight therein. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 512, 91 Am. Dec. 224.

And it is not the duty of a railroad company to furnish its trains with a police force adequate to protect passengers against an excited and drunken crowd which assembles at a station and rushes upon its cars and engages in a fight thereon, where the numbers are such as to defy the resisting power of the conductor and trainmen under his command. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 512, 91 Am. Dec. 224.

Nor is a street-car company liable for the death of a passenger caused by an assault by another passenger who was drunk when he came on the car and who insulted ladies accompanying the person killed, where he became quiet upon being told to do so by the conductor, and remained so while on the car, but rushed out and struck the other with the car-hook upon his leaving the car. Putnam v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108.

But a conductor of a railway train into which a drunken mob intrudes at a station, which begins fighting therein, does not perform his whole duty so as to relieve the railroad company from liability to a person whose arm is broken in consequence of such fighting until he has put forth all the force at his disposal to expel the persons creating the disturbance; and to keep his train in motion, and busy himself with collecting fares in forward cars while the fight is raging in the rearmost one where lady passengers have been placed, is not a performance of his duty, and it is not sufficient that he exhorts the passengers to throw the fighters out. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 512, 91 Am. Dec. 224.

And a railroad company which is a common carrier of passengers for hire is responsible for damages for the death of a passenger caused by being shot by another passenger who was laboring under a fit of delirium tremens, and was excited, nervous, and delirious, and labored under the delusion of pursuit of enemies on the train, where the conductor apprehended, or, as a man of understanding, knowledge, and experience should have apprehended, the danger that he might mistake some passenger for his supposed pursuer, and shoot him in imaginary self-defense. King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 413.

So, a peaceable passenger on a railway train whose eye is put out by a piece of glass from a bottle, broken in a drunken row between other passengers on board the train who should not have been permitted aboard, may recover from the railroad company therefor. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Pillow, 76 Pa. 510.

And a guard on an elevated railway train who quarrels with an intoxicated passenger upon a crowded platform, by which the crowd is caused to jostle another passenger on the platform so as to lead him to seize the railing, whereby his arm is caught between the railings of two of the cars and injured, is guilty of negligence for which the company is liable. Graham v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336.

A passenger on an elevated railway car does not assume the risk of an unusual disturbance caused by a quarrel between the guard and an intoxicated quests, and also to some portions of the charge as given.

It appeared upon the trial that the plaintiff had worked for the Union Elevator Company in Detroit for seven years continuously, and that he had severed his connection with that company between two and three years before the injury. The foreman of the elevator com-passenger by riding on the crowded platform of the car. Grabam v. Manhattan R. Co. 149 N. Y. 336.

And one who has entered a railway car for the purpose of becoming a passenger is entitled to protection against unlawful assaults by the trainmen, though he has not purchased a ticket, and though he entered the car in a violent and ungentlemanly manner, and though he was intoxicated at the time, where he entered with the intent to become a passenger and pay his fare, and was behaving properly at the time of the assault. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheehan, 29 Ill. App. 90.

As to effect of intoxication on the rights of a passenger ejected from a railway train, see Roseman v. Carolina C. R. Co. (N. C.) 19 L. R. A. 327, and the note appended thereto. And the following cases also relate to the same subject.

A carrier of passengers has the power, and is under the duty, of refusing to receive as a passenger anyone who is drunk, disorderly, or riotous, or who so conducts himself as to endanger or interfere with the comfort and convenience of the passengers, and may exert all necessary power and means at the proper time and place to eject anyone so imperiling the safety or annoying others, and in case of the neglect of such duty, and a passenger receives an injury which might have been reasonably anticipated from one so improperly received or permitted to continue as a passenger, the carrier is responsible. Edgerly v. Union Street R. Co. (N. H.) 36 Atl. 558.

A conductor in charge of a public vehicle may exclude therefrom any person whose conduct or condition is such from intoxication or otherwise as to render acts of impropriety, rudeness, indecency, or disturbance either inevitable or probable, and he is not bound to wait until some overt act of violence, profanity, or other misconduct has been committed. Vinton v. Middlesex R. Co. 11 Allen, 304, 87 Am. Dec. 714; Murphy v. Union R. Co. 118 Mass. 228.

A carrier is not bound to wait until some act of violence, profanity, or other misconduct is actually committed before exercising his authority to expel an intoxicated offender. It is sufficient if the offender, through intoxication or otherwise, is in such a condition as to make it reasonably certain that he will become offensive or annoying to other passengers, although he has not committed any act of offense or annoyance. Edgerly v. Union Street R. Co. (N. H.) 36 Atl. 558.

• And one who enters a railroad car as a passenger, in an intoxicated condition, and persistently refuses to pay his fare, and becomes boisterous, and uses profane and obscene language, is to be regarded as a trespasser and not as a passenger, and it is the right and duty of the conductor to eject him from the car, having due regard to circumstances of time, place, and condition of the person ejected, and using no unnecessary force. Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 242.

So, a street-railway company has the power to refuse to receive as a passenger, or to accept, anyone who is drunk, disorderly, or riotous, or who so demeans himself as to endanger the safety or interfere with the reasonable comfort and convenience of other passengers, and may exert all necessary power and means to eject anyone so imperiling the safety or annoying others. Putnam v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108, 14 Am. Rep. 190; Murphy v. Union R. Co. 118 Mass. 228.

And in cases of failure to do so, if a passenger receives an injury which might have been reasonably anticipated, the company will be held liable. Putnam v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108, 14 Am. Rep. 190.

And a passenger honestly supposed by the conductor of a street car to be drunk, and who repeatedly disobeys the request of the conductor to behave himself, and whose conduct is offensive and annoying to the other passengers, may be ejected from the car without rendering the company liable therefor, though such conduct was caused by sickness and not intoxication,—especially when he made no explanation or complaint of sickness, and the conductor did not know and had no reason to know that he was sick. Lemont v. Washington & G. R. Co. 1 Mackey, 180.

And to charge the jury, in an action for damages for the ejection of a sick person from a street car, that vomiting from intoxication is the only form of that evil which would authorize the conductor to expel a passenger from a car, is error as tending to withdraw their minds from all other forms of the evil which might excuse the conduct of the conductor in the proper management of the car, and as withdrawing the question of the contributory negligence of the passenger in failing to make his sickness known from their consideration. Lemont v. Washington & G. R. Co. 1 Mackey, 180.

So, when a drunken person got upon a passenger train, and used profane and obscene language to the conductor, and behaved in a disorderly manner, and drew his pistol when the conductor attempted to put him off the train, thus inducing the conductor to arm himself in order to expel him, after which he continued his profanity and vituperation, using foul and insulting language, upon which shots were exchanged and the drunken person was injured by being struck in the shoulder, the railroad company is not liable therefor, though the conductor was not fully excusable for shooting, his excitement and consequent failure in the performance of his duty being due to the acts of the person injured. Peavy v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 81 Ga. 485.

And the agents and servants of a railroad company in charge of one of its trains have the right to remove a passenger who is drunk and disorderly and using indecent language to the annoyance of the other passengers, from the passenger car in which he is riding, and place him in the baggage car, and carry him to his destination therein, only using reasonable force, when he does not attempt or express a desire to leave the train; and the company is not liable therefor though such servants and agents are police officers, and though they do not arrest such passenger. Sullivan v. Old Colony R. Co. 148 Mass. 119, 1 L. R. A. 513.

The fact that an individual may have drunk to excess, however, will not in every case justify his expulsion from a public conveyance. It is rather the degree of the intoxication and its effect upon the individual, and the fact that by reason thereof he is dangerous or annoying to other passengers, that give the right and impose the duty of expulsion. Putnam v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108, 14 Am. Rep. 190.

A person cannot be refused permission to ride merely because he is slightly intoxicated, where there are no indications that he will not conduct himself properly. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Vandyne. 57 Ind. 576, 26 Am. Rep. 68.

And it does not follow, and cannot be presumed, that because a man is drunk and offensive to others as well by his demeanor as in his appearance that he is a dangerous man, and that his presence in a pany was called as a witness by the defendant, and was asked why the plaintiff was discharged by that company, and, under objection, was permitted to testify that it was because of his intemperance. The superintendent of the elevator company was called as a witness by the defendant, and was permitted to testify, under objection, that the reputation street car imperils the safety of others, and that because he is drunk he may violently assault or murder others without provocation. Putnam v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108, 14 Am. Rep. 190.

So, the intoxication and misbehavior of a passenger which will authorize his expulsion from a train will not justify expulsion without the exercise of due care for his safety, having reference to time, place, and surroundings. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372.

And where a person ejected from a railway train is incapacitated to take care of himself, and so continues until he perishes, his ejection from the train must be regarded as the proximate cause of his death, whether he was incapacitated by intoxication or by being stunned by the fall from the car. Gill v. Rochester & P. R. Co. 37 Hun, 100.

Where a passenger upon a railway train is intoxicated to a degree rendering him unconscious of danger and unable to comprehend his position, surroundings, and perils, and his duty to avoid them, or where he does not possess the power of locomotion and is put off of the train by the conductor on account of his misconduct, and the place where he is left is dangerous to one in his condition, and these facts are known to the conductor, he is guilty of reckless and wanton negligence rendering the company liable for damages resulting therefrom, although the person ejected might have been legally ejected in a proper manner and at a proper place. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372, 104 Ala. 242.

And the ejection from a train at night of a passenger known to be drunk and irresponsible, at a place from which he can escape only by following the roughly ballasted railroad track and crossing cattle guards on one side and a bridge over a creek on the other, renders the railroad company liable where he is soon after killed by another train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372, supra, it was said by the court that if the case decided in 92 Ala. set forth in note to Roseman v. Carolina C. R. Co. (N. C.) 19 L. R. A. 327, contains expressions or lays down principles contrary to the later utterances of the court in Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 241, to which it still adheres, it must be modified conformably to what it now holds, and if such decisions may be found to be contrary it declines to follow them.

Mere intoxication upon the part of a person ejected from a railway train, which did not take away consciousness and the power to consider and understand the danger to which he was exposed or deprive him of physical capacity to take care of himself and avoid danger, however, does not relieve him from the responsibility of exercising due care after being put off; and if he is killed in consequence of such neglect of duty on his part no recovery can be had for such killing or injury. Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 242.

And the death of a person struck and killed by a car on a street railway cannot be assumed to be the natural and proximate cause of the expulsion of such person from another car, where he was intoxicated at the time of such expulsion but not so drunk as to be deprived of intelligence or unable to walk, and there was no reason to suppose that he was not able to care for himself, and he was left but a short time after sunset near dwellings and upon a public highway, and there was no evidence tending to show that the place was a dangerous one. Edgerly v. Union Street R. Co. (N. H.) 80 Atl. 558.

And when a trespasser was ejected from a train, who became unconscious and unable to realize his condition and his duty, from the effects of liquor drunk either before or after his ejection, but was not so at the time of such ejection, the railroad company was not liable for any injury that occurred to him as the result of such subsequent intoxication. Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 242.

So, was a trespasser on a railway train, who is put off at a place from which he could by ordinary prudence have discovered and gone upon a traveled road instead of upon the railway track, is not excused so as to render the company liable for his death by being run over by a railway train, by a condition of partial intoxication, or by the influence of a companion which prompted him to remain upon the track. Ham v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 142 Pa. 617.

And where a passenger in a railway train was carried beyond his destination because he was drunk and in a stupefied condition, and he refused to pay fare beyond that point, and was put off and sat down on the grass some feet to one side of the road, and left sitting there, and hereafterwards went upon the track of the road and lay down upon it and was run over by another train and killed, the company is not chargeable with notice that he went upon the track, and is not liable for his death. McClelland v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 94 Ind. 276.

And an instruction in an action by a passenger for being put off a railroad train that the company was liable in damages if it wilfully, negligently, or carelessly carried him beyond his destination without his fault, is error where he was carried beyond his destination because he was so intoxicated as to render it unsafe to put him off there, and he was put off the next day when he had boarded another train to return to his destination because of his refusal to pay fare, no claim having been made for damages for being carried beyond his destination, and there being no evidence authorizing any recovery therefor. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lewis, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 771.

So, no liability upon the part of a railroad company arises from the ejection of a trespasser from one of its cars by a conductor who did not know or was not informed of the intoxication of the party and the consequent peril attending his ejection. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372.

But evidence in an action against a railway company for the death of a person, alleged to have been caused by his ejection from its train in an intoxicated condition, that he refused to pay his fare in a very nonsensical way, and used rude, obscene language to the conductor, such as no one but a crazy or drunken man would employ, at which the latter did not become angry, and evinced a want of rationality, tends to show that the conductor had knowledge of his intoxicated condition. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372.

So, an instruction in an action for the death of a person who was ejected from a railroad train and was afterwards found dead, that if the intoxication of the deceased contributed in any degree to his inability to get out of the situation in which he was found, such intoxication is to be attributed to him as contributory negligence, and if, being under the influence of liquor, he fell in the place of the plaintiff among the people in and about the elevator was that he was a drinking man. The defendant was also permitted to show that the plaintiff was under the influence of liquor at different times a year prior to the accident. One of the police officers was called, and permitted to testify that he knew the plaintiff when he kept a saloon; that at one time there where he was found, and the influence of liquor contributed to or aided in producing his inability to get out of that position, and his death was caused by suffocation or drowning coupled with such inability, no recovery can be had,—should not be given; and refusal to give it is not ground for reversal where that view of the matter was not suggested at the trial, and the court had charged that if the incapacity of the deceased was the result of intoxication the intoxication must have been known by the conductor when he ejected the deceased in order to warrant a recovery. Gill v. Rochester & P. R. Co. 37 Hun, 109.

And an instruction in an action for a personal injury alleged to have been received by being forcibly ejected from the station house of a railroad, that if the falling of the plaintiff was attributable wholly or in part to defective steps at the door, or was caused in part by his intoxication and not by necessary force used in ejecting him, there could be no recovery, need not be given under a system of practice requiring instructions to be in writing, where the instructions given distinctly inform the jury that to find for the plaintiff it must appear from the evidence that the agent used more force than was reasonably necessary, and that by reason of the excessive force the plaintiff was injured. Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 58 Iowa, 348.

e. With relation to persons injured on highways, streets, etc.

Being abroad in a street of a city at night in a state of intoxication is not negligence as a matter of law, but is a circumstance from which the jury may find the existence of negligence as a fact. Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315.

The intoxication of a person injured by reason of a defective highway will not affect his recovery therefor where it had nothing to do with the accident. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402.

Over-indulgence in spirituous liquors is not to be imputed to a person falling into an excavation in a public street as negligence, unless he was disqualified thereby from the exercise of ordinary care and prudence. O'Hagan v. Dillon, 10 Jones & S. 458.

It does not, as matter of law, constitute such a want of ordinary care as would preclude a recovery, the question as to what constitutes ordinary care being one for the determination of the jury. Stuart v. Machias Port, 48 Me. 477.

But one who receives an injury on a highway while so intoxicated as to be unable to manage and conduct himself and his team with ordinary care and prudence cannot be said to be in the use of ordinary care, and if this want of ordinary care contributed in the least degree to produce the injury, he is not entitled to recover. Cassedy v. Stockbridge, 21 Vt. 391.

And one who is injured while intoxicated, while attempting to drive over a washout or chasm extending across the roadway, cannot recover of the county where, if he had been sober, he could and would have seen it and escaped injury, as in such case voluntary intoxication is in itself negligence. Woods v. Tipton County Comrs. 128 Ind. 280.

But the court in an action against a city for damages sustained by reason of a defective highway in which the intoxication of the plaintiff is interposed as a defense is not required to instruct the jury that a city is not bound to keep its streets safe and convenient for intoxicated persons, or that if the plaintiff was intoxicated at the time of the accident they are to presume that he was negligent, where it had charged that the plaintiff could not recover if the accident occurred through his own negligence, and that if he was intoxicated that was a circumstance to be considered by them as bearing upon the question of due care on his part. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402.

So, the intoxication of a person driving across a dangerous bridge does not of itself relieve the town of liability for maintaining it in that condition, the question being whether or not he exercised reasonable care to avoid the danger, but is evidence to go to the jury upon that question. Thorp v. Brookfield, 38 Conn. 320.

Negligence upon the part of a person in leaving an uncovered hole in the sidewalk of a public street, however, is not excused by the fact that a person falling into it was drunk. Robinson v. Ploche, 5 Cal. 461.

But where the drunkenness of a person injured in consequence of defects existing in a sidewalk in any way contributed to his injury, he cannot recover, and whether it did or not is a question of fact for the jury to determine. Healy v. New York, 3 Hun, 708.

So, one who travels by night along a country road in a wagon driven by a man known to him to be drunk and unfit to drive is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover damages from the township for injuries sustained by the overturning of the wagon and his precipitation down an unfenced bank 5 or 6 feet high, at the side of the road. Hershey v. Mill Creek Twp. Road Comrs. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 252.

And a city will not be held liable for an injury caused to a woman by being thrown from a wagon driven over a defective crosswalk where the husband, who was driving, was in a drunken condition and drove too fast over the crossing, which was not so out of repair as to render it unsafe had he driven over it as a careful, sober man would have done. Rock Island v. Vanlandschoot, 78 Ill. 485.

But negligence will not be imputed to an injured party voluntarily riding in a private conveyance so as to defeat a recovery on his part in an action for personal injury against a toll-road company where he was without personal fault and had no control over the driver who was a fit person to manage the horses, by reason of the sudden closing of the passage by the toll-gate keeper on account of a wrongful attempt on the part of the driver, who was considerably intoxicated, to pass the toll-gate without paying toll. Brannen v. Kokomo, G. & J. Gravel Road Co. 115 Ind. 115.

1. With relation to miscellaneous matters.

The owner of a wagon left standing in a roadway is not exempted from liability to a person who drives against it in the night and suffers injury thereby, by the fact that he was drunk at the time of the accident. Kidley v. Lamb, 10 U. C. Q. B. 354.

And a railroad company will not be held liable for damages for goods destroyed by fire in its warehouse upon the ground of negligence, upon evidence that a night operator, who had charge of the telegraph office in the warehouse, was addicted to drinking and was drunk at the time of the fire. Young v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 116 N. C. 982.

And where a mother sends her two sons to a depot to meet their father, who is expected to return on a train in an intoxicated condition, and the sons are driven away from the depot by the person in charge, and the father arrives and leaves the train and subsequently returns and goes to sleep was trouble at the saloon, and he went in and found the plaintiff and others pretty well intoxicated. Another police officer was called, and testified that in 1891 he had seen the plaintiff under the influence of liquor. He was then asked, "Did you know what sort of a place he had?" and answered that he considered it rather tough. This testimony was ob-upon the railroad track and is killed by another train, the driving of the boys from the depot and preventing them from meeting their father to conduct him home are not the immediate and proximate cause of his death so as to render the railroad company liable therefor, his contributory negligence being the proximate cause thereof. Rozwadowskie v. International & G. N. R. Co. 1 Tex. Civ. App. 487.

So, the condition of a driver as to being drunk or sober at the time of an accident is a proper subject of investigation in a suit for damages for injuries claimed to have been received by reason of the careless and reckless driving of the defendant's servant as a part of the res gestæ. Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

And where a person driving for another at his request and solicitation and upon his business is intoxicated, and drives so heedlessly and carelessly that the other, in the exercise of ordinary care, can perceive it, and fails to do so, and remonstrate with him, and is injured by reason of such careless driving, he is chargeable with contributory negligence, and the question does not depend upon whether he is negligent in not remonstrating with the driver, or upon the fact that it is apparent to him, or occurs to his mind, that the driver is driving in a heedless and careless manner, or upon whether he assents to it or not. Smith v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 38 Hun, 33.

So, one who falls by accident against a stove in a public bar-room, striking against a vessel of hot water, which upsets and scalds another, is responsible for the injury thereby caused where the fall was the effect of intoxication. Sullivan v. Murphy, 2 Miles (Pa.) 296.

And a guest in a hotel cannot recover of the proprietor for an alleged robbery where the guest was intoxicated and his intoxication contributed to the loss. Walsh v. Porterfield, 87 Pa. 376.

But the fact that a guest in a hotel is intoxicated, or that his door is unlocked, will not destroy the landlord's liability for the acts of his servants in the theft of property belonging to such guest. Cunningham v. Bucky, 42 W. Va. 371, 35 L. R. A. 850.

And an innkeeper's liability for the baggage of a guest is increased rather than diminished by the fact that the guest got too drunk at his bar to take care of himself. Rubenstein v. Cruikshanks, 54 Mich. 199, 52 Am. Rep. 806.

And where one enters a saloon or tavern open for the entertainment of the public, the proprietor is bound to see that he is properly protected from the assaults or insults, as well of those who are in his employ, as of drunken and vicious men whom he may choose to harbor. Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579.

And a saloon or tavern keeper is liable for damages for injury to a customer to whose clothes an intoxicated companion attaches a piece of paper, and sets fire to it within view of the proprietor, whereby he is seriously burned. Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579.

So, a licensed liquor seller who furnished another with intoxicating liquor in violation of the statutes, upon which he became intoxicated and unconscious, when the liquor dealer put him into his vehicle drawn by a gentle horse which the intoxicated man had borrowed, which ran away and was killed by reason of the driver's intoxication, is liable to the owner of the horse for its value. Dunlap v. Wagner, 85 Ind. 529, 44 Am. Rep. 42.

It is no defense to an action for a wilful injury to person or property, however, that the person causing the injury was intoxicated, and the person injured was a licensed liquor seller and had sold him the liquors that intoxicated him, and was thereby guilty of contributory negligence. Cassady v. Magher, 85 Ind. 228.

And an answer in an action brought by a liquor seller to recover for injuries to his property on account of the wilful negligence and careless conduct of the defendant which admits the injuries and alleges that the defendant was intoxicated at the time by liquors sold to him by the plaintiff who was a licensed liquor dealer, is insufficient to constitute a defense. Cassady v. Magher, 85 Ind. 228.

So, contributory negligence is chargeable to a minor who takes chloroform when so intoxicated as to be incapable of exercising any reasonable degree of caution or prudence, where he is old enough to earn as a clerk in a grocery store a reasonable and substantial compensation. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474.

And a person is not liable on the ground of injuring one in danger, for death following his selling chloroform to an intoxicated person who is not shown to be absolutely without mind to the knowledge of the vendor. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474.

Nor will a sale of chloroform to a minor in violation of law, where he was intoxicated, render the seller liable for the minor's death from drinking it, if the sale was not the proximate cause of his death. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474.

III. Effect when there is negligence on both sides.

As to concurring negligence generally, see Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular Land Transp. & Mfg. Co. 27 Fla. 1, 17 L. R. A. 33, and note.

There seems to be some disagreement in the authorities as to whose act shall be deemed the proximate cause of an injury where the negligence of both parties concurred in bringing it about. Thus, on the one hand, it is held that though there was negligence on the part of a railroad company in running an engine backwards in the night and not having a light upon the tender and a lookout, yet no recovery can be had on behalf of one who was killed while voluntarily on the track and from intoxication unable to get out of the way of the train, as his own negligence was the proximate cause of his death. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Pankhurst, 36 Ark. 371.

So, the contributory negligence of a man who becomes drunk or unconscious upon a railway track will bar a recovery for injuries sustained by being struck by a locomotive, though the engineer was also negligent in failing to discover him in time to avert injury, as his negligence was concurrent with, if not subsequent to, that of the engineer, operating as it did up to the very moment of the collision. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 728, 25 L. R. A. 237.

And though the company was also negligent in failing to use a headlight, by using which he might have been seen and the injury avoided. O'Keefe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 467.

And, though an engineer in charge of a railroad train was negligent in failing to blow his whistle at a crossing, the subsequent refusal or failure of a person upon the track in a drunken condition to get off is nevertheless the proximate cause of the injury sustained by being struck, unless it can be reasonably inferred that the engineer saw, or could by ordinary care have seen, not simply that he was on the track, but that he had placed jected to by counsel for the plaintiff. Counsel for the defendant insists that this testimony was competent when the plaintiff's story and demand are taken into consideration; that his story was that the conductor treated him in a negligent manner, whereby he was caused to fall from the running board of the car; that he did not do anything in whole or in part to himself in a perilous condition and appeared to be drunk or insensible in the way of the engine, and that after he could by proper watchfulness have had reasonable ground to believe that such was his condition it was within the power of the engineer by the use of the appliances at his command and without peril to his passengers to stop the train in time to avoid injury. Norwood v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 111 N. C. 236.

So, the proximate cause of the injury to a person whose foot is crushed by being run over by a railway train is his negligence in voluntarily walking upon the track and his inability to get out of the way in consequence of intoxication or an attack of vertigo, where he was drunk at the time and had started out to walk down the railway track, and was overtaken, according to his own account, by a blind spell and knew no more until he was run over, the track being straight at the place where the accident happened, the engineer having discovered a small object on the rail which he took for a block of wood, and having made every effort to stop the train after discovering that it was a man's leg, without being able to do so in season, the railway company not being responsible unless its trainmen had clear opportunity after discovering his peril to avoid striking him. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Haynes, 47 Ark. 497.

And no recovery can be had for a personal injury to one who goes upon a railroad track in a helpless state of drunkenness and falls asleep or unconsciously sits upon the railroad track at a perilous place after having been warned of the danger of passing trains, and there waits until struck by an engine though he could be seen for a distance of 3 or 4 miles, where there is no evidence tending to show that he was seen by any of the train men, or that they could by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the injury. Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 84 Md. 506, 36 L. R. A. 213.

And one who is injured by being struck by a railroad train when in such a condition of intoxication as not to be able to take care of himself or pay any heed to the warnings of the approaching train, whose situation was not known to those in charge of the train, who did not discover it in time by the use of reasonable diligence to save him from injury, cannot recover therefor, though there was negligence on the part of the employees of the railroad in detaching cars and allowing them to run down the switch by their own momentum. Kean v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 61 Md. 154.

So, the engineer of a railway train who sees men upon the track ahead is justified in supposing that they will get out of the way before his train reaches them, and may continue under that impression until he gets near enough to see that they are either drunk or asleep, which he is not bound to foresee; and the company is not liable for injury to them where he is unable after discovering their condition to stop and save them because of his nearness to them. Herring v. Wilmington & R. R. Co. 32 N. C. (10 Ired. L.) 402, 51 Am. Dec. 395.

And the negligence of a person killed while driving along a railroad track in failing to get off of the track is not excused by the fact that he was intoxicated, though his getting onto the track in the first instance was due to the negligence of the railroad company. McDonald v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 75 Wis. 121.

If the employees of a railroad company in charge of a train see a man upon its track at a distance ahead sufficient to enable him to get out of the way they have a right to presume that he will do so, and 40 L. R. A.

go on without checking the speed of the train until they see he is not likely to do so, when it becomes their duty to give extra alarm, and as a last resort to check its speed and stop the train if possible in time to avoid disaster; but where the man seen is known to be, or from his appearance gives good reason to believe that he is, grossly intoxicated or otherwise insensible to danger or unable to avoid it, they have no right to presume that he will get out of the way, but should act upon the hypothesis that he may not or will not, and use proper care to avoid injuring him; and failing in this the company will be responsible in damages if, by the use of such care after they become aware of his negligence, they can avoid injuring him. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Wilkerson, 48 Ark. 513.

And it is incumbent upon the plaintiff, in an action for the death of a man who was killed while lying unconscious from intoxication upon a railroad track, to avoid the effect of such negligent act, to show that when the engineer could first have seen him he was not only on the track, but in such a condition that he could not probably escape if the train continued on, and that he neglected to use the means available and safe to stop it. Norwood v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 111 N. C. 236.

Upon the other hand, the rule is laid down that where the negligence of a defendant, in an action for a personal injury which contributed directly to cause the injury, occurred after the danger in which the injured party had placed himself by his own negligence was, or by the exercise of reasonable care might have been, discovered in time to have averted the injury, the defendant is liable, however gross the negligence of the injured party may have been in placing him in such a position of danger. Werner v. Citizens' R. Co. 81 Mo. 368.

He who has the last clear chance notwithstanding the negligence of the adverse party is deemed solely responsible for the injuries resulting from his failure to exercise reasonable care, and the failure of an engineer to perform his duty to maintain a reasonably vigilant lookout along the track in front of his train renders the railroad company liable for killing a human being lying upon the track apparently helpless from intoxication or other causes, where the engineer could have seen him by the exercise of ordinary care. Pickett v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 618, 30 L. R. A. 257.

And if a person crossing a railroad track, and while upon the track, is in fact drunk and fails to observe reasonable precautions to avoid danger, though improperly there and under circumstances constituting negligence on his part, yet, if the servants of the railroad company in charge of its train, after discovering his perilous situation, could, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, have avoided injury to him, they were bound to do so, and the company is liable for the injury if they fail to make proper and reasonable exertions whereby the injury could have been prevented. Kean v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 61 Md. 154.

So, notwithstanding the fact that a person who is lying insensible upon a railroad track is drunk, his negligence is not deemed concurrent where the railroad company's servants by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen him in time to have prevented the injury by the proper use of the appliances at their command. Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010. And see Yarnall v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 575, and Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 525, supra, II. b.

And a railroad engineer operating a train, who cause the accident; and that he was entitled to recover from the defendant, not only for the direct physical injury he received, but also for the pain and suffering, loss of time, and for loss of work which he would have received had he not been injured; that the plaintiff was called as a witness on his own behalf, and therefore put himself in the way sees upon the track a person whose appearance gives him reason to believe that he is grossly intoxicated or otherwise insensible of danger or unable to avoid it, has no right to presume that he will get out of the way, but should act upon the belief that he may not or will not, and take means to stop his train in time to prevent a collision. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274, dictum.

And where a railroad engineer in charge of a train by reasonable watchfulness might discover a person lying upon the track asleep or drunk, it is his duty to resolve all doubts in favor of the preservation of life, and immediately use every available means short of imperiling the lives of passengers to stop the train. Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686.

In Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686, supra, Herring v. Wilmington & R. R. Co. 32 N. C. (40 Ired. L.) 402, 51 Am. Dec. 365, supra, was directly and expressly overruled.

And in Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010, supra, Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 728, 25 L. R. A. 287, supra, is spoken of as having been overruled.

So, a railroad company may be held liable for injuries caused by running over a man with a train which did not display any headlight, or sound a whistle, or ring a bell, as required by law, though he had been drinking freely, where he was not so much under the influence of ardent spirits as to be incapable of self-control, his negligence in walking upon the track being but slight as compared with the negligence of the company in running a dark train at a high rate of speed through a village without signaling its approach. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Galbreath, 63 Ill. 436.

And where an engine running backwards with the tender in front runs over a man lying drunk upon the track, if a headlight would have enabled the railroad company by due diligence upon the part of its servants to have seen the man in time to have stopped the train before reaching him, the failure to provide one was a continuing negligent omission of duty the performance of which would have given the company the last chance to prevent the injury, and therefore its negligence in omitting it is the proximate cause of the injury. Lloyd v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1010.

So, where a passenger riding on the platform of a car is in such a state of intoxication as to be careless and heedless of the danger to which he is exposed, it is the duty of the railroad company, after the conductor has notice of his condition and exposure to danger, to use the ordinary precautions for his safety, such as calling his attention to the danger and the rules of the company, forbidding such exposure, and to invite him to go inside the car. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 39 W. Va. 366, 23 L. R. A. 758.

And a city railway company is liable for the death of a person run over by one of its cars in the night-time who had laid down or fallen upon the track in a state of intoxication and remained there, where the driver of the car, by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, might have ascertained that the object which he saw lying on the track was a human being before he ran over it, and might have stopped the car before reaching it. Werner v. Citizens' R. Co. 81 Mo. 368.

And the failure of the driver of a street car to stop the car in the night-time where he could see an object on the track as large as a sack of oats and which he thought resembled one or a bundle of hay, is such negligence on his part as will render the street-car company liable for running over the object, which proved to be a man who had laid or fallen upon the track in a state of intoxication and remained there until struck. Werner v. Citizens' R. Co. 81 Mo. 368.

So, the intoxication of a passenger upon a ferry boat is not evidence of contributory negligence which will defeat a recovery for his death by drowning where his death was caused by the fact that the boat did not land in a proper place and left a space of from 18 inches to 2 feet wide between the pontoon and the boat, which was poorly lighted, and he fell through the space from stumbling against the pontoon instead of stepping upon it. Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 528.

But the drunkenness of a driver with whom one travels by night along a country road, which is known to the passenger, is the proximate cause of injuries sustained by him from the overturning of the wagon and his precipitation down an unfenced bank at the side of the road, though the accident would not have happened if the bank had been fenced. Hershey v. Mill Creek Twp. Road Comrs. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 252.

So, an innkeeper in whose inn a customer becomes drunk and unconscious, who expels such customer at a late hour of the night, by reason of which he dies from exposure and cold, cannot escape liability for such wrongful and negligent act on account of the customer's prior negligence in getting drunk. Weymire v. Wolfe, 52 Iowa, 538. See also McHugh v. Schlosser, 159 Pa. 480, 23 L. R. A. 574.

And a person who induces another whose faculties have been impaired by habitual drunkenness, to continue drinking on a wager to a manifestly dangerous excess, which causes his death, is liable for the wrongful act under articles 2896, 2900, Texas Rev. Stat., providing that an action for actual damages on account of injuries causing the death of any person may be brought where such death is caused by the wrongful act, negligence, unskillfulness, or default of another. McCue v. Klein, 60 Tex. 168, 48 Am. Rep. 260. See also supra, II., 2.

IV. Question for the jury.

Whether the intoxication of a person injured was such as to have contributed to the injury is a question of fact for the jury. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Sympkins, 54 Tex. 615, 38 Am. Rep. 632; Healey v. New York, 6 Thomp. & C. 92; Newton v. Central Vermont R. Co. 80 Hun, 491.

Where there is evidence on the one hand, in an action for personal injury resulting in death, that the deceased was intoxicated at the time of the accident, and on the other hand, tending to show an absence of contributory negligence, the question whether the intoxication caused or contributed to the injury is one properly for the jury. Tompkins v. Oswego, 40 N. Y. S. R. 4.

And the verdict of a jury in an action for damages for negligence upon the question of contributory negligence and drunkenness of the plaintiff is conclusive upon appeal where the evidence was conflicting and the question was properly submitted to the jury under proper instructions. Salina v. Trospers, 27 Kan. 545.

And a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action against a railroad company for an injury received by a passenger while stepping on the train after a stoppage for dinner will not be reversed on of an attack, not only upon his honesty as a party claimant, but also upon his credibility as a witness, both generally and in respect of his version of the occurrence resulting in his injury. Counsel contends, further, that the plaintiff's own counsel put his sobriety in issue, and that defendant's counsel went into the matter on cross-examination.

appeal where the evidence as to whether the passenger was intoxicated or not then and upon other occasions was conflicting, though in the opinion of the appellate court the verdict of the jury should have been set aside by the trial court and a new trial granted. Union P. R. Co. v. Diehl, 33 Kan. 422.

And an instruction in an action for a personal injury caused by a defect in a highway, that if the jury find that at the time of the accident the plaintiff was intoxicated, this of itself would constitute such a want of ordinary care as would prevent a recovery by him, should not be given, as the question, What constitutes ordinary care? is one for the jury. Stuart v. Machias Port, 48 Me. 477.

So, it is within the province of the jury, and not the court, to determine whether the engineer of a railroad train had reason to believe that a man who was drunk upon the track was so situated that he could not without peril get off the track in time to escape the train, or was so intoxicated that he could not or would not attempt to escape, and whether after he could have discovered the situation the engineer might by using ordinary care have avoided injuring him. Clark v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 109 N. C. 430, 14 L. R. A. 749.

And where it appears in an action for a personal injury against a township that by reason of neglect to repair a road a gutter or channel had formed and been allowed to remain across such road, and that the plaintiff while passing along such road in a wagon was thrown therefrom into such channel, but that he was intoxicated at the time and was aware of the existence of the defect in the road, and that with reasonable care the accident could have been avoided, the question of his contributory negligence is one for the jury. Maw v. King & Albion Twp. 8 Ont. App. Rep. 248.

And it is a question for the jury to say whether the failure of a brakeman who is injured in a collision alleged to have been caused by the habitual intemperance and incompetency of an engineer to refuse to work with such engineer in view of such knowledge on his part as to such incompetency was, under all the attending circumstance, contributory negligence. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 485. And see Luning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417, set forth infra, VI.

So, the question whether the removal of a passenger from one car to another by the officers of the train while the train was moving at the rate of 25 miles per hour is negligent or wrongful or not, where the passenger had been drinking previous to his going in the car, and he and those in company with him had behaved in a boisterous manner and made remarks which were improper in the presence of ladies, is one of fact under all the circumstances of the case, as is also the question whether unnecessary force was used in making the removal. Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 33 Iowa, 563.

And the extent of the intoxication of a passenger, and the conductor's knowledge of his condition and the safety of the place at which he was ejected from the train, are questions for the jury. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 372, 104 Ala. 241.

And where a person who was very much intoxicated was removed from a railway train, and he had no money with which to pay his fare, and could not produce a ticket, notwithstanding the fact that a companion tendered fare which the conductor refused to receive, demanding a ticket, the expulsion is wrongful; and where his intoxication was such as to render him helpless in the situation in which he was placed, and he was killed shortly after his removal by another train, after proceeding on his way to his destination, falling or laying down upon the track, the question whether his death was traceable directly to the removal from the train under all the circumstances is for the jury. Guy v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 30 Hun, 399.

So, the finding of a jury in an action for a personal injury will not be disturbed on appeal where the question was whether the plaintiff was voluntarily drunk and in that condition placed himself on defendant's railroad, or whether he had a sudden attack of vertigo by reason of which he fell thereon and was injured by the negligence of defendant's agents in running its trains, which was fairly submitted to the jury and there was evidence to uphold their finding. Southwestern R. Co. v. Hankerson, 72 Ga. 182.

But refusal to instruct the jury in an action for a personal injury on the submission of the question whether the plaintiff was so intoxicated when injured as to be incapable of exercising ordinary care to avoid injury, for a special verdict, as to the legal effect of such intoxication, is not error, as it is for the court to say what is the legal effect, though the jury answers the question affirmatively. Schuenke v. Pine River, 84 Wis. 669.

And the question whether a railway engineer in the exercise of due diligence might have discovered a person lying drunk and helpless across a rail in front of his train, and whether by prompt and strenuous efforts he could have saved his life without putting his passengers in jeopardy, is one for the jury. Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686.

So, whether it was due care and a proper exercise of power to expel a drunken and disorderly passenger from a horse car while in motion is a question of fact to be determined by the jury in view of the rate of speed at which the car was moving and all the other circumstances of the case. Murphy v. Union R. Co. 118 Mass. 228. See also Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 108 Ala. 62, 31 L. R. A. 342, and Guy v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 30 Hun, 399, supra, II., d, and Healey v. New York, 3 Hun, 708, supra, II., e.

V. Presumption and burden of proof.

Where it is negligence to be in a particular place in a state of intoxication, and some evidence is introduced tending to show that a person receiving an injury at such place was intoxicated, the burden of proof is cast upon him to show by a preponderance of evidence that he was not intoxicated in order to recover in an action for such injury. Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 815; Hubbard v. Mason City, 60 Iowa, 400.

And an instruction in an action for damages for alleged negligence that the burden of proof rests with the defendant to show that the plaintiff's injury resulted from his own intoxication and negligence, means negligence superinduced by intoxication, and is not therefore misleading. Loewer v. Sedalia, 77 Mo. 431.

And refusal to instruct the jury in an action for damages for an injury received upon a public highway, that if the person injured was so intoxicated as to be incapable of properly conducting himself and his team no recovery can be had, is not error where the jury were told that if he was so intoxicated at the time of the injury that of itself would throw the burden of proof upon the plaintiff to

We think it was proper examination to make inquiry as to the plaintiff's condition at the time of the injury complained of, and that the question was open to defendant's inquiry as to whether the plaintiff was or was not intoxicated at the time of the injury, and that the defendant had a right to call witnesses to show that the plaintiff was intoxicated at that time.

show that he exercised ordinary care and prudence and that his intoxication was prima facie evidence of want of ordinary care. Burns v. Elba, 82 Wis. 605.

So, where it appears that the conductor running a train which causes a personal injury was a man of intemperate habits, the burden is cast upon the railroad company of proving that he was not intoxicated at the time and had used proper care. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 333, 38 Am. Dec. 229.

And the fact of intoxication of a person injured by being thrown from a railroad car by a sudden jerk while the person was attempting to alight does not establish negligence per se unless it contributed to the injury, and the question is properly submitted to the jury whether or not it did so contribute. Newton v. Central Vermont R. Co. 80 Hun, 491.

Sobriety is the normal condition, and is presumed to exist, and the presumption stands in favor of the party injured by the alleged negligence of another in the place of proof; but when evidence of intoxication is introduced, it must appear from a preponderance of the whole testimony that the person injured was not intoxicated at the time of the injury, the burden of proof being shifted to the plaintiff, and the presumption of sobriety being overcome. Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315.

So, the burden of proving that a railroad company has not bestowed ordinary diligence with reference to a trespasser upon its tracks who is injured rests with the plaintiff in an action for such injury. Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Wood, 86 Ala. 164.

But while the intoxication of a person injured at the time of the injury is a circumstance to go to the jury on the ground of contributory negligence, it is not conclusive, and does not change the burden of proof unless the intoxication was of such a degree as to render him imbecile. Seymer v. Lake, 66 Wis. 651. And see Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 315, infra VI., a. But see Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315, supra, and Fitzgerald v. Weston, 52 Wis. 354, supra, II., a.

So, a habit of intoxication upon the part of a person injured, once proved to exist, is presumed to continue, and raises a presumption of negligence in case of accident to him which stands until rebutted. Lane v. Missouri P. R. Co. 132 Mo. 4. See also Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 87; Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579.

VI. Intoxication as evidence of negligence.

a. Admissibility.

The intoxication in any degree of a person injured is proper to be considered in an action for damages for the injury in determining the question of his contributory negligence. Alger v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 402; Hankinson v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 41 S. C. 1; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Waller, 56 Tex. 331; Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175. And see Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315, supra, II., e.

While drunkenness is not negligence per se, it is evidence of negligence more or less cogent according to the circumstances. Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 6 Sawy. 290, 5 Fed. Rep. 523.

Thus, the intoxication of the plaintiff in an action for an injury received while crossing a railroad bridge and trestle, and the fact that he was admonished of the danger of crossing, are proper to be considered by the jury, in connection with all the other facts in the case, in passing upon the question of negligence, and it is not proper to separate such facts from their connection with others and make them the basis of an instruction, as such a course would tend to mislead the jury. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Boteler, 38 Md. 568.

And an instruction in an action for damages for causing a party's death in which the question of mutual negligence is involved and it appears that the deceased was intoxicated at the time, that the love of life and the natural instinct of self-preservation possessed by all persons may be considered in determining whether the deceased used ordinary care, is improper and erroneous; it should be qualified to the effect that if the deceased was drunk the jury should consider that fact and determine whether or not it rebutted such presumption. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.

But intoxication is not of itself evidence of contributory negligence, and only becomes so by the fact that the intoxication contributed to the injury. Lynch v. New York, 47 Hun, 524; Northern P. & Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175. And see Holmes v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 523, supra, II., d.

Though evidence tending to show that the person injured was intoxicated at the time is competent. Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 565.

Intoxication of a person injured in any degree, at the time of the injury, is a circumstance to go to the jury in an action therefor on the question of negligence; but it is not conclusive as to the fact of negligence, and does not change the burden of proof unless it may be seen that the intoxication is of such a degree as to render the party imbecile. Seymer v. Lake, 66 Wis. 651.

And evidence of intoxication in an action for a personal injury caused by the falling of a bridge furnishes a circumstance tending to corroborate proof of carelessness, but, standing alone, is not such proof, and does not shift the burden of proof to the plaintiff to show that he exercised due care. Ford v. Umatilla County, 15 Or. 313.

So, evidence tending to show that a person was drunk at the time of an accident causing his death is properly admissible in an action by his administrator against a railroad company by whose train he was killed, to recover damages therefor, as tending to show negligence on his part. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177.

And the condition of a driver as being drunk or sober at the time of an accident caused by careless driving is a proper subject for investigation, being part of the res gestæ. Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

And evidence that a driver was more or less intoxicated at the time of the injury is competent in an action against him for driving a wagon against and over a person injured in a public road upon an issue as to whether or not he was guilty of neglect. Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 565.

And evidence of the intoxication of an engineer who run an engine which killed a man is admissible in an action against the railroad company for such killing as a circumstance to be considered with the other evidence tending to prove the charge of negligence, though the complaint contained no allegation of such intoxication and did not allege the same as a specific act of negligence. Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175.

And refusal to exclude evidence of negligence on the part of the servants of a railroad company from the jury which may have caused the person injured to be upon the railroad track in a dazed and intoxicated condition is not error in an action

The defendant's conductor denied that he pushed the plaintiff off, or was in any way instrumental in his falling off the car. The defendant claimed that the plaintiff fell off by reason of his intoxication, and this was a proper subject of inquiry.

But the court was in error in permitting the defendant to introduce testimony showing that for damages for his death caused by being struck by a train while on such track in such condition. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Cooper, 120 Ind. 469, 6 L. R. A. 241.

So, evidence that a ship captain whose ship had gone on shore and who had sold her to a party who succeeded in getting her off was addicted to drunkenness within a short time before the vessel sailed is admissible on an issue between the owner and the insurer whether she had been totally lost. Alcock v. Royal Exch. Assur. Corp., 13 Q. B. 292, 18 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 121, 13 Jur. 445.

And the intoxication of the plaintiff in an action against a city to recover damages caused by a fall due to defects in a sidewalk is a material question as tending to show want of ordinary care on his part. Aurora v. Hillman, 90 Ill. 61.

So, the intoxication of a person injured while attempting to cross a dangerous bridge should be taken into consideration by the jury with other facts of the case in determining whether or not he exercised reasonable care to avoid danger. Thorp v. Brookfield, 38 Conn. 320.

And evidence of repeated drunkenness of the plaintiff in an action against a city for injuries caused by falling into an excavation in one of its streets, for some years before that time and afterwards, is admissible for the purpose of throwing light on the issue whether or not he was drunk at that time. Enright v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 288.

And the intoxication of the defendant may be proved in an action of trespass against him for an injury caused by driving his horse and sleigh against the plaintiff. Wynn v. Allard, 5 Watts & S. 525.

So, the condition of a physician as to being intoxicated, and his appearance at the time the services were performed by him, is admissible in evidence in an action against him for malpractice as a part of the res gestæ. Merrill v. Pepperdine, 9 Ind. App. 416.

But intoxication at the time of an injury cannot be inferred from proof of mere intemperate habits. Hampson v. Taylor, 15 R. I. 83.

And evidence of such a habit previously indulged in is not competent to prove intoxication at the time of the injury. Hubbard v. Mason City, 60 Iowa, 400. And see principal case.

And evidence that the plaintiff in an action for damages sustained by being run over by a horse-car was in the habit of becoming intoxicated is not admissible. Barker v. Savage, 1 Sweeny, 288.

And evidence of the habit of intoxication on the part of a person killed by a train at a railroad crossing is not admissible to prove contributory negligence on his part in an action against a railroad company for his death. Lane v. Missouri P. R. Co., 182 Mo. 4.

Nor is evidence, in an action for injuries claimed to have been received by reason of reckless driving, as to the general character for sobriety of the driver. Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92.

And evidence of intemperate habits on the part of the person injured is properly excluded in an action for an injury to a traveler on a highway resulting from a combination of two causes both proximate, one of which was a defect in the highway and the other a natural cause or a pure accident. Hampson v. Taylor, 15 R. I. 83.

Nor is evidence in an action for a personal injury by being struck by a moving car at a street crossing, that the plaintiff shortly before the accident was in a saloon and called for a drink of liquor, and that the barkeeper told him that he had had enough, admissible, such fact not being proved by the declarations of a third person. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Zoffinger, 107 Ill. 199.

But the plaintiff in an action for a personal injury, who had testified that he was not drunk at the time and had not been drinking to his recollection, may be asked on cross-examination if he was not in the habit of getting drunk. McCracken v. Markesan, 76 Wis. 499.

And the plaintiff in an action against a street-railway company for a personal injury sustained by the alleged negligence of the defendant in its management of its cars in his transportation may show that he was not intoxicated at the time, and prove his general character for sobriety, where the defendant had introduced evidence of his intoxication at the time, and inquired with reference to his habits for years. Denver-Tramway Co. v. Reid, 4 Colo. App. 53.

And the fact that an engineer was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquor and visiting a particular saloon is proper to be considered by the jury in an action for an injury caused by an accident to his train in connection with other evidence, as tending to sustain the charge of intoxication on the part of the persons in charge, where there was evidence tending to prove that he had drunk intoxicating liquor at the last station passed by the train before the injury, and about thirty minutes before the accident. Pennsylvania Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401.

So, the general reputation of a flagman of a railroad company as being intemperate is admissible in evidence in an action for an injury caused by his negligence, not for the purpose of showing his intemperance, but to show that the company, if it had used due care, must have known that he was habitually intemperate, and therefore an unsuitable servant to be employed by it. Gilman v. Eastern R. Co., 13 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210.

And evidence of the general reputation of an engineer for drunkenness is admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing his incompetency as such, and the negligence of the railroad company in retaining him in its employ. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623.

See also Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 63 Ill. 293; Huntington & B. T. Mountain R. & Coal Co. v. Decker, 82 Pa. 119; and Cleghorn v. New York C. & H. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375, infra, VII.

But evidence in an action for a personal injury caused by a collision with a railroad train, that the witness had seen the engineer occasionally drink a glass of beer, and that he thought he had seen him drink one the night of the accident, does not tend to show that the engineer was intoxicated at that time. Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175.

And evidence that the plaintiff in an action to recover damages sustained by reason of a defective sidewalk was endeavoring at the time of the injury to secure impecunious parties upon a bond of $300 for his appearance at court, to show his intoxication and consequent contributory negligence, bears so remotely and slightly upon the question of his intoxication that a judgment would not be reversed on account of the exclusion thereof. Hubbard v. Mason City, 60 Iowa, 400.

So, a physician cannot testify as to the effect of alcoholic drunkenness upon a person or individual in an action against a railroad company for damages for the alleged negligent killing of a person shown to have been intoxicated when ejected from two or three or more years prior to that time the plaintiff was in the habit of becoming intoxicated. This evidence was undoubtedly prejudicial to the plaintiff's case. It was proper matter of cross-examination of plaintiff to inquire what his past life had been, and what company he had kept in the past, as he was before the jury as a witness; and it was proper one of the railroad company's trains. Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 242.

And a witness in an action for causing death by the ejection of an intoxicated person from a railway train who testifies that he saw the deceased in conversation with others but could not hear what he said, and that he had no conversation with him, and that he occupied a seat in one end of the car and the deceased occupied one in the other end on a different side, cannot testify whether or not he was stupidly drunk. Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 104 Ala. 242.

b. Weight and sufficiency.

Where the evidence of negligence is nearly balanced the fact of drunkenness of one of the parties might turn the scale, as a man partially bereft of his faculties would be less observant than if he were sober. Wynn v. Allard, 5 Watts & S. 525.

And the testimony of the driver of a car which ran over and killed a man, that the deceased came staggering over to catch the horses by the heads and seemed to be very drunk, is sufficient to entitle the defendant in an action for such killing to a specific charge on the subject of the intoxication of the deceased. Bradley v. Second Ave. R. Co. 8 Daly, 289.

So, evidence that a person run over by a railroad train while attempting to cross the tracks was intoxicated entitles the defendant in an action for the injury to an instruction that if the jury believed from the evidence that the person injured was guilty of negligence and imprudence at the time of the occurrence, and that such negligence and imprudence contributed to the injury, she was not entitled to recover. Brand v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. 8 Barb. 368.

And the defendant in an action for an injury caused by a collision between a locomotive and the person injured at a crossing has a right to have the jury pass upon the facts under suitable instructions as to the law, where the theory is warranted that the person injured, upon arriving at the crossing and seeing the locomotive slowly backing up, and being herself stupefied by liquor, misjudged as to the rapidity of its approach and attempted to pass before it. Brand v. Schenectady & T. R. Co. 8 Barb. 368.

And evidence that a railroad engineer was an habitual drunkard, often drunk when off, and sometimes when on, duty, and was seldom free from the influence of liquor, is sufficient to warrant the jury in an action for an injury to a brakeman alleged to have been caused by the incompetency of the engineer in drawing the inference that he was an unfit person to be intrusted with the duties of a locomotive engineer, even in his sober intervals, notwithstanding the fact that there was evidence tending to show sobriety. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 485.

Nor does the evidence of a railway engineer whose train ran over and killed a man lying upon the track in an alleged drunken condition that he could not have seen him in time to stop the train before reaching him, authorize the court in an action for such killing to take from the jury the question as to whether he was negligent or not in not stopping the train. Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 525.

So, a nonsuit will be granted in an action against a railroad company for causing death, where it appears that the deceased returned to his home with a number of companions in a somewhat intoxicated condition about 11 o'clock at night, and on leaving the car got off on the wrong side where there was no platform, and fell off the bridge on which the car stopped and was killed, the other passengers having gone off on the platform. Deseims v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 149 Pa. 432.

And evidence tending to show that a collision between a railroad train and a detached car by which a brakeman was injured was caused by gross negligence on the part of the engineer in failing to pay attention to signals which it was his duty to obey, and that he was unfit and incompetent to perform the duties assigned him by reason of habits of intoxication, warrant the jury in concluding that his incompetency was the direct cause of the accident. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 485.

And a verdict will be directed for the defendant in an action against a city railroad company for an injury to a passenger caused by his being thrown from the car, where it appears that he was drunk and had no recollection of taking the car or of any facts connected with the accident, and that he was standing on the front platform his body swaying backward and forward, and that the rate of the speed was moderate, and there was no evidence of any defect in the road or that there was anything extraordinary in the motion of the car. Holland v. West End Street R. Co. 155 Mass. 387.

And an allegation that a minor who had arrived at years of discretion was intoxicated from an excessive use of liquor to such an extent that he was wholly incapable of exercising any reasonable degree of caution or prudence, in an action against a druggist for causing his death by selling him chloroform, shows contributory negligence upon its face which is sufficient to defeat the action. Meyer v. King, 72 Miss. 1, 35 L. R. A. 474.

So, the court is not warranted in assuming that the negligence of a person injured on a railroad track was slight only where the evidence shows that he walked upon the track 300 yards although there was a road upon one side of it which he could have used, and was not paying attention to anything, and had been drinking and might have been intoxicated, and that the alarm whistle was sounded from 200 yards to within 20 feet of the place where the injury was inflicted. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 178.

And one who while very much intoxicated crosses a stream upon a foot bridge which is defective and is injured by falling from the bridge, will be denied a recovery upon the ground of contributory negligence, where it appears that he was very much intoxicated and was warned that the bridge was not safe, and there was another bridge which was safe within a few feet of that from which the accident happened. Wood v. Andes, 11 Hun, 543.

And the omission upon the part of village authorities to erect a railing or fence at the top of a bank descending from the exterior line of the sidewalk beside a street will not render the village liable to a person who was injured by falling down the bank, where he was greatly intoxicated and had been directed to his destination by a person who had guided him half of the way and told him to follow the car track in the street, and objects could be seen plainly for 200 feet, and no reasonable excuse seemed to exist for his leaving the roadway and walking off the bank except his intoxication. Monk v. New Utracht, 104 N. Y. 552.

So, where a sidewalk is found, in an action for an injury happening upon it, to have been in such a condition that a person using ordinary care and prudence could walk over it without danger of falling, evidence that the person injured was into inquire into his antecedents, as it had a direct bearing upon his credibility as a witness. The defendant, however, would be bound by his answers, as there is no rule which would permit the defendant to introduce direct testimony bearing upon those questions, thus raising a collateral issue. The general reputation of the plaintiff for truth and intoxicated at the time is sufficient to warrant a finding that his negligence and intoxication contributed to his injury. McCracken v. Markesan, 76 Wis. 490.

But intoxication of one killed in a railroad yard while in the discharge of his duties, though evidence of contributory negligence, is not conclusive thereof unless it was the proximate cause of the injury. Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175.

And the fact that the plaintiff in an action for damages for falling into an excavation had indulged in intoxicating liquors sufficiently to make the fact perceptible from his breath does not show intoxication to such a degree as to disqualify him for the exercise of ordinary care, which would constitute contributory negligence upon his part. O'Hagan v. Dillon, 10 Jones & S. 458.

And the fact that a person injured from a defective sidewalk was just returning from a saloon where he got his dinner bucket filled with ale for his sick wife, and himself drank one glass of beer with a fellow workman who had drank several, does not constitute contributory negligence which will bar a recovery for the injury. Aurora v. Hillman, 90 Ill. 61.

So, contributory negligence which will justify the court in taking the case from the jury is not established in an action for the killing of an employee of a railroad company by an engine in charge of another employee by evidence that the person killed had been drinking that night and was intoxicated, where the testimony upon this point was conflicting and there was evidence of the intoxication of the person in charge of the engine, and evidence tending to sustain the theory that the deceased was walking on the track at the time he was struck and could have been seen by the person in charge of the engine, rather than that he was lying upon it in an intoxicated condition. Northern P. R. Co. v. Craft, 29 U. S. App. 687, 69 Fed. Rep. 124, 16 C. C. A. 175.

And evidence that a person contracting for the transportation of supplies to his landing smelled whisky on the captain of the ship on the morning preceding an injury thereto, and that of two witnesses that on one occasion he was drunk on a visit to a plantation but not when on duty, is not sufficient to show that the disaster occurred with the knowledge of the owner within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4283, providing for the limitation of liability of the owner to the value of his interest in the vessel and her freight if the loss was occasioned or occurred without his privity or knowledge, where all the other witnesses spoke as to the captain's general sobriety, and the owner distinctly avers that he never knew him to be drunk, and that liquor was forbidden on his boats except possibly a small flask in bad weather. The Anna, 47 Fed. Rep. 525.

Nor is a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for personal injury against a railroad company based upon the defendant's negligence justified by evidence of a witness who lived near the railroad track, that the accident occurred about 10 o'clock at night, and that he was in his room in the second story of the house and heard the train passing, and heard the scream of a man and the wheels jumping on the rails, and that he got out within five minutes of the time of the accident and found the person run over seriously injured, and that he did not hear the ringing of any bell when the train went by, and that when he reached the body of the man he saw the locomotive headed south with one or two cars ahead of it and three or four cars behind it, where there was evidence from which it could be readily inferred that the deceased was intoxicated and brought the injury and subsequent death upon himself. Church v. Northern P. R. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 529.

So, evidence in an action for an injury to a child caused by driving over it with a carriage, that the driver was intoxicated and driving at a reckless speed, and that with proper care he might have avoided the accident, is sufficient to sustain a recovery in the absence of evidence of contributory negligence upon the part of the child or his parents. Daly v. Hinz, 113 Cal. 366.

VII. Employment of persons having habits of intoxication.

The question of the liability of a master for injuries caused to one servant by the incompetency of a fellow servant, including incompetency through use of liquor, is fully treated in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 25 L. R. A. 710, and note thereto. The question there considered, however, relates to injuries to fellow servants only, and the following cases will be found to bear generally upon the question of liability for the employment or retention of persons indulging in habitual intoxication.

Thus, the acts of a superintendent who exercised the executive duties of master in the employment and selection of servants are executive acts and those of the master, rendering the master liable for injury caused by the negligence of drunken servants employed by him. Brickner v. New York C. R. Co. 2 Lans. 506, Affirmed 49 N. Y. 672; Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

And the duty of a master to a servant to employ skillful and competent fellow servants is not performed so as to relieve him from liability by the selection of one or more general agents of approved skill and fitness, conferring upon them the power of selecting, and if the general agent selects servants incompetent by reason of intoxication or otherwise, from which incompetency damage to another results, the master is liable, and it is immaterial whether the incompetency of the fellow servant existed at the time of the hiring or has been since acquired, where he is continued in the service with notice or knowledge or the means of knowledge upon the part of the master, of the incompetency. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623.

So, when a railroad company employs a conductor, who, on account of his drunkenness, is unfit for the business, knowing his unfitness, it is chargeable with the consequences of his negligence, even to one employed in the same general service. Huntingdon & B. T. Road & Coal Co. v. Decker, 84 Pa. 419, 82 Pa. 119.

And a railroad company is responsible in damages for an injury to a person employed by it to repair its cars, caused by the failure properly to adjust a switch by a flagman employed by the company who was usually intrusted with the management of the switch and who was an habitual drunkard, to the knowledge of the company or which by the use of due care would have been known, though due care was used in the original selection of the flagman, and a local agent was employed with authority to hire and superintend such servants, and by the rules of the company it was the duty of another person to manage the switch. Gil- veracity was open to inquiry, but the attack upon his credibility, which would raise a collateral issue, was not open to the defense. In Williams v. Edmunds, 75 Mich. 92, it was held that it was proper to show whether the servant who was alleged to have committed the injury was or was not sober at the time the injury was committed, it being a part of man v. Eastern R. Co. 13 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210.

And a railroad company employing a freight conductor which is advised through its managing agents of the fact that the conductor was an intemperate and improper person, or which by the exercise of proper care and caution could have ascertained the fact of his intemperate habits, which fails to discharge him, is guilty of negligence in retaining him. Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 87.

So, it is negligence for a large manufacturing institution to place men who are accustomed to the habitual use to excess of intoxicating liquor in charge of business requiring the control and directions of persons operating dangerous machinery which will render it liable for any injury happening to an employee under the charge of an intoxicated foreman arising from such cause, where the company had knowledge of his intemperate habits. Kean v. Detroit Copper & B. Rolling Mills, 68 Mich. 284.

And the employer of a skilled agent having authority to employ men for a particular department of service, who hired a foreman who was competent at the time but subsequently became incompetent from subsequently acquired habits of intoxication, which was known to the agent, which foreman while intoxicated directed unskilled and incompetent workmen to erect a scaffold upon which another was directed to work, which was so defectively built that it fell, injuring such workman, is chargeable with the negligence of the agent in retaining a drunken superintendent in the employment after he had knowledge of his incompetency. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

And where a drunken superintendent employed by a master chargeable with knowledge of his intemperate habits allows dangerous machinery to be operated by an intoxicated workman, whom he orders to do an act which must necessarily cause danger to another workman who is thereby injured, a breach of duty is established toward the latter, both at common law and under the employer's liability act, which will support an action either at common law or under such act. McPhee v. Scully, 163 Mass. 216.

And exemplary damages may be given in a case of gross negligence upon the part of a stage proprietor in the employment of a drunken driver where a passenger has been injured in consequence thereof. Frink v. Coe, 4 G. Greene, 555, 61 Am. Dec. 141.

So, the knowledge of the superintendent of a railroad, entrusted with the management of the road and the power of employing and discharging, of the drunken character of a conductor employed by him, is notice to the company. Huntingdon & B. T. Road & Coal Co. v. Decker, 84 Pa. 419, 82 Pa. 119.

Power to suspend an employee for drunkenness or incompetency carries with it authority to receive notice of such incompetency. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. Rep. 634, 19 C. C. A. 623.

And where by the use of due diligence to inform themselves of the competency of their employees the officers and managers of a railroad company ought to be informed of the incompetency of an engineer who had acquired habits of intoxication they are chargeable with the consequences of his negligent acts caused by drinking. Hilts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437.

40 L. R. A.

And where an accident occurred through the negligence of a servant of a railroad company who was intoxicated, and it appears that he was in the habit of drinking to excess, and such habit had extended for a period of nine months while in the employment of the company, and no actual knowledge or notice ever reached any superior officer, the jury would be justified in concluding that the company was negligent in failing to learn of such habit and retaining the employee in their employment. Hilts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437.

And proof of drunkenness on the part of a servant, so habitual as to be generally known in the community, is sufficient to raise a presumption of knowledge thereof on the part of his master, which will render him responsible for injuries thereby caused. Sawyer v. Sauer, 10 Kan. 466.

And habits of intemperance on the part of a railroad conductor, which were so noticed among the men and so long continued that they must have been known to the division superintendent and to the railroad company which retained him in its employ, are sufficient to render it liable for injury resulting therefrom. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 63 Ill. 208. See also supra, VI., a.

So, evidence that the foreman of a roundhouse, whose duty it was to look after the engines of a railroad company and the men and make reports to his superior, had heard that an engineer was drinking too much, is sufficient to warrant the jury, in an action against the company for an injury to a brakeman alleged to have been caused by the incompetency of the engineer, in concluding that the railroad company knew or ought to have been aware of the engineer's intemperate habits. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 106 Mo. 485.

And knowledge on the part of a general agent authorized to hire and discharge servants, of the incompetency of a servant from subsequently acquired habits of intoxication, may be proved by declarations of the agent that if such servant did not do better he would have to discharge him. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

And declarations of the superintendent of a railroad company having power to hire and discharge conductors, to the effect that he had several times discharged a conductor for getting drunk and disobeying orders, are admissible in evidence in an action for an injury caused by the conductor's negligence for the purpose of showing negligence on the part of the company in retaining him in its employ. Huntingdon & B. T. Mountain R. & Coal Co. v. Decker, 82 Pa. 119.

And evidence of declarations upon the part of a superintendent in an action for an injury caused by the negligence of an employee who was competent when hired but had become incompetent by habits of intoxication, that he must quit drinking, and that he had told him that he had heard that he had been off on a spree, which the employee did not deny and for which the superintendent reprimanded him, is admissible, not as evidence of the fact of the habit of drinking, but to prove notice to the superintendent. Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579.

So, evidence of the accustomed disobedience of orders on the part of a railroad conductor, and of his habitual drunkenness, is admissible in an action against the company for an injury caused by the conductor's negligence upon proof that the facts were known to the superintendent, who had the entire control and management of the road, the res geste, but that it was not proper to show his intoxication at other times, as it was raising a collateral issue. In Fohey v. Crotty, 63 Mich. 383, it was held that in a civil action the reputation of the plaintiff was not in issue. See also Pokriefka v. Mackurat, 91 Mich. 399; Klein v. Bryer, 81 Mich. 234; Cully v. Walkeen, 80 Mich. 443.

It is apparent, therefore, that the court was in error in permitting the testimony showing the reputation of plaintiff as a drinking man prior to the time of the injury, as well as in permitting the defendant to show by witnesses called by it the character of the hotel which he kept. As we have said, these were matters proper for cross examination, as bearing upon the plaintiff's character and credibility as a witness, but they were not open to other proofs, as such issues are collateral and entirely foreign to the subjects of inquiry in the suit.

The court charged the jury: "If you find that the time he was upon this place he was intoxicated, then he could not recover in this case, because in the case of an intoxicated man the company was not expected and the law would not require of this company that it should guard an intoxicated man against injury, standing in the place he was standing." This charge was erroneous. It was asserted by the plaintiff that he was pushed off or thrown off by defendant's conductor, and the fact that he was intoxicated would not give the conductor the right to push him off. The question of his intoxication was a matter to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining whether or not the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care in standing upon the running board while he was in that intoxicated condition; but his condition would be no excuse to the company if its conductor negligently and wrongfully pushed him off. In 2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1174, it is said: "Intoxication on the part of the plaintiff at the time of the accident does not constitute negligence in law, warranting a nonsuit or a peremptory instruction for the defendant, but is a circumstance to go to the jury on the question of contributory negligence." This seems to be the general rule. Stuart v. Machias Port, 48 Me. 477; Alger v. Lovell, 3 Allen, 402. Defendant's conductor testified that the plaintiff was intoxicated while standing on the running board. It was therefore his duty, and he was required, to exercise care in passing him upon that running board. 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 79, note 5, and cases there cited.

Some question is raised in reference to the charge of the court as to the preponderance of evidence; but, upon an examination of the whole charge, we are satisfied that that question was fairly submitted to the jury, or, at including the right to employ and discharge conductors. Huntingdon & B. T. Mountain R. & Coal Co. v. Decker, 82 Pa. 119.

And evidence in an action by an employee against a railroad company for personal injuries arising from the negligence of a switchman, tending to show that the defendant knowingly or in ignorance, caused by its own negligence, employed an habitual drunkard as a switchman, thereby occasioning the accident, is competent, the question of its force being one for the jury. Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 10 Allen, 233, 87 Am. Dec. 635.

And evidence in an action against a railroad company for damages for injuries resulting from negligence of an employee, after proof of negligence, that the employee was intoxicated at the time and was a man of intemperate habits, which was known to the agent of the company having power to employ and discharge such employees, is proper with the view of claiming exemplary damages upon the ground of gross negligence. Cleg-horn v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375.

So, evidence in an action for damages to an employee of a railroad company alleged to have been caused by the intoxication of a coemployee, as to his having been seen in the yard in an intoxicated condition on the day of the accident and at other times, is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that there was no allegation in the complaint with reference to the condition or habits of such employees, but only as to their skill and experience. Lyons v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 39 Hun, 336.

In Warner v. New York C. R. Co. 44 N. Y. 465, however, it was held that evidence in an action for damages for an injury from a collision with a railway train that the flagman employed by the railway company had been intoxicated on several occasions previous to the happening of the injury, and that his intemperate habits were known to the officers of the company, is inadmissible, as his previous habits had nothing to do with the case.

And an employee cannot recover of his employer for a personal injury upon the ground of 40 L. R. A.

the wrongful employment and retention of another employee addicted to the intemperate use of intoxicating liquor by whose act the injury was caused, in the absence of proof that such employee was intoxicated at the time of the accident, or was rendered incompetent or unfit for his position by such habits of intoxication. Harrington v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 19 N. Y. 8, 8 R. 20.

Nor can a railroad company be held liable for negligence in retaining an employee having habits of intoxication, where it exercised due care and diligence in ascertaining as to his competency, but failed to learn as to such habits. Hilts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437.

And evidence that a flagman was careful, attentive, and temperate is admissible in an action for a personal injury alleged to have been caused by his negligence, in which it is attempted to be proved that he was a careless and intemperate person, and the fact may be proved by witnesses who had seen his conduct and could testify to the facts which they had observed, though they are not experts. Gahagan v. Boston & L. R. Co. 1 Allen, 189, 79 Am. Dec. 724.

So, the mere employment or retention by a railroad company of a conductor of intemperate habits does not render it responsible for an accident happening from his acts; it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in an action therefor to show by a preponderance of testimony that the accident was caused in whole or in part by the negligence of such incompetent and unfit conductor. Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 20 Fed. Rep. 87.

And a ship master cannot be held chargeable with negligence rather than a mere error of judgment upon evidence that not long before the accident the pilot twice requested the master to take charge of the helm until his return and steer for a certain light ahead, and the master being under apprehension because the ship was run too close to shore each time put the ship's head farther out, and the pilot on his first return brought the ship back again, and the ship struck while being brought back upon his second return, though it might be assumed that the master had by this time least, that the plaintiff's rights were not prejudiced by the charge.

For the reasons stated the judgment will be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

A petition for rehearing having been granted, the following opinion was handed down on February 16, 1898:

Per Curiam:

This cause was in this court at the January term, 1897, and an opinion filed March 10 following, reported in 70 N. W. R. 315 (3 Det. L. N. 842). On the trial in the court below the defendant had judgment, which was reversed and a new trial granted. The defendant afterward moved for rehearing which was granted.

While we are satisfied that the case was properly reversed and a new trial granted, we think there are some matters in the former opinion which should be corrected. It was there held that certain evidence should not have been admitted showing that the plaintiff for two or three years prior to that time was in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and also showing the character of the house or hotel perceived that the pilot was under the influence of liquor, and feared to trust him. Earnmoor S. S. Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 374.

A railroad company is presumed to have discharged its duty in exercising due care and diligence in seeing that its employees are competent and sober, and the burden of proof rests with those who assert negligence in the discharge of such duty. Hilts v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 437.

So, where proper persons are employed, who afterwards become incompetent or unfit for the duties of the employment from habits of intoxication subsequently acquired, and this is brought to the knowledge or notice of the employer or his or its managing officers who have power to act in the premises, the failure or neglect promptly to discharge such employees will render the principal liable for any injury caused thereby. Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579.

And where the attention of the officers of a railroad company is called to the fact that a yard master had at times used beer if not stronger drinks, in view of the great danger likely to result from the use by one in his position of intoxicating liquor, it becomes their duty to make careful and frequent investigation upon the subject, the weight of the evidence of their knowledge thereof being for the consideration of the jury. Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 48 Mich. 176.

But while in employing subordinates a principal must exercise great care, and is required to institute affirmative inquiries to ascertain their character and qualifications, negligence in this respect creating a liability for injuries thereby caused, after suitable persons have been employed there is not the same reason for exacting such a high degree of diligence, and good character and proper qualifications once possessed will be presumed to continue, and the employer may rely upon the presumption until he has knowledge or notice of the habits of intoxication or other bad habits of the employees, or at least such knowledge as would put a reasonable man upon inquiry, and without such knowledge or notice the employer is not liable to another servant for injuries sustained from his negligent acts. Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579.

40 L. R. A.

he kept. From a further examination of the case we are convinced that the court below was not in error in admitting it. The plaintiff claimed damages on account of:

1. The direct physical injury to himself, its natural incidents, pain, suffering, etc.

2. Loss of wages which he would probably have received during the period which intervened between the date of the accident and the date of the verdict.

3. Loss of probable future earnings.

It appears that when the plaintiff was injured he was not employed at any work, and the testimony tends to show that his habits were very dissolute; that he kept a house of doubtful character, and had before that been discharged from his employment at other places. Counsel contends that "It is not in the usual course of things that a man of dissolute habits, of more or less evil association, of bad record, and of ill repute should obtain employment as readily or to the same extent as if he were sober, industrious, of good fame and record; and that defendant had the right to lay before the jury by appropriate testimony any facts concerning the plaintiff's habits, character, or repute which might throw light on the probability of his securing employment, and the character and continuity of the same."

And where a servant knows of the habits of intoxication of another servant as fully as the master, and they are the producing cause of the injury to him, and he continues in the employment of the master without promises of correction or change of his own accord, remaining exposed to the effects thereof when they shall come, it may constitute contributory negligence on his part which will bar his right to a recovery. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

But an instruction in an action against a railroad company for an injury to a brakeman alleged to have been caused by the habitual drunkenness and incompetency of the engineer, that if the plaintiff had equal means of knowledge with the defendant in ascertaining the alleged incompetency of the engineer he could not recover, should not be given where the plaintiff had been in the defendant's employ but a short time and had made but one trip with such engineer, and was but slightly acquainted with him, while the engineer had been in the employ of the defendant for five or six years. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 485.

And evidence in an action for an injury to a brakeman alleged to have been caused by intemperate habits of the engineer, that the brakeman knew nothing about the engineer's habits, and that he went into the employ of the company about the middle of October and the injury occurred early in December of the same year, and that he had previously made but one trip with such engineer and was but slightly acquainted with him and did not see him very often, is sufficient to support a finding that he had no knowledge of such engineer's intemperate habits. Williams v. Missouri P. R. Co. 109 Mo. 485.

It is a question of fact for the jury in an action for a personal injury caused by the negligence of a drunken coemployee whom the master had promised to discharge upon receiving notice of his incompetency, whether the remaining in the master's employ on the part of the person injured, with knowledge of the incompetency of the other, was contributory negligence upon his part. Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

F. H. B.

We think the doctrine cannot be carried to the extent claimed by counsel. The defendant undoubtedly had the right to lay before the jury any facts concerning the plaintiff's habits or conduct which might throw light on the probability of his securing employment and the character and continuity of the same; but we know of no rule which would permit the defendant to go into proof of the plaintiff's character or repute. In this view of the case we think the court below was not in error in admitting the testimony, or in the charge to the jury upon that question.

Metropolitan Street R. Co. v. Kennedy, 51 U. S. App. 503, 82 Fed. Rep. 158.

A new trial being had, we have made this correction of the former opinion.

Anna A. HARLEY, Piff. in Err.,

Desmus PROCUNIER.

(.....Mich.....)

A married man may, without his wife's consent, select the cows which he will claim as exempt in giving a chattel mortgage on other cows, under 2 How. Ann. Stat. § 7686, providing that two cows shall be exempt to each householder from any final process, and that any chattel mortgage created on any part of such exempt property shall be void unless the mortgage is signed by the wife of the mortgagor.

(November 17, 1897.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Alcona County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a replevin suit to recover possession of certain cows which had been taken by defendant under a chattel mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Osmond H. Smith, for plaintiff in error:

The consent must be as prescribed by the statute in writing, or it is of no force or effect. The legislature in enacting § 7686 saw fit to make mortgages, bills of sale, and other liens upon certain articles of exempt property void without the wife's signature.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cullaton, 90 Mich. 642; Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 122.

The other three cows were virtually mortgaged, which of itself ought to be enough, as a matter of law, to settle this whole question of exemption. The other three cows were liable to be taken away any day on the mortgages. Where there are two cows exempt the exemption ought to be applied to the two unencumbered.

Herman, Executions, p. 114; Greenleaf v. Sanborn, 44 N. H. 16; Tryon v. Mansir, 2 Allen, 219; Hill v. Loomis, 6 N. H. 263.

It is not a mere partial interest or right of redemption only in the animal which is intended by the statute to be secured to the debtor and his family.

NOTE.—This case decides what seems to be a new question as to the person who may select cows or other property claimed to be exempt for the use of a family.

40 L. R. A.

Tryon v. Mansir, 2 Allen, 219; Greenleaf v. Sanborn, 44 N. H. 16.

The manifest intent of the legislature was not to regard the family as simply a voluntary association of two persons, legally independent of each other, but of a unification of interests.

Snyder v. People, 26 Mich. 109, 12 Am. Rep. 302.

The exemption is intended for the benefit of the family, and the remedy is given to the wife that the family may be protected in the benefit, even when the husband is indifferent or hostile.

Ingersoll v. Gage, 47 Mich. 123; Shepard v. Cross, 33 Mich. 98.

Mr. M. J. Connine, for defendant in error:

This law was not created so as to exempt all the cows a man has, where more than two, but only two.

2 How. Ann. Stat. § 7687.

Nor was it intended that mortgages on a husband's cattle, as a class or quantity, should be void unless signed by the wife; but only mortgages on the two exempt cows.

The property is the husband's; the right of exemption from sale is his; the right of selection after levy is also his, under the statute; neither the right of exemption nor the privilege of selection are ever in the wife.

Charpentier v. Bresnahan, 62 Mich. 360.

The restriction upon the right to encumber must have expressly and necessarily applied to these two cows. This restriction is more of a limitation in her hands than an exemption; it is in derogation of his common-law right to encumber, and should be strictly construed.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Cullaton, 90 Mich. 639.

An exemption under this statute may be waived by conduct of the one entitled to it.

Fuller v. Byrne, 102 Mich. 461; Dann v. Gudney, 13 Mich. 239, 87 Am. Dec. 755; Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

Long, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff is a married woman having a family of children. September 10, 1894, her husband gave a chattel mortgage in the sum of $30 upon two cows, without the plaintiff's signature, and, as she claims, without her consent. At that time the husband owned five cows. Proceedings were being taken to foreclose this mortgage, when the plaintiff brought replevin, and took the cows into possession. The replevin cause was tried in justice court, and removed to the circuit, where, upon a trial before a jury, the defendant had verdict and judgment. The claim of the plaintiff on the trial was that these two cows were exempt, and that, therefore, the mortgage was void, under the provisions of § 7686, 2 How. Ann. Stat. That section provides that "the following property shall be exempt from levy and sale under any execution or upon any final process of a court: . . . To each householder, . . . two cows," etc. Subdivision 9 of that section provides: "And any chattel mortgage, bill of sale, or other lien created on any part of property above described, . . . shall be void unless such mortgage, bill of sale, or lien be signed by the wife of the party making such mortgage or lien," etc. It appears upon the trial that this mortgage was given for a bona fide indebtedness of the husband; and the defendant introduced evidence tending to show that these cows had been mortgaged prior to that to one Wood. The defendant had an agreement with the husband of plaintiff that, if Mr. Wood would release his mortgage, he would give a mortgage to the defendant upon them. The defendant made the arrangement with Mr. Wood for the release, and went to plaintiff's house. Her husband was not there; but the plaintiff was told by defendant that he had arranged for the discharge of the Wood mortgage, and that her husband promised to give him a mortgage on the same cows. The plaintiff then told him that anything her husband did about the matter was all right. The husband came home shortly after that, and defendant took a description of the two cows in plaintiff's presence. She knew which two her husband was to mortgage. At that time she made no claim that these two cows were exempt. The five cows were there at that time, and all were owned by the husband. The next morning the mortgage was executed. Plaintiff made no objection to the giving of the mortgage, and made no claim then that these two cows were exempt. The plaintiff was called as a witness, and denied that she ever had any such talk with defendant, or that she was present when the description of the cows was taken by him to put into the chattel mortgage. The court submitted the question to the jury to find whether or not, under these circumstances, these two cows were exempt. The verdict was in favor of defendant for the amount of his lien under the mortgage.

Some questions are raised upon the ruling of the court in the admission and rejection of evidence upon the trial. We find no error in that. It is claimed by plaintiff that under these circumstances the court should have directed the verdict in her favor. We think not. The court charged the jury as to the exemption as follows: "Mr. Harley was a householder, and had a family, and was entitled to have two cows the law could not reach. It seems from the evidence he had five cows. Now, three of these cows could not be exempt, only two; and he is the one to determine which ones are to be exempt. The right of exemption rests with the man that owns the cows, the householder. If this was a levy of execution, then under the law it would be the duty of Mr. Harley to step forward and claim which ones of five cows he should claim as exempt, and it would be the duty of the officers to hand out the cows that he claimed, and they might leave with the rest. This is not a levy under an execution, but a chattel mortgage, and he [Mr. Harley] is the man that should determine which he proposes are exempt. . . . He should do it when he gives the chattel mortgage." It is contended by counsel for plaintiff that the court was in error in this part of the charge, that the wife had the right to determine which two of the five cows should be exempt; and that a chattel mortgage without the wife's signature is absolutely void, unless it appears that there are two remaining cows not encumbered, which are satisfactory to the wife,—that is, that the wife may make the selection of exempt property, and that, the plaintiff here not having determined which two of the five should be exempt, the mortgage is void. This statute can have no such construction. The property belonged to the husband. He could not mortgage all the cows he owned without his wife's signature to the mortgage, because, under this statute, two would be exempt; but the claim of exemption must necessarily rest with the husband. As stated by the court below, "If this was a levy of execution, it would be the duty of Mr. Harley to claim the exemption." The husband would also have the right to determine which two of the five cows he would leave out of the chattel mortgage. The law gives the wife a remedy only when the husband fails to claim the exemption. The giving of the mortgage on the two cows was a selection of those which were not exempt. But the court went further than this in his charge. The testimony showed that these two cows had been mortgaged before; and also the defendant's testimony showed that the wife knew just which cows her husband was giving the mortgage upon; that she made no objection, but, on the other hand told the defendant that the giving of the mortgage by her husband was all right. The court thereupon left the question of the exemption to the jury as one of fact. Certainly, the rights of the plaintiff were fully protected under this charge; and, if either party had a right to complain of the charge, it was not the plaintiff.

The judgment must be affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

John E. HAGGERTY et al., Appts.,
v.

ST. LOUIS ICE MANUFACTURING &
STORAGE COMPANY, Respt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Regulations for the protection and

NOTE.—As to the validity of a statute making it criminal to have the possession of certain property, see State v. Lewis (Ind.) 20 L. R. A. 52, and note. See also Mon Luck v. Sears (Or.) 32 L. R. A. 738. 40 L. R. A.

preservation of game are within the constitutional power of the legislature.

2. The intention of a person who commits an act which is made a misdemeanor by statute constitutes no element of the offense.

3. A contract for the "cold-storage" of game during the "close season," to be withdrawn during the open season when the game could be lawfully disposed of, is void under Rev Stat. 1890, § 3002, making it a misdemeanor to have such game in possession during the close season.

(March 15, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the St. Louis Circuit Court in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for breach of contract to preserve game in cold storage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. H. Kern for appellants.

Mr. Henry E. Mills, for respondent:

The ownership of game is in the sovereign, and there can only be a limited or qualified ownership in the subject. The people of the states being the sovereign have a common ownership and control over game to which the casual custody of an individual citizen is subject.

Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 798; State v. Farrell, 23 Mo. App. 176.

Fish in the tidewaters of the several states are "common property" of the people of the states and subject to control and regulation by the several state legislatures.

McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 35 L. ed. 159.

There is a very thorough discussion of the question involved in this case in—

Ex parte Maier, 108 Cal. 476.

No act which is forbidden by law, whether malum in se or malum prohibitum, can constitute a valid consideration for a contract.

Friend v. Porter, 50 Mo. App. 89; Sprague v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 360.

The option dealer who renders services and pays losses incurred on behalf of his principal, and by the direction of his principal, cannot recover.

Connor v. Black, 119 Mo. 142.

If the game had been stored and delivered, such service would not have been the basis of an action for the hire.

Garrett v. Kansas City Coal Min. Co. 118 Mo. 839; Bick v. Seal, 45 Mo. App. 475.

Sherwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The business of plaintiffs, resident in St. Louis, was that of dealing in game, while the defendant corporation was engaged in that city in the business of "cold storage," which embraced the storing and preservation of produce and game of all kinds. Plaintiffs, during what is known as the "open season," were accustomed to buy and sell the different kinds of game, and, when what is known as the "close season" was about to arrive, were in the habit of storing such game as remained on their hands until such time as the "open season" again returned, when they would resume their erstwhile prohibited business. So it was that in the year 1892, between the 15th of November and the 26th of December, the defendant corporation made plaintiffs an offer to carefully store and preserve the same in a cold, frozen condition for such time as plaintiffs might store the same with it, and to restore the same to plaintiffs in as good condition as when received from plaintiffs. This offer was based upon the consideration of the payment of so much per pound for such storage. Plaintiffs desiring that such game be so kept and preserved, and intending that such game should be stored with defendant corporation during the "close season," and withdrawing it when the "open season" should return, accepted the offer aforesaid, and on the 18th of November, 1892, stored with defendant a large quantity of game, to be withdrawn from defendant's custody when and at such times as the law would permit plaintiffs to dispose of the same. At the time of its being thus stored the game was in good condition. On November 18, 1893, defendant presented to plaintiffs a bill for such storage, amounting, etc., which plaintiffs paid. Thereupon plaintiffs proceeded to remove such game from the cold-storage rooms of defendant, and in doing so discovered that defendant had failed to preserve such game in a cold and frozen condition, whereby the same became rotten and worthless, and was not in good condition, as when delivered to defendant. For this breach of contract damages in the sum of $7,000 were demanded, and, being refused, this suit was brought. This is the substance of the first count in the petition; the second count is like unto it. Defendant demurred to the first count on these grounds: "Now comes defendant, and demurs to the first count of plaintiffs' second amended petition, for the reason that it does not state a cause of action against defendant, and because it does show affirmatively that plaintiffs endeavored to make with defendant a contract for the storage of game during the period of the year when the possession of such game was prohibited by law, and that the alleged contract was unlawful, and in violation of a penal statute of the state of Missouri, and nonenforceable, and because it appears that, at plaintiff's request, said game was carried on plaintiffs' account during the season of 1893, prohibited by law." The trial court adjudged the petition insufficient in law, and, plaintiffs declining to plead further, final judgment was rendered; hence this appeal.

Section 3901, Rev. Stat. 1889, prohibits the killing of certain game at certain times of the year. Section 3902, Rev. Stat. 1889, makes it a misdemeanor for any person to "purchase, have in his possession, or sell any of the game birds or animals specified in the next preceding section, or any fresh pieces or parts of said animals, during the season when the catching and killing of same is prohibited, or shall purchase, have in possession, or sell any of the game birds or animals caught or killed contrary to the provisions of said sections." As shown by the very interesting and exhaustive opinion of Mr. Justice White in Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 798: "From the earliest traditions the right to reduce animals ferre nature to possession has been subject to the control of the lawgiving power." The exercise of this power has been definitely traced back, even as far as the time of Solon, who forbade the Athenians to kill game; and in France, as early as the Salic law, the right to reduce a part of the common property in game into possession, and consequent ownership, was regulated by law. Such regulations prevailed in every country in continental Europe and in England. Treating of this subject, Blackstone says: "There still remains another species of prerogative property, founded upon a very different principle from any that have been mentioned before; the property of such animals feræ naturæ, as are known by the denomination of 'game,' with the right of pursuing, taking, and destroying them; which is vested in the King alone, and from him derived to each of his subjects as have received the grants of a chase, a park, a free warren, or free fishery.

In the first place, then, we have already shown, and indeed it cannot be denied, that by the law of nature every man, from the prince to the peasant, has an equal right of pursuing, and taking to his own use, all such creatures as are feræ naturæ, and therefore the property of nobody, but liable to be seized by the first occupant. And so it was held by the Imperial law, even so late as Justinian's time.

But it follows from the very end and constitution of society, that this natural right, as well as many others belonging to man as an individual, may be restrained by positive laws enacted for reasons of state, or for the supposed benefit of the community." 2 Bl. Com. 410. This prerogative of the King, as an attribute of government, recognized and enforced by the common law of England by appropriate, and oftentimes by severe, penalties and forfeitures, was vested in the colonial governments of this country, and when these governments threw off the yoke of the mother country that right of sovereignty passed to and was vested in the respective states. This sovereign attribute and power, as existed in the states of this Union, has often been exercised by them by passage of laws in the most of these states for the protection and preservation of game, and it seems never to have been called in question. Numerous adjudications attest this fact. In such cases the common ownership of game, which otherwise would remain in the body of the people, is lodged in the state, to be exercised, like all other governmental powers in the state in its sovereign capacity, in trust for the benefit of the people, and subject, of course, to such regulations and restrictions as the sovereign power may see fit to impose. Such regulations appropriately fall within the domain of the police power of the state. In Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, it is said: "The wild game within a state belongs to the people in their collective sovereign capacity. It is not the subject of private ownership, except in so far as the people may elect to make it so; and they may, if they see fit, absolutely prohibit the taking of it, or any traffic or commerce in it, if deemed necessary for the protection or preservation or the public good." Expressing the same view, it is said by the supreme court of Minnesota: "We take it to be the correct doctrine in this country that the ownership of wild animals, so far as they are capable of ownership, is in the state, not as proprietor, but in its sovereign capacity, as the representative, and for the benefit, of all its people in common." State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393. In Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 320, in passing upon the subject now under consideration, it is said: "Stated in other language, to hunt and kill game is a boon or privilege, granted, either expressly or impliedly, by the sovereign authority,—not a right inhering in each individual; and, consequently, nothing is taken away from the individual when he is denied the privilege, at stated seasons, of hunting and killing game. It is, perhaps, accurate to say that the ownership of the sovereign authority is in trust for all the people of the state, and hence, by implication, it is the duty of the legislature to enact such laws as will best preserve the subject of the trust, and secure its beneficial use, in the future, to the people of the state. But in any view, the question of individual enjoyment is one of public policy, and not of private right." This right of the states to provide and enforce regulations respecting the protection and preservation of game has received frequent recognition at the hands of the Supreme Court of the United States. Thus, in McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 395, 24 L. ed. 248, the power of the state of Virginia to prohibit citizens of other states from planting oysters within the tide waters of that state was upheld by this court. In Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 35 L. ed. 159, the authority of the state of Massachusetts to control and regulate the catching of fish within the bays of that state was also maintained. See also Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, and State v. Farrell, 23 Mo. App. 176, and cases cited; State v. Lewis, 134 Ind. 250, 20 L. R. A. 52. A statute of New York prohibited the killing or having in possession game birds of the kind specified, after the 1st of March (Laws 1871, pp. 1671, 1677, chap. 721, §§ 7, 8, 33), and touching this statute the court of appeals of that state observed: "It is admitted in this case that the defendant had possession of the game after the 1st of March, and the fact alleged, that it was either killed within the lawful period or brought from another state where the killing was lawful, constitutes no defense. The penalty is denounced against the selling or possession after that time, irrespective of the time or place of killing. The additional fact alleged, that the defendant had invented a process of keeping game from one lawful period to another, is not provided for in the act, and is immaterial." And the validity of the statute was upheld. Phelps v. Racey, 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140. That case is directly in point, and fully sustains the action of the trial court in adjudging the petition insufficient. Plaintiffs in their petition, when speaking of their purpose in preserving such game, say, in substance, that they intended that said game should be stored with defendant corporation during the "close season," and withdraw upon return of the "open season." The offense prohibited by § 3902 is a misdemeanor, and in such case, the intention of the misdemeanor cuts no figure in the case, since in that class of crimes intention constitutes no element of the offense. It is the act done, and that alone, which violates the law, and the motive which prompts the violation is altogether dehors the crime committed. This point is illustrated by various adjudications respecting the sale of liquors to minors and the marriage of minors, supposing the parties in each case to be of age, etc. 1 Whart. Crim. L. 9th ed. pp. 35, 113, 115, §§ 23a, 88, and cases cited; Hovell v. Stewart, 54 Mo. loc. cit. 404. In this case the statute makes no exceptions to the rigid rule which it prescribes. The acts therein mentioned are unconditionally and absolutely forbidden, and this is so because the legislature doubtless thought that the best way of accomplishing the result they desired and the only means of attaining it. They therefore resorted to arbitrary prohibition. Had scienter been required by the statute, its very object would have been defeated, as scienter would be in the majority of instances impossible of proof. 1 Whart. Crim. L. 9th ed. p. 117, § 88. It was to prevent the easy evasions of the statute that the law was passed in its present shape; and on this ground it is analogous to statutes prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine. (State v. Bockstruck, 186 Mo. 335), and it is the only ground upon which such enactments can be upheld. The end being granted, to wit, the power of the legislature to enact a law for the protection and preservation of game, the means to effectuate that end, to wit, the authority to prevent the law thus passed from being evaded, by prohibiting and making penal the possession of game after a certain period, follows as an indubitable corollary. Ex parte Marmaduke, 91 Mo. loc. cit. 262, 60 Am. Rep. 250, and cases cited. Recurring to the petition, it shows on its face that plaintiffs contracted with defendant corporation for the commission of a misdemeanor. It is true the offense is but malum prohibitum, but the consequences are the same as if the act were malum in se, since in principle there is nothing which should cause the result to differ in the former case from the latter. The law will not stultify itself by promoting on the one hand what it prohibits on the other, and will for this reason leave the parties to this suit where it finds them, unsanctioned by its favor, and unaided by its process. Kitchen v. Greenbaum, 61 Mo. 110.

Therefore the doctrine announced in Sprague v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 360, overruling the former decision in same case in which was a dissent, applies here, and hence judgment affirmed.

All concur.

(Division 1.)

Prudence C. OWINGS et al., Appts.,
v.

James McKENZIE et al.

(133 Mo. 323.)

1. Extension for a valuable consideration without consent of the sureties of the first of two promissory notes secured by deed of trust will not release the liability of the sureties upon the other note which is not then due by its terms, although the deed of trust provided that upon default in payment of the first note at maturity the other should immediately become due and payable.

NOTE.—As to priority of notes secured by mortgage, see note to Horn v. Bennett (Ind.) 24 L. R. A. 800; also Nashville Trust Co. v. Smythe (Tenn.) 27 L. R. A. 663.
40 L. R. A.

2. Objection to the application of the proceeds of a sale under a deed of trust securing two notes in satisfaction of the first cannot be made by mesne conveyancers who by purchase and sale of the property acquire the position of sureties on the note because their liability had been released by an extension of the time of payment without their consent.

3. The mere nonpayment of the first of two notes secured by deed of trust without any action on the part of holders will not render the other note due, although the deed of trust provided that upon default in payment of the first note both should become immediately due and payable.

4. Each of several notes secured by a deed of trust is to be considered as a separate and complete contract within itself uncontrolled in its terms by anything contained in the deed of trust.

(March 10, 1896.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enforce their alleged liability on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peak & Ball, W. M. Williams, and R. L. Yeager, for appellants:

The relation of principal and surety exists as between the maker of the notes and the grantees who assume and agree to pay. As to the holder of the notes, both maker and grantees are principal debtors and an extension does not release the original debtor.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mayer, 8 Mo. App. 18; Brown v. Kirk, 20 Mo. App. 524; Corbett v. Waterman, 11 Iowa, 86; Shepherd v. May, 115 U. S. 505, 29 L. ed. 456; Cuculli v. Hernandez, 103 U. S. 105, 26 L. ed. 322; Rey v. Simpson, 22 How. 341, 16 L. ed. 260; Waters v. Hubbard, 44 Conn. 344; Boardman v. Larabee, 51 Conn. 89; Crawford v. Edwards, 83 Mich. 354; James v. Day, 37 Iowa, 164; Marsh v. Pike, 1 Sandf. Ch. 210.

Whenever a debt is due, the debtor is bound to pay on demand. The note in suit was not "due" on default in the payment of the first note, because the debtor was only bound to pay the note due by its face. The maturity of both notes was only for the purpose of enforcing the deed of trust and disposing of the collateral.

Morgan v. Martien, 32 Mo. 438; Hurek v. Erskine, 45 Mo. 485; Whelan v. Reilly, 61 Mo. 565; Phillips v. Bailey, 82 Mo. 639; Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649.

In any case the default would not have the effect of making the other note due for any purpose except at the election of the holder. She did not, and was not bound to, declare it due.

Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649; 1 Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 742, and cases cited.

Each note is a separate and distinct cause of action, capable of separate ownership, whether secured or not; and the rule that all papers composing a part of one and the same transac-

For effect of mortgage on negotiability of note secured thereby, see note to Brooke v. Struthers (Mich.) 35 L. R. A. 536.

tion are to be regarded as one entire contract does not apply to the case of a promissory note secured by a deed of trust.

Hagerman v. Sutton, 91 Mo. 519; Mayes v. Robinson, 93 Mo. 114; Jennings v. Todd, 118 Mo. 296; Horn v. Bennett, 135 Ind. 165, 24 L. R. A. 804.

Messrs. Cook & Gossett and Warner, Dean, Gibson, & McLeod, for respondents:

The grantee in a deed to property encumbered by a mortgage or deed of trust, who, by the terms of the conveyance to him, assumes the payment of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage or deed of trust, becomes, as soon as the mortgagee knows of the arrangement, primarily liable to the mortgagee for the debt for which the mortgagor was already liable, and the relation of the grantor and grantee toward the mortgagee, as well as between themselves, is thenceforth that of principal and surety for the payment of the mortgage debt, and any agreement for the extension of the time of payment of the debt, made between the mortgagee and the grantee, or any alteration of the original contract, releases the grantor from liability from the debt.

Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 741; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1206; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Hanford, 143 U. S. 187, 86 L. ed. 118; Calvo v. Davies, 73 N. Y. 211, 29 Am. Rep. 130; Jester v. Sterling, 25 Hun, 344; Fish v. Hayward, 28 Hun, 456; Paine v. Jones, 76 N. Y. 274; Commercial Bank v. Wood, 56 Mo. App. 214; George v. Andrews, 60 Md. 26, 45 Am. Rep. 706; Union Store & Mach. Works v. Caswell, 48 Kan. 689, 16 L. R. A. 85.

Where, even, the land is conveyed subject to the mortgage, the grantee incurring no personal liability thereon, if the mortgagee, by a valid agreement with the grantee, extends the time of payment of the mortgage debt without the consent of the mortgagor, the mortgagor is discharged from liability to the mortgagee to an amount equal to the value of the land at the time of such extension.

Murray v. Marshall, 94 N. Y. 611; Spencer v. Spencer, 95 N. Y. 358.

It is immaterial whether the extension may or may not prejudice the surety. If made without his consent he is discharged.

Sloan v. Latimer, 41 S. C. 219.

The notes and deed of trust formed part of one and the same transaction, and must be construed together.

Pingrey, Mortg. § 1:84; Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 1179; Gregory v. Marks, 8 Biss. 44; Schoonmaker v. Taylor, 14 Wis. 314; Buchanan v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 96 Ind. 520.

The note here sued on came due for all purposes.

Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649; Detweiler v. Breckenkamp, 83 Mo. 45.

With respect to payment, the surety's rights are exactly those of the principal debtor. With respect to the rights he acquires by such payment to the creditors, they are exactly those, by subrogation, of the creditor. If the creditor has extended a debt and the surety pays it before due, he cannot sue the debtor until due, and an extension, for that reason, without his consent, releases him.

Benne v. Schnecko, 100 Mo. 250; Dozier v. Lewis, 27 Miss. 679; Brandt, Suretyship & 40 L. R. A.

Guaranty, p. 261; Allison v. Sutherland, 50 Mo. 274; Mayhew v. Boyd, 5 Md. 102, 59 Am. Dec. 101.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by plaintiff, the original payee in a note secured by deed of trust on land, for a personal judgment against the maker thereof, and his grantees, who purchased the property securing the note, agreeing, as a part of the consideration for such conveyance, to assume the payment of the notes in suit together with another note mentioned in the deed of trust. We give the following facts of the case (as same appear in appellant's statement), that the origin, history, and nature of the transaction between the contending parties may be fully understood: "Plaintiff, Mrs. Owings, in November, 1886, sold a tract of land to defendant McKeuzie; and, for a balance of the purchase money, Mackenzie gave her his two promissory notes for equal amounts, one maturing in two years and the other in three years after date, secured by a deed of trust on the property. Before the maturing of these notes, Mackenzie sold the property to his co-defendants, Tilhoff, Green, and Muelbach, and they, in turn, sold to Canine, both deeds being made subject to the prior deed of trust; and the respective grantees assumed and agreed to pay the notes as a part of the consideration of the conveyances. The deed of trust contained the usual provision that if default be made in the payment of either note, or any interest thereon, according to the terms thereof, then both of said notes should become immediately due and payable, and the trustee, at the request of the legal holder of said notes, might proceed to sell, etc. At the time the two-year note matured, Canine was the owner of the property, and shortly thereafter, by agreement between him and Mrs. Owings, this note was extended for three months, but there was no valuable consideration for this extension. After its expiration, the time of payment of the unpaid balance on this note was again extended three months, to May 27, 1889, in consideration of 1 per cent additional interest. After both notes had matured by their face, the trustee, at the request of plaintiff, was about to sell the property, when Canine, in order to stop the sale, agreed to pay, on account of costs and accumulated interest, the sum of $500, and at the time put up $100 of the amount. Plaintiff, after waiting for a week for the balance of said sum, again ordered a sale, which was made in May, 1891. All of the defendants were represented at the sale. The proceeds of the sale paid the costs, paid the two-year note in full, and paid a part of the three-year note. This suit was brought on the three-year note, to recover the unpaid balance thereof. Defendants' answers pleaded an extension, by agreement between plaintiff and Canine, of both notes, for a definite time, and for a valuable consideration, without defendants' knowledge or consent; also, that the property was much more valuable at the time the notes were given and the extension made on the first or two-years note than it was at the time the property was sold under the deed of trust. On this issue the trial court refused to hear defendants' evidence. The record does disclose, however, that the property was originally sold by Mackenzie to Green and Tilhoff for the sum of $14,000, and of this sum the two notes of $3,760 each were a part of the consideration, and that at the trustee's sale the property only brought $3,500. The evidence showed an extension, as stated, of the two-year note, but that no agreement was ever made relative to the extension of the note in suit."

One instruction for plaintiff was refused, to the effect "that, although the two-year note was so extended, yet this did not relieve the defendants from liability on the note in suit." And for the defendants Mackenzie, Tilhoff, and Muelbach, who alone filed answers, a corresponding instruction, stating the proposition in the affirmative, as follows, was given: "(2) The jury are instructed that if you believe from the evidence that the note sued on, and the deed of trust given to secure the same, and offered in evidence, with the other note therein described, were executed each as a part of and all constituting one and the same transaction, and that the plaintiff, Prudence C. Owings, knew of the conveyance of the land in the deed of trust described by defendant Mackenzie to defendants Tilhoff and Muelbach and William Green, and of said defendants and said Green to R. B. Canine, and of the assumption of payment of the indebtedness by said respective grantees in said deeds contained, and without their consent, for a valuable consideration, for the payment of additional interest, by agreement with Canine, extended the time for a certain or definite time for payment for either or both of said notes, then you will find for the defendants who did not consent to such extension." On the issues thus presented by the instructions, the jury returned a verdict for defendants, on which, in due time, judgment was rendered, and to reverse which this appeal is prosecuted.

Several very interesting and vexed questions in the adjudications of this court have been raised and discussed by the learned counsel in the able and elaborate briefs filed herein, such as: "What is the relation of the holder of the notes to the maker and the respective grantees, and what the effect of an extension without notice on the original maker and subsequent grantees?"—the plaintiff contending that, as to the holder of the notes, both maker and grantee, are principal debtors, and that, as such, an extension of the time granted to one by the holder of the notes will not operate to release the others; the defendants contending that in such cases, as between the parties, the purchaser, having assumed the payment of an existing mortgage, thereby becomes the principal debtor, and the mortgagor and maker of the note are securities for the debt merely, and that an extension of time of payment of the mortgage debt by an agreement between the holder of it and the purchaser, without the concurrence of the mortgagor, discharged him and all subsequent purchasers under him from all liability. Also, the question as to what extent notes and deeds of trust or mortgages given to secure them shall be construed as one instrument, and what the effect of a provision in a deed of trust securing a series of notes "that the failing to pay the first will mature all others of the series" will have upon the last of the series, as to questions of rescission, demand, and notice, as if matured by expiration of time as indicated on their face. Under the particular facts of this case, we think it can be disposed of without a full review of all the points raised by the learned counsel, and we will discuss only such questions as, in our judgment, are absolutely decisive of the question necessarily involved.

If the note in suit did not become due absolutely for all purposes on the failure of the payment of the first note at the end of two years, then the court erred in refusing plaintiff's fourth instruction, and in giving for defendants their second instruction, and this case must be reversed; or if the extension granted on the two-year note did not operate, as a matter of law, to release the maker and first grantee of liability on both notes, then error was made by the court in giving the same, and in refusing instruction numbered 4 for plaintiff. The plaintiff might have brought suit on the first note at its maturity, against any and all of the defendants, for a personal judgment. She might have begun her suit to foreclose the equity of redemption, or begun her suit for the possession of the premises on condition broken by the nonpayment of the two-year note,—all remedies concurrent and independent to which plaintiff could have resorted at that time for the enforcement of her right. She was not bound to request a sale of the mortgage property. She was not compelled to institute proceedings to foreclose her lien. She was not required to institute suit at once for a personal judgment to maintain all her rights and claims against the defendant, and all of them. The liability of each of the defendants on that note was absolutely unaffected and uncontrolled by the other note due in three years, or by the deed of trust securing each and both. That note was due, and the liability of defendants thereon resulted from the face provisions of the note itself fixing the time of its payment. If we now, for the sake of this case, treat defendants as sureties as to both notes, and the notes and deed of trust as one instrument, and the provisions of the deed of trust dominating the time for payment of the notes, defendants were still liable at the maturity of the first note on both notes named in the deed of trust, by reason of their contract of assumption made with their respective grantors for the benefit of this plaintiff at the time of their respective purchases. If sureties, and if liable then, that liability would continue until released by contract with plaintiff, or, by operation of law, as a result of plaintiff's conduct. Plaintiff made a contract to extend the time of payment on the first note, by agreement with Canine at its maturity, for three months, without any valuable consideration therefor, and, after its expiration, the time of payment of the unpaid balance was again extended for three months, this time for a valuable consideration. By this last contract of extension with Canine, without the knowledge and consent of these defendants (if they are to be treated as sureties), plaintiff altered the terms of the contract, so as to relieve the sureties from personal liability on that note. But she made no contract, as appears from the testimony, regarding the three-year note now in suit (and not then due, on its face, for nine months); and we are unable to find anything in the deed of trust or the three-year note that would authorize the inference that, by reason of the extension of the time of the first note, the payment of the three-year note was also extended for a like or any other period of time, if we were disposed to consider the deed of trust and the notes as one instrument, and to be construed together as such.

We are unable to conceive by the operation of what principle of law the trial court directed, in its instructions, a finding for defendants on the note in suit "if the jury should believe extension had been granted by plaintiff to Canine, on either or both of the notes named in the deed of trust." That a surety may be discharged, the creditor must do some act by which he deprives himself of the right of proceeding at law to the collection of the security obligation. The act or agreement must be such as to operate as an estoppel on the creditor, sufficient to prevent him or her from bringing an action before the expiration of the extended time. Headlee v. Jones, 43 Mo. 235. The note in suit was not due when the extension was granted on the two-year note; but, if you say it was due by the terms of the deed of trust, then the answer is that plaintiff never estopped herself from suing on it by contract with Canine, for she did not think or treat it as due, and, as a result, made no contract with reference to it. Neither plaintiff nor defendants were deprived of any remedy against anyone on the three-year note in suit by the extension of the two-year note. It might also be said that in this case the extension granted on the two-year note resulted in no injury to the defendants in any wise, but all to their good, for they were thereby released from personal liability, if we treat them as sureties merely. Defendants have no honest claim for a release in this case upon either legal or equitable grounds on account of the proceeds from the sale of the mortgaged property being applied to the satisfaction of the two-year note. By repeated adjudications in this state, the two-year note was a first charge on the lands named in the deed of trust by reason of its prior maturity; and no court or authority, so far as we have been able to ascertain, has ever held or claimed that an extension granted by the holder of a note to a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property ever lost to the holder the benefit of the collateral, or but that the notes would be first satisfied out of the proceeds of the land in the event of a trustee's sale or foreclosure of the deed of trust, as was done in this case, regardless of the question whether individual sureties had been relieved from liability or not by the action of the holder of the notes. If it be conceded, as contended by respondents, that notes and deeds of trust securing them form but one and the same transaction, and must be construed together, and that, when taken together, the note in suit becomes due at an earlier day than three years after its execution (as indicated on its face), by the happening of the contingency of the nonpayment of the two-year note at maturity absolutely, without any action on the part of the holder of the notes,—a proposition which we deny,—still the three-year note was not thereby extended. Nor was it by the contract of plaintiff with Canine, as appears from the testimony. For the court to declare that the extension of one note had the effect to extend the other was to declare the effect of a contract never made by plaintiff with Canine, and never contemplated or thought of, so far as the testimony discloses. Again, if the doctrine that all instruments evidencing a transaction must be construed together does not apply to the case of negotiable promissory notes secured by deed of trust, then instruction No. 2 given for defendants was erroneous. If the doctrine does apply, then it was not a question to be submitted to the jury for their determination and ascertainment, but should have been declared so by the court. There has arisen some confusion in the decisions of our court upon the question as to how these instruments executed as the notes and deeds of trust in this case are to be construed; but we think the great weight of authorities, and those most consonant with reason and the best rules of interpretation, support the proposition that the notes are to be considered each as a separate and complete contract within itself, uncontrolled in its terms by anything contained in the deed of trust; and that it was error in the trial court to submit to the jury that question for their determination.

40 L. R. A.

The notes and deed of trust as executed in this case cannot be said to constitute one and the same contract so far as affects the question as to the time of the maturity for general purposes of the note in suit. In many ways the notes and deed of trust are to be treated as separate papers. They are separate instruments in form, and executed for different purposes, to different parties, affecting different subjects,—one an absolute promise on the part of the maker to pay a given sum of money in a given time, and subject to enforcement, independent of, and it might be said in disregard of, the other; the other is a conditional instrument, that may or may not be executed for any purpose, and is rendered lifeless by the execution of the promise of the former. The money obligated to be paid by the notes is the substance and the life of the transaction; the deed of trust securing it is but an incident. The note is governed by the law merchant; the deed of trust by the law affecting real property. We do not controvert the proposition that "when instruments are executed at the same time, for the same purpose, and in the course of the same transaction, they are to be considered as one instrument, and are to be read and construed together as such; but we think the doctrine cannot be said to apply to instruments of the kind and character now under consideration, so that the conditional provisions of one shall diminish control, and destroy the absolute provisions of the other. If, in the case at hand, that rule is to apply, then the positive, certain, and unmistakable time fixed for the maturity of the note in suit (and that, too, an essential prerequisite to give the instrument the designation and virtue of a note) is to be destroyed by this collateral instrument, going merely as an incident to the note. In other words, we have this deed of trust given as a collateral security for the note, operating, not along with it to secure its fulfillment, but dictating the time of its payment, in such a way as, under the circumstances of the case, according to defendants' contention, to result in the defeat and destruction of the note itself,—the essence, the life, of the contract; the thing without which the deed of trust stands for and represents nothing.

If the note in suit and deed of trust securing same are to be considered as one entire contract, and used together as such, as if the promises of one and the provisions of the other were all embodied in one writing, what would become of the instrument we now call the note, with all its essential characteristic qualities,—in fact, all that entitled it to that designation? Read the two instruments together as one, and you have no note with which you invoke the rules governing such instruments to defeat the obligation of the defendants thereunder in this case. The deed of trust securing the note in suit provides that "if there is a default in the payment of the debt, or any part thereof, or the interest due thereon, when the same or any part thereof becomes due and payable, according to the true tenor, date, and effect of said notes, then the whole shall become due and payable, and the trustee, at the request of the legal holder of said notes, may proceed to sell the property," etc. How could the holder of one of the notes, transferred to him by indorsement to an innocent purchaser for value, shortly after its signing, tell when his note would mature if he cannot look to its face for his information. If this rule is to apply what becomes of that "courier that travels without luggage, whose countenance is its passport?" If the notes and deed of trust securing same are to be read together, and treated as one instrument for all purposes, then your courier, with its face as a passport, is a myth, and the whole fabric built up by the law merchant in its favor, and ingrafted now by legislative enactment onto and as a part of the commercial law of every civilized country of the globe, is inoperative in the state of Missouri. We think the cases of Brownlee v. Arnold, 60 Mo. 79, and Noell v. Gaines, 68 Mo. 649, so much relied on by respondents, are in conflict with repeated adjudications of this court, made before and since the rendition of those decisions, in so far as they announce the doctrine that the time for the maturity of the notes, when same are secured by deed of trust, is to be dominated by the provisions of the deed of trust, and not determined by the face of the notes themselves. We are aware that our court has frequently made use of the expression found in the deed of trust before them for consideration, and has declared "that the notes secured by them have matured by reason of the happening of the condition specified therein," before the notes upon their face were in fact matured; but by an examination of all cases where these expressions have been found, except in the ones just cited, the term is applied only in a limited sense, and not in the sense that the note or notes have matured for all or general purposes. "Maturity," in the sense in which these terms are used, is that they are ripe for the purpose of receiving the application of the proceeds from the sale of the collateral security; by reason of the provision of the deed of trust itself, as well as from the necessity of the situation, that requires of a trustee the disposition of the trust in his hand in such a manner that its fruit is not permitted to waste or perish in his possession.

The judgment of the Trial Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

Brace, Ch. J., concurs.

Barclay and Macfarlane, JJ., concur in the judgment announced, but are of opinion that the cause should be transferred to the court in banc, because the necessary effect of the learned opinion of Judge Robinson is to disapprove and overrule the decision of Noell v. Gaines (1878) 68 Mo. 649.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

Robert MORRISON et al., Appls.,
v.

Ora E. BENNETT, Respnt.

(.....Mont.....)

1. Men who associate themselves for the purpose of cheating others cannot ask the courts to distribute their booty by adjudging the demands of one against the other, arising out of their quarrels over the plunder.
2. A partnership for horse racing on a bet with a person whom the partners regard as a "sucker" and a "big snap" into

NOTE.—As to the legality of wagers, see note to Bernard v. Taylor (Or.) 18 L. R. A. 859.
40 L. R. A.

which they induce him to enter by making him think he had a sure thing and by deceiving him into the supposition that their horse was untrained and undeveloped, while they deemed that they had a "dead mortal cinch," is a conspiracy to defraud such that a court will not aid either of the partners by compelling one who has pocketed all the profits to make an accounting.

(March 14, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the District Court for Fergus County granting a new trial after a finding in favor of plaintiffs in an action for a dissolution of a partnership and an accounting of moneys received by one of the partners. Affirmed.

Statement by Hunt, J.:

The plaintiffs and appellants, Morrison and Davis, sued the defendant and respondent, Bennett, for an accounting and a dissolution of partnership. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiffs and defendant formed a copartnership for the purpose of owning, caring for, and racing a certain race-horse known as "Lady Wallace" on equal terms and shares, and that they entered upon and continued to transact the business of such copartnership, and were at the time of the suit copartners on equal terms in the said business; that on September 7, 1895, the defendant, Bennett, without plaintiff's consent, applied to his own use from the receipts and profits of said business the sum of $1,000, and continues to withhold the same, to the detriment of the partnership, and the damages of plaintiffs. It is also alleged that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff Morrison for certain moneys advanced by him to the partnership. The defendant denied the partnership, and alleged an ownership in common of the mare. The case was tried before the court with a jury. After the plaintiffs rested, the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon six grounds, the principal ones being that the claim upon which the suit was based is a gambling indebtedness, or wager upon the result of a horse race; and that, if there was any partnership, it was an illegal one, instituted or formed for illegal purposes and against public policy and good morals. The court overruled this motion, and thereupon the defendant declined to put in any evidence. The court then dismissed the jury, holding that the plaintiffs had a right to recover upon the issue of copartnership, as alleged in the complaint, but that an accounting was necessary in relation to the various transactions had between the plaintiffs and the defendant. This accounting was had before the court itself, and, after due consideration, findings were made in behalf of the plaintiffs. Subsequently the defendant moved for a new trial upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, and of error in law in overruling defendant's motion for a nonsuit. The court granted this motion for a new trial, from which order the plaintiffs now appeal.

Messrs. Cort & Worden and J. C. Huntoon for appellants.

Mr. William M. Blackford, for respondent:

Wager contracts are against good morals and sound public policy.

Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110; Scott v. Courtney, 7 Nev. 419.

The mere licensing a thing, permitting it to be done or carried on under certain restrictions and within certain bounds or limitations, does not declare it moral nor embody it in any form of public policy in the jurisdiction in which it is permitted to be done.

Carrier v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 328.

A wagering contract upon the result of a horse race is against good morals and sound public policy.

Gridley v. Dorn, 57 Cal. 78, 40 Am. Rep. 110; Hankins v. Ottinger, 115 Cal. 454; Wilkinson v. Tousley, 16 Minn. 299, 10 Am. Rep. 139; Shaffner v. Pinchback, 133 Ill. 410; Green-40 L. R. A.

hood, Pub. Pol. rule 213, p. 222, and authorities cited; 7 Wait, Act. & Def. pp. 83 et seq.; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Colo. 212.

Appellants and respondent entered into a business which was contrary to public policy and good morals, and therefore illegal and void.

Armstrong v. Lewis, 3 Myl. & K. 45; Woodworth v. Bennett, 43 N. Y. 273, 3 Am. Rep. 706.

The law refuses aid to parties in pari delicto.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. rule 2, pp. 1, 104; Bartle v. Nutt, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825; Shaffner v. Pinchback, 133 Ill. 410; Bowman v. Phillips, 41 Kan. 364, 3 L. R. A. 631; Hankins v. Ottinger, 115 Cal. 454; Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 409; Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wall. 518, 17 L. ed. 646; Kelly v. Devlin, 58 How. Pr. 487; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 846, 22 Am. Rep. 171; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 401; Mont. Civil Code, § 4615; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 893.

Mr. F. E. Strannahan also for respondent.

Hunt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff Morrison testified that he and Bennett desired to get a race horse out to Fergus county for the purpose of racing; that Bennett said that he would write to Davis, the other plaintiff, in Ohio, which he did. Davis wrote back to Bennett that he would come out for $50 a month and board, and that the three of them would buy the mare Lady Wallace, the expenses of caring for her and racing her being agreed to be divided equally, and the losses, if any, were to be borne equally. Davis came out, and plaintiff Morrison met him at Billings, and came up to Lewistown, Fergus county, with him. The mare was put into training, and finally a wager was made with a Mr. Kane for $1,000—$500 a side, against a horse named "Distance," owned by one Dan Crowley, of Lewistown. The mare won the race, but the defendant, Bennett, who received the money after the race was over, never gave any portion of it or accounted for it to the plaintiffs. The only receipts of the partnership was this sum of $1,000. On cross-examination the witness said that Bennett first approached him with reference to buying the mare, the main object being to race Crowley; that it was agreed that they were to get a race with Crowley if they could, or any other race, but they wanted to beat Crowley's horse, and wanted to get a horse that could do that. The witness also testified fully in relation to the agreement between himself, Davis, and Bennett, saying that each one was to pay one third of the expenses of caring for the mare, and that Davis was to get $50 a month and his board for his particular care and for driving. The wager with Kane was between Bennett, Kane, Davis, and plaintiff Morrison. Kane represented Crowley, and Bennett and Morrison represented the three owners of the mare. There was considerable testimony as to the amount of money bet upon the mare, items of care, etc., which we do not deem material to be stated on this appeal. W. H. Davis, one of the plaintiffs, said that he had brought the mare to Montana after corresponding with Bennett; that Bennett, Morrison, and himself were to own one third of the mare each, but that for his working her he was to get $50; that they only started her in the one race with Crowley, which she won, but that Bennett "grabbed the money down." The plaintiffs then offered certain letters in evidence as bearing upon the question of the alleged partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The defendant objected to these letters upon the ground that they were not material or competent under the pleadings, and did not establish any facts. The court overruled this objection, and the letters then became part of the plaintiff's case. These letters become very important evidence, and were it not for their verbosity we should incorporate them in full. We refrain, however, from doing this, and shall only make excerpts from them which tend to show what the real object and purpose of the plaintiffs and the defendant were in bringing the mare from Ohio to Montana.

Under date of January 31, 1895, Bennett wrote to Davis as follows: ". . . There is a man here that has got some scrub horses that he thinks is fast trotters and pacers. He is a man that has got lots of money. Him and his friends will bet their money. His pacers are range stock without any mark. Can go along somewhere from 2:40 to 2:30. He is stuck to back the horses, as he is a man without any knowledge of horse racing. He has been in the country for a long time. Has done business in the early days with the half-breed Indians. He is a saloonkeeper. . . . I want a man to come and bring two good horses with him, one pacer and one trotter that can go along, rather have them with low marks, and we will match this man with a dead mortal cinch. We can win several thousand dollars, which is like finding it. The way I would want to bring the horses in the country would be to sneak them in the town, put hair brand on them . . . so they would appear as range stock. . . . Would want you to write to me, and tell me what you would bring if you would come. It is meat for someone. Let me hear from you, so on, and keep this a secret. I remain, as ever, your friend, O. E. Bennett, Lewistown, Fergus county, Montana. P. S. The main object is to make it appear that the horses are undeveloped. The object is to give him a sure thing in the way of thinking. . . . We would use one horse; rather have pacer. This is no funny work with me. It is a matter of business." We quote the following extract from another letter to Davis from Bennett, dated February 26: ". . . . You did not say in your letter whether this mare is a trotter or pacer. . . . This man that I speak of in my other letter has got two pacers that he would back for good money to make him think he has got the best of it, which is very easy to do through me. Stranger could not come in here, and handle him. He has two trotters, stallions, and one filly. He is a big snap for some one to match horse race. This is no josh. . . . I mean just what I say. We have got the biggest sucker here, I think, in the state, and has got plenty of money. You do not want to come unless you bring something along to put him to sleep, and his friends, which is very easy to do. Of course, we will have to keep him in the dark, and match him up and up. You know what you have to contend with in your country,—a world of competition. It is no object in me to misrepresent things to you or anyone else. There is no glory in this except to make some money. I don't want to mislead you from your best interest, or take you from your business where you would not prove to your and mine benefit." From another letter we quote the following: "I expect you to lease this mare, and come with her to Montana. . . . I will have a partner in putting up the money and to help us do this man, and during the season we are willing you shall share one third of all the money we can get out of this man, and will pay you $30 per month and board or $50 per month and board and we will take the winnings and pay all of the expenses. I will meet you at the railroad. I rather you would be one of the interested parties in the proceeds of the winning of the mare, for I think you would be more benefited. We don't want you to come out here and not be satisfied and make some money. . . . We want you to answer as soon as you can and tell us what you will do, . . . but will say, in short, we will not stand on any small things in our deal with you. Expect you to share the harvest with us and the benefit of the opportunity. . . . Please don't send your envelopes with your advertisements on or your name on. Don't want these people to get on to anything that would throw us off if you should come. . . ." Under May 8 Bennett again wrote Davis acknowledging the receipt of a letter from Davis to him, and saying: "I never gave Mr. Love any reason to say that we wanted to do any ring business with you or the mare. You know my reason for wanting to get the mare in here on the quiet is to do this man here on match race. I wrote to you, in the first place, what my object was, and willing to leave the matter with you that I never asked you to do anything dishonorable in this transaction. I am very sorry that I ever wrote to Mr. Love to do anything for me if he has got no more sense. I asked him to please not say anything about the matter. . . . I shall write a letter to Love to-day asking him kindly to not talk so much. . . . I wrote in my letter to my friends for Bishop to give bill of sale of the mare. You may say to my friends that it is not necessary to do it, as it would explain to Bishop where the mare is going. . . . Hope everything will be all right. . . . Will be at the railroad to meet you. . . . This is the place for such a mare. They quite 'horsy.' . . . Ship to Fort Custer, Montana, over the Northern Pacific Railroad. Yours truly, O. E. Bennett. P. S. Reship from Fort Custer to Billings, the next station. You will not have to unload; might be we may be at Fort Custer and go down with you to Billings." Again, under April 3, he wrote to "Friend Davis" as follows: ". . . . In regard to Lady Wallace, she is all right to do this man. . . . You wrote in your letter that you would be honorable, upright, and fair in your business with him. That is just what I want and expect of you, and, whatever business I have to do with you expect to be honorable and upright, and do as near as I agree with you as possible for me to do. That is the only way for a person to transact business. . . . If you come out here, we expect to do this party up, which is no great trouble to do, and we can do well with her other places. . . . I don't think you had ought to tell the parties what you are going to do with this mare, as they will take the advantage of our opportunity which is our benefit. As to confine this match race with this man, I could not confine it to any defined amount, but am satisfied we can do well, or I would not be willing to go to the expense of paying the amount to get you and the mare out here." Under date of April 22, Bennett wrote that they would buy the mare, he and Morrison to pay two thirds of the cost, and Davis to take the other one third; Davis to pay one third of the expenses she would be, and Bennett and Morrison the other two thirds; they also to pay Davis $50 a month and board; Davis to have one third of whatever they won with the mare. Defendant Bennett closed this letter by asking Davis to let him hear from him as soon as possible, and adding: "I feel satisfied that you will do the best you can. Glad to know there is a young man in Ohio that has got a little nerve to come to Montana."

40 L. R. A.

Let us first look at the form of the ownership of the mare. We mention this because respondent suggests that it was not a partnership, but an ownership in common. Although it is not of importance to determine this point, we nevertheless distinguish the interests of the parties as those of partners. The testimony of the plaintiffs and their witnesses, and the last letters that were written agreeing to the purchase and ownership of the mare, shows a special agreement between the two plaintiffs and defendant, whereby they were to buy the mare, each one paying a third of her cost, train her under a like agreement, and divide profits and losses of their racing ventures. One of the plaintiffs was to be allowed a monthly salary for actual care and driving, but that does not alter their legal relations. The original capital of this partnership was represented by the mare, to purchase which it was agreed each should contribute a share. From time to time moneys were advanced for the concern, whether by one plaintiff or another or by defendant made no difference, for, on principle, it all became the subject of accounting in equity between the owners. In French v. Styling, 2 C. B. N. S. 357, the facts were these: Plaintiff was a trainer of race horses. Defendant was a merchant. A race horse was jointly purchased by plaintiff and one Cohen. Cohen afterwards sold to one Mallinson, and Mallinson and plaintiff agreed that plaintiff should keep the horse for the purpose of training him, and should have entire control and management of him; that a fixed sum should be allowed as expenses of keeping the horse; that plaintiff should pay the expenses of entering the horse and conveying him to the races; that each should pay half of the horse's keep and other expenses, and that the winnings should be equally divided. Mallinson sold to the defendant, who agreed with plaintiff that he (plaintiff) should go on and manage the horse upon the same terms as agreed upon with Mallinson. In an action at law to recover of defendant the moiety of the keep and expenses of the horse since defendant became possessed of his moiety, it was argued that plaintiff and defendant were partners, and therefore plaintiff could not recover. The judges were not wholly agreed on the question of partnership. They thought that there was not a partnership in the horse, but a joint ownership, yet that there was a tenancy in common, which entitled plaintiff to recover for money advanced to put the horse in condition to race. Cockburn, Ch. J., was inclined to think there was no partnership in the horse, but, with other judges concurring, held that they were partners in the mode of working and managing it for their common benefit. The doctrine of that case is approved of by T. Parsons on Partnership, § 76; and, while it is to be distinguished from the case at bar, it yet, by analogy, is an authority of great weight, for Cockburn, Ch. J., reasoned that, if the two had agreed that a certain sum should be contributed by them in equal moieties as the capital of the partnership, the moment money was so paid in as capital it became part of the partnership fund, resulting only in matter of account. Here there was an equal payment of money by three persons under a specific agreement to buy a horse for a particular purpose, and to share equally in ownership, keep, and all expenses connected with the racing project for which the partnership was formed. The agreement, therefore, went much further than in French v. Styling, and it seems to us, made a partnership relation. This being so, was it a partnership the real object of which was the attainment of that which is contrary to law, or, if the object was a legal one, was the attainment of such object sought in a way which is forbidden by law? If either of these questions is answered affirmatively, the partnership was illegal, and the parties must abide the consequences. Lindley, Partn. *180.

We shall not decide that the racing of horses, conducted in a proper and fair manner, for purses offered by associations, is contrary to law. It was not illegal at common law. Nor is there a statute of the state against such a practice. Nor do we believe that it is against public policy, where the purse is offered in good faith, and not as a subterfuge for betting and gaming. Horse races are looked upon as a species of gambling largely because men bet on the results, thus wagering upon uncertain results; but that is a different matter. There are many evils incidental to many strifes for premiums, yet all competitive contests are not unlawful. Folger, Ch. J., in Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, said: "A purse, prize, or premium is ordinarily some valuable thing, offered by a person for the doing of something by others, into the strife for which he does not enter. He has not a chance of gaining the thing offered, and if he abide by his offer, that he must lose it and give it over to some of those contending for it is reasonably certain. Such is the meaning of the words now, in common understanding, in the practical use of them, and in the legislative purview," etc. Bearing in mind this definition of a purse or premium, it is difficult to see why it is really more immoral to honestly try the relative speed of horses in a fair contest for a prize than it is to test the relative value of dogs at a bench show, where prizes are offered to the winners, or the beauty of fowls at a poultry exhibit, or the merits of cattle at a state fair for money premiums. If such contests are honestly conducted, but little objection can be well urged against them, or any of them; while, if there is cheating, the rascality renders them objectionable and immoral. But we shall inquire into the real purpose that Morrison and his partners had in this case. It appears that Bennett went to Morrison, and suggested the buying of a race horse, the "main object" being to beat Crowley's horse. To attain this object, they set on foot a scheme of deception, misrepresentation, and cunning. Their plan, as exposed by the language of the letters, being to match Crowley "with a dead mortal cinch." Bennett advised Davis to "sneak" the horse into Lewistown, and to put a hair brand on her, so as to have her appear as a range animal. The idea was to make Crowley, the selected victim, look upon the imported animal as "undeveloped," that he might have a "sure thing in the way of thinking." He was "a sucker," "to be put to sleep," "kept in the dark," and to be "handled" by the writer, Bennett. As a further part of the deception, Davis was cautioned not to address envelopes which contained his advertisement as a horse man in Ohio, lest the scheme be detected. They expected to "do this party [Crowley] up," although Bennett expressly wrote that between themselves they expected to be "honorable and upright." Morrison acknowledges the object of the partnership, and evidently saw the letters of Bennett to Davis, and, as agreed upon in them, went to Billings to meet Davis and the mare. They made the bet of $1,000 with Kane, who acted for Crowley, Bennett, and Morrison acting for their partnership. The race was won by the mare, and thus the conspiracy to defraud Crowley appears to have successfully ended. No more races were sought. The partners evidently quarreled over the spoils, and that honor pledged between the three partners themselves seems to have been lost sight of in Bennett's greed in positively refusing to share the spoils which passed into his hands. No court will lend its aid to assist the plaintiff in enforcing an accounting in such a case. The very statement of the evidence proves that the object of the parties was most iniquitous, and that the methods agreed upon, and doubtless fully executed, were all dishonest, immoral, deceitful, and corrupt. Men who associate themselves for the purpose of cheating others cannot ask the courts to distribute their booty by adjudging the demands of one against the other, arising out of their quarrels over their plunder. As said by Justice Baldwin in Bartle v. Nutt, 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825: "Public morals, public justice, and the well-established principles of all judicial tribunals alike forbid the interposition of courts of justice to lend their aid to purposes like this." And upon this broad principle, "ex turpi causa non oritur actio," the district court properly refused to carry out the illegal contract.

But, insist the appellants, if the agreement of partnership was unlawful and immoral, "the purpose of such partnership must also be admitted to be accomplished and executed," and the proceeds should be divided as agreed upon by the partners. This argument proceeds upon the reasons advanced by some of the English courts, notably Lord Cottenham's opinion in Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Phill. Ch. 801, that one of the two partners cannot possess himself of the property of the firm, and be permitted to retain it, if he can prove that in obtaining it some provision of law has been violated. "Can one of two partners, in any import trade," said that distinguished judge, "defeat the other, by showing that there was some irregularity in passing the goods through the custom-house? The answer to this, as to the former case, will be, that the transaction alleged to be illegal is completed and closed, and will not be in any manner affected by what the court is asked to do, as between the parties." In Sykes v. Beadon, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 170, Jessel, M. R., however, speaks of Lord Cottenham's reasoning as "inconclusive and unsatisfactory." He said in part as follows: "The notion that because a transaction which is illegal is closed, that therefore a court of equity is to interfere in dividing the proceeds of the illegal transaction, is not only opposed to principle, but to authority,—to authority in the well-known case of the highwaymen, where a robbery had been committed, and one highwayman unsuccessfully sued the other for a division of the proceeds of the robbery. So in the case he puts of one of two partners engaged in merchant trade. As I read it, he meant the trade of smuggling goods. If two persons go partners as smugglers, can one maintain a bill against the other to have an account of the smuggling transaction? I should say certainly not. It is not sufficient to say that the transaction is concluded as a reason for the interference of the court. If that were the reason, it would be lending the aid of the court to assert the rights of the parties in carrying out and completing an illegal contract. If the partnership is for the purpose of smuggling, that is an illegal contract, and the court cannot maintain it, and the court will not lend its aid at all to it. That reasoning, then, of Lord Cottenham's is not sufficient; and I should have answered the question—not as Lord Cottenham does, in the affirmative—but in the negative. I do not say that this observation at all affects the authority of Sharp v. Taylor as it stands; but I think it does affect very much the dicta which I have read from the judgment; and that is the reason I have read them. It is no part of the duty of a court of justice to aid either in carrying out an illegal contract, or in dividing the proceeds arising from an illegal contract, between the parties to that illegal contract. In my opinion, no action can be maintained for the one purpose more than for the other."

There is a rule discussed by Chief Justice Marshall in Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468, that a subsequent collateral or independent contract founded on a new consideration, not immoral or illegal, is not contaminated by the original illegal agreement. But that rule does not apply, as counsel would have it, here; nor is it in conflict with the principle that a court of equity will not sustain an action to enforce contributions between persons making profits realized from an illegal contract. This contract under investigation was illegal and immoral. The $1,000 was paid to one of the partners. And it is to carry out the partnership agreement to divide profits that this action is brought. "There is nothing collateral in respect of which, the agreement being out of the question, a collateral demand arises." Snell v. Dwight, 120 Mass. 9. In this last case cited the court ably review the decision in Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732, cited to us by appellants herein, and properly, we think, treat it as an authority relating to subsequent or collateral contracts and transactions, in which the original illegal acts and contracts are held to form no part of the consideration. The supreme court of North Carolina, in King v. Winants, 71 N. C. 472, 17 Am. Rep. 11,—a somewhat similar case to the one at bar,—distinguish Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732, as did Snell v. Dwight, 120 Mass. 9, and after so interpreting it, decided that they would not examine into, settle up, and enforce an illegal contract itself between the parties to it. See also Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 9 C. C. A. 659, 27 U. S. App. 1, 61 Fed. Rep. 993, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 578; Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1522. The New York court of appeals, in Woodworth v. Bennett, 43 N. Y. 273, 3 Am. Rep. 706, restate the general rule as laid down by Mullett, J., in the earlier case of Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449, as follows: "The general rule on this subject is laid down in this court in Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449, by Mullett, J., as follows: 'The distinction between a void and valid new contract in relation to the subject-matter of a former illegal one depends upon the fact whether the new contract seeks to carry out or enforce any of the unexecuted provisions of the former contract, or whether it is based upon a moral obligation growing out of the execution of an agreement which could not be enforced by law, and upon the performance of which the law will raise no implied promise. In the first class of cases, no change in the form of a contract will avoid the illegality of the first consideration, while express promises based upon the last class of considerations may be sustained.'"

It is unnecessary to go further. By the evidence here offered for plaintiffs they seek to enforce directly an immoral contract, and to secure the fruits of such a contract. It cannot be done. Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1431. Plaintiffs are entitled to little sympathy. They knowingly entered into the contract, and are only suffering the consequences of a dishonest transaction in which they united, and which they proved in presenting their case. The fault of the parties being mutual, they can only rely for shares of profits upon those sentiments of honor which one of them wrote would exist when they entered into their immoral combination. Being in pari delicto, we apply the maxim, "Potior est conditio possidentis."

Appellants raise a point of practice, contending that no appeal lies in this case from an order granting a new trial, because the case was tried by a referee, and defendant omitted to except to the findings of such referee. It appears by the record that the court, on the trial, did suggest the appointment of a referee to take the testimony in relation to the accounting. But it also appears that the suggestion never was acted upon, as the court itself took the accounting, made its findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon, and rendered judgment accordingly. An appeal did, therefore, lie.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed, and the lower court is directed to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Pemberton, Ch. J., and Pigott, J., concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

H. B. MAYO, Appt.,

v.

Town of WASHINGTON.

(.....N. C.....)

A debt for the purchase of an electric-light plant for a municipal corporation is not one of the "necessary expenses" of the town, within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7, so that it can be created without a vote of the majority of the qualified voters and legislative authority.

(Clark, J., dissents.)

(March 8, 1898.)

NOTE.—As to power of municipality to own electric-light plant, see also Jacksonville Electric Light Co. v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 80 L. R. A. 540; Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 25 L. R. A. 217; and Crawfordsville v. Braden (Ind.) 14 L. R. A. 268, and note. 40 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Beaufort County refusing to enjoin defendant from proceeding to acquire an electric-light plant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

No appearance for appellant.

Mr. Charles F. Warren, for appellee:

No county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, nor shall any tax be levied or collected by any officers of the same, except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein.

Const. art. 7, § 7.

A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation,—not simply convenient, but indispensable.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 89.

Repairing and building bridges are necessary expenses of a county.

Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 153; Evans v. Cumberland County Comrs. 89 N. C. 154; McKethan v. Cumberland County Comrs. 92 N. C. 243.

Building a court house is a necessary expense. Halcombe v. Haywood County Comrs. 89 N. C. 346; Vaughan v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429.

It would be difficult or impossible to draw a precise line between what are, and what are not, the necessary expenses of the government of a city. The analogy of the law of necessities for infants is the only one that occurs to us. It is held, that if, considering the means and station in life of the infant, the articles sold to him may be necessities under any circumstances, they come within a class for which the infant may be liable, and upon his refusal to pay it is for a jury to determine whether, under the actual circumstances, they were necessary.

Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748.

Nothing can be more conducive to the comfort, convenience, and safety of the dwellers in cities and towns than well lighted streets.

Raleigh Gaslight Co. v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 274; Croswell, Electricity, § 190, citing Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268; Mauldin v. Greenville, 38 S. C. 1, 8 L. R. A. 291; Lott v. Waycross, 84 Ga. 681.

Lighting cities is so necessary for the safety and convenience of the inhabitants that the municipal authorities are usually given powers more or less extensive in respect to it.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 691.

The ownership of gas, electric-light plants, and waterworks of a municipality are closely allied. In Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411, the court says: "But we think that the furnishing of a supply of water to the people of the city is not in itself a necessary expense in the sense that the city must own and operate a system of waterworks."

Such power should exist in the municipal authorities, at least so far as lighting the streets and public places is concerned.

Croswell, Electricity, §§ 21, 188, 190; Mauldin v. Greenville, 38 S. C. 1, 8 L. R. A. 291; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268.

If the object for which the money was to be raised comes within the class of such as might be necessary for the city or town, it was left to the town commissioners or aldermen to decide whether in fact it was necessary or not, and their decision could not be reviewed by the court.

Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748; Evans v. Cumberland County Comrs. 89 N. C. 154; Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 153; Cromartie v. Bladen County Comrs. 87 N. C. 184; Vaughn v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429.

Furches, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a municipal corporation, containing a population of about 5,000 inhabitants. By its charters it was given the general powers incident to such corporations, in the following words: That the commissioners of the town of Washington (naming them), and their successors in office "be and they are hereby created a corporation and body politic under the name and title of the commissioners of the town of Washington with full power to make by-laws not inconsistent with the Constitution of the state or of the United States; to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, by that name and title; and they are hereby invested with all other powers and rights necessary or usually appertaining to municipal corporations." Priv. Laws 1846-47, chap. 199, § 1. The defendant has undertaken under this corporate power to buy, erect, and operate an electric-light plant, for the purpose of lighting the public streets of the town of Washington, at a cost of $20,000, and to issue coupon bonds therefor, not to run more than thirty years, and not to bear interest at a greater rate than 6 per cent per annum. The plaintiff, a citizen and taxpayer of the defendant town, for himself and in behalf of other citizens and taxpayers, denies the right of the defendant to create this bonded debt for the purposes proposed, and thus to burden the citizens and taxpayers of the town of Washington. This action is brought for the purpose of restraining and perpetually enjoining the defendant from creating such debt and from issuing said bonds. Upon the hearing below the court refused to issue the injunction prayed for, and the plaintiff appealed. The appeal was not argued orally in this court; but we find a signed agreement of counsel, asking that it be heard on printed briefs, in which it is stated that the plaintiff's counsel does not wish to file any brief, and has not done so. This is to be regretted, as the appeal involves the consideration of a most important question of constitutional law. But the well-considered brief of defendant's counsel treats the case fairly, and contends that there is but one question of law involved, and that is the constitutionality of the proposed indebtedness and issue of bonds. And that depends upon one question of fact: Is it one of the necessary expenses of the town?

The defendant contends that the case, as it is constituted in this court, does not involve the question as to whether the defendant could furnish incandescent lights to its individual citizens for pay, and, if this court should sustain the order of the court below, that this question would still remain undecided. This seems to us a little like hedging, as we know of no electric-light plant in the state that does not sell incandescent lights to private parties, and we can hardly believe that the defendant would wish to go to this expense in erecting and operating an electric-light plant in the town of Washington without this means of defraying a part of the expense of operating the same. But, as the defendant contends that it does not involve that question, we will treat it in that way. We agree with the defendant's counsel that there is but one question of law involved, and that is the power of the defendant to make the debt and issue the bonds; and this depends upon the fact whether an electric-light plant, costing $30,000, is one of the necessary expenses of the town government. The defendant contends that it is, and cites several cases as sustaining this contention. The case of Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267, is cited for two purposes,—to prove that electric lights are a necessary expense, and that the admission of this fact by the defendant is binding on the court. In our opinion it sustains neither contention. In that case, the facts admitted were that the debt sued on was money due for work performed on the streets, cleaning out wells, and the like. The court said: "These facts being admitted, we as a matter of law hold that the debt was for necessary expenses." In the case under consideration there is no dispute about facts. They are alleged by the plaintiff, and admitted by the defendant, as they were in Tucker v. Raleigh. And the defendant says, in its answer, that these facts show that to buy, establish, and operate this electric-light plant is one of the necessary expenses of his government. The defendant's contention cannot be sustained, for two reasons: First. It is not an admission of the defendant that it is a necessary expense, but an allegation that it is. It is not alleged by the plaintiff that it is a necessary expense, and, not being alleged, it cannot be an admission. But, if the plaintiff had admitted that this debt, if created, would be for a necessary expense, it would be an agreement as to a result,—a conclusion, and not a fact,—and the court would not be bound by the admission. But, as this is an application for an injunction, this court has the right to review the court below on the facts. Jones v. Boyd, 80 N. C. 258. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, is cited by the defendant as sustaining his contention. But in our opinion it does not. The subject of litigation in that case was to enjoin the collection of taxes levied under a special act of the legislature to build and repair bridges. There was no dispute but what the act authorized the levy, and the only question involved was as to whether it was constitutional or not, as the question was not submitted to a vote of the people. This fact that it was not submitted to a vote of the people, made the constitutional question hinge upon the question as to whether building and repairing bridges was one of the necessary expenses of the county government, and the court held that it was. This is the only analogy that Brodnax v. Groom bears to the case under consideration. And it is so obvious that the building and repairing of bridges on the public highways of a county is a part of the necessary public expense of a county that we do not propose to discuss this question further. Evans v. Cumberland Comrs. 89 N. C. 154, is also cited by the defendant. But it is placed entirely on Brodnax v. Groom, and decides no more than that case does. Mauldin v. Greenville, 33 S. C. 1, 8 L. R. A. 291, is cited by defendant as sustaining its authority to create the debt and issue the bonds. We do not think it does, but that it sustains the contention of the plaintiff. There is no constitutional restriction in South Carolina, as there is in North Carolina, and the right of the defendant in that case depended upon its powers under its charter, and the court held that it had the power. The opinion is made largely of quotations from Judge Dillon, defining general corporate powers. Quoting from Judge Dillon, these powers are defined as follows: "Those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in, or incident to, the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared object and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of power is resolved by the courts against the corporation." . . . It is quite certain that such power is not 'essential' to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, for heretofore the city has been lighted by contract, without owning the gas fixtures." The first part of this quotation, down to " . . . " was quoted by the South Carolina court from Judge Dillon, and from there down is a part of the comment of the South Carolina court. As there was no constitutional restriction of the corporate power in South Carolina, it depended on their general corporate power to contract. They were not restricted, as the defendant is. In South Carolina the power of the defendant to lend the credit of the town and to issue bonds was not restricted to the necessary expenses of the corporation. In the charter of the defendant there are no express powers. It therefore has only such powers as necessarily pertain to or arise from the fact that it is a municipal corporation, and therefore falls under the third division of Judge Dillon's definition, which, he says, does not mean simply "convenient, but indispensable." And "any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of power is resolved by the courts against the corporation." This case was called to our attention by the defendant as sustaining its position. Lott v. Waycross, 84 Ga. 681, is cited by the defendant. This case expressly states that it does not decide any constitutional question. The case bears a very slight analogy to ours, if it has any at all. That case is where the town of Waycross contracted with a company to furnish it with a certain number of electric lights at an agreed price per annum. The action was brought to enjoin the enforcement of this contract, for the reason that it was not submitted to a vote of the people. The court held that this did not involve any constitutional question; that if the contract was a reasonable one, and the annual rental was kept paid, the constitutional question might never arise. There is very little discussion of the case by the court, and we do not know what the constitutional provisions of Georgia are. But the case nowhere shows that the question of necessary expense was presented or considered by the court. The case of Crawfordsville v. Bruden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268, is also cited by defendant as sustaining its contention. But we do not think it does. There are no constitutional restrictions in the state of Indiana, as there are in North Carolina. The power of the defendant in that case depended entirely upon the powers contained in its charter, and the case is not put upon the ground of necessity, but upon the ground of convenience and benefit. But it may be observed that the reasoning of the supreme court of Indiana places the power as to waterworks and electric plants on the same footing, and we do not see how they can well be distinguished.

This is a new question in North Carolina, so far as the right of a municipality to establish and operate an electric-light plant is concerned, without submitting the question to the people for their approval. But it is not new in principle. We have many opinions construing § 7, art. 7, of the Constitution. We also have many opinions defining the powers of municipal corporations. From these it seems that we ought to be able to arrive at a proper conclusion as to the law governing this case. There is no special act of the legislature authorizing the levy of a tax, as there was in Brodnax v. Groom. Nor is there any express power contained in the charter to do so. So the defendant's right to erect and operate an electric plant, and to create a debt and issue bonds, depends upon the general powers vested in the defendant as a municipal corporation. Every municipality in this state is subject to the provisions of § 7, art. 7, of the Constitution, and it does not matter what powers it has under its charter; if they are in conflict with the provision of the Constitution, they are void. To enable a municipal corporation to borrow money or to loan its credit for any purpose, except for the necessary expenses of the corporation, there must be an act of assembly passed and ratified, as required by the Constitution, authorizing it to submit the proposition to the people. Union Bank v. Oxford, 119 N. C. 214, 34 L. R. A. 487; Stanly County Comrs. v. Snuggs, 121 N. C. 394. And the question must then be submitted to and ratified by a majority of qualified voters thereof. It requires both the authority to submit the proposition and the ratification by a majority of the qualified voters to warrant the creation of the debt and the issue of the bonds. Wilmington, O. & E. C. R. Co. v. Onslow County Comrs. 116 N. C. 563. If the people want it, why not get it in this constitutional way?

This brings us to the final consideration of the question as to whether the purchase of an electric-light plant for the town of Washington, at the price of $20,000 simply to light its streets, is one of the necessary expenses pertaining to its government; and it seems to us that the authorities cited by defendant's counsel show that it is not. We have seen that the power to establish electric light plants and waterworks plants stands on substantially the same footing. If we consider this to be so (and we are not able to see why they do not), we have at least one direct decision which holds that it is not one of the necessary expenses of a city government,—Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411. In the defendant's brief this case is treated as obiter. But that is not so. It was claimed, on the argument of the case of Charlotte v. Shepard, that this was one of the necessary expenses of the corporation, and that the plaintiff had the power, without any act of the legislature or submission of the question to the people, to make this debt and to issue bonds. And this is the second ground of error assigned in the plaintiff's petition for a rehearing. While a rehearing was granted as to the other assignments of error, it 40 L. R. A.

was denied as to this ground. This decision was made by a full bench and a unanimous court, and is entitled to the same weight as a precedent that any other opinion of this court is entitled to.

While we have had no case before this court as to the power to erect and operate an electric-light plant by a municipality, we find that it has been presented in other states, and considered and decided upon the very point involved in this case; that is, whether it is one of the necessary expenses of the corporate government. In Spaulding v. Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 10 L. R. A. 397, decided in 1892, we find a very full and satisfactory discussion of the subject. There the town of Peabody proposed to erect an electric plant at a cost of $30,000, to light the streets, and for other purposes. The court discussed both aspects of the question, and held that the defendant had no power to incur the expense of erecting such plant for the purpose of lighting the streets or for other purposes. The opinion is delivered by Chief Justice Field, and concurred in by all the judges. In the discussion of the case the court says that "it has also been uniformly held that cities and towns are under no obligation to light their streets for the purpose of making them safe and convenient for travelers"—citing Sparhawk v. Salem, 1 Allen, 30; Tyson v. Booth, 100 Mass. 258; Randall v. Eastern R. Co. 106 Mass. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 327. This opinion further says that all the power a municipal corporation has to tax is derived from the legislature, by express grant or necessary implication, and, where the legislature has a right to grant the necessary powers, the implied powers are strictly construed; that the exceptions to this rule are few, and being such as a town clock, hay scales, pumps, reservoirs, etc. These obtain by reason of ancient custom, and are "not to be extended." The opinion further states that it was contended, "if the town of Peabody can erect and maintain street lamps, it can maintain them by any appropriate means, and that to furnish them by means of such electric plant was one of the proper means of doing so." The rule as laid down by the Massachusetts court is "that where there is any considerable amount of money to be expended, it must be under legislative authority." This is, as we interpret it, any unusually large amount for that municipality. And the court says that, "it cannot be said that the erection of such works as are contemplated . . . in this case are in any strict sense necessary in order to enable the town of Peabody to light its streets." This case decides the very point upon which our case turns,—that it is not a necessary expense of a corporation to light its streets with electric lights, and therefore not necessary to incur the debt of $20,000, and to issue the bonds.

To draw the line of demarkation between what are and what are not necessary expenses to be borne by a municipal corporation would be attended with difficulty. It is not necessary that we should attempt to do so in this case, and we do not attempt to draw the line. There are some things clearly within the line of power, and it is the duty of the corporate authorities to provide for them, such as court-houses and jails, as in Vaughn v. Forsyth County

Comrs. 117 N. C. 429, or public highways and public bridges, as in Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244. There are others that are clearly outside the line of necessary expenses, such as appropriations to build railroads, cotton factories, to build and operate electric street-car lines, etc. These the municipality would have no right to pledge the faith and credit of a town or city to build without first obtaining authority from the legislature and from the popular vote. The erection of electric-light plants and waterworks plants may not be so far outside the line of power as some of the things mentioned. But we are of the decided opinion that they are outside. The claim of power upon the plea of necessity must stop somewhere. The restrictions contained in the Constitution were not intended to be meaningless. If they had not been for a purpose, they would not have been put into the Constitution. In our opinion, this provision of the Constitution was wisely put into that instrument, for a most beneficent purpose, and it must be judicially sustained and enforced by the courts. Suppose we hold it to be within the corporate power to buy and operate electric-light plants on a pledging of the faith and credit of the town; how long will it be until it will be claimed that electric street cars are necessary for the business, progress, and convenience of the town? And if we grant this claim of necessity, how will we resist that? What grounds have we to distinguish the one from the other? If we sustain the plea of necessity for street cars, what is there to prevent the same claim of necessity to the growth, prosperity, and convenience of the people of a town to which there is no railroad from pledging the faith and credit of the town to build a railroad? Especially so, if we allow the claim or admission of the corporate authorities to settle the question of necessity, as is claimed that they should do in this case. It is heard every day, in towns of much size, that a street railway is necessary to the growth and prosperity of the town, and in towns that have no railroad to hear it said that a railroad to this place is a necessity. And it is contended for the defendant in this case that if such town should make a subscription and issue bonds, or should propose to do so, and when suits should be brought to enjoin it from so doing, if the town alleged it was a necessary expense, it is to be taken as conclusive evidence that such street car or railroad is one of the necessary expenses of the municipality, and that the court is bound by this claim or admission. If this be so, every town in the state would soon have railroads running to it, and a line of electric street cars, based upon the pledged faith and credit of the town. This cannot be the law.

Smith v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 350, was cited for defendant, but it is not in point. The question of establishing electric lights was not involved in that case. The only question involved was the right of the city to use the streets in a territory lately added to the city by extending its corporate boundary. It was to give the same benefits and the same protection to the citizens of the new territory as to the citizens of the old territory. The Constitution must be observed and enforced. There is error.

40 L. R. A.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the injunction as prayed for must be granted.

Clark, J., dissenting:

It would seem that these propositions are established and settled in North Carolina: (1) That it is the duty of the town commissioners to light the town (Smith v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 350), and hence it follows that the cost of such lighting is a necessary expense. (2) That it is "for the courts to determine what class of expenditures falls within the definition of the necessary expenses of a municipal corporation," and that when an expenditure falls within that class the courts "have no authority to control the exercise of the discretionary power vested in the commissioners," either as to the manner of exercising that discretion or the reasonable limit of cost. Vaughn v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429, citing Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, and Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 153; Evans v. Cumberland Comrs. 89 N. C. 154; Cromartie v. Bladen Comrs. 87 N. C. 184. (3) That for such "necessary expenses" the commissioners are not prohibited by § 7, art. 7, from creating a debt without the approval of a majority of the qualified voters. Tucker v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 267; Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748. Code, § 3800, authorizes town commissioners, inter alia, to "lay taxes for municipal purposes on all persons, property, privileges, and subjects within the corporate limits, which are liable to taxation for state and county purposes;" and § 3821 recognizes that municipal corporations may contract debts for such purposes, and provides for their payment.

On August 2, 1897, the commissioners of the town of Washington adopted the following order: "Whereas, the present method of illuminating the town of Washington by the use of gasoline lamps is entirely inadequate, and does not sufficiently and properly light the said town, and subjects the citizens and others to great inconvenience, as well as to danger and risk, and also involves great expense to the taxpayers of the town, considering the character of the light furnished; and whereas, the population of the said town is now more than 5,000 and is rapidly increasing, and the lack of proper and sufficient lights is detrimental to the business of the town and an obstacle to its advancement and progress; and whereas, the board of commissioners of the town of Washington, after a careful consideration and examination of the different methods and systems of lighting the town, are of the opinion that the best, most effective, and cheapest method is an electric light plant, to be purchased, owned, and operated by the corporate authorities of the town of Washington, and the said commissioners declare that the same is a public necessity: Therefore, be it resolved, that an electric-light plant be purchased by the town of Washington for the purpose of illuminating said town, and erected, established, and operated therein by the corporate authorities of the said town, at a cost for the purchase and erection of said plant not exceeding $20,000; that, to pay for the purchase and erection of the said electric-light plant, bonds of the town of Washington shall be issued and sold to the best advantage; that the said bonds shall bear a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per centum per annum, payable annually or semiannually, as may be agreed with the purchasers; that the said bonds shall be in denominations of $500 and $1,000, and shall run for a period not exceeding thirty years; that the said bonds shall be executed by the mayor of the town of Washington, and countersigned by the clerk of the board of commissioners, and the corporate seal thereto affixed." This was an action by an taxpayer to restrain the creation of this debt and the issuance of the bonds. The judge below, himself a citizen of the town of Washington and acquainted with its needs, refused the injunction, and the plaintiff appealed.

There is no statute specifically granting to the defendant the power to purchase and operate an electric-light plant, and issue bonds therefor, and the proposition to purchase said plant and issue bonds has never been submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of said town. The Constitution (art. 7, § 7) provides: "No county, city, town, or other municipal corporation shall contract any debt, pledge its faith, or loan its credit, nor shall any tax be levied or collected by any officers of the same, except for the necessary expenses thereof, unless by a vote of the majority of the qualified voters therein." "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: First, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation,—not simply convenient, but indispensable." Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 89. As the proposition to contract this debt has never been submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of the town, and there is no specific grant of power to contract it, the question arises: Is it for a "necessary expense" of the town, within the meaning of Const. art. 7, § 7?

This is the sole question to be decided. The power of the commissioners of the town to manufacture gas or electricity, and to sell the same to the citizens, is not presented in the case, and does not arise upon the facts. The resolution adopted by the defendant recites that "the present method of illuminating the town of Washington by the use of gasoline lamps is entirely inadequate, and does not sufficiently and properly light the said town, and subjects the citizens and others to great inconvenience, as well as to danger and risk, and also involves great expense to the taxpayers of the town, considering the character of the light furnished." It further recites that, "after a careful consideration and examination of the different methods and systems of lighting the town, the commissioners are of the opinion that the best, most effective, and cheapest method is an electric plant, to be purchased, owned, and operated by the corporate authorities of the town of Washington." The defendant then resolved "that an electric-light plant be purchased by the town of Washington for the purpose of illuminating the said town." The question presented is the power of the defendant to contract a debt to purchase an electric-light plant for the purpose of lighting public buildings and streets of the said town,—a strictly public purpose.

Article 7, § 7, of the Constitution, in reference to the power of counties to contract debt, pledge faith, loan credit, or levy and collect taxes for "necessary expenses," has been frequently construed by this court. There would seem to be no distinction between counties and towns, as the section of the Constitution applies to both alike. There would be a difference as to what would be "necessary expenses" of each, due to the different purposes and objects for which the two classes of corporations are created. Repairing and building bridges are necessary expenses of a county. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 153; Evans v. Cumberland Comrs. 89 N. C. 154; McKethan v. Cumberland County Comrs. 92 N. C. 243. Building a court-house is a necessary expense. Halcombe v. Haywood Comrs. 89 N. C. 346; Vaughn v. Forsyth County Comrs. 117 N. C. 429. In Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 766, in the able opinion of Bynum, J., it is held (citing Milne v. Davidson, 5 Mart. N. S. 586, 16 Am. Dec. 189) that the city may without express statute erect public hospitals and (citing Livingston v. Pippin, 31 Ala. 542, and Rome v. Cabot, 28 Ga. 50) bore an artesian well. McLin v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 12, it is held that the town has inherent power, or by reasonable implication from its general power, to build a jail or guard house as a public necessity. In Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C. 748, Rodman, J., says: "It would be difficult or impossible to draw a precise line between what are, and what are not, the necessary expenses of the government of a city." He likens it roughly to the inquiry as to what are the necessities which may be charged against an infant,—a question whose determination largely depends upon his means, condition in life, and surroundings. While the analogy is not exact, it is sufficiently so.

Nothing can be more conducive to the comfort, convenience, and safety of the dwellers in the cities and towns than well-lighted streets, market-halls, and other public buildings, or more effective to prevent or detect vice and crime. If it be conceded that it is the duty of a city or town to light its streets and public buildings at all, why not provide the best method of illumination it can afford? If the defendants could light the town with kerosene lamps, or with gasoline, and pay the expenses from its taxes, then why could they not provide better light, by the use of gas or electricity? It would be merely a difference in the quality of the light furnished,—a difference in degree, and not in principle. In Raleigh Gaslight Co. v. Raleigh, 75 N. C. 274, it was assumed, without argument, that the purchase of gas for public purposes by the city was a necessary expense, and that the city was bound to pay a debt contracted therefor. "So far as lighting streets, alleys, and public places of a municipal corporation is concerned, we think that, independently of any statutory power, the municipal authorities have inherent power to provide for lighting them. If so, unless their discretion is controlled by some express statutory restriction, they may, in their discretion, provide that form of light which is best suited to the wants and the financial condition of the corporation. The court further says that the municipal authorities thus possessing the power to light the streets, the power to furnish or procure electricity is carried with the principal power as an auxiliary." Croswell, Electricity, § 190, citing Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L. R. A. 268; Mauldin v. Greenville, 83 S. C. 1, 8 L. R. A. 291; Lott v. Waycross, 84 Ga. 681.

There can be no doubt that the power to light the streets and public places of a city is one of its implied and inherent powers, as being necessary to properly protect the lives and property of its inhabitants, and as a check upon immorality. This is forcibly set forth by Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, as follows: "In a most important particular, however, Rome suffers by comparison with modern cities. Its public places were not lighted. All business closed with the daylight. The streets at night were dangerous. Property was insecure. No attempt at public illumination was made. The idea does not seem to have occurred to them. Persons who ventured abroad on dark nights were dimly lighted by lantern and torches."

No more forcible illustration of the necessity and advantages of lighting a city can be given than the pictures drawn by Lanciani and Macaulay of the state of a great city buried in the darkness of night; and they show how clearly the power to provide for this is essentially and peculiarly one pertaining to municipal rule and regulation. Nor are these studies, and the facts that they reveal, without practical value to the jurist. They demonstrate that a large and dense collection of human beings, occupying a limited area, have needs peculiar to themselves, which create the necessity for municipal or local government and regulation, and this in its turn the necessity for corporate organization. The body thus organized, as it has duties, so it acquires rights, peculiar to itself, as distinguished from the nation or state at large." Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 3a. Upon this paragraph, the supreme court of Indiana, in Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind., at page 157, 14 L. R. A. at page 272, says: "While Judge Dillon's remarks have, of course, special reference to great cities, the difference in that respect between the greater and minor municipal corporations is a difference in degree, and not in kind. Wherever men herd together, in villages, towns, or cities, will be found more or less of the lawless or vicious; and crime and vice are plants which flourish best in the darkness. So far as lighting the streets, alleys, and public places of a municipal corporation is concerned, we think that, independently of any statutory power, the municipal authorities have inherent power to provide for lighting them. If so, unless their discretion is controlled by some express statutory restriction, they may, in their discretion, provide that form of light which is best suited to the wants and the financial condition of the corporation. It is well settled that the discretion of municipal corporations, within the sphere of their powers, is not subject to judicial control, except in cases where fraud is shown, or where the power or discretion is being grossly abused, to the oppression of the citizen,"—citing Valparaiso v. Gardner, 97 Ind. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 416; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1046. "We can see no good reason why they may not also, without statutory authority, provide and maintain the necessary plant to generate and supply the electricity required. Possessing authority to do the lighting, that power carries with it incidentally the further power to procure or furnish whatever is necessary for the production and dissemination of the light. The only authority cited which holds a contrary doctrine is that of Spaulding v. Peabody, 153 Mass. 129, 10 L. R. A. 397. We are, however, unable to recognize the validity of the reasoning in that case. We are unable to see the analogy between the city of Boston, because authorized to light its streets, engaging in whale fishing to procure oil for that purpose, or the other supposed cases, and the generation and supply of electricity. Electricity is not a commodity which can be bought in the markets and transported from place to place, like oil."

40 L. R. A.

To the same purport of this able opinion are many others, among them Linn v. Chambersburg, 160 Pa. 511, 25 L. R. A. 217 (in which it is said that "it is a mistake to assume that municipal corporations should not keep abreast with the progress and improvements of the age"); Jacksonville Electric Light Co. v. Jacksonville, 86 Fla. 229, 30 L. R. A. 540; State, Atty. Gen., v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 11 L. R. A. 729; Hequembourg v. Dunkirk, 49 Hun, 550; Smith v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 464, 7 L. R. A. 469; Mitchell v. Negaunee (Mich.) 38 L. R. A. 157; Sun Printing & Pub. Assn. v. New York, 152 N. Y. 257, 87 L. R. A. 788. In some of these cases there was an act of the legislature authorizing the purchase or erection of the electric plant, and the last is noteworthy as sustaining an act authorizing the city to construct a street railroad at its own expense; but all of them are in point as recognizing that these purposes are "city purposes," and within the scope of duties for which cities and towns are incorporated.

In this court, at last term, it was said by a unanimous court, in Smith v. Goldsboro, 121 N. C. 850, at page 352, that the city "provides for its citizens electric lights and water, as it is its duty to do. . . . The defendant has taken possession of said streets in order that it may perform its duty to its citizens and furnish water and lights to the owners of said lots." And at bottom of page 353, 121 N. C., it is said that, "having been taken within the corporate limits of the city of Goldsboro, they are subject to all the burdens and entitled to all the benefits of citizenship. Paying city taxes, they have asked for two of the greatest advantages of the city, water and lights, and this the city was preparing to give them, but for the interference of the plaintiff. Such interference is without warrant in law, and cannot be sustained upon any principle of equity."

This decision is abreast of the times, and is simply a recognition of the fact that cities and towns are not incorporated for the primary purposes of government, the protection of person and property, since that could be done by the justice of the peace and constable, as in the country districts, without the expensive machinery of municipal government; but municipalities are in fact not so much for governmental purposes as for business needs, such as paving, lights, security against fire, water, sewerage, and the like, which are the necessities of a dense population, and which can be furnished more cheaply and effectively by the representatives of the municipality chosen to administer its common interests than by subjecting each citizen to the unrestricted demands of organizations of private capital. Lighting being one of those necessities, whether the town shall furnish kerosene, gasoline, gas, or electric lights, and, if either of the latter, whether it shall procure the lights by paying exorbitant prices to combinations of private capital, or shall procure them at about one third the cost (as is common knowledge) by the city owning and operating the plants, are matters which must be left to the discretion of the local legislature, elected by the people of the municipality for these very purposes; for the small criminal jurisdiction vested in the mayor as to the violation of town ordinances is purely incidental. In Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, Pearson, Ch. J., said that the discretion of local commissioners over expenditures, within the range of what are necessary expenses, could not be supervised by this court without "erecting a despotism of five men." The same is held in Wilson v. Charlotte, 74 N. C., at bottom of page 759, and reaffirmed in Satterthwaite v. Beaufort County Comrs. 76 N. C. 153. While electric lighting might not have been a necessity years ago, it has become so by general adoption to-day; and, while it would not be a necessity for a smaller, poorer, and less progressive town even to-day, it may be indispensable for a larger and wealthier town, rapidly increasing in population; and the local board of commissioners may be intrusted with passing upon that question, and when, as here, their finding that electric lighting is a necessity is not gainsaid in the pleadings, this court cannot, as a matter of law, reverse the judgment below, and hold that it is not a necessity.

In Charlotte v. Shepard, 120 N. C. 411, there is a dictum (since it was not necessary to the decision of the case) that "the furnishing of a supply of water to the people of the city is not, in itself, a necessary expense, in the sense that the city must own and operate a system of waterworks." But there is a wide distinction between that case and this, in two essentials, at least: There was no finding of the commissioners, acquiesced in by the other party, that, as a matter of fact, it was a necessity that the city should own waterworks; and, secondly, the reference in that case was to the city's owning waterworks for the purpose of "furnishing water to the people,"—i. e., to individuals,—whereas, in the present case the commissioners are establishing the electric plant for the city itself, to light its streets, public buildings, and squares, as they are compelled to do. There is no question of furnishing lights to the people as individuals, though, if the city plant is established for city purposes, we know of nothing which will forbid its furnishing private citizens. But waterworks are comparatively little used by the city as a corporation, except for protection against fire, and it is principally for the purpose of furnishing water to individuals at a moderate rate that municipalities own their own waterworks; and it may be argued, therefore, that waterworks, unlike lighting, are not a necessity, and hence cannot be established until the question of incurring a debt therefor is submitted to the people. It would seem, however, that city ownership of water as well as lighting plants is a matter vested in the discretion of the city government. Light and water, sewerage and sanitation, paving and fire protection, are necessities, and are objects to be obtained by municipal organization. Transportation is not necessary, but the right to own and operate street-car lines can be conferred on municipalities by legislative action.

There is an unmistakable trend the world over towards municipal ownership of lighting, waterworks, and even (to some extent) street railways. Judge Dillon refers to this, and intimates that it is commended by wisdom and sound policy. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 691, note 1. In Germany, two thirds of the cities own their electric lighting and car plants, and the proportion is increasing. The same is true of the other countries of continental Europe, there being a great increase in municipal ownership since Judge Dillon wrote. In Great Britain and Ireland, 203 cities and towns, being in fact every city of any importance save 5, own their lighting plants, not only for their own corporate uses, but for furnishing light to citizens, and the average price of gas furnished to the citizen, with a profit, too, to the municipalities, is 54 cents per thousand. In this country, too, a large number of cities own their gas plants. Our neighboring capital, Richmond, Virginia, which is one of them, has owned its gas plant since 1852, and furnishes gas at $1 per thousand, and shows a large annual profit. A large and increasing number of cities and towns (already over 200) in the United States own their electric-lighting plants, with the result that the cost to the municipalities, from official reports, is less than one third of the average cost in cities buying their lights from private companies. The number of cities in this country owning their waterworks is 1,690 (over one half), out of a total of 3,196 having water supply; and municipal ownership is steadily increasing. In the 50 largest cities in the Union 19 have recently changed from private ownership to municipal ownership, leaving only 9 of the 50 which are still dependent for their water supply upon private companies. At the beginning of this century only 17 towns in the United States were supplied by waterworks, and only 1 of them owned its waterworks plant. In Great Britain one third of the street railways (two thirds excluding London) are owned by the cities themselves, with the result of lower rates and better accommodations, as well as a profit to the municipalities, which have thus been enabled to lower taxation. On the continent of Europe, where ever a city does not own its street railways, they are under city control, which fixes their rates, especially requiring a minimum rate (usually 1 cent, or 2 cents, at most) to be charged the working classes going to and from work, and a division of profits with the city. New York is among the cities which own the ferries, though at present it leases them out. Thus, the concept of a municipality is scarcely governmental at all, except incidentally, for the enforcement of its ordinances; but it is, in truth, a great business agency, to supply its people with the prime necessities of a crowded population,—light, water, sanitation, clean and well-paved streets, and protection against fire. Indeed, one of the most fruitful causes of inequality of condition, and the creation of a few enormously wealthy men at the expense of the general public, has been the great profits made by private ownership of the public franchises of furnishing light, water, and transportation to large bodies of men, incorporated into cities and towns. Judge Dillon, supra, cites other countries in which light and water are furnished, either altogether, or in a majority of cases, by the municipality. The general movement of the age in which we live is towards the ownership and operation of these franchises by the people of towns and cities, for themselves, though the agency of their municipal corporations, as one of the recognized and chief purposes of town and city charters. The point immediately before us, however, is far short of that, and is fully sustained by the authorities above cited, to wit, that the lighting of streets and public squares and buildings is a necessary expense, and that to procure such lighting the town commissioners, by reasonable implication from their general powers, and without express statutory enactment or popular vote, have a right to establish an electric-light plant, just as they can build a guard house, buy a fire engine, erect a public hospital, or bore an artesian well. It would be otherwise, of course, if the corporation undertook to operate a cotton factory, or some other enterprise not within the scope of its recognized duty, as lighting the town is universally held to be.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

LADD

v.

City of BOSTON.

(.....Mass.....)

1. The removal of a water meter by a commissioner who is empowered "to furnish and attach meters where he deems it necessary," whereby the consumer is required to pay according to the number of fixtures used, does not infringe the rights of a water consumer who had so arranged his fixtures when he had the meter that, on its removal, he would have to pay more than twenty times as much as other water takers pay for the same quantity of water, when it does not appear that the rates charged for fixtures were unreasonable or unjustly discriminating.
3. The fact that a man was using a water meter when he put in fixtures in his building does not affect his rights with respect to the removal of the meter, when he had no contract for its continuance.

(February 26, 1898.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to enjoin the removal of a water meter from complainant's house. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Nathaniel W. Ladd for appellant.

Mr. John T. Wheelright for appellee.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under Stat. 1895, chap. 449, § 13, the water commissioner of the city of Boston, acting for the city, is authorized to take the waters to be used for a water supply, and "to sell said waters, or parts thereof, and to fix the rates to be paid therefor by the owner of the premises to which any of said water is furnished, or by the person or persons using any of said water," etc. The plaintiff is the owner of a building to which water is furnished by said city, and he complains that, while he has been accustomed to have the water measured by a meter, and to pay for it under the rules applying to water furnished through meters, the water commissioner threatens to take out the meter, and to compel him to pay for the water under the rules applying to unmeasured water, which is charged for at an established rate for each fixture through which it is used. The statute above quoted allows the water commissioner

NOTE.—For water rates as taxes, see Wagner v. Rock Island (Ill.) 21 L. R. A. 519, and note; also Silkman v. Yonkers Water Comrs. (N. Y.) 37 L. R. A. 327.

For governmental power to regulate rates, see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton (Ky.) 33 L. R. A. 177, on page 181; also Brymer v. Butler Water Co. (Pa.) 36 L. R. A. 280; Detroit v. Detroit Water Comrs. (Mich.) 31 L. R. A. 463; San 40 L. R. A.

Diego Water Co. v. San Diego (Cal.) 38 L. R. A. 460.

For right to compel water supply, see note to Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321; also Wood v. Auburn (Me.) 29 L. R. A. 376; and American Waterworks Co. v. State, Walker (Neb.) 30 L. R. A. 447.

As to furnishing separate supply to tenants in same building, see Kelsey v. Marquette Fire & Water Comrs. (Mich.) 37 L. R. A. 675.

"to furnish and attach meters where he deems it necessary." It authorizes him to fix the rates to be paid for water furnished without meters as well as for that which is measured. It implies that there may be at least two general methods of determining prices,—one for water which is measured, and one for water which is not measured. It appears by the plaintiff's bill that the method adopted where water is not measured is to establish the price for each fixture of a certain kind at which water is supplied. There is no averment in the bill that this is not a reasonable method, or that the water commissioner has not established uniform rates for all fixtures of a particular kind. There is no averment that the rates established for measured water are not reasonable for water supplied in that manner, nor is it averred that rates for buildings generally, which are charged at a certain price per fixture, are not reasonable as compared with the rates for measured water, when the nature of the uses and the methods of furnishing in different places are taken into account. The bill does not show that the plaintiff's building is not of a class in which the charges for water are usually at the established rate per fixture.

Considerable discretion in determining the methods of fixing rates is necessarily given by the statute to the water commissioner. Money must be obtained from water takers to reimburse the city wholly or in part for the expense of furnishing water. An equitable determination of the price to be paid for supplying water does not look alone to the quantity used by each water taker. The nature of the use and the benefit obtained from it, the number of persons who want it for such use, and the effect of a certain method of determining prices upon the revenues to be obtained by the city, and upon the interest of property holders, are all to be considered. Under any general and uniform system other than measuring the water, some will pay more per gallon than others.

It appears by the bill that the plaintiff has so arranged fixtures in his building that he and his tenants can obtain the convenience and benefit of having water to use in many places, while the quantity which they want to use in the whole building, paid for at the rate per gallon charged for measured water, would cost only $5 per year. He has been accustomed to pay $15 per year, because, however small the quantity used, that is the lowest sum per year for which water will be furnished, under the rules, through any meter. The only averment in the bill which tends to show that the charge for his building after the meter is removed will be unreasonable is that he "will be obliged to pay more than twenty times as much as other water takers pay for the same quantity of water." This means that the arrangement of fixtures in his building is such that, paying by the fixture at the ordinary rate the aggregate quantity used will be so small as to make the price per gallon twenty times as much as the price paid for measured water where meters are allowed to be used, or the lowest price paid at rates by the fixture where the largest quantities are used through the fixtures. This does not show that charging by the fixture is an improper method. It only shows that the number and arrangement of the fixtures in the plaintiff's building are uneconomical for the owner as compared with a different construction and arrangement of the conveniences for using water in some other buildings. The rights of the parties are not affected by the fact that plaintiff was using a meter when he put in his fixtures. He knew that he had no contract for the future with the city in regard to the mode of fixing the price to be paid for water, and it appears that the quantity which he has been using is only about a third of the smallest quantity for which water is ever charged by the gallon, running through a meter. The bill does not state a case for relief in equity.

Bill dismissed.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

Joseph M. THOMPSON, Resp't.,

v.

SALT LAKE RAPID-TRANSIT COMPANY, Appt.

(..... Utah.....)

1. When both parties are negligent, the true rule is held to be that the party who last has a clear opportunity to avoid the accident,

*Headnotes by MINER, J.

NOTE.—As to the rule of the last clear chance in negligence cases, see also Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 287; and Pickett v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 30 L. R. A. 257.

In the present case the negligence of the boy who was killed seems to have been subsequent to that of the railroad company, and it seems to have been 40 L. R. A.

notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered solely responsible for it.

2. A plaintiff may recover damages for an injury caused by the defendant's negligence, notwithstanding the plaintiff's own negligence exposed him to the risk of injury, if such injury was proximately caused by the defendant's omission, after becoming aware of the plaintiff's danger, to use ordinary care for the purpose of avoiding the injury to him.

3. A street-car company operating the boy who had the last clear opportunity to avoid the accident. The verdict of the jury that the direct and proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the railroad company must have been rendered by ignoring the rule as to the effect of the last clear opportunity.

electric cars in a public street which increases the hazards and dangers to pedestrians is held to a degree of care proportionate to the increased danger arising from the use of such propelling power. The greater the danger, the greater the care must be to avoid injury.

4. Where deceased was deaf and dumb, but a well-grown boy of fourteen years, possessing average intelligence and good eyesight, — Held, that, under such circumstances, he was the more bound to use his eyesight, and that the question of his contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.

5. Where it appeared that when the motorman saw the deceased approaching the track, with an evident intention to cross, without seeing the car, the motorman applied the brakes, but they were so defective that they did not work, and he received a shock from the defective motor that delayed his purpose for a second; that he could not stop the car until the injury was done, because of the defective brakes; that the car ran 50 feet after striking the deceased; that the defendant had repeated notice of the defective brakes and motor, but failed to repair them; that, if the car had been in repair, it could have been stopped within 8 feet, — Held, that the defendant was negligent in the use of such car.

6. If the defendant knowingly placed in operation upon the public street a defective car that could not be controlled because the appliances provided for that purpose were out of repair, and the injury complained of was occasioned by such defective brakes and appliances, and the motorman was unable to avoid the effect of the contributory negligence of the deceased, because of such defects, then it could properly be said that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

7. The defendant should not be allowed to excuse its own want of reasonable care, and avoid liability, by showing that, prior to and at the time of the accident, it had knowingly been negligent in keeping its car and appliances in order and repair, and that on account of such negligence it was unable to prevent the injury complained of at the time by the use of ordinary care.

(February 19, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's minor child. Affirmed.

Statement by Miner, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages for negligently causing the death of the plaintiff's son. The complaint charges that the defendant negligently and carelessly failed to have its cars supplied with suitable brakes, switches, and motors, and that by reason thereof, and of the negligent and careless operation of its cars, it was driven on and over the plaintiff's son, a minor child of fifteen years, who died from the effects of the injuries received. The testimony on the part of the plaintiff was to the effect that, upon the day in question, the defendant's car was proceeding in an easterly direction along Fourth South street, Salt Lake City, at the rate of 6 or 7 miles an hour; that at this time the plaintiff was engaged in vending in said city, and had stopped his cart on the east side of the street, at a distance of about 40 feet from the railroad track; that the deceased, a deaf and dumb boy between fourteen and fifteen years of age was with him, and was sent on an errand across the street, and across the railroad track. The plaintiff, when he sent his son across the street, did not look up and down the track to see if a car was approaching. If he had done so, he would have seen the car in question. No obstruction prevented his view of the car. After the boy had started across the street, the plaintiff was busy, with his face turned in the opposite direction. The boy had proceeded but a short distance when the plaintiff's attention was attracted by the ringing of the bell on the street car. He looked up, and saw the car approaching, at a distance of about 39 feet from the place where the boy was. At the same time, the boy was about 20 feet from the place of the accident. He said at first he was not alarmed; that he did not think there was any danger; that, if the boy had had his hearing, the ringing of the bell would have attracted his attention, but when the boy had gotten within 3 or 4 feet of the track, and the car was then within a short distance, he then for the first time became alarmed. Plaintiff did not see the deceased look up or look in the direction of the approaching car. The motorman rang the bell three or four times, and then, finding it did not attract the attention of the boy, attempted to stop the car, but failed; and the car struck the boy, who died from the effect of the injuries. The car was 40 or 50 feet from the plaintiff at this time, and the boy was passing on north, towards the railroad track, seemingly intent on his errand, and without noticing the car. The car struck the boy as he passed over the north rail. The car passed on about 58 feet beyond where the boy was struck before it was stopped. The boy attended school, and could understand signs in writing. Plaintiff did not consider it as safe for the boy to be out as it would be if he could hear and speak. The boy had no other defect except that he was deaf and dumb. He was a well-grown boy, a little over the average size, and equalled the average of intelligence and quickness of comprehension as compared with children in the full possession of their faculties. He knew of the existence of street cars and lines. The motorman testified that the car was running at a rate of about 6 miles an hour; that he saw the boy coming north when about 20 feet from the track; that he put his foot on the gong, and turned off the power, intending to reverse the car; that, when he turned off the power, he had one hand on the brake, and received a shock from the motor that disabled him for a second; that the hind brake of the car was loose, and kicked off; that the brakes on the car were not in good condition; that the car had been disabled in a collision in March before the accident, and after that it could not be controlled by the brakes; that shocks from the brakes were frequent; that, when he turned off the power, he intended to reverse but for the shock he received; the car had been out of repair for a considerable length of time before the accident, and witness had reported it to the proper officer of defendant every time he used it for weeks prior to the accident; that the brakes would not stop the car; that he applied the brakes as soon as he saw the boy was likely to cross the track, and did all he could to warn the boy and stop the car, but could not stop it in time to save him; that the boy did not look up towards the car, but looked straight ahead; that, if the car had been in repair like other cars, he thought he could have stopped it, by reversing in about 8 feet. Other witnesses testified that the motor was out of repair; that the axles were sprung; that the brakes would not work; and that motormen would frequently be shocked by electricity from the motor. Such reports came from the motormen to the night inspector very frequently before the accident. The defendant offered testimony tending to show that the car and brakes were in good condition at the time of the accident.

Messrs. Williams, Van Cott, & Sutherland, for appellant:

In the case at bar the deceased, so far as the evidence shows, did not look up or down the track before starting across the street or at any time thereafter. If there can be such a thing as the establishment of contributory negligence as a matter of law, by reason of failure of a person to make use of his senses before crossing a railroad track, surely it was established in this case.

Elhrisman v. East Harrisburg City Pass R. Co. 150 Pa. 180, 17 L. R. A. 448; Carson v. Federal Street & P. Valley R. Co. 147 Pa. 219, 15 L. R. A. 257; Ward v. Rochester Electric R. Co. 43 N. Y. S. R. 84; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. 6 Misc. 382; Davidson v. Denver Tramway Co. 4 Colo. App. 283; Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 255; Boerth v. West Side R. Co. 87 Wis. 288; Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Bert, 69 Ill. 389; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Peebles, 28 U.S. App. 405, 67 Fed. Rep. 591, 14 C. C. A. 555; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 5816; Thompson v. Buffalo R. Co. 145 N. Y. 196; Buzby v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 126 Pa. 559.

The fact that the deceased was deaf and dumb, and was of the age of only fourteen or fifteen years, does not excuse him from full legal responsibility for his contributory negligence.

Purl v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 72 Mo. 168; Schernadrye v. Texas & P. R. Co. 46 La. Ann. 248; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 481; Twist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 164; Wendell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 420; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308; Reynolds v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 248; Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602; Rodgers v. Lees, 140 Pa. 475, 12 L. R. A. 216; Robinson v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 7 Utah, 493, 13 L. R. A. 765; Messenger v. Dennie, 137 Mass. 197, 50 Am. Rep. 295; Ecliff v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 64 Mich. 196; Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 35, 32 Am. Rep. 413.

The plaintiff himself was also guilty of contributory negligence, and this would prevent a recovery irrespective of the negligence of the deceased.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 44; Pratt Coal & I. Co. v. Bravley, 83 Ala. 371; Johnson v. Reading City Pass. R. Co. 160 Pa. 647.
40 L. R. A.

In the case at bar, whatever negligence there was on the part of the defendant in sending out a car with defective brakes and motor had already occurred. It preceded, or at most was concurrent with, the negligence of the deceased. The negligence of the deceased in running in front of the approaching car was later in time or at most was concurrent with that of the company in that respect. In either event, nothing more being shown, the defendant would not be responsible.

If the boy was guilty of contributory negligence, the defective condition of the car was not the proximate cause of the injury, but the negligence of the boy was.

Hays v. Gainaville Street R. Co. 70 Tex. 602; Beach, Contrib. Neg. pp. 58 et seq.; Keefe v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 92 Iowa, 182; Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 728, 25 L. R. A. 287.

Not only was the contributory negligence of deceased subsequent to the negligence of the defendant in sending out a defective car, but if the motorman was negligent in not stopping or slowing up, the contributory negligence of the deceased was concurrent therewith down to the moment before he stepped on the track in front of the advancing car.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moseley, 12 U. S. App. 601, 57 Fed. Rep. 921, 6 C. C. A. 641; Kirtley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 65 Fed. Rep. 386; Watson v. Mound City Street R. Co. 133 Mo. 246.

Messrs. Franklin S. Richards and James H. Moyle, for respondent:

The case is purely one of proximate cause, and, by analogy, comes clearly within the principle laid down in Hyde v. Union P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 356.

It is enough that when the opportunity was presented it was unavailing, solely because of the defendant's negligence.

Hall v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 13 Utah, 243; Penny v. Rochester R. Co. 7 App. Div. 595.

Miner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court submitted the question of the negligence of the defendant, the contributory negligence of the deceased, in connection with his age, capacity, and condition under the circumstances, and the condition of the car, to the jury. The court instructed the jury, among other things, that, "even though you believed the son of the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence by crossing the track without observing whether or not the cars were running thereon and in operation, or by any other act, and that, if he had been free from such contributory negligence, the injury would not have occurred, yet if the motorman, after the act of contributory negligence complained of, had the opportunity, or could, by the use of reasonable care, had the brakes and motor of the car been in proper condition, have avoided the accident, then the act of said motorman, which is the act of defendant company, was the proximate cause of the injury complained of by the plaintiff." "If you believe from the evidence that the defendant company exercised due care and caution in operating the car at the time of the accident, and that the accident was not in any way the result of any defect in the appliances for controlling the car, then the defendant would not be liable." Exceptions were taken to these instructions. Appellant's counsel contend that conceding the fact that the defendant was negligent in sending out a defective car, and that the deceased was also negligent in crossing the track in front of the car, in such a case it was the only duty of the defendant, after discovering the dangerous situation of the deceased caused by his own negligence, to exercise all reasonable care and diligence at his command at the time of the injury, and that when the motorman did all he could to stop the car, although its brakes were defective, the defendant could not be held liable, even if the car had been sent out in a defective condition with the defendant's knowledge; that, as nothing could be done by the motorman after the discovery of the boy's negligence to remedy the defective condition of the car, all that he was required to do was to use the defective appliances which he had to stop the car; that, if the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, the unsafe and defective condition of the car, although known to the defendant, was not the proximate cause of the injury. The result of such a doctrine would be that under such circumstances, when the defendant discovered negligence in a plaintiff, he could legally excuse the exercise of his own want of reasonable care, by showing that its appliances and brakes were in such a wretched condition at the time, on account of its previous and continued negligence, that it was incapacitated from preventing the injury complained of at the time by the use of reasonable care. This position of the able counsel for the defendant is not only ingenious, but is apparently supported by some authority bearing upon the general question of contributory negligence; but we cannot subscribe to such a doctrine when applied to the operation and management of electric cars upon the streets in a city where the lives and safety of pedestrians are largely dependent upon the safe equipment and perfect condition of the appliances with which a street car is propelled, operated, and controlled. If such a doctrine should be established, it would practically place the exclusive right to the use of the street occupied by the street-car company in such company, to the exclusion of the citizen. If the citizen used the street, he would do so at the peril of his own safety. If such rules were applicable to contributory negligence, his safety in crossing a street where street cars were operated, with his right to recover damages in case of negligence, would largely depend upon the option of the company to keep its appliances in good repair. In case of his injury by its negligence, the fact of such negligence on the part of the company would be a bar to his recovery in case he contributed to the accident, which the company could, by the use of reasonable care, have avoided.

Persons traveling upon a public street, and crossing street-car tracks, are not held to the same degree of care as when crossing a steam-railroad track. This is so because in the one case the street car can or should be in such a condition as to be brought readily under control, and because the public have a right to travel upon all of the public streets, while such rights do not usually exist with reference to steam-railroad tracks. When the streets were originally platted, they were not designed for street railways, but were confined to the right of public travel, with equal rights to all persons traveling thereon. The right conferred upon a street railway is not superior to that of the public at large, except the right to lay its tracks and operate its cars, which must be done with as little inconvenience as possible to the public travel. The right conferred includes no exclusive right to use the track or street. Neither has the citizen the exclusive right to the use of the street or track. The cars have the right of way in case of meeting vehicles or persons on the track, but each party is bound to exercise such ordinary care, prudence, and precaution to avoid injury as the surrounding circumstances may require. That which might be ordinary care in running horse cars might be gross negligence in operating street cars propelled by electricity or running at a high rate of speed. The electric car is propelled by a force that cannot be easily controlled except by such appliances as are expressly provided for that purpose. Without these appliances to control it, it becomes dangerous. Neglect to provide these safeguards for its control and management is negligence. "The duty of the company to recognize the rights of persons in the lawful use of the streets is imperative, and, if it adopts a propelling power which increases the hazards of such persons, it must be held to a degree of care proportionate to the increase of danger because of such propelling power. This is so because, the more dangerous the appliance, the more likely it is for casualties to happen; and, consequently, the greater the degree of care which must necessarily be exercised in order to avoid their occurrence." When the defendant placed its cars upon the track for service, the deceased had a right to expect that the usual appliances required for starting, stopping, and controlling the car were provided. Knowingly placing an electric car upon a track in a public street, and allowing it to run without such appliances for its control, is not only gross negligence, but it may amount to criminal negligence in case of injury to one without his fault.

In the case at bar, the motorman saw the deceased when he was about 20 feet from the track. He rang the bell, and as the deceased approached the track, with the evident intention of crossing without looking up or seeing the car, he applied the brakes, and intended to reverse the car; but the handle of the brake was so out of repair that he received an electric shock from the motor that disabled him for a second, and delayed his purpose. The brakes were out of repair, and would not work, and he could not stop the car with the appliances furnished until the injury was done; and, with all his efforts to stop the car, it ran about 50 feet after it struck the boy before he could stop it. Notice of the defective condition of the car had been given the defendant company many times prior to the injury, but the defect had not been remedied. The testimony shows that, had the car been in repair like other cars, the motorman could have stopped it by reversing it in about 8 feet. These facts undoubtedly present a clear case of negligence on the part of the defendant company. If the motorman had not received the shock from the motor, he could have reversed and stopped the car. If the brakes had been in order, he might have stopped the car, and prevented the injury.

The testimony also shows that the deceased was deaf and dumb, but a well-grown boy, a little over fourteen years of age, and possessed of at least average intelligence and quickness of comprehension. He was acquainted with street cars. His eyesight was good. He was of sufficient age and intelligence to understand the dangers that surrounded him in that locality, and, on account of the defect he was laboring under, was more bound to use the sight he possessed for his own safety. The question of his contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury. 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 481. Both parties being negligent, the true rule is held to be that "the party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered solely responsible for it." 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 99. It is also well settled that a plaintiff may recover damages for an injury caused by the defendant's negligence, notwithstanding the plaintiff's own negligence exposed him to the risk of injury, if such injury was proximately caused by the defendant's omission, after becoming aware of the plaintiff's danger, to use ordinary care for the purpose of avoiding the injury to him. 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 99.

Under such circumstances, the obligation rested upon the defendant to exercise reasonable care to avoid the consequences of the deceased's negligence; and the question as to whose negligence was the direct and proximate cause of the accident was one of fact for the jury to determine, under all the facts and circumstances of the case. The question was properly submitted for their determination, and they found against the defendant. Under the circumstances shown, it was clearly the duty of the defendant to have had the car supplied with sufficient brakes, motors, and appliances, with which it could be controlled. The motorman should have been furnished with sufficient means and suitable appliances with which to slow down and stop the car immediately on the first appearance of danger. Allowing the appliances adopted and in use for the purpose of controlling the car to become out of repair and useless for that purpose, and the inability of the motorman to stop the car for that reason, were doubtless, as the jury found, the proximate cause of the accident. The defendant should not be allowed to excuse its own negligence and want of reasonable care in such cases, and avoid liability, by showing that prior to and at the time of the accident he had knowingly been negligent in keeping his car and appliances in order and repair, and that on account of such negligence he was unable to prevent the injury complained of at the time by the use of ordinary care. If the defendant knowingly placed in operation upon the public street a defective car, that could not be controlled because the appliances provided for that purpose were out of repair, and the injury complained of was occasioned by such defective brakes and appliances, and the motorman was unable to avoid the effect of the contributory negligence of the deceased, because of such defects, then it would properly be said that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. In the case of Penny v. Rochester R. Co. 7 App. Div. 595, it appears that a box of sand was usually provided for use upon the car, but was not provided for use at the time of the accident. The court held the following instruction proper: "If the jury shall find that, by the use of sand at the time this accident happened, the car might have been stopped in a shorter space than it was, it was a question for them to say whether it was not negligence on the part of the defendant that there was no sand there to use." We are of the opinion that the court committed no error in its instructions to the jury. Hall v. Ogden City Street R. Co. 13 Utah, 243; Penny v. Rochester R. Co. 7 App. Div. 595; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 481-483; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 481-483; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 305, Dederichs v. Salt Lake City R. Co. 13 Utah, 34. We are also satisfied that there was evidence to support the verdict. We find no reversible error in the record.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Zane, Ch. J., and Bartch, J., concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

E. J. LETTS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Margaret KESSLER.

(54 Ohio St. 73.)

"L and K owned adjoining lots, and L erected on his lot a board fence reaching to the roof of K's house which stood on the line of the two lots, which fence shut off light and air from the windows of the house of K to its injury, which fence was so erected by L for no useful or ornamental purpose, but from motives of un-mixed malice towards K. In an action by K against L to compel the removal of the fence—Held, that L had a legal right to erect and maintain such fence, and that neither law nor equity could compel its removal.

(January 21, 1896.)

*Headnote by the COURT.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cuyahoga County to review a judgment affirming a NOTE.—Liability for the malicious erection of a fence.

- I. Introduction.
- II. Malice gives no ground of action.
- III. Contrary doctrine.
- IV. State statutes and decisions thereunder.

As to the American law upon the question of easements in light, air, and prospect, see note to Case v. Minot (Mass.) 22 L. R. A. 536.

Upon the question of malice as an element of a cause of action, see note to Chambers v. Baldwin (Ky.) 11 L. R. A. 546.

This note is confined exclusively to the question of the malicious erection of a fence, and does not include other cases wherein action has been brought for the obstruction of light and air, whether claimed under a title by prescription or by grant in which the question of malice has not arisen.

I. Introduction.

There is conflict of opinion upon the question presented in the principal case, LETTS v. KESSLER. Many of the cases support the doctrine established therein, and hold that an act, legal in itself, violating no legal right, cannot be made actionable even though it is prompted by malice, and is prejudicial and injurious to others. Other courts of equal ability have, however, held that if one does an act wholly on his own land, legal but prejudicial to his neighbor, not for his own ornament or profit, but through unmixed malice to his neighbor, then he has done his neighbor an injury that is actionable.

It is presumed, however, that the courts upholding the first doctrine would hardly hold it to apply in cases where the plaintiff or party damaged by such acts has obtained a title by grant or by prescription, if one can be acquired thereby,—at least where malice actually exists. The rule established by the first line of cases springs from the fact that the courts of the several states of the Union have refused to recognize the English doctrine of ancient lights, and hold that a man has a right to do anything he pleases upon his own land, provided he does it legally and does not create a nuisance. They uphold the maxim Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum, in its fullest sense.

This conflict of opinion has in some states been remedied by express statutory enactment, making the person erecting a fence for malicious motives, or contrary to the provisions of the statute relating thereto, liable in damages to the party injured.

II. Malice gives no ground of action.

In Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 458, it is said that it is a general rule that the owner of land may use it according to his pleasure, but the rule is subject to the qualification that he must not use it in such a manner as to infringe the rights of others. So use your own that you injure not other's property, is a maxim of law supported by the soundest wisdom. But the injury intended is a legal injury, an invasion of some legal right, as erecting a building or carrying on a business on one's own land which so obstructs the enjoyment by another of his property as to amount to a nuisance, or removing soil or placing something on the soil of another, such acts being violations of absolute legal rights and strict legal injuries. But darkening another's windows, or depriving him of a prospect by building on one's own land, where no right to the light unobstructed has been acquired by grant or prescription, digging by a person on his own soil so as to endanger the foundation of the building of the adjoining owner, and numerous similar acts by an owner of land impairing the enjoyment and value of the land of another short of what the law deems a nuisance, invade no legal right, and hence are not legal injuries.

So, in Levy v. Brothers, 4 Misc. 48, wherein plaintiff sought an injunction to restrain defendant from erecting a sheet-iron fence on the extreme boundary of his own land maliciously, for the express purpose of shutting off the light and air from plaintiff's premises, the court, in refusing the relief, stated that, under the rule prevailing in that state, an owner of property might place windows in the walls of his house, though they overlooked his neighbor's land, and that it was his right so to do, yet the neighbor had some rights also, for he might, if he chose to do so, build to the extreme end of his land, and in that way shut off the offending windows. Indeed, he might build for the express purpose of shutting them off, and whether the erection consisted of poles with sheet-iron plates or of solid brick, was all the same, and the motive was of no consequence whatever, for where an act was legal the motive with which it was done was wholly immaterial. Nulius videtur dolo facere, qui suo jure utitur. The acts complained of did not constitute, in a legal sense, the use by the defendants of their property to the injury of another, for no one, legally speaking, is injured or damaged unless some legal right of his has been infringed.

The mere fact that a structure built by one upon his own land obstructs the view, and shuts off the light and air from his neighbor's premises, affords no ground of action, and the doctrine of prescription has no application. Knabe v. Levell, 23 N. Y. Supp. 818, 824.

Under ordinary circumstances, a man has a right to build a block and occupy every inch of his land; and may do as he sees fit, and judge what is fit, so long as he does no injury to adjoining property, and does no more injury than a fence possibly could do; and it will be an injury for which there is no remedy, it being a man's right to use his premises as will best subserve his purpose, when he is doing it in a lawful manner, and not doing it to injure or annoy his neighbor or adjoining property. Peck v. Bowman, 22 Ohio L. J. 111, 113.

A person may do what he pleases upon his own land, and, so long as he violates no legal duty which he owes his neighbor, he is not liable although he may perform the act for the sole purpose of injuring his neighbor. Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15; Paine v. Chandler, 184 N. Y. 385, 19 L. R. A. 90, judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin defendant from maintaining a fence in such a manner as to shut out the light and air from plaintiff's windows. Reversed.

Statement by Burket, J.:

The plaintiff below, defendant in error here, filed her petition in the court of common pleas against defendant below, plaintiff in error here, averring that she was the owner by purchase under a land contract of certain premises in the city of Cleveland, that defendant owned and occupied the lot on the east side thereof, that she used her premises as a hotel and boarding house, that he was erecting a high board fence on his ground which would obstruct her windows and deprive her of light and air, that said fence was not being erected for any useful or ornamental purpose, but from motives of pure malice alone, and for the express malicious purpose of annoying plaintiff, and excluding light and air from her house so as to render her house uninhabitable, to injure the value thereof, and that said fence would exclude the light and air and thereby greatly injure the value of her house. She prayed that he might be restrained from completing said

So the maxim, Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas, applies only to cases where the act complained of violates some right, and an act, legal in itself, violating no right, cannot be made actionable upon the ground of the motive which induces it. Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 46, 28 Am. Rep. 93.

Bad motives, in doing an act which violates no legal right of another, cannot make that act a ground of action. Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 458.

It has been stated that malicious motives make a bad case worse, but they cannot make that wrong which in its own essence is lawful. As long as a man keeps himself within the law, by doing no act which violates it, his intentions must be left to Him who searches the heart, and damages can never be recovered where they result from a lawful act of the defendant. Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308.

Where a person exercises his legal rights in acts done upon his own property, without infringing upon the rights of his neighbor, the mere fact that he is influenced in his actions by a wrong and malicious motive is no ground for the interference of the courts. Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39, 28 Am. Rep. 93.

A man may erect upon his land the smallest or most temporary kind of dwelling house or store in close proximity to the finest mansion, block, or building, and that for the mere sake of spitting the owner of such mansion or block by the contrast, without becoming subject to restraint at the hands of the courts, for if the improvement itself is legitimate and lawful, it is not per se a nuisance, and the law will not inquire into the motives with which he acts. Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295, 44 Am. Rep. 642.

A man has a right to improve his property in any way he sees fit, provided the improvement is not such a one as the law will pronounce a nuisance, and this he may do although he makes such improvement through spite. Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295, 44 Am. Rep. 642.

The universal rule is that the size and quality of the improvements a man erects upon his own land will not of themselves constitute the same a nuisance. Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295, 44 Am. Rep. 642.

And in Triplett v. Jackson, 5 Kan. App. 777, 779, the court upheld the doctrine that one when using his property for any lawful purpose may build thereon any structure which is not a nuisance per se, and the law will not inquire into the motives with which the owner acts in its inception, although it stated that there might be some special prohibition by city or town ordinance or state statute which would render the act illegal.

An action on the case does not lie against a person for erecting a fence on his own land, whereby he obstructs the lights of his neighbor, let the motive of the obstruction be what it may, if the lights be not ancient lights or his neighbor has not acquired a right by grant or occupation and acquiescence. Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 281, 28 Am. Dec. 461.

In Auburn & C. Pl. Road Co. v. Douglass, 9 N. Y. 444, it was held that the owner of property may put it to any use he pleases so long as he does not interfere with the legal rights of another, and any loss or damage occasioned by his acts to an adjoining owner is damnum absque injuria, provided no prior legal right to restrict such use has been acquired, and in such a case the motives of such owner are immaterial.

It is error to charge the jury, in an action to recover damages for erecting a fence upon defendant's premises, immediately adjoining those of the plaintiff, thereby obstructing the light and air, that the defendant has no right to build such fence for the purpose of excluding the light from the plaintiff's premises, and that, if he has done so, he is liable for damages, as no liability attaches in such a case, even though the defendant may have been actuated by some motive, his liability not depending upon the question of motive. Packard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 444, 458.

In Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 388, 2 L. R. A. 81, the court said that respectable authors have intimated that even at common law the extent of a man's right in cases of this sort might depend upon the motive with which he acted. And the following authorities are cited to the proposition: Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, 119, 122; Carson v. Western R. Co. 8 Gray, 423, 424; Poath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 544, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Swett v. Cutta, 50 N. H. 439, 447, 9 Am. Rep. 276.

The court, however, stated that it did not so understand the common law, and conceded that to a large extent the power to use one's own property maliciously, in any way which would be lawful for other ends, was an incident of property which could not be taken away even by legislation.

So, in Triplett v. Jackson, 5 Kan. App. 777, 779, the court dissolved the injunction of the court below restraining the defendant from erecting a high board fence on and near the line dividing the lots of the contending parties, the same not being a nuisance.

In Lapere v. Luckey, 23 Kan. 534, 33 Am. Rep. 196, the plaintiff sought to recover damages from defendant for the obstruction of light and air from his premises by means of a high board fence, alleged to have been erected by the defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, maliciously, and wickedly. The court refused relief, as the doctrine of ancient lights did not prevail in that state.

In Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 295, 44 Am. Rep. 642, the erections were placed upon the defendant's lands, not for the purpose of improvement, but from spite and in order to annoy the plaintiff, who had refused to sell his property to defendant at an under value. The court refused relief, even though spite existed, the erections being lawful ones and not nuisances.

In Ladd v. Flynn, 90 Mich. 181, the defendant fence, and that upon a final hearing a mandatory injunction might compel its removal.

Defendant below demurred to this petition, and the demurrer was overruled and exceptions taken. The ruling upon this demurrer is reported in 7 Ohio C. C. 108.

He then filed an answer, in substance a general denial, with an averment that the fence was erected to prevent the rush of water and eve drip from her premises onto his. This she denied in her reply. The case went to the circuit court on appeal, and that court overruled the demurrer, and on the trial made a finding of facts containing in substance the allega-built a board fence 16 feet high, shutting off the light from complainant's windows maliciously. Defendant averred that the same was built to screen his tenants from view, and from unpleasant observations and comments of the complainant's tenants. The court set aside an injunction of the court below, as the order of the court attempted to interfere with defendant's claimed rights, and to abate the fence, the court having no power to determine the rights of the parties on affidavits, or on a motion for a preliminary injunction.

The enjoyment of light and air from adjoining premises cannot be acquired in Ohio by prescription, and the owner of premises may utilize their entire area by constructing upward and downward, and if by his structure he cuts off the light and air which his neighbor has theretofore enjoyed, and works positive injury to the health, happiness, and property of the adjoining proprietor, yet the latter takes the chance of losing the use of his windows by such construction, and has no legal remedy. Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15.

In Dawson v. Kemper, 32 Ohio L. J. 15, the defendant had nailed a frame-work of boards upon the wall completely covering the apertures in which the plaintiff's windows were, and thereby had shut out the air and light from the plaintiff's house. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant's acts were not to subserve any useful or lawful purpose, but were actuated by malice, and were for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff and his property, and an injunction was therefore sought. The defendant denied the malice, and averred facts sufficient for closing up the windows. The court refused the relief sought, holding that the defendant's act was damnum absque injuria, stating that the distinction between common right and the absolute right attached to the ownership of land was a controlling cause in such cases, as the plaintiff had no right in the defendant's land, or in the light and air above, but the defendant's right thereto was absolute and positive, no common right existing between them, and the defendant therefore infringed no right of his when he used his own estate, the element of malice or motive being immaterial.

In the above case the court declined to follow the decision of the circuit court in Kessler v. Letts, 7 Ohio C. C. 108, upon the ground that it considered that case wrongly decided, the court intimating that the dissenting opinion of Baldwin, J., stated the law in that state on the question involved.

In Haverstick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 368, plaintiff's windows were obstructed by a fence. The defense showed that the defendant was much annoyed by the window shutters of plaintiff being left standing and obstructing an alley way, and from his family throwing dirt through the windows into the alley, rendering it extremely offensive, and by the fact that the windows were used by his family for the purpose of overlooking and watching all that passed on the premises, and that the fence was erected for the purpose of preventing such annoyance. The court held that the plaintiff had no implied easement to light and air, and, the fence being erected for his own protection, and in the proper enjoyment of his property, was entitled to be maintained, but intimated that if the fence was not so constructed, but was erected simply to annoy and injure the plaintiff, the circumstances might be different.

The dissenting opinions of Campbell, Chief Justice, and Champlin, J., in Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 280, 288, 389, 8 L. R. A. 184, note, infra, III., support the doctrine held by many of the courts, that the plaintiff, having no easement in the light and air, either by grant or prescription, can acquire no right to the same as against his adjoining neighbor, and the mere fact that the obstruction or fence is erected maliciously makes no difference, the act being done upon the defendant's own property.

So, the dissenting opinion of Baldwin, J., in Kessler v. Letts, 7 Ohio C. C. 108, infra, III., holds that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought, as he had no right to the light and air over the premises of the defendant, and that no right of heirs was infringed upon, and that such decision would be a bad precedent, and lead to the overruling of the doctrine in that state against prescriptive rights in light and air.

Upon appeal from the circuit court the holding of the majority of the court was reversed and the principles stated in the above dissenting opinion were upheld. See LETTS V. KESSLER.

In Symonds v. Seabourne, Cro. Car. 325, it was claimed that the defendant maliciously erected a structure upon his land, for the purpose of depriving the plaintiff of light coming from his windows into his house, thereby totally darkening the house. It was held that an action on the case would lie for obstructing the light of an ancient messuage. In this case, however, the court did not pass upon the question of malice, but decided it upon the ground of ancient lights.

In Honsel v. Conant, 12 Ill. App. 250, the plaintiff claimed that the hedge or fence erected by the defendant intercepting the current of air from plaintiff's premises, had rendered the same unwholesome and unhealthy, and was wilfully maintained with an intent to injure the plaintiff. The court stated that, as it was not shown that the fence in question was made of offensive material, and was a nuisance, the plaintiff had no cause of action, as the defendant had a right to erect such a fence on his own land, no right to the contrary existing either by prescription or grant.

And in Guest v. Reynolds, 68 Ill. 478, 18 Am. Rep. 570, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had wrongfully, maliciously, wilfully, and injuriously darkened plaintiff's windows by means of a board fence of such height as to hide the original fences, but, no prescriptive right or other agreement being shown to exist, the plaintiff failed to recover, the doctrine of ancient lights having no application in that state.

plaintiff as a boarding house. Defendant owns and occupies premises adjoining plaintiff on the east. Between the two houses is a driveway and open space about 20 feet wide. Plaintiff and defendant had litigation in May, 1891, on account of defendant having attached a shed roof to her building without consent of said plaintiff. About two weeks after the trial of said law suit, the defendant took down said shed roof and built up against the house of said plaintiff a tight board fence. The said fence was 86 feet long. The scantlings were placed against the wall of said plaintiff's house and reached up under the eaves of the same. Boards were nailed onto said scantlings, beginning about 2 feet from the ground and extending to the sills of the second-story windows. Defendant nailed on the rear portion of said fence and extending about 40 feet toward the front, a shed roof. Under this shed roof defendant had lumber piled. Said board fence completely covered up the bathroom, kitchen, bedroom and library windows, rendering said portion of house dark, damp, and uninhabitable, and causing a substantial damage to the same. Said structure was erected upon the land of the defendant and belonged to him. The structure was erected by said de-

So, in Ward v. Neal, 35 Ala. 602, the plaintiff sought to have a fence, erected by the defendant near to plaintiff's windows, enjoined and abated, and alleged that the same was wrongfully and injuriously erected, but the case turned upon the question of the plaintiff's right in ancient lights and title by prescription, and not upon the question of the malicious or wilful motives of the defendant.

See also Carson v. Western R. Co. 8 Gray, 428; Fifty Associates v. Tudor, 8 Gray, 255, infra, III.

III. Contrary doctrine.

At common law a man has a right to build a fence on his own land as high as he pleases however much it may obstruct his neighbor's light and air. And the limit up to which a man may impair his neighbor's enjoyment of his estate by the mode of using his own is fixed by external standards only. But it is plain that the right to use one's own property for the sole purpose of injuring others is not one of the immediate rights of ownership. It is not a right for the sake of which property is recognized by law, but is only a more or less necessary incident of rights which are established for very different ends. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81.

It cannot be regarded as a maxim of universal application, that malicious motives cannot make that a wrong which in its own essence is lawful. Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 8 L. R. A. 184, note; Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 569.

The wanton infliction of damage can never be a right. It is a wrong, and a violation of right, and is not without remedy. Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 388, 389, 8 L. R. A. 184, note.

In Kessler v. Letts, 7 Ohio C. C. 108, the court stated that the doctrine that one may erect anything on his own land for no use or ornament, but merely to injure his adjoining neighbor, seemed to it to be a monstrous doctrine, one most offensive to the principles of equity, most unjust, fostering and cloaking with a false mantle of justice, wrong, malice, and a malignant and wanton injury to another.

The holding in this case has, however, been reversed. See principal case LETTS v. KESSLER.

No man has a legal right to make a malicious use of his property, not for any benefit or advantage to himself, but for the avowed purpose of damaging his neighbor. To hold otherwise would make the law a convenient engine, in such cases, to injure and destroy the occupation and comfort, and to damage the property, of one's neighbor, for no other than a wicked purpose which itself is or ought to be unlawful. Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 388, 8 L. R. A. 184, note.

The right to breathe the air and enjoy the sunshine is a natural one, and no man can pollute the atmosphere or shut out the light of Heaven for no better reason than that the situation of his property is such that he is given the opportunity for so doing, and wishes to gratify his spite and malice towards his neighbor. Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 388, 389, 8 L. R. A. 184, note.

Where the structure is maliciously erected in a stealthy manner, and is injurious to the adjoining owner, the court will enjoin its continuance. Harris v. White, 48 Conn. 106.

In Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 8 L. R. A. 184, note, as a result of a quarrel and petty annoyances between the parties, the defendant erected a screen or fence upon his own land in front of the windows in plaintiff's house, not for any necessary or useful or ornamental purpose, but simply to shut out the view of his premises. The statements made by the defendants showed that it was done for the sole purpose of annoying plaintiff, and with malice. The court by equal division affirmed the decree of the court below abating the fence as a nuisance, although Chief Justice Campbell, and Champlin, J., dissented.

That doctrine was affirmed by a unanimous court in Flaherty v. Moran, 81 Mich. 52, 8 L. R. A. 183. There the defendant built a screen or board fence, about 10 feet in height, along the line of lots and upon his own premises, extending from the front wall of the complainant's house backward the whole length thereof. It was claimed that the same was built maliciously and for the purpose of darkening the complainant's room, and for no useful purpose. The bill was filed to compel the defendant to remove such fence. It being proved that the fence served no useful or needful purpose, and was built out of pure spite and malice, a decree of the court below enjoining its erection was upheld.

Again in Kirkwood v. Finegan, 95 Mich. 543, it was sought to enjoin the erection and maintenance of a fence between premises occupied by the parties, which was the outcome of a quarrel between them, and its character and style indicated the motive which prompted its construction. The court therefore affirmed the decree of the court below in favor of the plaintiff, holding that the case was ruled by that of Flaherty v. Moran, 81 Mich. 52, 8 L. R. A. 183.

In Sankey v. St. Mary's Female Academy, 8 Mont. 265, the court granted an injunction restraining the defendant from obstructing the plaintiff's windows by means of a fence, which would, if erected, have entirely closed the windows in his house excluding both light and air, thereby rendering the house uncomfortable, unhealthy, and undesirable for habitation, and thus causing irreparable injury.

Where the defendant erected a very high fence up to the eaves and gables of the plaintiff's house, thereby excluding the light and air from the house, for no useful or ornamental purpose, but purely out of spite, and for the express and malicious purpose of annoying him, and to render the house uninhabitable and to injure its value, thus creating an intolerable nuisance, the court overruled a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition and granted an injunction restraining the erection of such fence, the act done from pure malice being within the reach of the principles of equity. Kessler v. Letts, 7 Ohio C. C. 108. This holding, is, fendant from motives of unmixd malice toward said plaintiff and for no useful or ornamental purposes of the property of said defendant, except said shed roof, and its back wall below the shed roof, which may subserve some useful purpose of defendant in the use of his property by protecting his lumber piled thereunder. The court, upon the foregoing facts, finds and decrees that said defendant be and is hereby enjoined from proceeding further with the erection of said fence. Adjudged and decreed that said defendant, within twenty days from the entering of this decree, take down all of said fence and scantling projecting above the roof of said shed, and all the remainder of said fence outside of and beyond said shed, and it is considered that the plaintiff recover his costs expended in the case, taxed at $—— and that the defendant pay his own costs for which it is ordered that execution issue; to all of which the defendant excepts."

A motion for a new trial was made, overruled, and exceptions taken. Thereupon a petition in error was filed in this court to reverse the judgment of the circuit court.

however, reversed. See principal case LETTS v. KESSLER.

In Peck v. Bowman, 22 Ohio L. J. 111, 113, plaintiff sought an injunction to restrain defendant from erecting a fence 10 feet in height, of rough, unsightly boards, wholly upon the defendant's land, designed to serve no useful or ornamental purpose, but for the purpose of damaging the plaintiff and injuring his property and diminishing its value, from motives of unmixd malice, and designed expressly to shut out the view of the plaintiff, because of a bad state of feelings existing between the parties. The court, under the circumstances, continued the injunction until the further order of the court, until an opportunity was given for a full hearing, the act complained of constituting in every essential particular a nuisance.

A wall built with windows in it as a scheme to get light for defendant's factory surreptitiously, and in direct violation of law, was enjoined in Vollmer's Appeal, 61 Pa. 118, as a nuisance, being built contrary to the provisions of the rule as to party walls in Philadelphia, as provided by the act of 1721. Vaňsyckel v. Tryon, 6 Phila. 401, to the same effect.

In Fifty Associates v. Tudor, 6 Gray, 255, the action was in tort to recover damages for breaking and entering the plaintiff's premises, and throwing down a wall which he had erected upon his own land and which obstructed the light and air from the defendant's windows. The defendant justified his actions upon the ground that he had the use and enjoyment thereof for twenty years or more. The court held that his action in removing the fence was not justifiable, as it was not shown that he was entirely or substantially deprived of light and air. The question of malicious intent, however, did not appear in this case.

In Carson v. Western R. Co. 8 Gray, 423, action was brought to recover for injuries occasioned by the accumulation of snow upon the plaintiff's farm in consequence of the erection and maintenance of a fence by the defendant company. It was not alleged or proved that the defendants, in erecting the fence, acted wantonly, negligently, or maliciously, or with any purpose of inflicting injury on the plaintiff or his property, but, on the contrary, that the fence was built by defendants upon their land for the legitimate object of preventing their tract from being encumbered with snow. The court therefore held that there was no cause of action, the erection of such a fence being a proper and reasonable use of the property, even though it might have caused annoyance or injury to the plaintiff, the act not falling within the maxim Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas, but within another legal apothegm Qui jure suo utitur neminem laedit.

See also Haverstick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 368, supra, II.

IV. State statutes and decisions thereunder.

The California act of March 9, 1895, regulating the height of division fences and partition walls in 40 L. R. A.

cities and towns, prohibits the erection of any fence or partition wall exceeding 10 feet in height, without a permit from the board of supervisors or city council of the city or town, and also provides that the consent of the adjoining owner shall be obtained before such permit is granted.

In Western Granite & Marble Co. v. Knickerbocker, 103 Cal. 111, plaintiff claimed that the defendant had obstructed the light and air in his premises by means of a tight board fence 20 feet high, wantonly and maliciously, but the court below did not find that the defendant acted wantonly or maliciously. It was, however, claimed that the act of the defendant was unlawful as violating the statute. The defendant contended that the said act was unconstitutional as in violation of § 2, art. 11, of the state Constitution, conferring power to make and enforce such police regulations as were not inconsistent with general laws, and also upon the ground that it gave the owner of the adjoining property power to prevent such structure. The court construed the statute as constitutional, and not contrary to the general doctrine of the law which allows a man to erect anything on his own land so long as it is not a nuisance, and, as the fence in question was a division one, ordered the removal of such portion of it as exceeded the height provided for by the statute.

Section 1277 of Conn. Gen. Stat. ed. 1888, chap. 88, p. 299, provides: "An injunction may be granted against the malicious erection by or with the consent of an owner, or lessee, or person entitled to the possession of land, of any structure upon it, intended to annoy and injure any owner or lessee of adjoining land in respect to his use or disposition of the same."

In Harblson v. White, 46 Conn. 106, it was held that if the structure contemplated by the above statute was erected maliciously, and injured the adjoining owners, the mere fact that it screened the defendant's premises from being overlooked by the plaintiff and his family was no defense.

In Gallagher v. Dodge, 48 Conn. 387, 390, 40 Am. Rep. 182, the structure which it was sought to enjoin was a show case erected by the defendants upon their own premises in front of their store, so as to obstruct a side window in the plaintiff's store, for the object of displaying their own goods to the best advantage, and preventing the public from seeing those of the plaintiff through his side window. The plaintiff claimed that the action was done from malicious motives. The court held that, under the statutes, the malicious quality of the act was the predominant cause, and that the mere petty hostilities of the two parties in their business did not show sufficient maliciousness to bring the cause within the provisions of the statute, the structure intended by the statute being one which must be judged of more by its character, location, and use than by the actual motive the party had in mind at the time.

By § 5, chap. 17, Freeman's Supplement, Me. Rev. Stat. p. 178, chap. 188, p. 205, Me. Stat. 1893, it is provided, inter alia, that "any fence, or other structure

Messrs. L. A. Willson and Edward David, for plaintiffs in error:

Motive makes no difference.

Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294.

The maxim Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad eorum et ad inferos applies to its full extent, and whatever damage may result from the exercise of this absolute right of property to adjoining proprietors is damnum absque injuria.

Mullen v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 185, 2 Am. Rep. 379.

An easement of light and air, to be supplied to one's windows from the premises of another, cannot be acquired in Ohio, by use or prescription.

Washb. Easem. 2d ed. p. 458, *380, chapter on Rights in Subterranean Waters.

The fence in the case at bar is not a nuisance.

in the nature of a fence, unnecessarily exceeding 8 feet in height, maliciously kept and maintained for the purpose of annoying the owners or occupants of adjoining property, shall be deemed a private nuisance."

Under the above statute it has been held that in order to render the defendant liable, the plaintiff must prove that malevolence was the dominant motive and that without it the fence would not have been built or maintained; and further, that if the height above 8 feet is shown to be necessary there can be no liability, no matter what may be the motive of the owner in erecting it. The gist of the action is the fact that the structure is "maliciously kept and maintained." Lord v. Langdon (Me.) 39 Atl. 552.

So, a finding by the jury in a case under the Maine statute, under instructions from the court, that the controlling dominant motive of the defendant was malicious, and that the fence was erected for the purpose of annoying the plaintiff, to which no exceptions are taken, will not be disturbed upon appeal,—especially where the evidence justifies such conclusions. Lord v. Langdon (Me.) 39 Atl. 552.

By § 1 of chap. 358, p. 591, Mass. Stat. 1887, Supplement to Mass. Pub. Stat. 1882-1888, it is provided: "Any fence, or other structure in the nature of a fence, unnecessarily exceeding 6 feet in height, maliciously erected or maintained for the purpose of annoying the owners or occupants of adjoining property, shall be deemed a private nuisance."

Section 2 of the same statute also provides that "any such owner or occupant, injured either in his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate by such nuisance, may have an action of tort for the damages sustained thereby, and the provisions of chap. 180 of the Public Statutes concerning actions for private nuisances shall be applicable thereto."

In Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81, it was held that the above statute was constitutional, and applied to fences erected before, as well as to those erected after, the passing of the act.

Mass. Stat. 1887 is also held constitutional in the case of Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407.

Although, under the Massachusetts Constitution, the legislature would have no power to prohibit putting up or maintaining stores or houses with malicious intent, and thus make a large part of the property of the commonwealth dependent upon what a jury might find to have been the past or to be the present motives of the owner, yet it does not follow that the rule is the same for a boundary fence unnecessarily built more than 6 feet high contrary to the provisions of the statute. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81.

In an action for illegally maintaining a fence 40 L. R. A.

Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 293, 44 Am. Rep. 642; High, Inj. § 488; Mahan v. Brown, 18 Wend. 261. 28 Am. Dec. 461; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 123.

The proprietor, in the absence of any agreement subjecting his estate to another, may consult his own convenience in his operations above or below his ground.

Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49.

An act legal in itself, violating no right, cannot be made actionable on the ground of the motive which induced it.

Quintini v. Bay St. Louis, 64 Miss. 483, 60 Am. Rep. 62; Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 359.

The maxim "So use your own as to not injure another's property" extends only to legal injuries.

Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 458; Pierre v. Fernald, 26 Me. 426, 46 Am. Dec. 573.

contrary to provisions of the above statute, the fence must have been erected or maintained from an actual malevolent motive, as distinguished from mere technical malice, without which it would not have been erected or maintained, in order to render it a nuisance; and if such extra height is necessary, for any reason, there is no nuisance created, and therefore no liability, and in such a case the owner is at liberty to think for himself and act on his own opinion. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81.

Malevolence must be the dominating motive, a motive without which the fence would not have been built or maintained. A man cannot be punished for malevolently maintaining a fence for the purpose of annoying his neighbor, merely because he feels pleasure at the thought of his giving annoyance, if that pleasure alone would not induce him to maintain it, and if he would maintain it even if that pleasure be denied him. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81.

If the motives of the defendant in allowing the fence to stand are malicious the defendant may be liable although he has done nothing upon it since the passing of the statute. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407. Following Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81.

Even though the word "nuisance" is used in § 1 of Mass. Stat. 1887, yet it in no sense creates an easement in favor of plaintiff, but only makes it unlawful to do malevolently what the defendant still has a right to do from other motives. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407.

The right of action given by § 2, Mass. Stat. 1887, to an "owner or occupant injured either in his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate by such nuisance," means that the owners may have an action under some circumstances although not in occupation. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407.

If the jury upon a view of the fence in question are able to say that it would have the effect of diminishing the rent, or make it more difficult to let the premises, and so be an injury to the comfort or the enjoyment of his estate, what they see is evidence in the case. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407.

Where the action was brought by the owner, who had never occupied the premises, and there was no evidence of injury other than that gathered by the jury from a view of the premises, it was held that the comfort or enjoyment which must be enjoined must be comfort or enjoyment in the use of the premises, and that it is not enough that the owner not in occupation was disturbed in his mind when he thought about the fence, although an owner might suffer an actionable injury, as if the fence was likely to diminish his rents or to make Whatever a man has a legal right to do, he may do with impunity, regardless of his improper motives.

Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 369, 23 Am. Rep. 751.

Messrs. C. J. Estep and S. S. Ford, for defendant in error:

If one does an act, wholly on his own land, legal but prejudicial to his neighbor, not for his own ornament, but through unmixed malice to his neighbor, then he has done an injury which is actionable.

Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 164; Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 387; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Peck v. Bowman, 22 Ohio L. J. 111; Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 395.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:
The only question in this case arises upon it more difficult to get tenants, the injury to his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate on account of that reasonable anticipation being within the act. Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407.

Where the husband participated in erecting a lawful fence upon his wife's land at a greater height than declared by Mass. Stat. 1887, it was held that he was not liable to a prosecution under the provisions of the act for erecting or maintaining the nuisance no matter what his intentions might be, and that such fact did not prove the erection of the fence. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 388, 2 L. R. A. 81.

In Rice v. Moorehouse, 150 Mass. 482, defendant was sued for unnecessarily maintaining a fence over 6 feet in height for the purpose of annoying the plaintiff. The facts showed that the fence, at the time of action brought, was 16 feet in height, but that between such time and the trial the defendant cut it down to 7½ feet, and therefore contended that the judgment of the court below ordering the abatement of such a fence was wrong. The court held that, by reducing the height of the fence either before or after the trial, the defendant did not prevent the court from exercising its discretion, the facts showing that the defendant unnecessarily and for the purpose of annoyance maintained the fence, the maintenance of an unlawful structure giving the court jurisdiction of which the defendant could not deprive it by making alterations either material or immaterial in that which constituted the nuisance.

In Spaulding v. Smith, 162 Mass. 543, action was brought under the above statute. The facts showed that the fence was not a boundary one between the lots of the parties, but was upon the opposite side of the highway at least 21 feet from the nearest part of the land owned by the plaintiff, and separated from all his land which was not a part of the highway by a space 42 feet wide. The court held that the action could not be maintained as the fence was not situated with reference to the land of the adjoining owner who complained of it as a private nuisance so as to be within the meaning of the statute, and that to hold such a fence within the meaning of the statute would be a greater limitation of the rights of owners than the legislature intended to impose.

By N. H. Pub. Stat. ed. 1891, chap. 143, § 28, p. 398, it is provided: "Any fence or other structure in the nature of a fence, unnecessarily exceeding 5 feet in height, erected or maintained for the purpose of annoying the owners or occupants of adjoining property, shall be deemed a private nuisance." And by § 29 of the same, "any owner or occupant, injured either in his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate by such nuisance, may have an

the following findings of fact by the circuit court:

"Said structure was erected upon the land of the defendant and belonged to him. The structure was erected by said defendant from motives of unmixed malice toward said plaintiff, and for no useful or ornamental purposes of the property of said defendant."

It is not claimed that the person of the plaintiff was interfered with in this case, so that we have for consideration only the rights of property.

The fence complained of is upon the land of the defendant and belongs to him. Plaintiff fails to aver, and the court fails to find, that she has any right to or upon the lot of defendant below by contract, statute, or any other way known to the law for acquiring a right to, in, or upon lands, unless such right may be acquired by, and transferred to, her by action of tort for the damage sustained thereby;" and § 30 of the same provides that "if the plaintiff recovers judgment in the action, the defendant shall cause the removal of the nuisance within thirty days from the date of the judgment, and for each day he shall permit the nuisance to remain, after the expiration of said thirty days, he shall incur a penalty of $10 for the use of the party injured."

Where the structure complained of was about 20 feet long, 11 feet high, and had been erected for some ten years, and plaintiff complained that it excluded the light and air, obstructed the view, and was maintained by the defendant for the purposes of annoyance, and the defendant claimed to have maintained the structure as a sign board for his furniture store, and as a support against which to pile his furniture, and that it was useful to him, and the court charged, in substance, that the defendant was liable if he was actuated by two motives, one of annoyance and the other of utility, if the former was the controlling one,—it was held that the charge was sufficiently favorable to the plaintiffs. Hunt v. Coggin, 66 N. H. 140, decided under chap. 91 of the Laws of 1887.

By § 4697, chap. 193, title 81, Vt. Stat. ed. 1894, p. 843, it is provided: "No person shall erect or maintain an unnecessary fence or other structure, more than 6 feet in height, for the purpose of annoying the owners of adjoining property by obstructing their view or depriving them of light or air; and the selectmen, if the owner thereof fails, after twenty-four hours notice from them, to remove such fence, or structure, may enter and remove the same at the owner's expense;" and § 4698 provides: "If a person violates the provisions of the preceding section he shall be fined not more than $100."

Where the fence was erected for the express purpose of preventing the plaintiff using a way, thereby causing him damage, and the village trustees, upon his application, consented to have the way declared a public highway if he would pay the defendant land damages, it was held in an action brought by plaintiff for obstructing the way that the amount so paid could not be recovered from defendant. Holmes v. Fuller, 68 Vt. 207.

By Hill's Annotated Statutes and Codes of Washington, vol. 2, ed. 1891, title 6, chap. 8, § 298, p. 154, it is provided an injunction may be granted to restrain the malicious erection, by any owner or lessee of land, of any structure intended to spite, injure, or annoy an adjoining proprietor. And where any owner or lessee of land is maliciously erecting such a structure with such intent a mandatory injunction will lie to compel its abatement and removal.

E. W.

means of the aforesaid "motives of unmixed malice." This is a manner of acquiring on the one hand, and of transferring on the other, a right to property unknown to the law.

But it is urged in her behalf, that even if she had no right of property, and even if he was the owner of the lot, that he could not use his own land for the purpose of erecting structures thereon which subserve no useful or ornamental purpose, and are erected through motives of unmixed malice towards his adjoining neighbor.

It is and must be conceded that he might, by erecting a building on his lot, shut off her light and air to exactly the same extent as is done by this fence, and that in such case she would be without right, and without remedy, even though done with the same feelings of malice as induced him to erect the fence; thus making his acts lawful when the malice is seasoned with profit, or some show of profit to himself, and unlawful when his malice is unmixed with profit, the injury or inconvenience to her, meanwhile, remaining the same in both cases. If through feelings of malice he desires to shut the light and air from her windows, it is nothing to her whether he makes a profit or loss thereby. Her injury is no greater and no less in the one case than in the other. As to her it is the effect of the act, and not the motive. In effect he has the right to shut off the light and air from her windows by a building on his own premises, and she is not in effect concerned in the means by which such effect is produced, whether by a building or other structure; nor is she concerned as to the motive, nor as to whether he makes or loses by the operation. In the one case she might have a strong suspicion of his malice, while in the other such suspicion would be ripened into a certainty. But this is nothing to her as affecting a property right. As long as he keeps on his own property, and causes an effect on her property which he has a right to cause, she has no legal right to complain as to the manner in which the effect is produced, and to permit her to do so would not be enforcing a right of property, but a rule of morals. It would be controlling and directing his moral conduct by a suit in equity, by an injunction.

To permit a man to cause a certain injurious effect upon the premises of his neighbor by the erection of a structure on his own premises if such structure is beneficial or ornamental, and to prohibit him from causing the same effect in case the structure is neither beneficial nor ornamental, but erected from motives of pure malice, is not protecting a legal right, but is controlling his moral conduct. In this state a man is free to direct his moral conduct as he pleases, in so far as he is not restrained by statute. But it is said that such acts are offensive to the principles of equity. Not so. There is no conflict between law and equity in our practice, and what a man may lawfully do cannot be prohibited as inequitable. It may be immoral, and shock our notions of fairness, but what the law permits, equity tolerates. It would be much more inequitable and intolerable to allow a man's neighbors to question his motives every time that he should undertake to erect a structure upon his own premises, and drag him before a court of equity to ascertain whether he is about to erect the structure for ornament or profit, or through motives of unmixed malice.

The case is not like annoying a neighbor by means of causing smoke, gas, noisome smells, or noises to enter his premises, thereby causing injury. In such cases something is produced on one's own premises and conveyed to the premises of another; but in this case nothing is sent, but the air and light are withheld. A man may be compelled to keep his gas, smoke, odors, and noise at home, but he cannot be compelled to send his light and air abroad. Mullen v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 185, 2 Am. Rep. 379.

If smoke, gas, offensive odors, or noise pass from one's own premises to or upon the premises of another to his injury, an action will lie therefor, even though the smoke, gas, odor, or noise should be caused by the lawful business operations of defendant and with the best of motives. Broom, Legal Maxims, 372.

In such cases it is the effect or injury, and not the motive, that is regarded. The true test is, whether anything recognized by law as injurious passes from the premises of one neighbor to that of another. Anything so passing invades the legal rights of him whose premises it reaches, and such rights will be protected. But courts cannot regulate or control the moral conduct of a man, unless authorized so to do by statute.

The following cases, cited by plaintiff in error, bear more or less upon the question involved in this case, and seem to produce a decided weight of authority in his favor: Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294; Falloon v. Schilling, 29 Kan. 292, 44 Am. Rep. 642; Mahan v. Brown, 18 Wend. 261, 28 Am. Dec. 461; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 128; Chaffield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49.

The following additional authorities are to the same effect: Gould, Waters, § 280, citing Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349; Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co. 7 Exch. 282; Acton v. Blundell, 12 Mees. & W. 324; Hammond v. Hall, 10 Sim. 552; Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 99; Bolston v. Bensted, 1 Campb. 463; Galgay v. Great Southern & Western R. Co. 4 Ir. C. L. Rep. 456; Chase v. Silvester, 62 Me. 175, 16 Am. Rep. 419; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 538, 52 Am. Dec. 352; Brown v. Illius, 27 Conn. 84, 71 Am. Dec. 49; Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Assn. v. Asbury Park Comrs. 40 N. J. Eq. 447; Taylor v. Fickas, 64 Ind. 167, 31 Am. Rep. 114; Delhi v. Youmans, 45 N. Y. 362, 6 Am. Rep. 100; Dexter v. Providence Aqueduct Co. 1 Story, 387; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721, note; Haugh's Appeal, 102 Pa. 42, 48 Am. Rep. 193, note; Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514, 84 Am. Dec. 511; Coleman v. Chadwick, 80 Pa. 81, 21 Am. Rep. 93; Trout v. McDonald, 83 Pa. 146; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Smith v. Adams, 6 Paige, 485; Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82; Ellis v. Duncan, cited in 29 N. Y. 466; Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 200, 53 Am. Dec. 357; Pirley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 72; Goodale v. Tuttle, 29 N. Y. 466; Bliss v. Greeley, 45 N. Y. 671, 6 Am. Rep. 157; Clark v. Conroe, 38 Vt. 469;

Taylor v. Welch, 6 Or. 198; Mosier v. Caldwell, 7 Nev. 363; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112, 77 Am. Dec. 60; Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 43 N. H. 673, 82 Am. Dec. 179; [Kinnaird v. Standard Oil Co. 89 Ky. 463, 7 L. R. A. 451], 30 Cent. L. J. 269, 23 Am. L. Rev. 376; Davis v. Afong, 5 Haw. 216.

The defendant in error cites the cases reviewed in Frazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294, and also the case of Burke v. Smith, 69 Md. 395. Most of the cases cited are cases arising out of interference with wells, springs, and percolating waters; such cases bear but slightly upon the question. The Michigan case is substantially like the case under consideration. In that case the lower court enjoined the defendant, and that judgment was affirmed by an equally divided court. The syllabus says that the court being equally divided, nothing is decided. As nothing was decided, the case is not an authority on either side of the question.

But it is strongly urged by counsel for defendant in error, that the maxim, "Enjoy your own property in such a manner as not to injure that of another person," applies in such cases as this, and that as it must be conceded that the fence in question is an injury to the property of defendant in error, that his acts are in conflict with the above maxim.

At first blush this would seem to be so, but a careful consideration shows the contrary. The maxim if a very old one, and states the law too broadly. In this case, for instance, it is conceded that the plaintiff in error had the right to enjoy his property by erecting a house so as to do the same injury which was done by the fence, and that while that would be an injury to the property of defendant in error, she would be without remedy, and his act in erecting such house would not be regarded as violating the maxim.

In Jeffries v. Williams, 5 Exch. 797, it was claimed, and in Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 369, 23 Am. Rep. 751, it was held, that the true and legal meaning of the maxim is, "So use your own property as not to injure the rights of another." Boynton, J., in that case, says: "Where no right has been invaded, although one may have injured another, no liability has been incurred. Any other rule would be manifestly wrong." The maxim should be limited to causing injury to the rights of another, rather than to the property of another, because for an injury to the rights of another there is always a remedy, but there may be injuries to the property of another for which there is no remedy, as in draining a spring or well, or cutting off light and air or a pleasant view by the erection of buildings, and many other cases which might be cited.

Thus limiting the maxim to the rights of the defendant in error, it is plain that the acts of plaintiff in error in the use which he made of his property did not injure any legal right of hers, and that therefore what he did was not in violation of such maxim.

The circuit court erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition, and in rendering judgment in favor of defendant in error upon the facts as found by the court.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, and proceeding to render such judgment as the Circuit Court should have rendered upon the facts found, the petition of plaintiff below is dismissed at her cost.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

F. X. MARCOTTE

v.

C. V. ALLEN.

(.....Me.....)

A public officer receiving fees to which he is not entitled, from a party whom he knows to be ignorant of the law, without informing him that he was not bound to pay, receives money fraudulently, and is liable to an action for money had and received.

(December 13, 1897.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Androscoggin County made during the trial of an action brought to recover back money which plaintiff had paid defendant as fees for burial permits. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. G. Chabot, for plaintiff:

The money was paid under a mistake of fact; plaintiff acting under the belief that it was the rule for the undertaker to pay for such recording.

Evans v. Hughes County, 3 S. D. 244; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 645, note 2.

Money paid under a mistake of fact may be recovered back.

Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 129, 19 Am. Dec. 353; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 227, and cases note 1; Chitty, Contr. 5th Am. ed. 638, 664, note; Goodspeed v. Fuller, 46 Me. 150, 71 Am. Dec. 572; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 123.

Even if mistake arises from negligence of plaintiff.

1 Parsons, Contr. 482; Appleton Bank v. McGilroy, 4 Gray, 522, 64 Am. Dec. 92; Quimby v. Carr, 7 Allen, 417.

Or he might have discovered or known the facts by using all the means of information at his command.

Douglas County v. Keller, 43 Neb. 635.

He can recover if he has been guilty of negligent failure to use the means of knowledge opened to him.

Indianapolis v. McAvoy, 86 Ind. 587, and cases cited in 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 226, note 1.

NOTE.—As to extortion by officers, see Brackenridge v. State (Tex. App.) 4 L. R. A. 360, and cases in note thereto.

40 L. R. A.

This kind of action for money had and received is a most liberal action, and may be as comprehensive as a bill in equity.

Keene v. Sage, 75 Me. 140; Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575; Dana v. Kemble, 17 Pick. 549; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 117; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264.

And lies for the recovery of money which in equity, justice, and good conscience belongs to plaintiff, and which defendant ought not under all the circumstances to retain.

Lawson v. Lawson, 16 Gratt. 280, 80 Am. Dec. 102; Norton v. Marden, 15 Me. 46, 32 Am. Dec. 132; Brady v. Horroth, 64 Ill. App. 264; Freeman v. Curtis, 51 Me. 143, 81 Am. Dec. 564; Healey v. United States, 29 Ct. Cl. 115; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 180, 19 Am. Dec. 353.

No demand before bringing action is necessary.

Sturgis v. Preston, 184 Mass. 373; Moore v. Moore, 127 Mass. 23.

In this state the rule is stated that when money claimed as rightfully due is paid voluntarily and with full knowledge of all the facts, it cannot be recovered back, when the party to whom it has been paid can in good conscience and equity retain it.

Smith v. Readfield, 27 Me. 147; Fellows v. School Dist. No. 3, 39 Me. 561; Brisbane v. Dacres, 5 Taunt. 144; Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 515.

In one sense a person may be said always to have the means of knowledge. He may have access to books and to the assistance and instructions of his fellow men. But those means are not such as the law contemplates and requires.

Norton v. Marden, 15 Me. 45, 32 Am. Dec. 132.

Having the means of ascertaining the real facts is not the same as actual knowledge of them.

3 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 123 note A.

Mistake of law is an erroneous conclusion as to the legal effect of known facts.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 684, and cases cited.

Mistake of law constitutes a mistake only when it arises from, (1) a misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing that they knew and understood it and all making the same mistake as to the law; or (2) a misapprehension of the law by one party of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, but which they do not rectify.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 685, note; United States v. Barlow, 182 U. S. 271, 38 L. ed. 346, notes.

Where money has been paid under a mistake of law and facts, relief will be granted, especially if the opposite party will not thereby be injured.

Lane v. Holmes, 55 Minn. 379; Freeman v. Curtis, 51 Me. 140, 81 Am. Dec. 564; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 30.

If one party is mistaken as to the law, and the other, with knowledge, contracts with him, knowing that he is proceeding upon a mistake in law, there might arise a consideration of fraud in his taking advantage of the other's mistake.

Benson v. Monroe, 7 Cush. 181, 54 Am. Dec. 40 L. R. A.

716; Powell v. Smith, L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 226, notes; Higgins v. Mendenhall, 51 Iowa, 135; Whelens's Appeal, 70 Pa. 425; Hardigree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 154; Metropolitan Bank v. Godfrey, 23 Ill. 579; State v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303; Renard v. Clink, 91 Mich. 1; 2 Greenl. Ev. §§ 120, 121, cases cited.

There was a marked disparity in the position and means of knowledge of the parties, and therefore they were not on equal footing, and money so paid cannot in good conscience and equity be retained, no rights of third parties having intervened.

Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 81, 81 Am. Dec. 556; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 265.

As between the parties, no distinction should be made between mistake of law and mistake of facts.

Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 80, 81 Am. Dec. 556; Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 265.

Defendant was a public officer duly sworn to do his duty to and with the public with whom he was dealing, by virtue of his office: he was presumed to know his duty, to execute it with justice and honesty, and, by continuing to take and receive plaintiff's money for each and every burial permit, his continued silence there was equivalent to deceit and fraud.

Sartwell v. Horton, 28 Vt. 373; Walker v. Ham, 2 N. H. 288; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 12, 8 Am. Rep. 287; American Exch. F. Ins. Co. v. Britton, 8 Bosw. 148; Laterrade v. Kaiser, 15 La. Ann. 296.

Defendant was bound in duty and conscience to disclose the fact to plaintiff, and cannot retain money so received.

Fears v. Albee, 69 Tex. 437; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 644, 655, and notes; Laidlaw v. Organ, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 178, 4 L. ed. 214; Paddock v. Strobbridge, 29 Vt. 470; Planters' Bank v. Neely, 7 How. (Miss.) 95, 40 Am. Dec. 51; Cosby v. Buchanan, 90 U. S. 420, 23 L. ed. 138; Cleveland v. Smith, 132 U. S. 318, 33 L. ed. 384, and notes.

Messrs. W. H. Newell and W. B. Skelton for defendant.

Savage, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is an undertaker. The defendant is city clerk of the city of Lewiston. The plaintiff sues in this action, for money had and received, to recover back fees paid to the defendant for 376 burial permits issued under the provisions of Pub. Laws 1891, chap. 118, as amended by Pub. Laws 1895, chap. 154. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the presiding justice directed a nonsuit, to which ruling the plaintiff excepted.

By statute, the fees of city clerks for issuing burial permits are to be paid by the cities and towns; and it was admitted that "the defendant was paid his legal fees by the city of Lewiston for all the burial permits mentioned in this action prior to March, 1896."

Assuming, as we must, that the plaintiff's evidence was true, the case discloses the following facts: The plaintiff paid the money sued for to the defendant, as fees for burial permits issued by him. A fee of 25 cents was paid each time the plaintiff had occasion to require a permit. The plaintiff did not know that the statute required the city to pay the city clerk for his services in issuing permits, nor that the defendant was being paid by the city for the same. The defendant received and kept the money, and did not inform the plaintiff that the city was bound to pay, or was paying, his legal fees. The evidence does not show that the defendant demanded pay of the plaintiff, as a prerequisite to the issuing of the permits; but the defendant's predecessor in office asked the plaintiff to pay for such permits, which he did, and he "supposed it was the same rule, and paid him [the defendant] right along." From these facts it can hardly be inferred that the defendant thought these payments were gratuities, and we are satisfied that he must have known that the plaintiff paid these fees because he supposed he was bound to. It is clearly a case of payments made in ignorance of the law, and the defendant relies upon the well-settled rule that voluntary payments, made with full knowledge of all the facts, but under a mistake or through ignorance of the law, cannot be recovered. Norris v. Blethen, 19 Me. 348.

The defendant is a public officer, and, though he did not expressly demand the payment of these fees, he took them, knowing that the plaintiff was acting upon a mistaken view of his legal rights. The parties did not stand upon a level. The defendant was in a position where the plaintiff was justified in relying upon his conduct. A public officer must deal fairly with the public. Some courts have sustained actions like this on the ground of public policy. In American S. S. Co. v. Young, 89 Pa. 186, 33 Am. Rep. 748, the court said of the relations between a public officer and the public: "He and the public who have business to transact with him do not stand upon an equal footing. It is his special business to be conversant with the law under which he acts, and to know precisely how much he is authorized to demand for his services. But with them it is different. They have neither the time nor the opportunity of acquiring the information necessary to enable them to know whether he is claiming too much or not, and as a general rule, relying on his honesty and integrity, they acquiesce in his demands." See Baltimore v. Lefferman, 4 Gill, 425, 45 Am. Dec. 145, note; Walker v. Ham, 2 N. H. 238; Stevenson v. Mortimer, 2 Cowp. 805.

But, without deciding that this action is maintainable on the ground of public policy, we think it can be maintained upon another ground. Whenever a payment made in ignorance of the law is induced by the fraud or imposition of the other party, and especially if the parties are not upon an equal footing, an action to recover it back is maintainable. Stover v. Poole, 67 Me. 217; Silliman v. Wing, 7 Hill, 159; Bank of United States v. Duriel, 12 Pet. 32, 9 L. ed. 989; This court has declared, in Freeman v. Curtis, 51 Me. 140, 81 Am. Dec. 564, and in Jordan v. Stevens, 51 Me. 78, 81 Am. Dec. 558, that when one who himself knows the law, and knows another to be ignorant of it, takes advantage of his ignorance, it may be regarded as fraud. His very silence may be fraudulent. Downing v. Dearborn, 77 Me. 457.

For a public officer, whose fees, by law, are to be paid by the city, and are paid by the city, to receive fees to which he knows he is not entitled, and which he knows are being paid to him by a party ignorant of the law, who would not pay if he did know the law, and not to inform him that he was not bound to pay, is fraudulent; and such officer should restore the money, which he cannot conscientiously retain. To hold otherwise would be a reproach to the law.

It is the opinion of the court that the admission of the defendant, and the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, brought the case within this rule, and that the order directing a nonsuit was erroneous.

Exceptions sustained.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

INTERNATIONAL FRATERNAL ALLIANCE OF BALTIMORE CITY, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Maryland.

(86 Md. 550.)

1. Policies for more than $1,000 on one life, when they are policies of insurance such as co-operative assessment associations issue, and not certificates such as fraternal beneficiary associations issue, cannot be lawfully issued by a corporation subject to Code, § 128, although its charter provides, not only for insurance, but "for social or fraternal beneficial purposes, or both."

NOTE.—For certificates of benefit societies as insurance, see note to Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & T. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 38 L. R. A. 38.

40 L. R. A.

2. A corporation having a capital stock in which many members do not share, and conducting business for the pecuniary benefit of the stockholders, is not acting "for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit," within the meaning of Code, § 143c, so as to be entitled to issue fraternal beneficiary certificates.

3. Conditions and limitations attaching by law to the exercise of any given corporate purposes cannot be destroyed or subverted by combining such purposes with some other, under one corporation.

4. Proceedings to forfeit a franchise are not excluded by Code, art. 23, § 263, authorizing proceedings to restrain an assumption or exercise of any franchise, liberty, or privilege, or the transaction of unauthorized business.

5. A deliberate attempt by a corporation to evade the insurance law of the state in one of its most important provisions is ground for forfeiting the charter.

6. An insurance corporation forfeits its franchise by deliberately exceeding the amount for which it is allowed by law to issue policies on any one life.

(January 4, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City annulling the charter of defendant for doing illegal business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles Marshall, John Prentiss Poe, and Charles L. Wilson, for appellant:

None of the alleged grounds of forfeiture amount to either an abuse or misuse of the corporate powers of the appellant. Abuse or misuse of corporate privileges is any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, wilfully done or caused to be done by those appointed to manage the general concerns of the corporation.

Erie & N. E. R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 285.

The judgment of forfeiture was erroneous, for the reason that the acts complained of are not alleged to have been wilfully and knowingly wrong.

Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 106; State v. Consolidation Coal Co. 46 Md. 1.

Corporations under the Code may be formed for manufacturing purposes, and corporations may be formed for mining purposes. And so also may one corporation be lawfully formed for the purpose of combining these two purposes and carrying them on together.

Basshor v. Dressel, 34 Md. 503.

So, fraternal beneficial associations may be formed for the conducting exclusively of the business belonging to such associations, or if the incorporators think the "general interests" of the corporation will be promoted by blending with the fraternal beneficial business the business of accident insurance on the assessment plan, or the business of endowment or mortuary insurance, our Code authorizes the formation of one single corporation for any or all of these legitimate purposes.

Messrs. H. M. Clabaugh, Attorney General, and George R. Gaither, Jr., for appellee.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By direction of the governor, the attorney general instituted proceedings in the superior court of Baltimore city against the appellant, alleging that it had been guilty of abuse and misuse of its corporate powers and privileges. The authority for this proceeding is given by article 23, § 255, of the Code; and the succeeding sections, to 262, inclusive, regulate the practice. The grounds relied on in the petition are, in substance: (1) That the defendant, as shown by the by-laws, was not organized for "fraternal beneficial purposes," and that, in conducting the operations described in its by-laws, it was guilty of both abuse and misuse of its corporate franchises, and is carrying on operations without due warrant of law. (2) That while purporting to be organized for "fraternal beneficial purposes," under the provisions of chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894, it is organized with a capital of $10,000, and subject to the control and management of its stockholders, and although purporting to give representation to its certificate or policy holders, under its by-laws it subjects them to the will of the stockholders. (3) That the business carried on is substantially in the nature of insurance business, and it has issued a policy known as the "Golden Cycle Policy," which would mature in seven years, and the holders of which are subject to certain dues and assessments; that, in addition to the regular dues, the corporation has levied a "note assessment" of $650 on each "maturing holder" in or about the last year of the maturing of the policy, and, in the event of the notes not being given for such assessment, the policies would lapse; that the levying of such excessive assessments was a practical forfeiture of the policies, and an abuse and misuse of the charter powers. (4) That the defendant, though incorporated with a capital of $10,000, and having deposited with the state insurance commissioner the sum of $10,000, is issuing, or offering to issue, policies for more than $1,000 on any one life. (5) That it is pretending to operate under the scheme of a fraternal beneficial society, as set out in chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894, and at the same time is subject to the rights, privileges, and control of its stockholders. (6) That, purporting to carry on the business of a fraternal beneficial society, it has issued policies of insurance, to the number of 2,400, to infants under ten years of age, which is contrary to the purposes of such societies. (7) That the business carried on by said corporation is substantially in the nature of an insurance business, and not within the scope of the scheme of fraternal beneficial societies, and not in accordance with its charter rights. The defendant filed an answer which denies that it has violated its charter, and gives a history of its organization. In June, 1888, a corporation was formed, under the name of the Order of the International Benevolent & Fraternal Company of Baltimore City, "for social, benevolent, fraternal, and beneficial purposes," with a capital stock of $5,000, divided into 1,000 shares of $5 each. In January, 1889, the charter was amended, whereby the stock feature was omitted, and the name changed to the Order of the International Fraternal Alliance of Baltimore City; and in June, 1893, it was further amended by changing the name to the International Fraternal Alliance of Baltimore City, and providing for a capital stock of $10,000, divided into 100 shares of $100 each. It is stated in these amended articles that the corporation was formed "(a) for social or fraternal beneficial purposes, or both," etc.; "(h) to grant and issue insurance on the lives of individuals of both sexes, upon the mutual, assessment, or co-operative plan, as provided in § 127 of article 23 of the Code of Public General Laws of the state of Maryland, and the other sections of said article applicable to such mutual, assessment, or co-operative insurance," etc. It is also authorized to provide in its by-laws for loans to its members, policy or certificate holders, of any surplus accumulations, upon the building association plan, as defined in §§ 95 to 124, inclusive, of article 28. In November, 1895, the charter was further amended, and the defendant was operating under the articles as thus amended at the time these proceedings were instituted, and hence we are to determine whether or not they have been violated as charged, so far as we can from the answer, as the case was submitted on demurrer to the answer.

In the case in 77 Md. 547, against this corporation, this court had before it the charter of January, 1889, and held that the appellant had no authority under that charter to carry on the insurance business. The lower court had ordered that its charter be forfeited, but this court, although fully concurring with the judge below that the appellant had exceeded its powers, decided that it should be permitted to continue, and either report to the appropriate jurisdiction to adjust and wind up its insurance business, or amend its charter under §§ 17 and 38 of article 23 of the Code, and bring itself within the provisions of the insurance laws of the state. That case was decided on the 21st day of June, 1893; and five days afterwards the charter was amended by the articles of June, 1893, above referred to, Chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894 having been passed, another amendment to the charter was adopted in 1895, as above stated. After the passage of the act of 1894, some of the members of the appellant filed a bill alleging that it was insolvent, charging fraud in the management of its affairs, and claiming that the whole scheme of the corporation has been changed, in violation of the rights of the complainants. Barton v. International Fraternal Alliance, 85 Md. 14. In that case we said: "A corporation of this character is clearly within the terms of the act of 1894, chap. 295. Its charter authorizes it to be, and it is, a fraternal beneficial association operating on the lodge system, and carried on for the sole benefit of its beneficiaries." The relief prayed for was refused because, under our construction of § 143e of chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894, we were confined to the single question whether or not the corporation was insolvent, and that it was not shown to be. It has thus been determined by this court that this appellant could unite the insurance business with the original purposes of its charter, by a proper amendment, and that the act of 1894 was applicable to it. Let us, then, see whether it has violated its charter in any of the particulars alleged in the petition.

One of the most serious and important charges is that embodied in paragraph 7, wherein it is alleged that the appellant is unlawfully issuing policies for more than $1,000 on any one life. The answer admits that it had issued, in all, fifty-nine policies, for amounts ranging from $1,250 to $5,000, and that it still had in force 31 of them, but it denies that it is a violation of its charter. The charter as amended in 1895, provides for a corporation "for social or fraternal beneficial purposes, or both," and "to grant and issue insurance or benefits upon the lives of individuals of both sexes, as provided in § 127, art. 23, of the Code, and as provided in § 143e," etc. The language used in stating the purposes of the organizations, as to the social or fraternal beneficial feature, is the same as that in the charter of 1889, which was before this court in 77 Md. 547. It was distinctly held in that case that the appellant was not authorized to issue the policies then being considered, which were those in the Golden Cycle class, because it was thereby conducting an insurance business, which its charter did not empower it to do; and it would seem to follow as a necessary consequence of that decision that it cannot now, under that branch of its charter, issue policies either of the Golden Cycle class, or of the other classes in the record; the latter being clearly as much subject to the insurance law of the state as the former. Prior to the passage of chapter 295 of the Acts of 1894, the only possible excuse for the appellant's issuing any policies of insurance was by virtue of § 127 of article 23 of the Code, "and the other sections of said article applicable to such mutual, assessment, or co-operative insurance," as its charter of 1893 expressly relied on them for such power. That section provided for imposing penalties on those who fail to comply with the insurance laws, and defined what was to be deemed a life insurance company, within the meaning of article 23, but provided that the business might be conducted on the mutual or co-operative plan, on the terms therein set out. Section 128, as amended by chapter 488 of the Laws of 1892, provided that "organizations, as described in § 127, other than fraternal orders issuing certificates for the payment of money or other benefits in the event of sickness, accident, or death, or other contingency, either to the member, policy or certificate holder," etc., but issuing no certificates for the payment of a greater sum than $1,000 upon one life, could be formed either on the mutual, co-operative, assessment, or stock plan, and, if on the latter, should have a paid-up capital of at least $10,000, and required every such company to keep the sum of 10,000, in money or securities, with the insurance commissioner. The appellant fixed its capital stock at $10,000, and alleges in its answer that it has deposited $10,000 with the insurance commissioner, although we suppose, from the connection, it meant to say that the deposit had been made under chapter 295 of the Acts of 1894. Section 128 was further amended by chapter 256 of the Acts of 1894, and in that amendment it omits the words "other than fraternal orders," but continues the provisions as to stock, and requires all such companies, whether formed on the mutual, co-operative, assessment, or stock plan, to keep $10,000 on deposit with the insurance commissioner, and still limits the certificates to $1,000 upon any one life. The amendment of 1895 provided for issuing insurance or benefits upon the lives of individuals of both sexes, as provided in § 127 and § 143e, subject to the supervision of, and the making of reports and the payment of fees to, the insurance commissioner, under chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894. Section 143e does not provide for the formation of corporations, but it does provide for the corporations, etc., therein described, continuing business under the provisions governing fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, on the condition that each shall deposit the sum of $10,000, in dividend-bearing securities, with the insurance commissioner, as a guaranty of the payment of certificates issued by it. The certificates therein referred to are such as fraternal beneficiary associations issue, and not insurance policies, such as those in the record are. The latter are of the character that co-operative assessment associations issue. This corporation could not issue such policies of insurance, as a fraternal beneficiary society. It was decided in 77 Md. 547, that it must become an insurance company in order to do so; and the act of 1894 did not aid it in that respect. It did become an insurance company, and, although it amended its charter, and, in terms, referred to § 143e, etc., it cannot escape from the requirements and limitations of the insurance laws by such means. It is evident that the legislature did not intend, by the provisions in § 143e, to authorize a corporation to issue such policies as the court had said could only be issued by insurance companies; and, if there were any doubt on that question § 143r ought to remove it. It says that "any association entitled to do business in this state under the provisions of § 143e to § 143r (both inclusive) of this article, which shall so conduct its affairs, or shall in any manner change its charter, constitution, or laws, so that it shall not answer to the description of a fraternal beneficiary association, as set forth in § 143e, shall thereupon cease to be entitled to the privilege of said section." It cannot be said that a corporation having a capital stock, and issuing policies such as these, is then acting "for the sole benefit of its members, and their beneficiaries, and not for profit" (the description of a fraternal beneficiary association set forth in § 143e); and hence it cannot issue these policies, under that section, and, if it attempts to do so, it ceases to be entitled to the privileges of it. When the appellant became an insurance company, it made itself subject to all the provisions of article 28 applicable to life insurance companies, excepting so far as it brought itself within some of the exemptions. By § 116, every life insurance company incorporated under that article is required to have a guaranty capital of not less than $100,000 to be invested in securities, which shall be deposited in the treasury of the state as a guaranty for the payment of the policies issued by it; and §§ 112 and 136 provide that the capital stock, excepting mutual companies, shall not be less than $100,000. It was doubtless to avoid these requirements that § 127 was referred to in appellant's charter. Section 128, as we have seen, authorizes the formation of organizations as described in § 127, with a capital of $10,000, and a deposit of $10,000, but it is upon the express condition that no policy should issue upon any one life for more than $1,000. The appellant is therefore not authorized to issue such policies as those in the record for more than that amount on any one life, and has violated its charter by doing so. Indeed, so far as we can gather from the answer, it would appear that only one sum of $10,000 had been deposited with the commissioner, and that under the act of 1894; but, as that is not clear, we have assumed, for the purposes of the discussion, that it had made the deposit under the insurance branch of its charter, as well as under the act of 1894.

40 L. R. A.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss at length the question, which occupies considerable space in the very able brief of the appellant's attorneys, whether, under our laws, there can be a "double incorporation" for such purposes as those named in the appellant's charter. It is proper to say that we do not understand, as contended in that brief, that the learned judge below decided that question in the negative, but, on the contrary, he did not pass on it. He did hold, however, and very properly so, "that, where the law attaches certain conditions and limitations to the exercise of any given corporate purposes, those conditions and limitations cannot be destroyed or subverted by combining such purpose with some other, under one corporation. If the two cannot be united in a joint prosecution, their administration must, at least, be kept separate. The statute will not permit the evasion or abrogation of prescribed requisites and conditions by a scheme of combination." So, although it may be that one corporation can, as a fraternal beneficiary association, carry on certain parts of its business "for the sole benefit of its members and their beneficiaries, and not for profit," and can, as an insurance company, conduct another part of its business for the benefit of its stockholders, yet it is impossible that the business of two such classes can be so blended as not to be separable; for, if that be done, it can no longer be for the sole benefit of its members. Assuming that the appellant could issue certificates of the kind contemplated in chapter 295 of the Laws of 1894, for such sums as it saw proper, it cannot issue insurance policies for any amount under that law, and under the insurance law is limited to $1,000. If there be profits in the insurance business, are the stockholders, exclusively, or all the members, to share in them? Undoubtedly the former would be the case, unless there be some express provision in the charter or by-laws to make it otherwise. It is true there are some by-laws of the appellant which apparently vest the control in the hands of the members, to some extent, at least, but there is in the book of the by-laws adopted in 1896 a note which states that certain by-laws of 1895 are to remain in force. Among them is article 7 of part 2, which says: "The stockholders may at any special or annual meeting exercise all or any of the powers conferred upon this corporation by the public general laws of the state of Maryland, anything to the contrary in these by-laws notwithstanding," etc. It is not necessary to enumerate the powers stockholders have under our general incorporation laws in corporations having capital stock. We find no provision in the charter or by-laws requiring the members to be stockholders, and it would, of course, be impracticable, as there are only 100 shares of stock. The "members," as they are called, are at the mercy of the stockholders, and the business is conducted for the pecuniary benefit of the latter, so far as we can see from the by-laws and the conduct of the business; and, notwithstanding the space given in the charter and the by-laws to the regulations and provisions of the social or fraternal features of the alliance, the conclusion is irresistible that it is in reality a life insurance company, and is seeking to relieve itself of some of the burdens imposed on corporations of that character, for the protection of the public, by assuming the guise of a fraternal beneficiary society. Its answer, and article 6 of part 2 of the by-laws, show that it is engaged in issuing and offering policies to the amount of $5,000, while it has no authority to issue them in a larger amount than $1,000 on any one life, even if it has made the deposit as required by § 128 of article 28. But it is urged in its behalf that it was innocent of any intentional violation of the law, and therefore its charter should not be forfeited. This court has previously been called upon to deal leniently with it, and, although legal cause was shown for the forfeiture of its charter, yet, being of opinion that the public interest did not then demand it, we permitted it to continue its existence. But it would be going very far, when we for the second time have found that it was exceeding its charter powers, to again grant it such indulgence. That it has abused and misused its corporate powers by issuing policies in sums in excess of $1,000, we have no doubt. It is true that § 268 of article 23 authorizes proceedings to restrain a corporation from assuming or exercising any franchise, liberty, or privilege, or transacting any business, not allowed by the charter, but that does not exclude other proceedings; and in this instance, in the exercise of them there have been both an abuse and a misuse of its corporate powers by the appellant. When a company is authorized to insure under provisions that expressly limit the amount of the policies to be issued, and it deliberately exceeds that amount, it clearly abuses and misuses the powers vested in it. It is no longer safe to permit it to continue to exercise even the powers that were authorized. Nor can we doubt that there has been a deliberate attempt to evade the insurance laws of the state, and that, too, in one of its most important provisions. There are so many schemes to catch the unwary, and so many inducements offered to attract people, especially those of limited means, desirous of making some provision for those dependent upon them, that it is of the utmost importance that all corporations, organizations, and individuals that engage in life insurance be made to understand that they must at least obey the laws of the state, and that no evasion of them will be tolerated. This is necessary for the protection of the public, as well as those conducting their business in accordance with law.

It is not necessary that we should discuss the other grounds relied on by the state, as we are of opinion that those already referred to are sufficient to require us to affirm the order of the court below.

Order affirmed, with costs.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Mary A. INGERSOLL et al.

v.

Charles W. HOPKINS et al.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A will made before Stat. 1892, chap. 118, took effect is within its provisions as to revocation by marriage, when the testator married after the act took effect.

2. The fact that a will was made in contemplation of marriage does not "appear from the will itself" so as to prevent its revocation by the testator's subsequent marriage, under Stat. 1892, chap. 118, merely because he wills all his property to a woman whom he appoints as one of the executors and afterward marries.

(February 28, 1898.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County of an appeal from a decree of the Probate Court admitting to probate the will of Charles D. Ingersoll, deceased.

Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. H. Emmons and Wilfred Bolster, for appellants:

It does not "appear from the will itself," as required by the statute, "that the will was made in contemplation of such marriage."

By his own act of marriage, testator revoked the will by bringing himself within the terms and prohibition of the statute. He lived nearly four years after this marriage had revoked his will, and he could easily have made a new one if he had desired to carry out the provisions of the previous will.

See Sloninger v. Sloninger, 161 Ill. 270; Crum v. Sawyer, 182 Ill. 448.

In Swan v. Sayles, 165 Mass. 177, this court decided: (1) "It does not appear from the will or codicil that either was made in contemplation of the marriage." (2) "A statute revoking wills at any time before the death of the testator for any cause probably would be within the constitutional power of the general court."

See also Sherman v. Sherman, 8 Barb. 385, and cases there cited; also Cushing v. Aylwin, 12 Met. 169.

The English statute is the same as ours, without the exception about the will being made in contemplation of marriage.

Under this statute it has been held that no intention of testator and no hardship to the beneficiary can prevent the revocation, even when made in contemplation of marriage, and in favor of the woman to whom he was married immediately after making the will.

Otway v. Sadleir, 38 L. T. 46; Goods of Cadywood, 1 Swab. & T. 54; Marston v. Roe, 8 Ad. & El. 14; 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. pp. 145, 146; Warter v. Warter, L. R. 15 Prob. Div. 152.

NOTE.—For revocation of will by marriage, see some cases in note to Riggs v. Palmer (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 346; and also in note to Davis v. Fogle (Ind.) 7 L. R. A. 485, and the cases of Roane v. Hollingshead (Md.) 17 L. R. A. 592, and Re Hulitt (Minn.) 84 L. R. A. 384.
40 L. R. A.

The same has been held in the United States.

Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. 202; Edward's Appeal, 47 Pa. 144; Walker v. Hall, 34 Pa. 483.

And the same construction should be given to it by this court.

Com. v. Hartnett, 3 Gray, 450.

The parol evidence offered to show that the will was executed in contemplation of the marriage was properly rejected. In order to save the will from revocation by a subsequent marriage, the will itself must contain the requisite evidence that the event was contemplated.

Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415; Ellis v. Darden, 86 Ga. 368, 11 L. R. A. 51.

Revocation resulted absolutely as a legal consequence of the marriage, and was absolute the instant of the marriage.

Edward's Appeal, 47 Pa. 144.

Messrs. Alfred Hemenway and Edward B. Adams, for appellees:

The facts admitted in evidence showed beyond the possibility of a doubt that the will was in fact made in contemplation of the marriage with the sole beneficiary subsequently solemnized.

According to the ordinary rule applied in the construction of wills, it appears "from the will itself" that the will was made in contemplation of marriage with the sole beneficiary. In order to ascertain the testator's intention, as expressed in his will, it is the duty of the court, while excluding evidence of expressions of intention by the testator outside the will, to admit all material facts surrounding the testator at the time he made his will, and to read the will in the light of those facts.

Reed v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. 95 U. S. 23, 30, 24 L. ed. 348, 349; Blackburn, Contract of Sale, 50, note; Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. 371; Heard v. Read, 169 Mass. 216.

In every case the words used must be translated into things and facts by parol evidence.

Doherty v. Hill, 144 Mass. 465; Wigram, Wills, 2d Am. ed. p. 152.

In England it seems to be the accepted doctrine that whatever appears from the words of the will, properly interpreted by the surrounding facts, appears from the will.

Cole v. Scott, 1 Macn. & G. 518; Wilson v. Eden, 18 Q. B. 474; Matthews v. Foulsham, L. R. 2 Eq. 669; Kimball v. Ellison, 128 Mass. 41.

The word "itself" can add no more force to "from the will" than the adjectives "clearly and manifestly" which are used in Rev. Stat. chap. 62, § 8.

Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. 118; Denfield, Petitioner, 156 Mass. 265.

The statute did not change the ordinary rule applied to the interpretation of wills by requiring express statement of the testator's matrimonial intentions in his will.

"From the will itself" does not mean "from express statement in the will," but does mean "from the will itself, rather than from declarations of the testator outside of it."

Brimmer v. Sohler, 1 Cush. 118; Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. 93; Swan v. Sayles, 165 Mass. 177.

To allow the statute to operate to revoke a will in which the wife is made sole beneficiary would be to put a construction on it which would defeat the manifest purpose of its framers. This the court will not do.

Holbrook v. Holbrook, 1 Pick. 248; Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 366, 35 Am. Dec. 326; Church v. Crocker, 3 Mass. 17; Langdon v. Potter, 3 Mass. 215; Thaxter v. Jones, 4 Mass. 570; Somerset v. Dighton, 12 Mass. 388; Whitney v. Whitney, 14 Mass. 88; Burlingame v. Bell, 16 Mass. 318; Com. v. Cambridge, 20 Pick. 287; Stanislaus v. Raymond, 4 Cush. 314; Opinion of the Justices, 136 Mass. 578.

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The will of Charles D. Ingersoll, of Boston, was executed on October 20, 1891, and in it he gave all his property to Mary Alice Payson, of said Boston, "single woman," and appointed her one of the executors, and requested that the executors "be required to give no sureties on their official bonds." It appears from the testimony admitted by the justice who reported the case to this court that the testator and Miss Payson were married on October 19, 1892; that the testator died on September 28, 1896; that prior to the time when the will was executed the testator and Miss Payson had mutually promised to marry each other; that the contract of marriage remained in force from the time of the engagement until the marriage, and that she lived with him as his wife from the time of her marriage until his death. From this evidence, in connection with the will, the presiding justice found, as matter of fact, so far as he properly could, that it appears from the will itself, "by fair inference from its provisions as applied to the parties and the subjects to which it relates, that the will was made in contemplation of the marriage that was subsequently solemnized," and he affirmed the decree of the probate court allowing the will. The question of law in this case depends upon the construction to be given to Stat. 1892, chap. 118, of which the 1st section is as follows: "The marriage of any person shall act as a revocation of any will made by such person previous to such marriage, unless it shall appear from the will itself that the will was made in contemplation of such marriage, or unless and except so far as the will is made in exercise of a power of appointment and the estate thereby appointed would not, in default of appointment, pass to the persons that would have been entitled to the same if it had been the testator's own estate and he or she had died without disposing of it by will." It is manifest, we think, that from the will itself, considered independently of the testimony admitted by the presiding justice, it does not appear that the will was made in contemplation of marriage with Miss Payson. It is impossible to hold, in every case where a testator, by his will, gives property, or all his property, to a woman who is unmarried, and makes her his executrix, that it appears from this that at the time when he made the will he contemplated marrying her, and made his will in contemplation of such marriage. It does not appear that there was any dispute or uncertainty as to the Mary Alice Payson intended, or that any evidence was necessary to identify her or the estate which was devised and bequeathed to her. The evidence was admitted to show another fact existing at the time when the will was made, namely, that at that time the testator was under a contract of marriage with her; and then, by considering this fact in connection with the provisions of the will, the presiding justice drew the inference that the will was made in contemplation of the marriage with her which afterwards took place. It was, in effect, conceded by both sides that, although the will was made before Stat. 1892, chap. 118, took effect, yet, as the marriage took place after the statute took effect, the statute was applicable to the case. See Swan v. Sayles, 165 Mass. 177.

The counsel for the appellees cite the decisions of this court upon the construction of what is now Pub. Stat. chap. 127, § 21, which section is as follows: "When a testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children or for the issue of a deceased child, they shall take the same share of his estate that they would have been entitled to if he had died intestate, unless they have been provided for by the testator in his lifetime, or unless it appears that the omission was intentional and not occasioned by accident or mistake." Under the statutory provision which now constitutes this section, the court held that parol evidence is admissible to show that the omission by a testator to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of a deceased child, was intentional, and was not occasioned by accident or mistake. Converse v. Wales, 4 Allen, 512. But the section does not require that it should appear from the will itself that the omission was intentional, and it well may be that the reason for using the different phraseology in Stat. 1892, chap. 118, was that the legislature did not intend to leave the question whether a will was made in contemplation of a marriage, which subsequently took place, to the uncertainty which often attends the proof of facts by oral evidence.

The counsel for the appellees also rely upon the construction which has been given to what is now Pub. Stat. chap. 127, §§ 24, 25. Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. 93; Brimmer v. Solier, 1 Cush. 118. These sections are as follows:

"Sec. 24. Every devise shall be construed to convey all the estate which the testator could lawfully devise in the lands mentioned, unless it clearly appears by the will that he intended to convey a less estate.

"Sec. 25. An estate, right, or interest in lands acquired by a testator, after the making of his will, shall pass thereby in like manner as if possessed by him at the time when he made his will, if such manifestly and clearly appears by the will to have been the testator's intention."

The decisions are to the effect that the intention of the testator under these sections need not be declared in express terms in the will, but that it is sufficient if the intention can be clearly inferred from particular provisions of the will, and from its general scope and import. The decisions give no sanction to the doctrine that such intention can be shown by evidence other than that derived from the will itself. The statute in England on the subject is as follows: "And be it further enacted, that every will made by a man or woman shall be revoked by his or her marriage (except a will made in exercise of a power of appointment, when the real or personal estate thereby appointed would not, in default of such appointment, pass to his or her heir, customary heir, executors or administrators, or the person entitled as his or her next of kin, under the statute of distributions)." 1 Vict. chap. 26, § 18. There it is held that no intention of the testator, even though expressed in the will itself, can prevent the revocation of the will by a subsequent marriage. Oway v. Sadleir, 33 L. T. 46; Goods of Cadywood, 1 Swab. & T. 34; 1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. *110 et seq. Our statute follows closely the English statute, inserting only the exception, "unless it shall appear from the will itself that the will was made in contemplation of such marriage." The intention of our legislature apparently was not to follow the English statute as interpreted by the English courts, when it appeared from the will itself that it was made in contemplation of a marriage which subsequently took place, but to follow it in other respects, and to exclude from consideration any evidence not derived from the will itself. The statute of Georgia more nearly resembles ours, and it is there held that parol evidence cannot be received to show that the will was made "in contemplation of the event" of marriage or the birth of a child. Ellis v. Darden, 86 Ga. 368, 11 L. R. A. 51. In the opinion of a majority of the court, Stat. 1892, chap. 118, means that when the will is not made in the exercise of a power of appointment it must be apparent on the face of the will itself that the will was made in contemplation of "such marriage," either by an express declaration in the will to that effect, or by language in the will from which such contemplation may fairly be inferred; otherwise a subsequent marriage "shall act as a revocation."

A decree should be entered that the decree of the Probate Court allowing the will is reversed, and that the will is disallowed, and the case remanded to the probate court for further proceedings. Decree accordingly.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

In the Matter of C. C. THOMPSON.

(.....Or.....)

The resignation of an attorney without consent or privilege of the court is ineffectual to preclude his disbarment, when proceedings therefor were pending at the time of his resignation.

(March 21, 1898.)

PROCEEDINGS to disbar an attorney.Judgment of disbarment entered.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. B. Linthicum for plaintiff.Per Curiam:

This is a proceeding to disbar an attorney, instituted upon the relation of the members of the grievance committee of the Oregon State Bar Association. The information charges that C. C. Thompson, a licensed attorney, was indicted, tried, and convicted of a felony, viz.: the crime of larceny by baillee, and thereupon sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, and prays that he may be required to answer the accusation, and upon proof thereof that he be disbarred from practising his profession in this state. An order requiring the accused to answer the charges on or before a day therein stated was made by the court, and personally served upon him in Multnomah county, by the sheriff thereof, who also delivered to him a copy of the information, but, instead of answering the latter, he filed in this court, before the day so appointed, a written resignation as an attorney. An attorney is permitted, at any time, to file in the office of the county clerk of the county in which he resides a written resignation, upon receiving which it is made the duty of such clerk immediately to forward a certified copy thereof to the clerk of this court, who shall file the same in his office. After filing such resignation, the attorney is not entitled to the rights nor subject to the disabilities or prohibitions incident to that relation, except that he is still subject to the power of the court in respect to matters arising while he was an attorney. Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) §§ 1045, 1046. The courts of England, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, adopted a rule which provided that the name of an attorney would not be stricken from the rolls at his own request, without an affidavit that he did not apply therefor under an apprehension that charges would be preferred against him. Ex parte Owen, 6 Ves. Jr. 11; Ex parte Foley, 8 Ves. Jr. 33. In New York it was held that, notwithstanding an attorney may have quit the practice of his profession, he was nevertheless amenable to the orders and process of the court as long as his name remained upon the roll of attorneys. Scott v. Van Alstyne, 9 Johns. 216. Undoubtedly § 1045, supra, was enacted in view of these rules, from which it would appear that, while an attorney may voluntarily resign his office, and thus relinquish the rights conferred by his admission to the bar, and escape the disabilities incident thereto, Thompson's resignation, not having been made with the consent or approval of this court, cannot have the effect of striking his name from the roll of attorneys, and, as long as his name remains thereon, he must be subject to its summary jurisdiction, and amenable to its orders and judgments, in so far as they relate to acts committed by him prior to his resignation. The accused, having been convicted of a felony while he sustained the relation of an attorney, ought not to be permitted, by his voluntary act, to have his name stricken from the roll of attorneys while charges are pending against him. He had notice of the pendency of this proceeding, and was thereby afforded an opportunity of being heard, but failed to answer the accusation, thus tacitly confessing the truth of the charges, which is apparent from an inspection of the records of this court, to which our attention is particularly called. State v. Thompson, 28 Or. 296.

The statute authorizes the removal or suspension of an attorney upon his being convicted of any felony (Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 1047), thus leaving the penalty, to some extent, to the discretion of the court (Ex parte Mason, 29 Or. 18). The citizen is frequently compelled to intrust the management of some of his business to an attorney, who, as agent of his principal, has authority to act for and bind the latter; and, while the law clothes the agent with this measure of power, it requires of him the utmost good faith in the performance of the duty intrusted to him in consequence of the position he occupies as an officer of the courts. If an attorney be convicted of a felony, the nature of which is calculated to injure his reputation for the performance of duty which the law enjoins, the punishment should be removal; for, if the court permits such an attorney to escape with a light sentence, it tends to lessen the respect which the public should ever have for the members of this learned profession.

The judgment of this court will therefore be that the name of C. C. Thompson be stricken from the roll of attorneys as a person unfit to belong to the profession; that he be disbarred from practising in any of the courts of this state; and that the state recover of the accused the costs and expenses of this proceeding.

NOTE.—For some authorities on the general question of the disbarment of attorneys, see Fairfield County Bar, Fessenden, v. Taylor (Conn.) 13 L. R. A. 767, and note.
40 L. R. A.

As to the necessity of a bad or fraudulent motive to justify the disbarment of an attorney, see State, Fowler, v. Finley (Fla.) 18 L. R. A. 401.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Wyoming, ex rel. City of CHEYENNE,

τ.

Daniel S. SWAN, Treasurer of Laramie County.

(..... Wyo.....)

1. It is the duty of the court to examine legislative journals to determine a disputed fact whether or not a statute as published is in fact that which was passed by the legislature, where the Constitution requires that each house shall keep a journal, and that no bill shall become a law, unless on its final passage; the vote taken by ayes and noes is entered on the journal.

2. Legislative journals constitute a record which is competent to overthrow the presumption that an act properly signed by the presiding officers of the legislature, approved by the governor, and deposited in the secretary's office, was regularly passed.

3. If the amendments proposed by the conference committee and adopted by both houses of the legislature were copied in full upon the journals, an enrolled bill which does not contain them cannot be presumed to have been the one actually passed, although the amendments were not required by law to be spread at length upon the journal.

4. The invalidity of one section of a statute which is in material relation to other portions of the act, so as to modify, restrict, or extend its application, will cause the failure of the other portions also.

(December 15, 1897.)

QUESTIONS reserved by the District Court for Laramie County for the opinion of the Supreme Court which arose in a mandamus proceeding to compel defendant to proceed to sell certain property for delinquent taxes under the provisions of a statute. Answers in respondent's favor returned.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. W. Mann, for relator:

The journals of the two houses of the legislature cannot be used as evidence to impeach the validity of an enrolled act, and hence they are not competent evidence to show that § 1 of the law is not an exact copy of § 1 of the act which passed both houses of the legislature.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 202; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294.

Mr. R. W. Breckons, for respondent:

Section 1 of the act in question never passed the legislature of the state of Wyoming; it was never placed on its final passage before both branches of the legislature; there was no vote taken by the ayes and noes upon the final passage of said act; and the names of those voting upon the final passage of said act were not entered upon the journal of the legislature.

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the keeping of a journal they surely intended that certain proceedings of the legislature should be entered thereon, and when the various state legislatures of the state of Wyoming provided for the making of certified copies of such journals to be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and to be sent also to printers for publication, they surely intended that these provisions should mean something.

The courts of last resort in the following states have decided that in determining the validity of a statute, and in determining whether it has been enacted according to constitutional provisions, it is competent to look into the legislative journals, and that in the event that the legislative journals show that the constitutional requirements have not been fulfilled, then the enrolled act must fall: Alabama, Missouri, South Carolina, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Nebraska, Tennessee, Wyoming, California, New Hampshire, Utah, Minnesota, Colorado, Ohio, Virginia, Maryland, Florida, Oregon, West Virginia, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan.

Sayre v. Pollard, 77 Ala. 608; Smithee v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17; Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 653, 14 L. R. A. 459; San Mateo County v. Southern P. R. Co. 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. Rep. 145; Re Roberts, 5 Colo. 530; State, Markens, v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. ed. 154; Division of Howard County, 15 Kau. 194; Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203; Rode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 598; State, Atty. Gen., v. Mead, 71 Mo. 266; Lincoln v. Haugan, 45 Minn. 451; State, Huff, v. McLelland, 18 Neb. 236, 53 Am. Rep. 814; Opinion of the Justices, 52 N. H. 622; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; Currie v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 566; State, Atty. Gen., v. Hagood, 13 S. C. 46; Brewer v. Huntington, 86 Tenn. 732; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269; Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640; Meracle v. Down, 64 Wis. 323; Brown v. Nash, 1 Wyo. 85; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345.

In Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, it was held that it was not competent to show from the journals of either house, or from the reports of committees, or from other documents printed by authority of Congress, that an enrolled bill, as finally passed, contained a section that does not appear in the enrolled act in the custody of the state department.

Harwood v. Wentworth, 162 U. S. 547, 40 L. ed. 1089.

In United States v. Bullin, 144 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 321, the court looked to the journal to uphold the validity of an enrolled act.

In Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8, the question before the court was one of difference between the journal and the law, and no constitutional question whatever was involved.

In Indiana at first the journals were consulted for the purpose of impeaching the enrolled act. Subsequently a different rule prevailed.

Ecans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Dec. 710; Edger v. Randolph County Comrs. 70 Ind. 331.

Iowa has not decided this question.

Keohler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543.

NOTE.—As to conclusiveness of enrolled bill, see note to State, Reed, v. Jones (Wash.) 23 L. R. A. 340; Lafferty v. Huffman (Ky.) 32 L. R. A. 208; Union Bank v. Oxford Comrs. (N. C.) 84 L. R. A. 487; and Cohn v. Kingsley (Idaho) 38 L. R. A. 74, 40 L. R. A.

In Weeks v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, it did not appear that the Constitution required any particular matter to be set out in the journal but the question was as between the enrolled act and parol testimony.

Louisiana may be placed among the states which declare that where the Constitution requires a particular matter to appear in the journal the provision is mandatory, and that the failure to observe such provision renders the act void.

Hollingsworth v. Thompson, 45 La. Ann. 222.

The state of Nevada can probably be classed with those states which hold the enrolled act conclusive.

State. George, v. Swift, 10 Nev. 187, 21 Am. Rep. 721; State, Sutherland, v. Nye (Nev.) 42 Pac. 866.

Re Tipton, 28 Tex. App. 438, 8 L. R. A. 326, supports the contention of the respondent.

In Buller v. State, 89 Ga. 821, the journal was consulted under circumstances which would lead us to believe that the supreme court of that state would hold that the affirmative showing in the journal that certain constitutional requirements had not been complied with, would render the enrolled act void.

In State, Reed, v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 23 L. R. A. 340, the opinion is a most vigorous one, and all that we can say regarding it is, that the doctrine laid down has not been followed in any state in the Union, with the possible exception of New Jersey, where the Constitution differed materially from that of Washington.

In Blaine County v. Heard (Idaho) 45 Pac. 890, it is intimated that the journal may be consulted to overthrow the presumption arising from the enrolled act.

In Rumsey v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 180 N. Y. 88, and New York & L. I. Bridge Co. v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 540, the court expresses doubt as to what the authorities had decided. In both of these cases the journal was consulted to uphold the appeal.

Union Bank v. Oxford Comrs. 119 N. C. 214, 84 L. R. A. 487, shows very clearly the distinction between the many cases upholding the doctrine that the enrolled act is conclusive and the case at bar.

The only states opposed to the doctrine contended for by respondent in this case are Indiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, Nevada, and Washington. Of these, in Indiana, Mississippi, and New Jersey it appears that the question as to what is the effect of the failure of the journal to show such matters as the Constitution requires shall be shown, have never been discussed, and therefore the states of Nevada and Washington are the only states directly opposed to our contention.

Such text-writers as have discussed the proposition agree that the journals may be resorted to.

Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 164, 165; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. pp. 43-45, §§ 41, 42.

Potter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

¶ In this case the relator, the city of Cheyenne, filed its petition in the district court for the county of Laramie, alleging its character as a municipal corporation, and that prior to the 1st 40 L. R. A.

day of March, 1897, it was allowed by the laws of the state of Wyoming to collect the taxes due to itself for municipal purposes, and, among other things, to sell real estate within its corporate limits, upon which such taxes had become delinquent, in the manner provided by the laws of the state of Wyoming and by its own ordinances, but on the 1st day of March, A. D. 1897, there was approved by the governor an act passed by the fourth state legislature, entitled "An Act Relating to the Sale of Real Estate for Delinquent Taxes, and Fixing the Fees to be Charged Therefor," which said act appears in the published session laws of the said fourth legislature as chapter 56 thereof; that, according to the provisions of said act, it was made the duty of the county treasurer, on the 1st Monday in November in each year, at his office, to offer at public sale all lands on which the taxes levied for state, county, village, city, school district, or other purpose for the previous year should still remain unpaid; and that said act repealed all other acts inconsistent therewith. It is then alleged that a demand had been duly made upon the defendant by the relator that he should advertise for sale in the manner provided by law, and that at the time provided by law he should offer for sale, all lands within the corporate limits of relator upon which the taxes for the year 1896 and previous years remained unpaid, and that the defendant, the county treasurer of Laramie county, refused to advertise the said lands for sale for said taxes. The prayer of the petition is for a writ of mandamus, commanding the said county treasurer to comply with the provisions of the act aforesaid, as the same appears in the published laws of the fourth legislature, so far as the taxes due to the city of Cheyenne for the year 1896 and previous years are concerned. The respondent resists the application for mandamus on the grounds, as set forth in the answer, that the act under which it is made his duty to sell lands for delinquent city taxes did not receive the vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house of the fourth legislature, that it was never placed upon its final passage in both houses, that there was no vote taken by ayes and noes upon the final passage of such act, and because the names of those voting thereon in the fourth legislature were not entered upon the journals of said legislature. An agreed statement of facts was filed, upon which the case was submitted; and thereupon the district court reserved to this court, for its opinion, certain questions, found to be important and difficult, as follows: "First. In the state of Wyoming, can the journals of the house and the senate of the state legislature be resorted to for the purpose of declaring invalid an act of the legislature signed by the presiding officers of both houses, and approved by the governor; and, if so, to what extent? Second. Is § 1 of chapter 56 of the Laws of the year 1897, as the same appears in the bound volume of the laws of said year, valid? Third. Is any part of § 1 of chapter 56 of the Laws of the year 1897, as the same appears in the printed volume of said act, valid; and, if so, what part or parts? Fourth. Are §§ 2 and 3 of said act valid? Fifth. Is it the duty of a county treasurer in the state of Wyoming to sell all lands on which the taxes levied for state, county, or city purposes remain unpaid? Sixth. When is the treasurer of a county in the state of Wyoming compelled to sell property for delinquent taxes? Seventh. In selling property for taxes due the county or city, has the treasurer of a county in the state of Wyoming the right to sell property for taxes due for previous years?"

The questions reserved, and the matters at issue in the action, involve, in the first place, an inquiry into the validity of § 1 of the act aforesaid, as published in the session laws, and known as "§ 1 of chapter 56" of said published laws. In the agreed statement of facts, which we find to conform to the showing made by the journals, the action of the legislature which finally resulted in the enrolled bill which was approved by the governor, thus creating the purported act aforesaid, is shown to have been as follows: On the 23d day of January, 1897, there was introduced into the house of representatives "A Bill for an Act Relating to the Sale of Real Estate for Delinquent Taxes, and Fixing the Fees to be Charged Therefor," which title, it will be observed, corresponds exactly with the title of chapter 56 aforesaid. Said bill was designated as "House Bill Number Forty." On January 29, § 1 of said bill was amended in the house of representatives. On February 2, the said bill passed the house of representatives as amended; the voting being taken by ayes and noes, and the names of those voting thereon being entered on the journal, showing that thirty of the members of the house had voted in favor of the passage of the bill, that three had voted against it, and that five members were absent. The journal therefore shows that the bill had regularly passed the house, receiving a vote of a majority of all the members elected thereto, and that the vote taken upon its passage was by the ayes and noes, and the names of those voting thereon were entered upon the journal. The bill was then transmitted to the senate, and in that body on February 9, § 1 of the bill as it had passed the house was amended by striking out all of the section, and inserting in lieu thereof an entirely different section, making several material alterations; the main difference being that, in the section as amended by the senate, it was made the duty of the county treasurer to sell lands upon which there were unpaid and delinquent taxes due to any city within the county, as well as to sell lands for delinquent taxes of state and county. On February 11 the bill, as thus amended, passed the senate by a majority vote of all the members elected thereto; the vote being taken by the ayes and noes, and the names of those voting thereon being entered upon the journal, showing nineteen votes for the passage of the bill as amended—being all the members of the senate. The bill, so amended, was then returned to the house; and on February 11, 1897, the house by a vote taken by ayes and noes, which was entered upon the journal, refused to concur in the senate amendment, and requested the senate to recede therefrom; twenty-six members of the house voting not to concur, three in favor of concurrence, and nine absent. On February 11, the senate, by a vote, refused to recede from its amendment, and a conference committee was appointed by both senate and house to confer over the differences between the two bodies with reference to § 1 of said bill. On February 17, the conference committee presented to both the senate and the house the following report, which is copied in the journals of both the senate and the house, to wit:

Cheyenne, Wyo., February 16, 1897.

Mr. Speaker: Your joint conference committee, to whom was referred H. B. No. 40, beg leave to report as follows: We recommend that the senate recede from its amendments to said bill; and we further recommend that the following section, as § 1 of said bill, be adopted and said bill be amended by striking out all of § 1 of said original bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the proposed section, to wit: "Section 1. The sales of real estate by all county treasurers in the state of Wyoming for non-payment of taxes shall be held at the front door of the court-house (or county building), beginning on the 1st Monday in October of each year, between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon, and may adjourn from day to day (Sundays excepted), until all the lands are offered. After the tax sale as herein provided shall have closed, any real estate remaining unsold for the want of bidders therefor, the county treasurer is authorized and required to sell the same at private sale to any person who offers to pay the amount of taxes, penalties, interest, and costs thereon, and to make to such person such certificate as shall be required by law to be made and delivered as in the case of the sale of any such lands at public sale, with the additional statement inserted therein that such lands have been offered at public sale for taxes, but not sold for want of bidders, and sold for taxes by private sale, and the treasurer is further authorized and required to sell as aforesaid all real estate in his county on which taxes remain unpaid and delinquent for any previous year or years. Provided, that all sales of real estate for the unpaid taxes due thereon to any such city, town, or village in the state of Wyoming by the treasurer of any such city, town, or village shall be governed by the provisions of this act."

Isaac Bergman,
L. C. Tidball,
Thomas Cottle,
House Committee.
A. M. Appleget,
George W. Fox,
Senate Committee.

The above is taken from the house journal. In the printed journal of the senate the report of the conference committee is shown to be precisely the same as the above, with the exception that the word "such," preceding the word "city," where it is first used, towards the close of the provision of § 1, as recommended by the committee, is omitted. On February 17, upon the coming in of said report, a motion was made in the house to adopt the report of the joint conference committee, and that the amendments recommended by such committee be concurred in. Thereupon the vote was taken by ayes and noes, with the result that thirty-four voted in favor of the motion to concur in such amendment of the conference committee, three opposed thereto, and one was absent. The names of those voting thereon were entered on the journal of the house, and the speaker thereupon announced that the amendment of the conference committee had been concurred in by the house. On the same day in the senate a like motion was made, and upon a vote of the members of the senate, taken by ayes and noes, it appears that sixteen voted in favor of the motion to adopt the report of such committee and concur in such amendment, and three were absent; there being no votes in the negative. The names of those voting upon such motion in the senate were entered upon the senate journal. On February 19, the act was enrolled; but § 1 of the act, as enrolled, was not the section which was recommended by the conference committee, and which was adopted and concurred in by both house and senate on February 17, but was the amendment first made by the senate, which was rejected by the house. The enrolled act was signed by the speaker of the house and the president of the senate, and sent to the governor; and the same was approved by him, and became chapter 56 of the printed volume of the Laws of 1897.

The question before us, therefore, is whether or not the courts may go behind the enrolled act, which is authenticated by the signature of the presiding officers of the two legislative bodies, and approved by the governor, to determine whether or not such enrolled act is in fact the act which was passed by the legislature. There is some conflict among the authorities upon this proposition,—some courts going to the extent of holding that the courts are at liberty to resort to the legislative journals to discover whether or not, in any instance the constitutional requirement has been complied with in the passage of an act which is found in the office of the custodian of the laws, purporting to be an act of the legislature, and approved by the governor; others, only that such journals are competent evidence for the purpose of determining whether or not a constitutional requirement has been observed in the passage of an act of the legislature, where such action of the legislature is required to be entered upon the journal. Other courts, however, have held directly to the contrary, and maintained the conclusiveness of the enrolled act, authenticated by the signatures of the presiding officers of the two legislative bodies and the approval of the governor. When the keeping of the legislative journals is enjoined by the Constitution, and that instrument also attaches certain conditions to the enactment of a valid law, and the facts showing a compliance therewith are required to be entered upon the journals, the decided weight of authority in this country favors the resort to such journals to determine whether the law has been enacted in a constitutional manner. The provisions which perhaps more than any other have caused an adherence to that doctrine are those which relate to the number of votes necessary to the passage of a bill, the taking of such vote by ayes and noes, and the entry upon the journal of the names of those members voting thereon. The states in which it is held competent to resort to the journals to ascertain whether, in the enactment of a law, the constitutional requirements have been complied with, are: Alabama: Moody v. State, 48 Ala. 115, 17 Am. Rep. 28; Sayre v. Pollard, 77 Ala. 608; Moog v. Randolph, 77 Ala. 597. Arkansas: Wörthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496; Smithee v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17. Colorado: Re Roberts, 5 Colo. 530. Florida: State, Markens v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407. Illinois: People, Barnes, v. Starne, 35 Ill. 121, 85 Am. Dec. 348; Larrison v. Peoria, A. & D. R. Co. 77 Ill. 11. Missouri: State, Atty. Gen., v. Mead, 71 Mo. 266. Nebraska: State, Marlay, v. Liedtke, 9 Neb. 462; State, Huff, v. McLelland, 18 Neb. 286, 58 Am. Rep. 814. New Hampshire: Opinion of the Justices, 52 N. H. 622. Ohio: Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475. Oregon: Currie v. Southern P. Co. 21 Or. 566. Kansas: Re Division of Howard County, 15 Kan. 194. South Carolina: State, Atty. Gen. v. Hagood, 13 S. C. 46. Tennessee: Brewer v. Huntington, 86 Tenn. 732. Utah: Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345. Virginia: Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269. West Virginia: Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 18 Am. Rep. 640. Wisconsin: Mercle v. Down, 64 Wis. 323. Michigan: Rhode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 598. Maryland: Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203. Minnesota: Lincoln v. Haugan, 45 Minn. 451. California: Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111. Oakland Parking Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479; Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 653, 14 L. R. A. 459.

40 L. R. A.

The same rule was adopted by the supreme court of Wyoming when a territory. Brown v. Nash, 1 Wyo. 85; Union P. R. Co. v. Carr, 1 Wyo. 96. In Idaho, in the case of Blaine County v. Heard, 45 Pac. 890, there is an intimation to the same effect. The contrary doctrine is held in the following states: Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, Texas, and Washington. The state of Connecticut is usually included in this class upon the authority of the case of Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8. In that case, however, we do not understand that the precise question was involved. The question there under consideration was whether the volume termed "The Revised Statutes of the State of Connecticut" was to be decreed to contain all the public statute laws of the state, or whether the court could go behind it, and examine the proceedings of the revision committee to ascertain if they had exceeded their powers. The leading case in Nevada (State, George, v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 21 Am. Rep. 721) was decided in 1875. The opinion is expressed in that case that the weight of authority favors the conclusiveness of the enrolled act, and the states of Maryland, Missouri, and California are referred to as upholding that doctrine. Since then, however, in each of those states a different rule has been announced and a resort to the journals is permitted to impeach an enrolled act. The courts of California and Missouri changed front upon the question, on account of changes in their respective Constitutions; but, as amended neither of them differed essentially from the provisions of the Nevada Constitution under which State, George, v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 21 Am. Rep. 721, was decided. The case of Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294, as to acts of Congress, denied the right to consider the journals as evidence to impeach the correctness of the enrolled act; the contention being made that a section had been omitted therefrom. Article 1, § 5, of the Federal Constitution contained the provision which it was claimed constituted the journals the best evidence upon an issue whether in fact a bill was passed by Congress. That provision requires only that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, except such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered upon the journal." And the court said: "In regard to certain matters, the Constitution expressly requires that they shall be entered upon the journal. To what extent the validity of legislative action may be affected by the failure to have those matters entered upon the journal, we need not inquire. No such question is presented for determination." Although Iowa is sometimes mentioned among the states upholding the incompetency of the journals, the courts of that state cannot be said to have expressly so decided. Indeed, in one case where the question was whether an amendment to the Constitution had been previously agreed to by the general assembly the court examined the journals; and, in regard to the question at issue in this case, the court said that whether a bill which had been duly enrolled can be impeached, when the journals affirmatively show that it never was passed, was a question not before them, and indicated that it would be a proposition not readily solved. Kochler v. Hill, 60 Iowa, 543, 554. We cannot but regard the clear weight of authority in this country as sustaining the propriety of consulting the journals in reference to a matter which the Constitution expressly requires to be recorded therein, concerning the constitutional procedure for the passage of an act; and in case, upon such an examination, it affirmatively appears, in respect to the requirements aforesaid, that the bill did not in fact pass the legislature, or did not receive the constitutional majority, and therefore did not constitutionally become a law, they may be used to impeach the enrolled act, although the latter is signed by the presiding officers of both houses, and carries the approval of the governor. That such is the weight of authority is recognized by the text-writers. In Cooley on Constitutional Limitations it is said: "If it should appear from these journals that any act did not receive the requisite majority, or that in respect to it the legislature did not follow any requirements of the Constitution, or that in any other respect the act was not constitutionally adopted, the courts may act upon this evidence, and adjudge the statute void." And again: "It will not be presumed in any case, from a mere silence of the journals, that either house has exceeded its authority, or disregarded a constitutional requirement in the passage of legislative acts, unless where the Constitution has expressly required the journals to show the action taken, as, for instance, where it requires the yeas and nays to be entered." Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. pp. 135, 136. See also Id. p. 141; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 41-44.

The provisions of our Constitution affecting the question before us are as follows: "Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and may in its discretion from time to time publish the same, except such parts as require secrecy; and yeas and noes on any question shall at the request of two members be entered upon the journal." Article 3, § 13. "No bill shall become a law except by a vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, nor unless on its final passage the vote taken by the yeas and noes and the names of those voting being entered upon the journal." Id. § 25. "The presiding officer of each house shall in the presence of the house over which he presides sign all bills and joint resolutions passed by the legislature immediately after their titles have been read, and the fact of signing shall be at once entered upon the journal." Id. § 28. It will be observed that the Constitution provides, in a very positive and mandatory manner, that no bill shall become a law, except by a vote of a majority of all the members elected to each house, and that no bill shall become a law unless on its final passage the vote be taken by yeas and noes, and the names of those voting be entered upon the journal. The journal record therefore will disclose whether or not any measure, upon its final passage, has received the constitutional number of votes. The presumption unquestionably is that an act found properly signed by the presiding officers, approved by the governor, and deposited in the secretary's office with the other acts of the session, was regularly passed, which is only to be overcome by evidence, of which the courts take judicial notice, showing the contrary. It is well settled that, whenever the existence of an act of the legislature is called in question, the court may resort to any source of information capable of conveying to the judicial mind a clear and satisfactory answer to such question. Not only by the weight of authority, but upon principle as well, we are convinced the constitutional provisions aforesaid constitute the journals concerning the action of the legislature upon the final passage of an act a record, which, by an affirmative showing to the contrary, is competent to overthrow the presumption arising from the certificates of the presiding officers, and the lodgment of the enrolled act with the secretary. The Constitution makes no distinction between the force to be given to the authentication by the presiding officers, and the journal account of the legislative procedure, in the respect mentioned. Both requirements proceed from the same source, and it is difficult to perceive any sound reason why the final authentication by the officers should be conclusive of the action of the legislature, when such action is also required to be made a matter of journal entry. The provision that the names of those voting shall be entered upon the journal, in connection with the requirement that the vote shall be taken by yeas and noes, and in the same section with the limitation upon legislative power to pass any law, must be considered as intending to subserve a more important purpose than that of simply indicating how any particular member voted. The design was, clearly, to perpetuate a record or evidence of the fact that the act was passed in strict accordance with the fundamental law. No court disputes the proposition that the legislature is powerless to enact a law in violation of the constitutional requirements, and that no bill becomes a law if in fact it was not passed by the legislature. Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 36 L. ed. 294. The divergence of views arises concerning the character of the evidence which may be accepted in the determination of that question. The English decisions, and those of some of the states, denying any right to consult the journals, are not in point, owing to a radical difference between the record authority of the journals of Parliament and of the legislatures of such states, and legislative journals under a Constitution like our own. Here the journals are not kept merely in the interest of orderly procedure, but they exist in obedience to a constitutional command; and the nature of their contents is, to some extent, prescribed. As it is the peculiar province of the courts to pronounce upon the validity of legislative enactments, they should possess authority to have recourse to the constitutional record of legislative procedure, in so far, at least, as that record is constitutionally required to make disclosure, and, within that limit, to the extent of giving effect to an affirmative showing.
40 L. R. A.

As to the act in question, the journal shows that it passed the house regularly, and with the constitutional number of votes, in the first instance. There were four sections to the bill; the last two, however, respectively merely repealing inconsistent acts, and providing the time for its taking effect. The merits of the act were contained in the first two sections, and the second largely depended upon the first, as to its effect and application. When the bill reached the senate, that body proceeded to strike out all of § 1 as it had passed the house, and inserted new provisions in its place, and then passed the bill in regular form. Upon its transmission to the house, the senate amendment was not concurred in. These facts affirmatively appear, and thus, up to that point, it is clear that the same bill had not passed both houses. The house had agreed to one measure, and the senate to another. Thereupon, a conference committee having been duly appointed, a report was submitted by it, proposing other provisions for § 1. Both journals contained a copy of that report, with the amendment proposed, and in both houses said amendment was adopted; the vote thereon being taken by ayes and noes, and the names of those voting thereon being entered upon the journals of the senate and house respectively. It thus, by affirmative showing, appears that the senate receded from its former amendment, and passed the bill with the amendment reported by the committee. The house adopted that amendment, and thus both houses ultimately agreed upon, and by the constitutional number of votes, as disclosed by the journals, passed, the same measure. The final action of both houses is recorded in the journals. We need not decide whether the final action on the amendment is, within the sense of the Constitution, the final passage, so as to require the vote thereon to be taken by ayes and noes, and the names of those voting to be entered upon the journal. In this case, at least, that was done, and indicates that such was the legislative understanding. It is sufficient that, with regard to the act under consideration, there appears an affirmative showing that the senate amendment, which was enrolled as § 1, did not ultimately pass either house, and did not at any time receive the sanction of the house of representatives. The act which secured executive approval was not the act which passed the legislature, and the latter was not approved by the governor, nor was it presented to him for such approval. The contents of a pending bill, or an amendment thereto, need not be recorded at length in the journal; and it is entirely probable that had the amendment reported by the committee, upon which the final action was taken, been omitted, the presumption would be indulged in that the enrolled act correctly represented it, but in this instance it was copied in the record in full, and thus explains the vote in each house. It is inseparably connected with the final action of both bodies, and the court is not at liberty to presume that, as its entry is not required, the vote adopted the section as it is found in the enrolled act. The journals positively, and with distinctness, inform us that the two houses, respectively, by the vote of their members, adopted as section 1 of the act the provisions reported therefor by the committee, which report appears in the journal immediately preceding the record of the motions to adopt, and the vote thereon. Our conclusions on this branch of the case are, therefore, that we have the authority, and it is our duty, to examine the journals, to determine whether or not the act in question was passed by a majority of the members elected to each house, that being a matter which the Constitution requires to be shown by the journals; that it is affirmatively disclosed by the journals that § 1 of the act, as enrolled and published, did not finally pass either branch of the legislature; that, by the affirmative showing of said journals, it was not passed by a majority of the members elected to each house, and is therefore not a law, and must be adjudged void. Section 1, as passed by the legislature, was not copied into the enrolment, and did not receive executive approval. Therefore that did not become a law. In this case there is no question as to the silence of the journals involved. It is a common holding that, as to matters not positively required by constitutional mandate to be entered upon the journals, their silence would not vitiate the law. It is, however, also held that, even as to those matters, an affirmative showing that some essential constitutional provision had not been complied with would be sufficient to authorize the courts to declare the law void.

The question next arises, What effect does the invalidity of § 1 have upon § 2, and the subsequent sections of the act? The act is composed of four sections. Section 2 regulates the fees to be collected upon sales of real estate, for the nonpayment of taxes, by the county treasurer, and provides that such fees shall be paid into the county treasury. It also prescribes what shall be stated in the advertisement preceding such sales. Section 3 repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with that act, and § 4 provides that the act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage. In the view we take of this case, it is unnecessary to decide the question whether upon the failure of any portion of an enrolled act, by reason of a noncompliance with some constitutional requirement in the passage of the bill, the entire act would in every such case be void. We are entirely clear, however, that if the portion of the act which actually passed the legislature, and is not included in the enrolled and published statute, has any material relation to other portions of the act, so as to modify, restrict, or extend its application, then such other portions must also fall. With reference to the act in question, we are of the opinion that, standing alone, § 2 would have to be construed as regulating only sales of real estate for taxes, such as the county treasurer, under other laws, would have authority to make; and in the absence of such provision as appears in § 1, which we hold to be void, that officer sells only for delinquent state, county, and school-district taxes, and also that the reference to the advertisement, in § 2, would be held to apply to only such sales by the county treasurer, and not to sales by municipal corporations, or officers thereof, for the nonpayment of taxes. In § 1, however, as reported by the conference committee and adopted by both houses, there was a proviso that all sales of real estate for the unpaid taxes due thereon to any city, town, or village, by the treasurer of any such city, town, or village, should be governed by the provisions of that act; so that if § 1, as actually passed by the legislature, had been copied in the enrolled act, and approved by the governor, the advertisement, at least, provided for in § 2, and possibly the fees, would have applied to sales made by such municipal treasurers. Indeed, under the provisions of § 1, as it appears in the enrolled act and printed laws, the method of advertising, and possibly the fees prescribed by § 2, would apply to sales of lands for delinquent city taxes. It will thus be observed that, by eliminating § 1 as it actually passed the legislature, and also eliminating § 1 as found in the enrolled act and printed laws, the application of § 2 is made much narrower than would have been the case had the act, as actually passed, been correctly enrolled, and approved by the governor. We are of the opinion, therefore, that § 2 is so inseparably connected with the preceding section that without such preceding section it cannot be allowed to stand. Section 3, which merely repeals all inconsistent and conflicting acts, has no effect whatever, without the two previous sections, and the same observation applies to § 4, so that practically there is nothing in the act to take effect. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the entire act must be held to be void.

Answering the questions reserved for our opinion by the district court, we say to the first question: Yes, to the extent to which the journals are required by the Constitution to show the procedure of the legislature respecting its action upon a bill. To the second question: Section 1 of chapter 56 of the Laws of the year 1897, as the same appears in the bound volume of the laws for said year, is not valid. To the third question: No part of said § 1 is valid. To the fourth question: Section 2 of said act is not valid, and § 3 is of no effect. In respect to questions 5, 6, and 7, we say that, in view of the decision respecting chapter 56 of the Laws of 1897, the matters involved in each question are not pertinent to the issues in this case, and it is unnecessary to answer them. The duty with reference to the sales of real estate for unpaid taxes must be determined by the laws as they exist, irrespective of the act designated as chapter 56 of the Laws of 1897. Owing to the exigencies of the case, our conclusions were orally announced on the 1st day of October, with the understanding that the opinion would be written, and the order thereon entered, at a subsequent time.

Corn, J., concurs. The late Mr. Chief Justice Conaway concurred in the conclusions as announced by the court.

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

H. B. DORSEY, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Texas.

(.....Tex.....)

1. The mixing or mingling of articles of food which are wholesome and nutritious, and the sale thereof, cannot be made criminal by the legislature.

2. A statute making the mixture of any articles of food without labeling the product an offense is too general, but the act to be enforced should name the particular articles of food the adulteration of which is prohibited and which is required to be labeled.

(February 16, 1898.)

NOTE.—For constitutional right to deal in wholesome food, see also State v. Myers (W. Va.) 35 L. R. A. 844; and Helena v. Dwyer (Ark.) 39 L. R. A. 236, 40 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Parker County Court convicting him of knowingly and fraudulently adulterating flour contrary to the provisions of a statute. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Martin & Flanary and G. A. McCall, for appellant:

The information fails to charge an offense against the laws of the state in this, that the information fails to allege that the alleged adulteration was injurious to health.

Willson, Criminal Forms; White, Crim. Stat.; Rev. Stat. 1895; Crim. Code, p. 79, arts. 480-432.

The said information fails to allege with what the said flour was mixed, and there are seven different clauses in this statute, and the information fails to allege under which clause of the statute the same was charged, or the facts under either clause.

Walton v. State, 12 Tex. App. 117; Hunt v. State, 9 Tex. App. 404.

Where the article defining the offense contains an exception, the information should negative such exception, or else it charges no offense against the law.

State v. Duke, 42 Tex. 455; Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 464; State v. Clayton, 43 Tex. 410; Woodward v. State, 5 Tex. App. 296.

The mere mixing of two kinds of flour of the same consistency and quality, the one being cheaper than the other, and selling the same, cannot under any phase of the statute constitute adulteration of food.

Com. v. Hartman, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 136; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

Mr. Mann Trice for the State.

Henderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of knowingly and fraudulently adulterating an article of food, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $100; hence this appeal.

As appellant made a motion to quash the information, and assigns the refusal of the court to quash the same as error, we will set out the charging part of the information, to wit: "That H. B. Dorsey did then and there knowingly and fraudulently manufacture, offer for sale, and sell a certain article of food, to wit: flour, which was then and there known by him, the said H. B. Dorsey, to be adulterated, contrary," etc. There are two statutes pertaining to this subject, under either of which the indictment may have been drawn. The first is article 427, Penal Code 1895, which provides: "If any person shall fraudulently adulterate, for the purpose of sale, any substance intended for food . . . with any substance injurious to health, he shall be punished by fine not less than $50 nor more than $500." Article 430 provides: "No person shall within this state manufacture, offer for sale, or sell any article of food, . . . which is by him known to be adulterated, within the meaning of this law," and the punishment assessed is a fine not exceeding $100. Article 432 of the Penal Code undertakes to more specifically define the meaning of the term "adulteration," and in what it consists. As to foods or drinks, the following are the provisions necessary to be quoted, so far as applicable to this case: "(1) If any substance or substances has or have been mixed with it so as to reduce or lower, or injuriously affect its quality or strength. (2) If any inferior or cheaper substance or substances have been substituted, wholly or in part, for the article." "(6) If it be colored or coated or polished, or powdered, whereby damage is concealed, or it is made to appear better than it really is, or of greater value." Appended to this article is the following: "Provided, that the state health officer may, with the approval of the governor, from time to time declare certain articles or preparations to be exempt from the provisions of this law; and provided further, that the provisions of this act shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as ordinary articles of food, provided, that the same are not injurious to health, and that the articles are distinctly labeled as a mixture, stating the components of the mixture." The proof in this case shows (which was admitted by appellant) that the adulteration was of flour; that is, flour and meal were mixed or mingled together by a bolting process which was in operation in defendant's flouring mill. The mixture or compound contained 90 per cent of flour and 10 per cent of corn meal. The contention of the defendant as to the indictment is that it should have stated how the adulteration was made; that is, the contention is that it was necessary to prove an admixture or adulteration of the flour, and to show how the same was adulterated, by evidence, and that the indictment should have contained the allegations, so as to put appellant on notice of what he was charged to answer. For instance, in this case it is insisted that the indictment should have alleged that the flour was adulterated with a certain portion of corn meal, and that said meal was a substance such as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect the quality of the flour, or that said flour was adulterated with meal, which was an inferior or cheaper substance than the flour with which it was mixed. It occurs to us that this contention is sound. There are a number of articles or substances which might be intermingled with flour so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength, or which are of an inferior or cheaper character; and under our system of criminal pleading the appellant should have been charged with the particular substance with which the article in question was adulterated, so that he might be prepared to meet the state's case. We take it that the indictment in question was brought under article 430, and not under article 427, inasmuch as there is no allegation, nor does the proof indicate, that the meal shown to have been mixed with the flour was injurious to health. In fact, the contrary appears. It further appears from the evidence in the case that both compounds which are claimed to constitute the adulteration are recognized as ordinary articles of food, and are not injurious to health. In such case, under the provisions of the law, if such articles are mixed together, and are distinctly labeled as a mixture, the person manufacturing such article is not indictable. It would therefore seem to follow that the indictment, to be good under this article, should negative the fact that such substances or articles of food, when combined so as to produce a wholesome article of food, were properly labeled. Of course, it is competent, under the police power of the state, for the legislature to pass an act stating in distinct terms, as to any article of food or drink, that if any person, etc., shall adulterate such article (naming it, with any other substance, without labeling same, such person shall be guilty of an offense. We understand this to be the rule laid down by the authorities. Some of the legislation is based on the adulteration of articles of food or drink which are unwholesome or injurious, and this appears to be provided against in article 427 of our statute. Other legislation is aimed at the prevention of frauds on the public, to prevent palming off on them an article of food other or different from that which they are led to believe they are purchasing; and, as to the latter, the authorities appear to hold that it is competent for the legislature to prohibit the mixture or compound altogether, though it may not be injurious or unwholesome. See Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350, and authorities there cited; State, Waterbury, v. Newton, 50 N. J. L. 534, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 68; Palmer v. State, 39 Ohio St. 236, 48 Am. Rep. 429.

We would not be understood as indorsing the doctrine laid down in the above authorities. The courts have gone to great length in upholding legislation under the police power. In some decisions it has been so magnified as to be regarded as almost omnipotent. We do not agree to the doctrine that under this power, or any other, the legislature can make criminal the mixture or mingling of articles of food which are wholesome and nutritious, and prohibit the sale thereof. We can add nothing to the dissenting opinion of Judge Gordon in the case of Powell v. Com. 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350. We do agree to this proposition, that the legislature, when such articles (namely, articles of wholesome and nutritious food are mixed and intermingled, can require that the product be labeled, showing the component elements thereof, and punish a failure to so label. We further hold that the present act of the legislature on the subject is too general in its terms. It simply embraces all articles of food or drink, without naming any, and makes the mixture of any articles of food, however nutritious, without labeling the product, an offense. A great many articles of food are mixed and combined together, and such combinations are not only harmless, but are healthy as articles of food; and to require all such articles to be labeled, so as to show the constituent elements composing the same, it occurs to us, is extremely onerous legislation. We hold that an act on this subject, to be enforced, should name the particular article of food, the adulteration of which is prohibited by the legislature, and which is required to be labeled. In all cases on this subject which have come to our notice, the legislature appears to have directed the law to some particular article of food or drink. For instance, in the Powell Case, 114 Pa. 265, 60 Am. Rep. 350, the act was for the purpose of prohibiting the manufacture of oleomargarine. Now, as bearing on the subject before us, we hold that it would be entirely competent for the legislature, by an act, to prohibit the sale, etc., of flour mixed with meal, or any other wholesome article, without properly labeling the product of such combination. They have not done this. The prosecution is attempted to be maintained under the general act to prohibit the intermixing of all foods. We do not believe that it was competent for the legislature to do this.

The judgment is reversed, and the prosecution ordered dismissed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

PALESTINE WATER & POWER COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

City of PALESTINE.

(.....Tex.....)

1. A corporation cannot complain that its receiver appointed in another court is not made a party to a suit to revoke its contract to supply water to a city and its right to occupy streets.
2. The state is not a necessary party to a suit by a city which has the exclusive control of streets, to revoke the right of a water company to use them.
3. Specifying as a ground for forfeiting the franchise of a water company its suspension of the supply for a certain period is not a waiver of the right, independently of the terms of the contract, to forfeit the franchise for gross misuse.
4. The right of a water company to occupy the streets of a city, under Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 705, is derived from the consent of the city, and not from the state, so that the city can revoke it for sufficient cause.
5. Flagrant disregard by a water company of its obligation to furnish clear and wholesome water, and the furnishing of water which endangers the health and lives of the people, ignoring remonstrances, are sufficient grounds for forfeiting its franchise.

6. An offer to perform its contract to furnish wholesome water, made by a water company after suit has been brought to forfeit its franchise, does not entitle it to relief from the forfeiture and an extension of time for the performance.
7. Bondholders of a corporation take their bonds with knowledge that the continuance of the charter rights and other franchises of the company depends upon the faithful performance of its duties to the public.

(March 7, 1898.)

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the First Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Anderson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to forfeit defendant's franchises. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Young Gooch, B. H. Gardner, and A. W. Gregg, for plaintiff in error:

Where a receiver of a quasi-public corporation has been appointed by a United States circuit court, and its franchise, property, contracts and income are in the official custody of the receiver, and the public and creditors are interested in the proper use and preservation of the property, its assets and income, the receiver is a proper party, and a necessary party, to a suit by a city which granted the corporation a franchise to construct, maintain, and operate waterworks in the streets and public ways of such city, and collect rents for the use of the water for general and fire purposes, to forfeit the franchise and contract, and destroy it as a "going concern," and destroy or impair the value of the capital investment and income, and its public use.

NOTE.—For forfeiture of the charter of a water-works company for failure to supply good water, see also Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.) 29 L. R. A. 743; State, Mylrea, v. Janesville Water Power Co. (Wis.) 32 L. R. A. 391.

40 L. R. A.

5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6894, 7185; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Barb. Ch. 592.

The judgment is erroneous because it attempts to deprive the appellant of the use of its water mains, pipes, and plant, and of the water mains, pipes, and plant themselves, which are immovable fixtures, without compensation, and said judgment makes no provision for their use, removal, or sale after sixty days' notice.

Const. 1875, art. 1, § 17.

The court erred in its conclusions of law in holding that upon a failure of defendant to comply with the contract as to quality or quantity of the water, the city had the right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to rescind the contract, because by the terms of the contract, the said ordinances and contract were made the measure of the right and liabilities of the parties.

State, Gussett, v. Morris, 73 Tex. 435, 65 Tex. 53, and 82 Tex. 742; State v. Southern P. R. Co. 24 Tex. 181.

Courts are reluctant to adjudge forfeitures of corporate franchises, when they are organized to promote public works or utilities which it is public policy to foster.

On petition for rehearing.

Whether a franchise shall be forfeited depends on the will of the same body that has power to confer it in the first instance; and if by that the harsher remedy is waived and a milder one adopted to compel the performance of the duty undertaken and on account of which the franchise is given, it is not for the courts to declare whether the legislature acted wisely or unwisely, but it is their duty to give effect to what seems to them the will of the legislature.

State, Gussett, v. Morris, 73 Tex. 435.

Its waiver of the right of forfeiture for non-user or misuser need not be direct, but may arise through plain implication.

Logan v. Vernon, G. & R. R. Co. (Ind.) note to 14 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 47; State v. Fourth N. H. Turnp. Road, 15 N. H. 162, 41 Am. Dec. 690; Boone, Corp. § 203.

A breach of condition may be waived.

Goodright, Walter, v. Davids, 2 Cowp. 803.

The resolution of the city council instructing the city attorney in effect to enforce specific performance, showed its desire and wish that the company should continue to use the streets.

Milford & C. Turnp. Co. v. Brush, 10 Ohio, 111, 36 Am. Dec. 78; State v. Bank of Charleston, 2 McMull. L. 439, 39 Am. Dec. 135.

The right of entry for forfeiture of a lease is governed by the general law that, where a man has got a right to elect to do a thing to the injury of another, his election, when once made, is final and conclusive, and he cannot afterwards alter his determination.

2 Addison, Contr. § 720.

The remedy of the city, after having passed said resolution, if not by suit for specific performance, was mandamus or injunction, or both. 40 L. R. A.

Galveston & W. R. Co. v. Galveston, 90 Tex. 399, 36 L. R. A. 33.

When the city council passed the ordinance consenting to the use of the streets, and when it passed the resolution of April 9, said ordinance and resolution had the force and effect of statutes and became a part of the charter of the company, and this being a suit to forfeit such part of the charter the state was a necessary party.

State, Atty. Gen., v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771.

Mr. J. A. Read also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Campbell & McMeans, with Mr. P. W. Brown, for defendant in error:

The appointment of a receiver does not invest him with title to the company's property, franchises, etc., and the fact of the receiver being or not being a party does not affect the defendant's rights in this suit; the defendant can defend its rights as well with the receiver out as it can with him in, for under no phase of the case can the defendant's rights be affected by the receiver; therefore, the defendant can certainly not be heard to complain that the receiver is not a party.

Abbey v. International & G. N. R. Co. 5 Tex. Civ. App. 261; Hugh, Receivers, § 302; Thomas v. Quarles, 64 Tex. 491.

The facts showed that the appellee was entitled to a judgment forfeiting the franchise of appellant. The evidence clearly shows that the water furnished by the company in the summer of 1893, and since the summer of 1895 and up to three or four weeks ago, was neither clear nor wholesome, but was unfit for domestic purposes, and that the supply of even bad water was inadequate.

Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald, 105 Ala. 406, 29 L. R. A. 743.

All franchises that were granted to appellant by appellee were exclusive franchises; and, in case of a forfeiture as prescribed by the terms of the contract, to hold that only the exclusiveness of the franchise and not the franchise itself is forfeited, is against all reason.

Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 544.

The city attorney being the duly elected legal adviser and attorney for the city of Palestine, his acts in filing and prosecuting this suit are presumed to be within the scope of his authority, and with the knowledge and consent of, and binding upon, appellee, in the absence of proof to the contrary.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 581, and note; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lacroix, 45 Tex. 168; Texas Bkg. & Ins. Co. v. Hutchins, 53 Tex. 68, 37 Am. Rep. 750.

When it clearly appears, as it does in this case, that the only judgment which can be rendered and enforced is one of forfeiture, it is the duty of the court to render that judgment.

Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 133 U. S. 156, 33 L. ed. 573; Galesburg v. Galesburg Water Co. 34 Fed. Rep. 675.

The obligation of the company was a continuing one, and its ability to furnish water according to the contract was a condition precedent to its continuing right to use the streets and to carry on its business; and on failure to comply with the contract as to the quality or quantity of the water, the city had the right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to rescind the contract.

Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg. 138 U. S. 156, 33 L. ed. 573; Arcata v. Arcata & M. River R. Co. 92 Cal. 639.

The only material difference, so far as the rights of the city are concerned, between those grants of franchises to use the streets, where, by the terms of the grant, a forfeiture is specifically provided for on noncompliance with the conditions of the grant, and those that are granted upon continuing conditions precedent is, that in the former the city can revoke the grant without the aid of a court of equity, while in the latter the rescission must be by a decree of such court.

Arcata v. Arcata & M. River R. Co. 92 Cal. 639; Pacific R. Co. v. Leavenworth, 1 Dill. 393; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1006; Myrick v. Brawley, 33 Minn. 377.

A grant of an exclusive privilege to the water company by the city of Brenham to occupy its streets to lay down mains, etc., for a period of twenty-five years created a monopoly, and was therefore void.

Brenham v. Brenham Water Co. 67 Tex. 542.

The contract was entire and conferred no privilege except that specifically mentioned.

Manhattan Trust Co. v. Dayton, 16 U. S. App. 588, 59 Fed. Rep. 327, 8 C. C. A. 140.

In this case a suit for specific performance or for damages would accomplish a result just about as satisfactory as would a judgment forfeiting the exclusive franchise, and it is clear that such forfeiture would visit no punishment upon the water company, and the city would be without adequate remedy while the water company continued its violation of every condition under which it secured this valuable franchise, and without let or hindrance perpetuate its menace to the health and lives of the people of the city.

Commercial Bank v. State, 6 Smedes & M. 599, 45 Am. Dec. 280; Washington & B. Turnp. Road v. State, 19 Md. 239; People, M'Kinch, v. Bristol & R. Turnp. Road, 23 Wend. 222; People v. Hillsdale & C. Turnp. Road, 23 Wend. 254; Bank of Vincennes v. State, 1 Blackf. 267, 12 Am. Dec. 284.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Palestine instituted suit in the district court of Anderson county to forfeit the franchises granted by it to one Gray and his assigns, which afterwards became vested in the defendant the Palestine Water & Power Company. The case was tried before the judge, a jury being waived, and he filed very elaborate findings of fact, from which we make the following condensed statement as applicable to the question presented by the application for writ of error: On June 7, 1881, the city of Palestine, a municipal corporation duly organized under the general laws of the state of Texas, passed an ordinance by which it granted to Carroll E. Gray and his assigns the exclusive right for fifty years "to establish, maintain, and operate waterworks and buildings, and to lay mains, pipes, etc., in and along the streets, alleys, and public grounds of the city, for supplying clear and wholesome water for all domestic and other purposes."

40 L. R. A.

Section 11 of that ordinance reads as follows: "In the event that said grantee or his assigns, after said waterworks have been in successful operation, shall suffer a suspension of the supply of the water, thereby causing an insufficient supply of clear, wholesome water for domestic and other purposes, for a period exceeding sixty days, then and in that event the said grantee and his assigns shall forfeit all franchises hereby granted, and during any suspension all water rentals shall be suspended." This section was amended by ordinance passed June 21, 1881, so as to read as follows: "In the event that said grantee or his assigns, after said waterworks shall have been in successful operation, shall suffer a suspension of the supply of water, thereby causing an insufficient supply of clear wholesome water for domestic and other purposes, for a period exceeding sixty days, then and in that event said grantee and his assigns shall forfeit all exclusive franchise herein granted, unless such suspension shall have been caused by the act of God or unavoidable accident, and during such suspension all water rentals shall be suspended." On June 21, 1881, the city and Carroll E. Gray entered into a contract in writing, which embodied the substance of the ordinances before referred to and copied above, which ordinances were made part of the contract. The work was begun within the time specified, and completed in accordance with the contract between the parties. The Palestine Water & Power Company was organized as a corporation under the general laws of the state of Texas, and succeeded to all the obligations of Carroll E. Gray. "The evidence clearly shows that the water furnished by the company in the summer of 1893, and since the summer of 1895, and up to three or four weeks ago, was neither clear nor wholesome, but was unfit for domestic purposes, and that the supply of even bad water was inadequate. The source of water supply consists of ponds fed by surface water and some springs. The ponds have never been cleaned out, and are filled for at least 5 or 6 feet with decayed vegetable matter and mud and accumulations of filth which flowed in from the natural watersheds constituting the principal source of supply, and cover about 300 acres of land, on which are situated several small farms, and from 150 to 300 residences. The company owned about 162 acres, part of the watershed, and this is inclosed, the ponds being in the inclosure, and the company had put part of the land in cultivation and wilfully permitted cattle and horses to pasture in the inclosure, and negligently permitted dead fish and reptiles to remain in the ponds, and dead animals to remain within the area of the water supply. In the summer, by reason of insufficient storage capacity, the ponds became low, and the water stagnant and impure, and nearly the whole year the water is more or less muddy, and offensive in odor. The evidence shows that an abundant supply of clear, wholesome water from artesian wells could be had in the city, and utilized by the company, and that no effort was made by defendant before the institution of this suit to obtain water supply, and the material allegations of plaintiff's petition have been proved substantially." The city made frequent complaints to the defendant corporation as to the failure to comply with the provisions of the contract and the ordinances of the city, and there were frequent promises of remedying them, but it was not done. The city council of the city of Palestine, being divided in opinion as to whether the city should establish and operate its own water works, submitted to the qualified voters the question in these forms: "For city ownership," "Against city ownership." The vote when taken, was against the proposition that the city should construct and maintain its waterworks. On the 9th day of April, 1896, after the vote had been taken, the city council passed a resolution instructing the city attorney to at once take the proper legal steps through the court to compel the Palestine Water & Power Company to furnish clear, good, and wholesome water in the city of Palestine, and in ample sufficiency. The city attorney instituted this suit on the same day, and on the 18th day of the same month N. Oscar Gray, vice president of the Palestine Water & Power Company, and trustee for the holders of the bonds for said company, being joined by the bondholders themselves, applied to the Honorable David E. Bryant, judge of the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Texas, for the appointment of a receiver for that corporation, and the judge appointed a receiver, and in the order of appointment directed him to proceed at once to comply with the defendant's franchises requiring it to furnish to the citizens of the city of Palestine and to said city a sufficiency of clear, good, and wholesome water for domestic and manufacturing purposes and for purposes of fire protection. The order authorized the receiver to apply the income and revenue derived from the operation of the waterworks as a "going concern," and "to apply said revenue in payment of expenses of operating the same." Subsequently the United States circuit court authorized the receiver to issue certificates to the amount of $30,000, with a lien upon the property, to raise money to pay for such repairs and improvements as might be necessary to comply with the franchises and contracts of the corporation with the city of Palestine. The defendant company asked that the receiver be made a party defendant in the suit, which the court refused, and it also pleaded that it was ready to perform specifically its contract if the court should hold that it has incurred a forfeiture, and sets out the improvements contemplated to be made by it in the future. But there was no evidence showing any ability to perform the contract except by use of the money to be derived from the sale of the receiver's certificates. There is no other waterworks plant in the city, and the city depends on the defendant for its water supply and fire protection. The trial court entered judgment forfeiting the franchise granted by the city, and directing that all the pipes, mains, etc., belonging to the said defendant should be removed from the streets of the city of Palestine within sixty days after demand made by the city. The court of civil appeals affirmed the judgment of the district court.

This suit was instituted to revoke and set aside the contract between the city of Palestine and the Palestine Water & Power Company, as well as to annul the ordinance which granted to the water and power company the right to occupy its streets, and the state court thereby acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter before the receiver was appointed by the United States circuit court. Riesner v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 89 Tex. 656, 33 L. R. A. 171. It was not necessary to make the receiver a party to the suit. If he desired to defend the action, he had the right to make himself a party. City Water Co. v. State, 88 Tex. 600; 5 Thomp. Corp. §§ 6898-6896. The corporation, the Palestine Water & Power Company, cannot complain because the receiver was not made a party defendant, because, if he was a necessary party, the judgment will not affect any interest that he has in the subject-matter of litigation, and it would be of no benefit to the defendant to make the receiver a party.
40 L. R. A.

The plaintiff in error complains that the city of Palestine cannot maintain this action because (1) the right to occupy the streets was derived from the state; (2) the city having contracted that a forfeiture should occur upon the happening of a certain event, thereby waived any ground of forfeiture not embraced in the contract, and because the city had elected to enforce the contract, and cannot afterwards rescind it; (3) because the facts do not justify a rescission of the contract made between the city and the plaintiff in error. The case of Galveston & W. R. Co. v. Galveston, 90 Tex. 395, 36 L. R. A. 33, is cited by plaintiff in error to support the proposition that the right to occupy the streets of the city of Palestine is derived from the state, and not from the city. There is a marked difference between the law which grants to railroads the right to occupy the streets of a city and that by which the same privilege may be secured by this class of corporations. Besides, there is such a marked difference between the purposes of the two corporations as to make it necessary and proper to place a different construction upon the acts as they affect the one or the other. The case of Galveston & W. R. Co. v. Galveston does not sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error upon this point. The right of the city to maintain the action was not involved in that case, but the decision was placed upon the ground that the city could not prescribe the condition of forfeiture which it was attempting to enforce in that proceeding. By art. 833, Rev. Stat. 1895, a city organized under the general laws of the state is declared to be "capable of contracting and being contracted with, suing and being sued, impleading and being impleaded, answering and being answered unto, in all courts and places, and in all matters whatever;" and art. 419 of the Revised Statutes of 1895 provides that such city shall "have the exclusive control and power over the streets, alleys, and public grounds and highways of the city." From these provisions it will be seen that our cities are given large powers in the control of their streets, and are fully authorized and empowered to maintain suits in all instances in which their rights are involved. We think there can be no doubt that the city of Palestine had the right to maintain this suit, and that the state of Texas was not a necessary party to it.

The language of the contract and of the ordinance of the city is not such as to operate as a waiver of any right of action which the city might have independent of the terms of that contract. Neither were the acts of the city in taking the sense of the qualified voters upon the question presented such as to stop it from asserting any right that the city had. Indeed, we believe that a city council has no authority to waive the right of the public to revoke a franchise which has been abused by the grantee. Morris v. State, Guesett, 65 Tex. 59. The water and power company was organized as a corporation to carry out the contract between Gray and the city. Its charter must have specified the purpose of its organization to be "to supply water to the public in the city of Palestine, Texas." It could do no other business, nor could it do that at another place. While its charter was issued under the general law of the state, it was as much a corporation of that locality as was the city itself, and derived its right to occupy the streets of that city from art. 705 of the Revised Statutes of 1895, which reads thus: "Any gas or water corporation shall have full power to manufacture and sell and to furnish such quantities of water or gas as may be required by the city, town, or village where located, for public or private buildings, or for other purposes, and such corporation shall have power to lay pipes, mains, and conductors for conducting gas or water through the streets, alleys, lanes, and squares in such city, town, or village, with the consent of the municipal authorities thereof, and under such regulations as they may prescribe." Considering the foregoing article with reference to the subject upon which the legislature was acting, and the purpose to be accomplished, we think the use of the language, "under such regulations as they may prescribe," had the effect to commit that class of corporations to the control and government of the cities in which they are located. It was not intended to restrict the city to giving or refusing consent, but that consent might be accompanied with such regulation as the city might prescribe within its powers of government and control over such corporations, as well as those found necessary after the waterworks had been constructed. The corporation was created solely to operate within the limits of the city of Palestine, and for the purpose of dealing with it and its citizens alone, and it did not affect the citizens of any other portion of the state. The public policy of the state in the case of railroad companies would necessarily preserve the road against the action of any local authority, while, on the other hand, the same public policy might well commit the corporation created alone for local purposes to exclusive local government, as was done in this class of cases. We conclude that the right to occupy the streets of Palestine was derived from the consent of the city, which, for sufficient cause, might be revoked upon application of the city.

In the view we take of the case, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether, under the terms of the ordinance and contract, a forfeiture of all franchises granted would occur, or only a forfeiture of the exclusive character of such franchises, because, in our opinion, the judgment of the district court is sustained by the law independent of the terms of forfeiture which were prescribed in the ordinance and the contract. Section 52 of Booth on Street Railways states the law in this language: "The failure to construct and operate a street railway according to the terms and conditions of the charter under which the right of way is granted may be a sufficient ground for the forfeiture of its franchise in the streets. A slight failure in those respects will not be an adequate cause for such proceedings, nor can the forfeiture be based upon a gross failure which is but temporary. In the nature of things, each case must depend upon its own particular facts. But, as a general rule, it may be stated that, if the company grossly fails in the performance of vital duties essential to the efficiency of the service which it is bound to give, such conduct will constitute a misuser of its franchise on account of which it may be forfeited to the state. The right exists at common law, and may be asserted, not only for the violation of express charter duties, but also for a wanton disregard of regulations imposed by the state or municipality in the exercise of their reserved powers." Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 138 U. S. 156, 33 L. ed. 573; Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 37 Mich. 558; People v. Hillsdale & C. Turnp. Road, 28 Wend. 254; State, Atty. Gen., v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771; Ang. & A. Corp. §§ 775, 776; Morris v. State, Guesett, 65 Tex. 59.

The case of Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, above cited, in its facts is very much like the case under examination. The city of Galesburg, by an ordinance which, in its language, is remarkably similar to that under which the plaintiff in error claims, and by a contract, granted to Nathan Shelton and to his assigns the right to use the streets of the city. The water company was formed under the laws of the state of Illinois, and he assumed the obligation of the grantee in the said ordinance and contract. The object of granting the franchise in that case was expressed to be "for supplying the said city and the inhabitants thereof and of the adjacent territory with water for public and private uses," and, again, it was provided that "the water supplied by said works shall be good, clear water, and the source of supply shall not be contaminated by the sewerage of said city." The water company failed to perform its part of the contract in furnishing either the quantity or quality of water which was required, and the city of Galesburg filed a suit to annul and cancel the ordinance by which its consent was given to the use of its streets, and to rescind the contract entered into by it with Shelton. Justice Blatchford, for the court, said: "The principal contention on the part of the appellants is that, on the acceptance of the ordinance by Shelton, a right in the franchise vested in him, which could not be defeated even though he afterwards failed to comply with its terms; that the failure of the water company to furnish water in the quantity and of the quality called for by the ordinance was only a breach of a condition subsequent; and that a court of equity will not lend its aid to divest an estate for such a breach. But it seems to us that in respect to a contract of the character of the present one, the ability of the water company to continue to furnish water according to the terms of the ordinance was a condition precedent to the continuing right of Shelton and his assigns to use the streets of the city and to furnish water for a period of thirty years; and that when, after a reasonable time, Shelton and his assigns had failed to comply with the condition as to the quantity and quality of the water, the city had a right to treat the contract as terminated, and to invoke the aid of a court of equity to enforce its rescission. A suit for a specific performance of the contract, or a suit to recover damages for its nonperformance, would be a wholly inadequate remedy in a case like the present. The danger to the health and lives of the inhabitants of the city from impure water, and the continued exposure of the property in the city to destruction by fire from an inadequate supply of water, were public questions peculiarly under the care of the municipality; and it was entitled and bound to act with the highest regard for the public interests, and at the same time, as it did, with due consideration for the rights of the other parties to the contract." The language of the learned judge as quoted above is so applicable to the facts of the case now under consideration that it leaves little to be said in the further discussion of the question.

The Palestine Water & Power Company adopted and acted upon the ordinance which granted the franchise enjoyed by it in the following language: "To establish, maintain, and operate waterworks and buildings and to lay mains, pipes, et cetera, in and along the streets, alleys, and public grounds of the city, for supplying clear and wholesome water for all domestic and other purposes." The execution of the purpose for which the corporation was organized is here expressed as the condition upon which the franchise was granted, accepted by the water company, and relied upon by the city. The facts found by the trial judge show that the water company was guilty of a most flagrant disregard of its obligation to the city, and, instead of furnishing clear and wholesome water, as it was obliged to do, it furnished to the inhabitants of that city water which endangered the health and lives of the people, if, in fact, it did not cause sickness and death to prevail among them. The city remonstrated with the officers of the water company from time to time against their disregard of the agreement to furnish good and wholesome water, which remonstrances were utterly ignored by the water company, but repeated by the city until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, and became on the part of the officers of that city little less than a reprehensible neglect of the highest interests of the people. Failing to get any redress at the hands of the water corporation, the city instituted this suit, and then for the first time the water company came forward, and offered to perform its contract, without showing the ability to do so. It is claimed in this case that the trial court should, in the exercise of a just and wise discretion, have permitted the water company to perform its contract after judgment had been entered against it, instead of forfeiting the franchise granted. We quote the language of Judge Cowan, used in the case of People v. Hillsdale & C. Turnp. Road, in which a similar contention was answered as follows: "When a cause of forfeiture has arisen, whether from nonfeasance or otherwise, no case nor dictum can be found that it shall be legally atoned for by subsequent good behavior.

40 L. R. A.

. . . The argument goes to prove that a corporation may practise all manner of abuse by commission or omission if it be careful to stop before the attorney general can be informed and institute a prosecution." In this case the water company did not mend its ways nor offer to do so until after the suit had been brought, and we think that, under the circumstances, the trial court did not abuse its discretion, if, indeed, it had any discretion in the matter, by refusing to extend the time of performance. As said in Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, cited above, a suit for specific performance or for damages would not have afforded adequate protection or redress to the city. The property of the corporation was encumbered with bonds to a large amount, doubtless equal to, if not greater than, its value; and a judgment for damages could not have been satisfied out of the property. Besides, no money compensation could correct the evils which were suffered by the city in its deprivation of wholesome water. In a suit for specific performance no court could have adequately enforced the rights and given sufficient protection to the people of that city. A decree that the company should furnish "clear and wholesome water" could have been enforced only by placing an officer of the court in charge, and operating the works. To revoke the franchise which the water company had so flagrantly abused is a harsh remedy, and may cause loss to fall upon those who hold the bonds, but it is the only adequate means by which a city can surely protect itself against such wrongs as were practised in this case. Bondholders of such corporations are entitled to protection to the extent that the corporations perform their duties under the law, but they take such bonds with the knowledge that the continuance of the charter rights and other franchises granted to corporations depends upon their faithful performance of the duties to the public for which they were created.

We find no error in the judgments of the District Court and Court of Civil Appeals, and both judgments are therefore affirmed.

Rehearing denied April 16, 1898.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
W. F. MITCHELL.

(.....Tex.....)

1. An allegation that the plaintiff could have made arrangements to get water for his cattle if a telegram had been delivered to him promptly, without alleging where and in what manner he could have done so, is insufficient as against a special exception in an action for damages because of failure to deliver a telegram.
2. What a party would do under a given state of facts which call upon him or her to perform a duty to some other person is a fact to which such person can testify, and not a matter of opinion merely.
3. Whether a telegraph messenger who fails to deliver the message at the residence or place of business of the addressee has used ordinary diligence such as the law requires is a question of fact for the jury.
4. The delivery of a telegram to the wife of the addressee, when he is absent from the town, is not, as matter of law, necessary or sufficient to satisfy the obligation of the telegraph company, but its duty in this respect is a question of fact under the circumstances of the case.

(February 14, 1898.)

QUESTIONS CERTIFIED by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District for the opinion of the Supreme Court which arose upon an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for failure to promptly deliver a telegram. Answers favorable to appellant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John A. Green, Sr., John A. Green, Jr., and Hutchinson & Franklin, for appellant:

A pleader must state the facts on which he intends to rely, as constituting his cause of action or ground of defense.

Wells v. Fairbank, 5 Tex. 582.

This doctrine has not been carried to such a length as to require the statement of those minute circumstances which are but evidence of the right.

Oliver v. Chapman, 15 Tex. 400; Van Alstyne v. Bertrand, 15 Tex. 177.

But our demurrers do not seek to compel the plaintiff to allege the evidence of the facts on which he relied as constituting his right.

We sought to get from plaintiff what special arrangements he could make; we knew the face of the country; we knew the ranchmen surrounding the ranch of plaintiff; and we could and did take their depositions, and showed conclusively that he did not make any arrangement with them or his neighbors.

Wood's Mayne, Damages, § 752.

The testimony of the witnesses, G. G. Johnston and Mrs. Mary Mitchell, were both the speculative opinions of the witnesses given NOTE.—As to the duty of a telegraph company to find the person addressed, see Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Houghton (Tex.) 15 L. R. A. 129.

-40 L. R. A.

seven years after the time about which the inquiry was made.

There is one standard of man in law when you judge him according to the rules of law. That is the man of ordinary prudence under the circumstances.

The jury were as capable of judging of what a person of ordinary prudence would have done under those facts as anybody.

Elkhart W. R. Co. v. Waldorf (Ind.) 46 N. E. 88; Sonnensfeld v. Mayton (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 167; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. May, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 180.

Messrs. L. H. Browne and Brown & Pritchett for appellee.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of civil appeals for the third supreme judicial district has certified for our consideration the questions hereinafter stated, which are accompanied by a statement, from which we make the following substantial statement of the facts necessary to the consideration of the question submitted: W. F. Mitchell filed a suit in the district court of Hays county against the Western Union Telegraph Company, alleging in substance that on the 24th day of March, 1890, the plaintiff resided in San Marcos, Texas, and owned a cattle ranch in Presidio county, Texas, on which he had 10,000 head of cattle; that plaintiff at that time was in San Marcos, but the ranch and the cattle were under the control and management of his son, F. A. Mitchell, who was then on the ranch, and in the active management of the same. It is alleged that the supply of water on the said ranch was amply sufficient for the support of the cattle held on it up to the 23d day of March, 1890, when the supply of water was suddenly greatly diminished, so that on the 24th of that month the cattle were in great danger of famishing for water, unless speedily relieved, which F. A. Mitchell was not able to do, in the absence of the plaintiff, nor could anyone else procure water for the said cattle, because it required that special negotiations should be made on behalf of the plaintiff with third parties, which negotiations neither F. A. Mitchell nor any other person could effect; that, if plaintiff had been present, he could have made such arrangements in time to have saved his cattle from the damages which they afterwards sustained. The petition alleged that on the 24th day of March, 1890, F. A. Mitchell, as agent for the plaintiff, caused to be delivered to the agent of the defendant at the town of Marfa, Texas, the following message:

Marfa, Tex., 3-24-90.

To W. F. Mitchell, San Marcos:

Water is getting low. Come out.

[Signed]

F. A. Mitchell.

It is averred: That at the time this message was delivered to the defendant's agent the latter was informed of the dangerous situation of the cattle; that they were upon the ranch, and the supply of water had become insufficient, and the cattle were in present danger of starving for water; and of the necessity for the presence of the plaintiff to provide water; also, that the message was being sent to the plaintiff that he might come with all possible speed to make necessary arrangements for water. That plaintiff was ignorant of the failure of the water, and of the dangerous situation of his cattle, and remained absent from the ranch three days longer than he would if he had received the message in due time. It is alleged that, if the message had been delivered in a reasonable time, the plaintiff would have gone to his ranch at once, and could and would have made arrangements for water for his cattle, which would have prevented the losses that occurred thereafter. It was not averred that he could have made any particular arrangements with any particular person in order to have procured the water, nor what kind of arrangements could have been made. The petition charged that the defendant negligently failed to deliver the message to the plaintiff, whereby he was prevented from repairing to his ranch and making arrangements for water for his cattle, and in consequence of which he suffered the damages which were particularly set out. The defendant filed special exceptions to the petition, "because it is not alleged therein when, where, and in what manner he could have arranged to get water for his cattle, and thereby avoid the injuries complained of." The trial court overruled the exception, to which the defendant excepted, and the ruling is assigned for error. Plaintiff was in San Marcos, at his residence, on March 24, 1890, until about 10:50 A. M., when he went to the depot, and took passage on a south-bound passenger train on the International & Great Northern Railroad for Pearsall, which is situated on that road, about 50 miles south of San Antonio, and reached Pearsall at about 2 P. M. the next day, where he remained at a public hotel until 11 A. M. the next day. Mrs. Mary Mitchell, wife of the plaintiff, remained at home, in San Marcos,—a large, two-story house, in the thickly settled portion of that town. Defendant's agent at San Marcos was not acquainted with Mitchell at that time, but became acquainted with him a few days afterwards. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to show that on the afternoon of March 24 the agent of the defendant at San Marcos telegraphed to the agent of defendant at Marfa that the addressee of the message could not be found in San Marcos, and that the agent at Marfa made inquiry of Gillette, who delivered the message to him, and was by Gillette instructed to have the message delivered to Johnson & Johnson, a firm of merchants in San Marcos. Upon the trial of the case the attorneys for the plaintiff asked G. G. Johnson, a member of the firm of Johnson & Johnson, and Mrs. Mary Mitchell (each separately), in substance, the following question: What he or she could and would have done if the message had been delivered to him or to her on the evening of the 24th of March. To which question each witness answered, in substance, that he or she, as the case might be, would have sent it to the plaintiff at Pearsall. To which question and answers the defendant objected "because it invades the province of the jury, is problematical, and is merely an opinion." The objections were overruled, and exceptions saved. The court charged the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case that on the 24th day of March, 1890, the defendant, at Marfa, Texas, received and accepted for transmission and delivery the telegraph message described in plaintiff's petition, and that, when the message arrived at San Marcos, W. F. Mitchell was absent from his place of residence, but that his wife was at his place of residence, then you are further instructed that a delivery of it to her, at his place of residence, in his absence, would have been, in contemplation of law, a delivery of it to him."

The court of civil appeals submitted to this court the following questions: "(1) Did the trial court err in overruling the special exception to the plaintiff's petition, as set out above? (2) Did said court err in overruling the objections interposed to the testimony, as set out above? (3) Is the special charge above quoted subject to any of the objections urged against it; as set out above, and did the trial court commit error in giving said charge?"

The trial court erred in overruling the special exception to the plaintiff's petition mentioned in the first question submitted. The particular arrangement which the plaintiff could have made to secure water for his cattle, if he had received the telegram in time, is a fact, and not the evidence of a fact. It is a material fact in this case, without proof of which no recovery can be had. The object of pleading is to notify the opposite party of the facts which the pleader expects to prove, and the allegation of such fact must be made with that certainty which will enable the adverse party to prepare his evidence to meet the alleged facts. Whatever falls short of doing this is not good pleading, and is subject to demurrer. Ransome v. Bearden, 50 Tex. 128. In the case cited this court said: "In the case before us the plaintiff's pleadings nowhere stated what facts came to her knowledge leading her to the discovery that the will was forged. The allegations were not such as to enable the defendant to anticipate the facts on which plaintiff relied, and he could not prepare to rebut or disprove them. The construction which we have given the statute would require the application to this case of the rule of pleading laid down in Bremond v. McLean, 45 Tex. 10, and would lead to the conclusion that the plaintiff's petition was defective."

In Bremond v. McLean, 50 Tex. 128, the plaintiff, in order to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, alleged that he could not by due diligence have discovered the fraud which he alleged to have been practised upon him. To this general allegation the defendant excepted specially, which was overruled, and this court said: "The mere statements in the petition that the plaintiff could not have discovered that the alleged representations of defendant were false and fraudulent by the use of reasonable diligence evidently will not relieve him from the bar of the statute. If the want of such knowledge will prevent the running of the statute, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to assert merely the conclusion that he could not have discerned that the representations made him were false by the use of reasonable diligence, but he must state the facts upon which he relies, that the court may see whether they justify and support such a conclusion. The exception to the petition on this ground was well taken, and should have been sustained." The allegation in the plaintiff's petition that he could have made arrangements by which to secure water for the relief of his cattle is but a conclusion drawn from the particular facts of the case, and, if he had attempted to prove by any witness the conclusion as alleged, it would have been objectionable upon the ground that it was a statement of a conclusion, and not of a fact.

There was no error in the action of the trial court in overruling the objections presented to the evidence of Johnson and Mrs. Mitchell. What a party would do under a given state of facts, which call upon him or her to perform a duty to some other person, is not a matter of opinion merely, but a fact which can be testified to by such person; and if the defendant failed to perform a duty which it owed to the plaintiff, in not delivering the message to either witness, the plaintiff was entitled to show that, if the duty had been performed by such delivery, the person to whom it would have thus been delivered would have transmitted it to him, and thereby the injury could have been averted.

There was error in giving the special charge mentioned in the third question. The general rule is expressed by Crosswell, in his work on the Law of Electricity (§ 412) thus: "The leading principle as to delivery of a telegram is that the message is to be delivered to the person to whom it is addressed, and the place of address is subordinate to the person; and therefore if the person cannot be found at the street and number or other place to which the telegram is addressed, but can be found by reasonable efforts of the telegraph company in some other place, it may be negligence for the company to leave the telegram at the place of address without making further efforts to find the absent person and make personal delivery." Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 1 L. R. A. 728; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Houghton, 82 Tex. 561, 15 L. R. A. 129; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Newhouse, 6 Ind. App. 422; Pope v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 9 Ill. App. 288.

If a message be addressed to the care of another, it may be delivered to such person; or if the addressee has taken rooms at an hotel, where it is the custom to deliver mail and such messages, it will be presumed that the clerk is the agent of the guest to receive messages of this character, and a delivery to such clerk will be sufficient. The wife, as such, is not, in law, the general agent of her husband; and we know of no principle of law that would justify the conclusion that it was the duty of the defendant to deliver the message in this case to Mrs. Mitchell, nor that such a delivery to her would have satisfied the obligation of the telegraph company to Mitchell. The duty which the telegraph company owes to the addressee is personal, and cannot be discharged by making inquiry for the person to whose care the message may be sent, nor by applying to the place of business or residence of the addressee; but inquiry must be made for the person addressed, if the circumstances are such as to show that he may probably be found away from such place of business or residence. The place to which a message is sent is but a guide for the messenger, and does not determine the measure of his diligence. Whether the messenger who is charged with the delivery of the telegram, and fails to present it at the residence or place of business of the addressee, has used ordinary diligence, such as the law requires, is a question of fact for the jury; and it was error for the court, in effect, to charge the jury, as a matter of law, that it was the duty of the telegraph company to deliver the message to the plaintiff's wife. Attorneys for appellee cite the case of Given v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 119, as supporting the charge of the court above referred to; and upon a careful investigation we have found Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Woods, 56 Kan. 787, which we think is more nearly in point. The former case was based upon substantially the following facts: A message was sent to the plaintiff, and the telegraph company inquired at his place of business, ascertaining that he had left the city, and, having exhausted all means of delivering the message to him personally, delivered it to his wife, and notified the sender of the fact of such delivery. The court held that the telegraph company had used due care, and had discharged its duty to the plaintiff, but did not hold that it was the duty of the company to make the delivery to the wife. In the case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Woods, above cited, the message was sent to the plaintiff in the case, at the town of his residence. He was a merchant, and his store was a short distance from the telegraph office, where his wife was in charge of the business; and he had a clerk employed, also. His residence was also near by. The party addressed was out of the town, and the telegraph company failed to apply at his place of business or residence for information, or for the purpose of delivering his message. The court held as follows: "Being unable to make a personal delivery at that place it was the duty of the company to deliver it to his wife, or to his clerk at the store, or to members of his family at his residence. If delivery had been made at either of these places the agents of Woods would have had time and opportunity to have sent the message to him at Grand Summit, and thus have averted the loss which followed." It will be observed that the court here speaks of the persons to whom the delivery should have been made as the agents of the party addressed, and in so far as they were agents, and authorized to receive the message, this is a correct expression of the law; but that portion which announces that it was the duty of the telegraph company to deliver to members of the family is purely dictum, and without any support whatever.

Denman, J., did not sit.

Ex parte FAGG.

(.....Tex.....)

1. A proceeding by a municipal corporation to enforce such fines and penalties as are ordinarily and by usage enforced by municipalities is not a prosecution or criminal in its nature, but only quasi criminal, whatever may be the form of the procedure.
2. It cannot be made by ordinance an offense against a city to do what a statute makes an offense against the state, triable only in a court of record (e. g., the keeping or exhibiting of a gaming table or bank), where the Constitution of the state provides that all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state and shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state.

(February 2, 1896.)

PETITION for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain petitioner's release from custody to which he had been committed for violating an ordinance against keeping and exhibiting a gaming table and bank. Petitioner discharged.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Oeland & Brown and William P. Ellison for relator.

Messrs. A. P. Wozencraft and T. A. Work for city of Dallas.

Henderson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding on an original habeas corpus, granted and made returnable before this court. The petition alleges that applicant is illegally restrained by one J. C. Arnold, chief of police of the city of Dallas, by virtue of a certain judgment of commitment of the city court of Dallas. The agreed statement of facts contains a copy of the judgment and writ of commitment, the complaint on which the applicant was tried, together with a copy of the ordinance under which the prosecution and conviction were had. Said ordinance follows the state law on the subject, and makes it an offense against the city of Dallas for any person to keep or exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, any gaming table or bank of any kind or description whatever, or any table or bank used for gaming, etc.; and the punishment imposed is a fine of not less than $25, nor more than $100, and imprisonment in the city jail for not less than ten nor more than ninety days, which is the same in amount and degree as that provided under the state law or statute on the subject, which makes gaming an offense against the state laws. There was no information filed against defendant, but the complaint on which he was tried is as follows:

The State of Texas, }
County of Dallas, }
City of Dallas. }
Personally appeared before the undersigned

NOTE.—On the question how far proceedings for violation of ordinances are to be regarded as prosecutions for crime, see note to State v. Robitschek (Minn.) 33 L. R. A. 33.

40 L. R. A.

authority, E. F. Gates, who, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that Bud Fagg, in the city of Dallas and state of Texas, on the 9th day of October, 1897, and before the filing of this complaint, did unlawfully keep and exhibit, for the purpose of gaming, a gaming table and bank, to wit, a faro bank, contrary to ordinances in such cases made and provided.
[Signed] E. F. Gates.

Sworn to and subscribed before T. L. Lawhon, city secretary. On the trial the relator Fagg was convicted, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $25 and ten days' imprisonment in the city jail.

The contention of the applicant is that said conviction, being under an ordinance, and in the city court of Dallas, is illegal and void: (1) Because the statutes of the state make the exhibiting of a gaming table for the purpose of gaming an offense against the state, and it is not competent for the legislature to grant to a municipality authority, by ordinances, to supersede the state law on the subject; (2) because the city court of Dallas has no authority to try offenses against the state law; (3) and, granting the city court of Dallas has the power to try state cases, it must proceed as a state court. In the view we take of this question, it is not necessary to discuss the last two propositions, inasmuch as the offense alleged against applicant was prosecuted merely as a violation of the city ordinances; and we are accordingly confronted with two questions: (1) Does the charter of Dallas authorize the city council to pass an ordinance making said offense of keeping and exhibiting a gaming table for the purpose of gaming an offense against the city? (2) If the charter grants this power, did the legislature have the power, under the Constitution and laws of the state, to confer upon the municipality of Dallas authority to make the exhibiting and keeping of a gaming table for the purpose of gaming an offense against the city?

We might observe here that § 24 of the new charter of the city of Dallas, granted by the 25th legislature, gives to the city court of Dallas jurisdiction as follows: "(1) To try, hear, determine, and punish all misdemeanors over which the Dallas city court now has jurisdiction. (2) To try, hear, determine, and punish all misdemeanors arising under the provisions of this charter; to have concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts over all misdemeanors against the state laws, committed within the city limits, except theft and those involving official misconduct, and to have exclusive jurisdiction over disorderly houses and female vagrants." But, as stated, it is not necessary to discuss this provision with reference to the jurisdiction of the city court of state offenses, prosecuted as such; and so it does not become necessary to discuss the bearing of the case of Harris County v. Stewart (Tex.) 41 S. W. 650, or to review the case of Leach v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 248, nor will we do so, further than to suggest that we find nothing in the former case requiring us to change the views expressed in the Leach Case. Furthermore, while not necessary, yet the question being insisted on, we will examine the position of applicant with reference to the caption of the charter of the city of Dallas as passed by the 25th legislature, said caption being entitled "An Act to Incorporate the City of Dallas, and Grant It a New Charter."

Appellant's contention is that if it be conceded that the legislature has the power, in accordance with the view taken by the supreme court in Harris County v. Stewart (Tex.) 41 S. W. 650, to confer jurisdiction upon a municipal court, and so create a state court, the legislature has not done so in this instance. Entertaining the view, as we do, that a municipal court is not a state court, except in a limited sense (that is, a state court for municipal purposes only), we would expect to find, under the above caption, not a state court, as a part of the judicial system of the state, but a municipal court, having jurisdiction and cognizance of matters incidental to the corporation. In this regard we hold the views expressed in Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641. As we understand that case, it was an injunction proceeding brought by Blessing and others to restrain the city of Galveston from proceeding in prosecutions alleged to have been commenced by warrants issued by John S. Rhea, claiming to be acting as recorder, under pretense of authority alleged to have been conferred on him by an act of the legislature, incorporating the city of Galveston. Several of the parties had been arrested, and others threatened with arrest, for breach of an ordinance requiring them to pay a license tax on their respective occupations, trades, and professions, and also to enjoin and restrain appellee from the collection of said license tax. The fourth ground urged by complainants against the enforcement of the tax in the city court was that the recorder's court, created by the charter of the city of Galveston, in which the proceedings were had to enforce the penalties for failure to pay said taxes, is not such a judicial tribunal as is warranted by § 1 of article 5 of the Constitution. On this question Judge Moore uses the following language, which we quote in full: "The objection made to the constitutionality of the recorder's court, created by the charter, has been, in effect, answered by what has been heretofore said. If the legislature may, by reason of its inherent legislative power, create a municipal corporation for purposes of local government, it seems to follow, as a necessary conclusion, that it may invest with such powers as are necessary and essential for the ends and purposes of its creation. Without the grant of general police powers, and the means of enforcing their respect and observance, the act of incorporation of a town or city would be little better than waste paper. Judicial power of a general character, such as is conferred upon constitutional tribunals, or officers clothed with judicial functions for the general administration of the laws, in contradistinction to local or municipal ordinances and regulations, cannot be conferred upon mere corporation courts created to enforce the police powers delegated to such corporations. This seems to be the extent to which we can certainly say, in the absence of the constitutions and statutes applicable to them, that most of the cases cited by appellant clearly go. Some of them, however, 40 L. R. A.

seem to lay down a broader rule. We cannot consent to give the sections of our Constitution, conferring and distributing the judicial power, so limited and technical a construction and application. We think its language, vesting judicial power 'in such inferior courts and magistrates as may be created in this constitution, or by the legislature under its authority,' entirely sufficient to warrant the legislature, when creating municipal corporations, in the absence of any restriction, to create local municipal tribunals as an essential necessity to the well being of such local municipal corporations,"—citing State v. Young, 3 Kan. 445; Hutchings v. Scott, 9 N. J. L. 274; Shaffer v. Mumma, 17 Md. 381, 79 Am. Dec. 656; Hagerstown v. Dechert, 32 Md. 369. Here, to our minds, it is very apparent that Judge Moore drew a distinction between state tribunals constituting a part of our judicial system and municipal court as such. The latter he regarded as merely an incident to the corporation, and with limited powers to enforce municipal ordinances only. As stated above, we would not expect, under the caption of an act to charter or incorporate a city or town, to find thereunder an article or clause creating a court for other than purely municipal purposes; much less an act creating a state court, or vesting a municipal court with jurisdiction which pertains to a state court. And, if the prosecution in this case was for a state offense as such, we would be inclined to hold that the title of said act does not embrace the subject of creating a state court of the municipal court of the city of Dallas, or of conferring a jurisdiction which pertains to our state courts on said tribunal. On this subject we refer to Wulftange v. McCollom, 83 Ky. 361; Brown v. State, 79 Ga. 324; State, Stuart, v. Kinsella, 14 Minn. 524 (Gil. 395); Holmberg v. Hauck, 16 Neb. 387; San Antonio v. Gould, 34 Tex. 49; Giddings v. San Antonio, 47 Tex. 556, 26 Am. Rep. 321.

However, as stated before, the question here presented to us is whether or not the charter of Dallas confers authority on the city council to make this an offense against the city, and whether or not the legislature can confer this authority. The charter of the city of Dallas is a special charter, authorized under the Constitution for cities having more than 10,000 population; and by a number of sections, from 48 to 124, inclusive, said charter proposes to confer general powers on the city council to do certain things. Among a number of other things which the city is thus authorized to do, it appears to be authorized by ordinance to make certain acts which are penal offenses under the state laws offenses against the city. See §§ 88, 84, 86, 87, 89, 92, 93, and 103. All of the other enumerated sections appear to be regarding matters incidental to and growing out of the municipal corporation. Section 103, we presume, contains the provision under which it is contended the city council had authority to pass the ordinance against keeping and exhibiting gaming tables, under which the conviction was had in this case. Said section reads as follows: "To license, tax, and regulate billiard tables, pin alleys, and ball alleys; to suppress, restrain, and regulate and control disorderly houses, tipping shops, and groceries, gambling and gaming houses, and games of every kind, lotteries and all fraudulent devices and practices, bawdy houses of prostitution, and to punish all keepers of said houses and exhibitors or players at said games and other things, with the same penalties, fine, and imprisonment as may be inflicted therefor by the statutes of the state of Texas." It would appear therefrom that the legislature had conferred the power (if it was authorized to do so) on the city council to pass an ordinance making the offense created by the statutes of the state an offense against the state, to wit, the keeping and exhibiting of a gaming table and bank for the purpose of gaming, also an offense against the city; and the only question then is, Did the legislature have the constitutional right, under the Constitution and laws of this state, to confer this power? We would observe here that the general laws of the state (see articles 929-931, Code Crim. Proc. 1895, inclusive) put mayors and recorders of cities on the same plane, as to the administration of laws with reference to criminal prosecutions, as justices of the peace, and vest them with the same power and jurisdiction, and authorize municipal councils, by ordinances, to create acts which are made penal by state laws also offenses against the city, and to make all prosecutions and convictions under city ordinances good in bar of prosecutions for the same act under state laws and vice versa. The act here complained of does not come within this category. It is such an offense as a justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to try, but the power to try and punish the same is vested by the Constitution and laws of the state in the county court (see §§ 16 and 19, art. 5, Const.; and see articles 91 and 96, Code Crim. Proc. 1895); that is, imprisonment in the county jail being a part of the punishment under the state law for this offense, it can only be tried in the county court, same being court of record. Some authorities hold that where the state law has acted upon a matter, and made the act an offense against the state, the legislature cannot afterwards delegate authority to municipal governments to create the same act an offense against the city. The state having once occupied the territory, the city is excluded from interfering with it. See Savannah v. Hussey, 21 Ga. 80; Wayne County v. Detroit, 17 Mich. 390; Cooley, Const. Lim. 140, 228; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 955; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 237. The decisions of our state, however, appear to be otherwise, and to authorize municipal corporations to take jurisdiction, and by ordinance create an act which is already a state offense an offense against the city. This seems to be the holding of this court with reference to such offenses as justices of the peace have jurisdiction to try; and in such cases it is held that the ordinance must conform to the state laws in creating the offense and imposing the penalty therefor. See Ex parte Boland, 11 Tex. App. 159; Flood v. State, 19 Tex. App. 584; Ex parte Freeland (Tex. Crim. App.) 42 S. W. 295; Angerhoffer v. State, 15 Tex. App. 613. There are some decisions of this court which hold that a municipality can, by ordinance, take jurisdiction of offenses which are made such by the laws of this state, and of which the county court has exclusive jurisdiction; and this notwithstanding § 12 of article 5 of the Constitution, which requires that "all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by authority of the state of Texas, and shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state." See Ex parte Wilson, 14 Tex. App. 592. In the Wilson Case, 14 Tex. App. 592, the constitutional provision above mentioned was not discussed at all; nor was it discussed in any case we are aware of except in Leach v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 449.

Of course, a great many matters are incidental to municipal corporations, and are not at all violative of state laws, and no question can arise as to ordinances covering said acts. A number of acts are petty offenses, and are covered by state laws, and would appear also to be peculiarly offenses against the municipal government, and incidental to such government, as well as offenses against the state. Our Criminal Code defines a petty offense as "one which a justice of the peace or the mayor or other officer of a town or city may try and punish." Penal Code 1895, art. 57. And this appears to be in consonance with the authorities defining a petty offense. Some of the cases hold that a petty offense can be made an offense against the municipal corporation by ordinance; and can be punished without violating the above provision of the Constitution with reference to prosecutions, while others hold the contrary. See note to State v. Robitsek, 60 Minn. 123, 33 L. R. A. 38, and authorities there cited; Davenport v. Bird, 84 Iowa, 524. In the latter case the action was under an ordinance of the city of Davenport prescribing that "every person who shall unlawfully disturb the public quiet of any street, alley, avenue, public square, market place," etc., "by loud or unusual noise, by blowing horns or other instruments," etc., "shall be guilty of a misdemeanor"; and the fine provided was not less than $3 nor more than $100, and imprisonment until the fine and costs were paid, provided that the imprisonment should not exceed thirty days. It was claimed in that case that said action was a prosecution; that it was not authorized under the Constitution of Iowa, which is similar in its provisions to ours. We quote from that case as follows: "Is it necessary under the Constitution, that all prosecutions for violations of municipal police ordinances shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state of Iowa? Or, in other words, is that clause of the city charter of Davenport, which directs that 'all suits, actions, and prosecutions instituted, commenced, or brought by the corporation shall be instituted, commenced, and prosecuted in the name of the city of Davenport,' in conflict with the constitutional provision before referred to? We are of opinion that it is not. This clause of the Constitution occurs in article 5, which treats of the judicial department of the government. This article vests and defines the judicial power of the state; establishes the tenure of office of the judges and defines the mode of their election; fixes their salary and limits the number of judicial districts; provides for the election of an attorney general, and other matters pertaining to the judicial arm of the state, among which is the clause under consideration. From all this, it seems manifest that the requirement, that 'all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state of Iowa' contemplates such criminal prosecutions as shall be instituted and prosecuted before the tribunals which are provided for in that article of the Constitution, under the statutes of the state. It is fitting and appropriate that prosecutions for violations of the criminal laws of the state should be carried on in the name of the government. But there is no fitness or propriety in requiring the state to be a party to every petty prosecution under the police regulations of a municipal corporation. Such a construction of this article of the Constitution seems to us unwarranted, and not intended by the framers of the Constitution. It was held by the supreme court of Pennsylvania that the word 'process,' in the 28d section of the fifth article of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which provides that the style of all process shall be 'The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania,' was intended to refer to such writs only as should become necessary to be issued in the course of the exercise of that judicial power which is established and provided for in the article of the Constitution, and forms exclusively the subject-matter of it. 3 Pa. 99. See also Sprague v. Birchard, 1 Wis. 457, 60 Am. Dec. 393. On the same principle we are of opinion that the word 'prosecutions,' in the 8th section of article 5 of our Constitution, was intended to refer only to such criminal prosecutions, under state laws, as should be cognizable by the judicial power which is established and provided for in that article, and that it was not intended to include prosecutions under ordinances of municipal corporations, cognizable before local police magistrates. It follows, therefore, that in sustaining the demurrer on the first ground stated, the court below erred." This does not appear to have been a state offense by statute. Treating it as a municipal offense merely, it states the correct doctrine. Under the authorities, we are inclined to the view that, in the face of the constitutional provision before quoted, where an offense has been made such by state law, notwithstanding it is a petty offense, it must be prosecuted by authority of the state, and against its peace and dignity. In this case, however, it is not necessary for us to decide that question, as the offense for which the relator was tried and punished was not a petty offense, but an offense over which the county court, being a court of record, alone had jurisdiction.

40 L. R. A.

Now, the question which presents itself is: Does the fact that the municipal council of Dallas has, by ordinance, created the exhibiting and keeping of a gaming table for the purpose of gaming, an offense against the municipality, relieve it of being a prosecution? A "prosecution" is defined by our statute to be "the whole and any part of the procedure which the law provides for bringing offenders to justice." See article 26 of the Penal Code of 1895. "It is a criminal proceeding at the suit of the government." Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 269, 25 L. ed. 652. A proceeding by a municipal corporation to enforce such fines and penalties as are ordinarily and by usage enforced by them is not criminal in its nature, whatever may be the form of the procedure. Such proceedings are only quasi criminal, and are not prosecutions. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. p. 260, and note; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 432; Sparta v. Lewis, 91 Tenn. 870.

As heretofore stated, the conviction in this case would not come in the category of petty offenses, nor an offense merely growing out of and incidental to the municipal government; and, in our opinion, no matter what might be the tribunal or what the character of procedure, the prosecution, under the Constitution and laws of this state, must be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Texas, and conclude against its peace and dignity. The fact that the prosecution was brought under the city ordinance did not deprive it of the characteristic of a prosecution; nor could the legislature by indirection, as by vesting jurisdiction of the case in some other than a state tribunal, so change the nature of the offense as to take it out of the category which had been affixed to it by state law, of a prosecution for a criminal offense. And we hold that it was not competent for the municipal council of Dallas, by ordinance, to create the keeping and exhibiting of a gaming table or bank (which was by the statute an offense against the state) an offense against the city of Dallas, and the prosecution under such ordinance could not be maintained in the face of our Constitution, which prescribes, as before stated, that all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the state, and shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state. And we accordingly hold that the relator is entitled to be discharged, and that the costs of this court be taxed against relator; and it is so ordered.

Hurt, P. J., concurs in result, but dissents as to some of the propositions announced in the opinion.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BALTIMORE TRUST & GUARANTEE COMPANY

T. Edward HAMBLETON et al., Appts.
and Colden RHIND, Appellee.

(84 Md. 456.)

- 1. An additional subscription for a block of bonds by a second syndicate composed in part of members of the first syndicate which bought bonds with an option for an additional purchase with "the same rights and privileges" provided with reference to the former is subject to the same provision as to a commission provided for in the original agreement.

- 2. The first coupon, as well as others, is included in a sale of bonds to a syndicate without any exception or reservation of it from the sale, although there is a provision that two thirds of the first payment of interest shall be paid by a trustee as commission, and any interest in that coupon is therefore derived through the syndicate, and subject to the rule which precludes one member from secretly obtaining a commission in which his associates do not share.

NOTE.—Relations and rights of syndicate members.

- I. Scope and nature of the subject.
- II. Rights and powers of members.
- III. Rights, duties, and liabilities in transactions between themselves.
 - a. General rule as to good faith required.
 - b. Sales by member to association.
 - c. Purchases with secret advantages.
 - d. Dealings between associations having common members.
 - e. Contribution to capital, expenses, and losses.
 - f. Interest in property of association.
 - g. Compensation for services.
- IV. Remedies.

I. Scope and nature of the subject.

Syndicates as a legal consideration have been but recently brought into notice, and the limits of the subject have not been heretofore closely defined by the courts. The principles which would appear to have been applied to their government, however, are not new, and in the preparation of this note the writer has not confined himself to cases designating the body in question as a syndicate, but has sought to include such cases, and such cases only, as treat of associations which fall within the definition of a syndicate given in the principal case of BALTIMORE TRUST AND GUARANTEE CO. v. HAMBLETON by whatever name they may have been known. Such associations seem to have been generally regarded, subject to some exceptions, as falling within the rules applicable to partnerships.

Thus, an unincorporated association for the purpose of the purchase and sale of land for profit possesses the legal attributes of a partnership, and is governed by the rules of law applicable to partnerships. McDowell v. Joice, 149 Ill. 124.

And where four persons agree among themselves to be jointly interested in lands, and that they will put them into a company at a large price above their cost and divide the profits between themselves and take measures to organize a company for that purpose, they are to be regarded as partners, though the titles to the lands are not in them as such, and though there are no written articles of copartnership; and all that one copartner does and represents while engaged in getting up the company and transferring lands to it binds the others, and all are responsible for false and fraudulent representations made by either therein. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

So, the principle which obtains among partners that all members of the partnership shall be loyal to the joint concerns extends to all persons who may engage in a common undertaking, and any of the associates are intrusted with the interests of the association. Delmonico v. Roubush, 2 McCrary, 23.

And an enterprise to promote a common purchase and the mutual benefit of the parties to it, whether they be true partners or not, necessarily includes a relation of trust and confidence reposed and accepted by its several members, binding each to the same scrupulous good faith to which they would be bound if standing in the relation of partners. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240.

A syndicate agreement by which the members were to contribute a sum of money to be placed in the hands of trustees to purchase a tract of land and improve the same, and sell it when improved, and distribute the proceeds among the shareholders, however, if constituting the members partners as to the proceeds and profits does not constitute one that will terminate by the death of one of the shareholders or the assignment of his interest, as it differs from an ordinary trading partnership in that the delectus personae is an unimportant consideration. Horner v. Meyers, 29 Ohio L. J. 403.

And an association of persons for the purpose of dealing in land contemplating an indefinite series of transactions of the same general character, through all of which the association itself is to maintain its identity, the original associates so far as they shall choose being entitled to take part in each purchase, and such others as should become associated with them being entitled to become parties, is to be regarded, at least in equity, as an ideal entity, through all the mutations of its membership, in determining the individual relations existing between the association and its members. McDowell v. Joice, 149 Ill. 124.

And the mere fact that other persons unite with those or a part of those who originally formed the association which fixed no limit to the time for its duration will not change the duties and obligations of the persons intrusted with the management of its affairs. McDowell v. Joice, 46 Ill. App. 627, Affirmed 149 Ill. 124.

So, a deed by a trustee for a syndicate, made for the purpose of enabling one of the members thereof to convey to a third person a portion of his interest, becomes a nullity upon the transfer of the entire interest of such member to such third person, who takes the place of the member as one of the syndicate, without taking a deed from the former member as originally contemplated, and the legal title of the whole of the land remains in the trustee. Johnson v. Elkins, 1 App. D. C. 430.

And the death of one of several trustees to whom an association of individuals have conveyed property in trust for certain purposes will not affect the transfer, the equitable title so transferred surviving to the surviving members of the trust. Michenor v. Reinach, 49 La. Ann. 330. And see Horner v. Meyers, 29 Ohio L. J. 403.

And the rule is the same with reference to the assignment of an interest in the association. Horner v. Meyers, 29 Ohio L. J. 403.

It has been held, however, that the members of a syndicate for the purchase of land, upon making

- 3. A syndicate is an association of individuals, formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested.
- 4. It is the plain and imperative duty of promoters of a syndicate towards persons who are invited to co-operate in the enterprise, not only to abstain from stating as a fact that which is not a fact, but not to omit to state any circumstance within their knowledge the existence of which might in any way affect the extent or quality of the advantages held out as inducements to the others.
- 5. Equity will devise a remedy to meet each new emergency, and will enforce a restitution if the ends of justice require it, where such purchase, contract with one another by implication as well as with the seller, and where one refuses to be bound, and another is substituted in his place without the knowledge and consent of the others, the contract is annulled and the associates are discharged. Crittenden v. Armour, 80 Iowa, 221.

And the act of a real-estate agent employed to sell land for the owner, who became a member of the syndicate for the purchase of such land, of substituting a stranger in the place of one of the members of the syndicate while they held an option as purchasers, is the act of the vendor, and not of the syndicate, for which they are bound, as he is the agent of such vendor and not of the purchaser. Crittenden v. Armour, 80 Iowa, 221.

So, a transaction by which members of an association for dealing in lands, without in any way apprising their associates and continuing to act apparently for the promotion of the common enterprise, become subscribers in a new deal by which a tract of land is purchased, and by each taking advantage of the position of his associates they succeed in inducing the association to take it off their hands at an advanced price, thus realizing a large profit, is a fraud upon the association rendering them liable to account to their associates for the profits realized. McDowell v. Joice, 149 Ill. 124.

And a contract between a syndicate and another, the provisions of which require the members of the syndicate to act as a unit in certain contingencies, does not mean that one member of it may transfer his interest to a hostile party and thus prevent unanimous action, and in case of such a transfer to one who is hostile to the interests of the other members the covenant is abrogated and unanimity of purpose is no longer necessary. Coffin v. Grand Rapids Hydraulic Co. 46 N. Y. S. R. 851.

II. Rights and powers of members.

The contract between the members of a syndicate under which it derives its existence furnishes the measure of the rights of the associates to act for the body and their powers to bind each other.

Thus, the Constitution and by-laws agreed upon by the members of an association not organized in pursuance of any statute, and of which the terms of membership are not fixed by the principles of the common law containing the stipulations of the parties, form the law which should govern, and not the uncertain will of the majority of the members. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571.

And resolutions made by an association of the stockholders of a steamboat company, agreed to and signed by all the members acting as independent tenants in common of the property to be held by them by which they regulate the number of shares belonging to each and provide for the method of transfer and of descent in case of death, are in the nature of permanent constitutional provisions. 40 L. R. A.

a fund claimed by a wrongdoer is under its control.

- 6. A principal is bound by and responsible for the representations and concealments made by an agent in the line and within the scope of his employment.
- 7. One who pays commissions to a member of a syndicate who acted as his agent in forming it, under a secret agreement giving him an advantage over the other members, is liable to the syndicate as for misapplication of its funds, especially when it was part of a fund held in trust for syndicate expenses in which such member declared to his associates that he had no interest.
- 8. A payee who knows of the facts involved has no better right to enforce drafts visions binding upon all the members when adopted by all as a solemn private contract which can be only abolished by the like concurrent will by which they were adopted, and are not mere by-laws subject to the control of a majority. Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 573.

So, an agreement for the formation of a syndicate contemplating that the title to lands purchased for it should be taken in the name of one of the number, who should hold one fifth of the same in trust for each of his four associates, binds such trustee whoever may be selected to convey an undivided one fifth to each of the four others, without reference to any disposition that might be made by any one of the members of his own interest. Johnson v. Elkins, 1 App. D. C. 430.

And where an account is opened with a banking house by an association formed of a great body of persons united for the purpose of adventure or undertaking, and by the subscribers' agreement the managing committee was authorized to bind the members and make regulations and by-laws, it is not beyond the powers of the committee to order that the checks of any three of them shall be sufficient, and a check so drawn will not render any of the committee more liable than the other members of the company, in the absence of proof that the money came into his hands. Maitland's Case, 4 De G. M. & G. 769.

And a note signed by the agents of a syndicate composed of themselves and other persons, the object of which was to buy the securities of two railroads and consolidate the companies and issue the bonds and stock of the consolidated company to the subscribers, which was used for syndicate purposes, and recited the giving of syndicate securities, will be held to be the note of the syndicate and not the individual loan or debt of the agents, where the application for the loan is shown to have been made by the syndicate, and the lender entered the loan on its books in the name of the syndicate, and sent demands for interest to it. Continental Nat. Bank v. Heilman, 81 Fed. Rep. 36.

So, an assessment made by a voluntary association upon its members for improvements made upon its property pursuant to a statute for the purpose of increasing the head of water in a stream and regulating the flow thereof for the supply of their mills, is not unjust and oppressive and inequitable as between themselves, because it provides that each associate shall be liable in proportion to the height of the fall instead of in proportion to the quantity used by him, where it appears that they have by their articles of association consented to be assessed, and the plan of assessment was adopted after due deliberation, and fully approved. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. 231.

And any shareholder in an association or private company, for the purchase and sale of lands for the benefit of the members, the articles of which provide that within six years from the date drawn by his secret agent than the latter had to claim the fund drawn upon.

(January 5, 1897.)

APPEAL by defendant's Hambleton et al. from a decree of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City in favor of defendant Rhind in an interpleader proceeding to determine the right of defendants to certain funds in the hands of the trust company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. K. Este Fisher, William Cabell Bruce, William A. Fisher, and Archibald H. Taylor, for appellants:
The commission, in any event, was payable only upon the first $2,000,000 of bonds.

thereof the trustee shall proceed to take measures for closing the concerns of the association, and to that end shall cause all effects and securities held by them or the association to be collected or converted into money, and all property converted into money by sale or otherwise as fast as practicable, has a right to insist that such contract shall be carried into effect according to its spirit and intent, though it be not for the interest of the shareholders, or even a majority of them, to have the affairs of the association wound up. Mann v. Butler, 2 Barb. Ch. 362.

A provision in a contract for the formation of a syndicate for the purchase of lands that no sale should be made unless four out of the five contracting parties should give their consent in writing, however, is to be regarded as a limitation of the powers of the one holding the title in trust for all, as it would require a plain and unmistakable declaration to that effect, even if that could be enforced to restrict each individual's power of alienation of his own interest. Johnson v. Elkins, 1 App. D. C. 430.

And in an association of the stockholders of a steamboat company in matters of mere private confidence or personal trust or benefit, the majority cannot conclude the minority, but where the power is of a public or general nature the voice of the majority will control on grounds of public convenience. Livingston v. Lynch, 4 Johns. Ch. 573.

So, a conveyance by the owners of a tract of land who have formed an association by articles dividing their interests into transferable shares, and appointed directors to manage, improve, and dispose of the land to trustees who were to sell and dispose of the same for the benefit of the association, of the deed referring to the articles, vests the whole title legally and equitably in the trustees, and the directors of the company cannot dispose of any portion of the land by a dedication to the public or otherwise without the co-operation of the trustees. Ward v. Davis, 3 Sandf. 502.

And a syndicate agreement by which the members were to contribute a large sum of money to be placed in the hands of trustees, whose duty it was to purchase a tract of land and improve the same and sell it when improved, the proceeds of which are to be distributed among the shareholders, vests the land in the trustees with the power of subdivision and sale and the division of the proceeds, and does not contemplate that the shareholders shall be entitled to an interest in the land, or to a partition thereof. Horner v. Meyers, 29 Ohio L. J. 403.

And the managers of an oil company the capital of which was not to be increased without the consent of a majority of the stockholders, and to whom no authority is given to borrow money or to increase the capital, cannot ratify a transaction by which the president purchased a lot for oil operations and borrowed money with others for its payment on their individual credit, and their ratification will not bind the other stockholders to contribute to the payment thereof. Crum's Appeal, 66 Pa. 474.

In order to support so unreasonable a proposition as that Mr. Rhind was to receive $78,000 for a service which admittedly was sufficiently compensated by $30,000, unless the option was exercised, the terms must, without any ambiguity, point out that such was the intention.

If the court shall be of opinion that the contract was intended to stipulate for commissions on the entire amount under the second or option contract, as well as under the contract for the purchase of the $2,000,000 of the bonds, then Mr. Rhind is entitled only to the amount less the sum received by Lancaster.

When a syndicate is formed there is the implication that all its members shall stand upon an equal footing, and that no one member shall take a secret benefit.

So, expenses of trustees of an association for the purchase of land for the purpose of laying out a town, incurred in the erection of a tavern and public county buildings, though made in good faith and tending greatly to enhance the value of the town lots, cannot be allowed as a credit in their account unless they were authorized by the authority under which they acted, or unless the shareholders expressly or impliedly consented thereto. McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 631.

And a deed from the members of a syndicate of their property to a trustee for a corporation which adopts a resolution of the syndicate that the shares shall be distributed ratably among them, according to their interest in the property, and be deemed in great part paid up, is not a contract within the New South Wales act 1874, § 57, which will protect the shares from liability to calls in respect of the amounts deemed paid up, as it does not effect a genuine transfer of property of which the paid-up portion of the shares forms part of the consideration, or create any legal rights or liabilities. Smith v. Brown [1896] A. C. 614, 75 L. T. N. S. 213, 85 L. J. P. C. N. S. 89.

III. Rights, duties, and liabilities in transactions between themselves.

a. General rule as to good faith required.

Associates engaged in a common enterprise for their mutual benefit have the right to demand and expect from each other good faith in all that relates to their common interest, and one cannot be permitted to take to himself a secret or separate advantage to the prejudice of the others. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

And a trustee of a syndicate for the purpose of buying and selling land, though not technically an agent or trustee for the other members of the syndicate, is subject to the rule that an agent cannot make a profit in dealing with his principal; the latter has the option to rescind the contract or claim his share of the profits. Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279.

And members of the association for dealing in land, who have in no way manifested their election to no longer remain members, are incapable of dealing with the association for their own profit,—at least without its full knowledge and consent. McDowell v. Joice, 149 Ill. 124.

So, an agent appointed by the trustees of an unincorporated land company organized for the purpose of laying out a town, to bring its affairs to a close and to settle and compromise with debtors,

Mr. Rhind now presents himself and invokes equitable principles, in order that the fund in court shall be turned over to him, although it is payable to Lancaster.

Mr. Rhind cannot obtain any part of the money without the assistance of a court of equity, and he can obtain that only upon the condition that he shall do what is equitable on his part, and the very first condition must be that he shall not take over again out of the fund what he has already procured, and what he has, in disregard of the equities of the syndicate, turned over to his agent and partner, Mr. Lancaster.

Emma Silver Min. Co. v. Grant, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 933.

Evidence of knowledge upon the part of Rhind is unnecessary.

and having authority to receive the stock of the company at a designated price in final settlement with the purchasers of lots and lands of the company, cannot purchase the stock of the company for his own use, as such a purchase would be regarded as having been made on behalf of the association. McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681.

And one who had been an agent for such a company, who after such agency ceases becomes the owner of stock in the company, cannot thereby entitle himself to retain in his hands money which he had collected as agent and attorney at law unless insolvency or some independent ground of equitable interposition exists, and the fact that the trustees are nonresidents is not sufficient where it was known to him previous to his purchase of stock. McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681.

And a part owner of a contract for the purchase of a claim to a mine whose co-owner uses such contract for the purpose of procuring such claim for a third person without his consent, and who secures another outstanding title for the benefit of such third person and receives from him in return for such services an interest in the mine, is entitled to a share of such interest proportionate to his interest in the original contract. Delmonico v. Roubenush, 2 McCrary, 23.

So, when the common stock of an association for the purpose of carrying on a business of mining and collecting gold and other minerals in California consists of the capital of one or more of the members and the labor and skill of others, the diversion by any of the members from the common object to which it was pledged of the labor and skill, as well as of the capital, during the existence of the enterprise, and its employment for other productive purposes, either of the same or any other kind, entitles the other members of such association to have the profits derived therefrom brought into the common fund. Waring v. Cram, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 516.

b. Sales by member to association.

A sale made by a member of a voluntary association who induces his associates into the purchase for the common benefit, concealing the fact that he is the real vendor, and misrepresenting the interest or advantages of the purchase or the value of the property, may, at the election of the betrayed associates, be vacated and set aside, and the seller compelled to account for whatever loss his associates may have sustained. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240; Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

And a subscriber to a paper by which each subscriber agreed jointly for their mutual benefit and advantage to purchase certain lands designated, for a price named, cannot purchase the lands for a less price, and compel his associates to allow him more than he paid; his purchase would inure to Western Maryland R. Co. v. Franklin Bank, 60 Md. 44.

Messrs. Rhind and Lancaster and their agent Mr. Williams were promoters of the syndicate, charged with all the duties and responsibilities of that relation to the members of the syndicate, and Lancaster, in order to aid the scheme, became a member of it.

Bagnall v. Carlton, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 382; Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 455; New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 118.

The contract between Lancaster and Rhind discloses the fact that they were associates and partners to earn the commission.

White v. Sawyer, 16 Gray, 589.

Rhind can only claim under the terms of the contract, and only on the theory that Lan-the benefit of all the subscribers. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

And associates in a common enterprise who conceal the fact of their interest in property, nominally owned by an outside party, and misrepresent its value and the necessity for renting it in order to prevent competition, and induce the association to rent or purchase it at an exorbitant price, can be compelled to account to their associates for whatever loss they sustain thereby. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240.

And it is not for a member of a voluntary association who had induced his associates into a purchase of his property for the common benefit, concealing his ownership and misrepresenting the interest or advantages of the purchase, to show that the property was worth all he received for it, and that all the advantages contemplated from its purchase have accrued. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240.

So, the estate of a deceased member of a syndicate who fraudulently procured the conveyance of his own property to the syndicate at a greatly advanced price, concealing the fact that he was the vendor, is liable on the ground that he was a partner, and that the action therefore did not die with him. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222, 25 Week. Rep. 436.

And the purchase by some of the members of an association for the purpose of dealing in land of lands through a third person, and turning them over at an advanced price to the association, is a fraud upon the other members for whom the persons thus purchasing became trustees. McDowell v. Joice, 46 Ill. App. 627, Affirmed 149 Ill. 124.

And an agent for a syndicate, who represents that the title to property is in another, and leads the members to believe that he will procure it for the benefit of the syndicate, is estopped from subsequently claiming that he was the owner of the land and from selling it at an advance upon the amount paid to third persons for such land, although the members of the syndicate had agreed to pay the amount charged by the agent under a representation that it could not be obtained for less. Lyon v. Worcester, 40 Ill. App. 630.

So, a trustee of a syndicate for the purchase and sale of land, who by his answer in an action for an accounting as such trustee shows that he had purchased land from himself and others instead of from the person mentioned in the syndicate contract as the owner from whom he had purchased at a profit, must show that he made the profit under such circumstances that a court of equity would permit him to retain it, and the complainant does not have the burden of showing that he made it in violation of his duty and in fraud of the rights of the other members of the syndicate. Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279.

caster was in reality acting for him, and therefore that he has an equitable title to the fund.

Any surreptitious dealing between one principal and the agent of the other principal is a fraud on such other principal, cognizable in this court.

Panama & S. P. Teleg. Co. v. India Rubber G. P. & Teleg. Works Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 526.

When jurisdiction has once been obtained, it will be retained for the complete adjudication of the rights of all.

Phelps, Juridical Equity, pp. 260, 261; Bispham, Eq. p. 53.

The court will mould the relief to the circumstances, such being the unique power of a court of equity upon which it has been builded up, and the sole motive for its separate existence.

No amount of successful practice or general acquiescence in purchases of property by one who, after organizing a syndicate for the purchase of the same property, procures its transfer to the syndicate at an advanced price, can give such methods a standing in a court of equity. Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279.

In Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279, Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 555, 32 L. ed. 1005, infra, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the syndicate employed as agent for the purchase of property at a designated price, persons who had already contracted for its purchase for themselves at a lesser price, who afterwards sold it to the syndicate at the price fixed by it, the parties thus coming into the market upon their own judgment, fixing the price which they were willing to pay.

The promoters of a syndicate stand in a fiduciary relation to it, and are bound to make a full and fair disclosure of their interest in property to be purchased by it; and where they suppress the fact that they were the real vendor, and that they gave for the property only half what the syndicate was going to give, and had obtained the acceptance of the contract by a board created by them, there is no binding contract, and the sale will be set aside and judgment given against them for repayment of the purchase money. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222, 25 Week. Rep. 436. And see BALTIMORE TRUST & GUARANTEE CO. v. HAMBLETON.

And where a syndicate for the purchase of mining property promotes a corporation and sells the property to it for double the amount paid, and prepares a prospectus stating that the directors had entered into a provisional contract to purchase the property at a certain figure, when the fact was that they had not done so, and that the trustee who purported to purchase on behalf of the company was really acting as the agent of the syndicate, and omitting to state therein the names of the real owners and the price which the vendors had paid for the property, it shows that the syndicate did not, as promoters of the company, make such full and fair disclosure as was required of them in their fiduciary position. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 25 Week. Rep. 436, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222.

So, the payment of a large sum of money to the promoters of a company out of the purchase price of a concession for the working of guano on a certain island, which is put in by the owners and promoters of the company at an excessive valuation, where the concession was worthless and voidable because of a breach of the conditions thereof, is to be regarded as fraudulent and a bribe to induce the promoters on behalf of the company to accept 40 L. R. A.

Crain v. Barnes, 1 Md. Ch. 155; Eastman v. Savings Bank, 58 N. H. 422; Poland v. Lam-ouille Valley R. Co. 52 Vt. 175; McGean v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 133 N. Y. 16; Walters v. Farmers' Bank, 76 Va. 12; Rust v. Ware, 6 Gratt. 50; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Ryland, 69 Md. 449, 1 L. R. A. 548.

An agent or a promoter, whatever may be the nature of his employment, or under whatever circumstances, is bound, if he has any interest in the matter, not only to declare that fact, but to specify the nature of his interest; and all persons who act with him, and who share in that interest, are jointly and severally bound to make good, when their interest is discovered, to the principals, the whole benefit which has been obtained without the sanction of the principals.

a defective title to the concession, and they are therefore liable to refund the same. Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, 24 Week. Rep. 530, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 394, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 661, 37 L. T. N. S. 9.

Where a person projecting the formation of a company invites the public to join him in the project upon the representation that he had acquired the property which was intended to be applied for the purposes of the company, the invitation is only to participate in the benefit of the property purchased on the terms on which the projector had acquired it, and the fiduciary character of the projector would in such case commence from the time when he first began to deal with the public, and would be controlled in equity by the representations he then made to the public. Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461.

And one who, having made a contract for the purchase of property, procures others to join him in the formation of a syndicate for the purchase of the same property, representing to them that it belonged to the person holding the title, with whom he had contracted, and sells it to himself as trustee for such syndicate at an advanced price procuring the conveyance to himself as trustee, will be held in equity to account to the other members of the syndicate for their due proportion of the profit he actually made in the transaction. Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279.

Where persons form an association, or begin or start the project of one, from that time they stand in a fiduciary relation to each other and to all others who may subsequently become members or subscribers, and it is not competent for any one of them to purchase property for the purpose of such a company and then sell it at an advance without a full disclosure of the facts, and they must account to the company for the profit, because it is legitimately theirs. Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43.

And one who purchases petroleum property for $18,000, and proposing to improve the property and form an oil company, and representing that the property cost $28,000, and that $4,000 working capital was required, induces another to embark in the speculation, placing the title in another in trust for the association, after which the venture proves a failure, is answerable to the person thus investing for the moneys which without his fault he lost in the speculation. Crater v. Binninger, 33 N. J. L. 517, 97 Am. Dec. 737.

And where land is purchased at a comparatively low price with a view of turning it over at a great advance to a company which the purchasers proceeded to organize, selecting three other persons, who consent to lend their names knowing little and caring nothing about the business in hand, to satisfy the law requiring five corporators, and induce other persons to take stock in the company

Bagnall v. Carlton, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 385.

Messrs. Charles Marshall, William L. Marbury, and Henry J. Bowdoin, also for appellants.

Messrs. Richard M. Venable and Edwin G. Baetjer, for appellee:

Even if Rhind knew that Lancaster's profit was concealed from the syndicate, and with this knowledge paid over the money to Lancaster, the syndicate must recover it from Lancaster, and cannot recover it from Rhind, or, which is the same thing, out of a fund to which he is entitled.

Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 109.

In an interpleader suit the only question to be tried is the title to or lien on the debt in controversy.

National Park Bank v. Lanahan, 60 Md. 477.

The claimant who cannot show a lien on the fund in the stockholders' hands has no standing in an interpleader suit, no matter whether the claimant who has the fund is indebted to the other claimant or not.

Zihlman v. Zihlman, 75 Md. 372; Sherman v. Partridge, 4 Duer, 646; Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. 268, 5 L. ed. 614.

McSherry, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are ten appeals now before us in a single record, but only one opinion will be required to cover them all; because, while there are some slight variations in minor details, the material facts in all the cases are identical by representing that the land had cost nearly eight times the price actually paid, and receive money from subscribers as officers of the company, and pay it over to themselves individually as consideration money, the stockholders can recover in an action against them for money had and receive the difference between the actual and represented cost of the land; and although one of them alone had received the money, the action will lie in the form ex contractu against both. Vulcan Oil Co. v. Simons, 6 Phila. 561.

So, persons owning oil lands which cost them about $30,000, who procure a subscription paper to be drawn in which the subscribers agree to pay the sums set opposite their names for the purchase of the property at the sum of $125,000, and subscribe the paper, not intending to pay; and knowing that they will not have to pay their subscriptions and cause it to be circulated and subscriptions to be procured for the purpose of filling up subscriptions given away by them in what may properly be called decoy subscriptions, procuring subscriptions upon the assurance that the original cost of the land was $125,000, and upon the belief upon the part of the subscribers that they become such on a footing of equality with others, the money which is subscribed being divided among and retained by them, are liable therefor, as the fair implication of such paper is that the lands were to be bought of the owners, and that such owners are not any of those who subscribed as purchasers, and that each is engaged in an enterprise for the mutual and common benefit and advantage of all, and that each has a common interest with the others according to the amount of his subscription. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

And where the owner of mines worth not more than $4,000 agrees with another to promote a company to purchase them at £7,000 of which the latter is to receive £3,000, and the company is formed, the parties to the agreement becoming parties to a prospectus in which such facts are fraudulently concealed, and in their capacity as directors by the like fraudulent concealment they induce the company to complete the purchase, a bill will lie by one of the shareholders on behalf of himself and others where the majority thereof refuse to take steps to get the contract set aside, such majority being due to the votes of the parties who perpetrated the fraud, and the agreement will be canceled and the company wound up. Atwool v. Merryweather, 37 L. J. Ch. N. S. 35.

And one who associates himself with another who has purchased certain calico printing works for the sum of £15,000, to promote the formation of a company to purchase such works, which company is ultimately formed and such promoters are made directors, which purchases such property for £20,000, with an agreement between the promoters that the vendor should pay the other £3,000 out of the purchase money, is not entitled to secure any profit to himself out of the formation of the company without the knowledge of the directors, and they are entitled to treat the agreement as made in their behalf, and enforce it against such vendor, and are entitled to recover so much of the £3,000, which he agreed to pay to the other promoter, as remains unpaid. Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 109, 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 323, 41 L. T. N. S. 674, 28 Week. Rep. 351.

But while a sale by a member of a voluntary association of his own property to his associates for the common benefit, inducing them to purchase, and concealing the fact that he is the real vendor, and misrepresenting the interest or advantage of the purchase or the value of the property, is voidable at the election of the parties injured, there must be a restoration or compensation for whatever of benefit they may have derived from it. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240.

And persons joining an association formed for the purchase of property to which other members of the association conveyed property belonging to themselves at a greatly advanced price over the cost thereof, fraudulently representing that it was purchased from a third person and that each was engaged in an enterprise for the mutual and common benefit of all, and that they had paid their proportionate share of the price, cannot maintain an action for the recovery of the entire amount paid by them, where they cannot or have not restored the persons thus defrauding them to a position which they were in before the transfer to the company. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

And the rule that the doctrine that associates who engage in a common enterprise for their mutual benefit have the right to demand and expect from each other good faith in all that relates to their common interest, and one of the subscribers cannot be permitted to take to himself a secret or separate advantage to the prejudice of his associates, applies to a purchase made before the formation of the association as well as to a purchase made after it has been laid down. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

Upon the other hand, it has been held that any man or number of men who are the owners of any kind of property, real or personal, may form an association with others and sell that property to the association at any price which may be agreed upon between them, no matter what it may originally have cost, provided there be no fraudulent misrepresentations made by the vendors to their associates. Lungren v. Penell, 10 W. N. C. 297; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 32 L. ed. 1005.

Within this doctrine a transaction by which a person who had purchased oil property and con-and precisely the same legal principles are applicable to them.

Some time in the early fall of 1892, the appellee, Colden Rhind, a resident of the state of Georgia, obtained authority from the governor and treasurer of South Carolina to float for that state, upon certain stipulated terms, an issue of about six millions of her 4 per cent bonds, the proceeds of which were to be used in retiring an outstanding and shortly maturing prior series known as Brown Consols. He proceeded to New York, and after endeavoring, without success, to organize a syndicate to purchase the bonds, suggested a change in the character of the securities and then resumed his efforts. By the new scheme the bonds, instead of being 4 per cent forty-year bonds, were, subject to the approval of the legislature, to be 4½ per cent twenty-fourty-year bonds, and were, when negotiated, to net the state par. Rhind approached a banker by the name of Lancaster, who carried on business in both New York and Richmond, and agreed to give him, as compensation for his aid in forming a syndicate, one third of the commissions which Rhind himself might realize out of the transaction. Failing to secure a sufficient number of subscribers in New York, Lancaster, acting for and as the agent of Rhind, proceeded to Richmond, in the month of December, and there enlisted the co-operation of the banking firm of Williams & Son, one of whose members suggested that he could probably fill up the syndicate from amongst his acquaintances in Baltimore.

Accordingly, with the sanction and approved one-sixth shares to five others at actual cost, after which the six sold eighty-fourth interests to others, when the whole party as owners of the eighty-fourth interests combined together to form a company, putting in the property on the basis of a much higher value than that actually paid for it by the original purchaser, is not illegal, as the original purchaser did not stand in a fiduciary relation with the other shareholders and could sell property to the association at such price as they might agree upon without reference to the original cost. Lungren v. Pennell, 10 W. N. C. 297.

So, persons who had for a considerable time been the owners of property, having acquired it with no reference to the formation of a company, and had improved and developed it by a very large outlay of their own capital, may put their own price upon it in the formation of a company to which they sell it. Densmore v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43.

And one who forms an association with others, and sells property to the association which he had previously owned, is not bound to disclose the profit which he may realize by the transaction; being in no sense an agent or trustee in the original purchase, it follows that there is no fiduciary relation between the parties which affects him with a trust. Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; Lungren v. Pennell, 10 W. N. C. 297.

And the fact that the principal or active member of a syndicate commenced negotiating with some of the persons, who afterwards became directors with a view to the formation of a company, does not make the syndicate promoters or agents of such company. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 25 Week. Rep. 436, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222.

So, where a lease of an island containing extensive deposits of phosphate of lime is contracted to be sold, subject to the sanction of the court, to a person who was in fact the agent or trustee for a syndicate of speculators who agreed to sell the property to a trustee for a company to be organized for its purchase for double the price at which he had purchased, the syndicate will be deemed to have purchased the property as of the date when it was contracted to be sold to the members thereof, and from that date they were at liberty to dispose of it as they thought proper, but as there was no one representing the future company who could then treat the syndicate as being in a fiduciary relation toward him, the company is not entitled to set aside the contract, because there was no disclosure of the price at which the syndicate had purchased, or to say that the syndicate members were trustees as to the difference between the two purchases. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 25 Week. Rep. 436, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222.

But though the promoters of a company are not 40 L. R. A.

to be considered as standing in the position of trustees towards the company so that they may not lawfully make a profit upon a sale of property to it, they do stand in a fiduciary relation toward it, and are bound to give it the opportunity of exercising, through fair and independent directors, an independent judgment upon all matters affecting its existence. Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. 30 L. T. N. S. 200, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 73, 27 Week. Rep. 65.

And where a syndicate is formed for the purpose of purchasing mining property, and a company formed to which the syndicate resells the property at double the price they had given for it, the syndicate nominating the five directors, two of whom are out of England at the time, and a third is a member of the syndicate and the nominal vendor of the company, and the fourth a personal friend of the leading member of the syndicate, receiving his qualification from him, the fifth only being an independent director, and the solicitor of the company being also a member of the syndicate, the company is entitled to rescission of the contract of purchase which was adopted by the three last-named directors under the advice of the solicitor, and repayment of the whole of the purchase money. Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. 30 L. T. N. S. 200, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 73, 27 Week. Rep. 65; New Sombrero Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 25 Week. Rep. 436, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 425, 36 L. T. N. S. 222.

c. Purchases with secret advantages.

A person engaged in a common enterprise with others, who also acts as an agent on behalf of all the associates for the purchase of a gold mine, who secretly stipulates for advantages to himself in the shape of commissions from the vendor of the mine, will be held to account for them and share them with his associates. Emery v. Parrott, 107 Mass. 95.

And a person employed as an agent for the sale of mining property, who makes false representations that the price at which he offered it was the price which the owners were to receive, and that he was not to receive any profit by the sale, who joins a syndicate for its purchase, contributing the bonus given him for getting them to buy the property, is not to be regarded as the agent of the vendors in selling their property, so that his fraud will be imputable to them notwithstanding the fact that they are personally innocent of misrepresentation. Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 45 Fed. Rep. 730.

And one who becomes the partner of a person associated with others in a common enterprise, and acting as an agent on their behalf for the purchase of a gold mine, secretly stipulating for advantages to himself in the shape of commissions proval of Lancaster, I. Skelton Williams went to Baltimore in the latter part of December, approached and interviewed the appellants and others, and solicited them to join the syndicate; and if this was not done with the knowledge of Rhind, certainly it was subsequently ratified by him. Williams represented to the appellant that all the subscribers to the bond purchase were to be placed on the same footing of perfect equality, and that each was to share alike in the profits of the venture. He further represented that there were expenses connected with the syndicate that would have to be provided for out of the profits. After considerable negotiation a sufficient amount was conditionally subscribed in Baltimore to make up with what had been taken elsewhere, the sum of two millions of dollars; and the Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Company was selected as the agent of the syndicate to carry out and consummate the transaction. Each of the appellants became a subscriber, and each signed a memorandum setting forth the terms and specifying the amount of his subscription; and whilst these papers were executed at different times, they all bear date on the 30th of December, 1892, and they were all executed in anticipation of the purchase of the bonds from the state. The material parts of these subscription contracts are in these words:

"2. The said Trust Company shall pay to R. A. Lancaster & Co., of New York city, for syndicate expenses, two thirds of the interest on said bonds from January 1, 1893, to July 1, 1893, that may be received by it, that is to say, from the vendor of the mine with knowledge of his position, uniting with him to effect the sale of the property to the associates for the sake of dividing with him the secret commission which the vendor had agreed to pay, being fully cognizant of the illegal conduct of his associate, and participating in the profits of the transaction, will be compelled to disgorge the secret gain which he thus obtained and divided with the others. Emery v. Parrott, 107 Mass. 95.

So, a financial agent who agrees with the vendors of a mine to sell it to a company to be formed by him for its purchase at a price named and that he should receive 20 per cent of the amount of the allotted capital, which company was subsequently formed and the mine purchased, is liable to such company for the amount of the secret profit which he had made, but in estimating the amount of such profit he is to be allowed all sums bona fide expended in securing the services of the directors and providing for their qualification, and any payments legitimately made to the brokers and officers of the company, and to the public press in relation to the company. Emma Silver Min. Co. v. Grant, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 918, 40 L. T. N. S. 804.

And a newspaper statement by the promoters of an oil company that negotiations now pending will in a few days place the company in possession of the most successful oil territory in America, and suggesting to those contemplating investment that a few advance subscriptions for stock might be obtained at once at the original price of $1 per share, leading to the inference that much of the stock was already taken, when no such negotiations were pending and no stock had been sold, as a solicitation addressed to persons known or unknown to share in an enterprise directed to a common end must be regarded as fraudulent, both in what it alleges and in what it was designed to conceal. Vulcan Oil Co. v. Simons, 6 Phila. 561.

So, where members of a syndicate under cover of a secret option for the purchase of land at $4,000 procured it for the syndicate, representing that the owner's price was $8,000, the other members advancing their share and believing that the persons so representing were to share equally with them, and that the payment of such price was necessary to secure the land, the members thus defrauded are entitled to relief. Iler v. Griswold, 83 Iowa, 442.

And such right is not affected by the fact that the land was of increasing value, and worth the amount represented. Iler v. Griswold, 83 Iowa, 442.

And members of a syndicate who purchased property, and are induced by the representations of one of their number as to the purchase price to pay the full price therefor, and to allow such person a two-fifths interest therein, under the supposition that such person contributed his just proportion, are entitled to their interest in the land. Shoufe v. Griffiths, 4 Wash. 161.

And such right is not affected by the fact that the land was worth all that such members had fraudulently represented to be its purchase price. Shoufe v. Griffiths, 4 Wash. 161.

And false representations of a person employed to sell a mining claim, while negotiating with a syndicate organized for its purchase, that the price at which he offered the property was the price which the owners were to receive, and that neither he nor they were to receive any profits by the sale, when in fact the price for which it was offered was far in excess of that which the owners were to receive, which excess was to go for his benefit, is sufficient to annul the sale where such agent was about to enter into the fiduciary relation of a copurchaser with those to whom he made it by joining the syndicate and subscribing thereto, but was not investing any money, his contribution consisting mainly of a bonus for getting them to buy the property. Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 45 Fed. Rep. 730.

So, where four out of about five persons who entered into a provisional contract to purchase a mine which they agreed to sell for their joint benefit to a company were deceived by the fifth, who represented to them that the vendor would not take less than about £36,000, when he had secretly obtained from him an agreement that if the contract were perfected and money paid he should receive therefrom a bonus of £20,000, after which two of the four, having absolute power from the rest to sell to the intended company, formed themselves with others into a committee of management, and being still ignorant of the surreptitious agreement, issued a prospectus stating that a contract had been entered into for the purchase by the company of the entire property for £125,000, including all preliminary expenses and a premium to the parties incurring the risk of the original purchase, and a company was established and the requisite capital paid up and the provisional contract perfected, the £20,000 transaction is fraudulent and void, not only as against the four original purchasers, but also as against the company, notwithstanding the mine proved to be cheap at the price at which it was purchased. Beck v. Kantorowicz, 3 Kay & J. 230.

And representations by members of an association about to make a purchase for its benefit acting for all that an option has been obtained at a certain sum when in fact a rebate was to be made therefrom, upon which the others rely in entering into an agreement for the purchase thereof with those making such representations, constitutes actual fraud entitling the persons defrauded to an accounting, though no partnership exists between them. Bunn v. Schnellbacher, 163 Ill. 828.

a commission of 1½ per cent out of the interest or profit received on said bonds. 3. The said . . . shall have no right by virtue of his said subscription to actual delivery of said bonds from said trust company, but shall, in addition to the interest provided for by § 2 hereof, be entitled to receive from said trust company a share of the whole profits. If any, that may be realized by the sale of said bonds by syndicate, at a greater price than that paid for the same, the share of the said . . . in the said profits to be in the proportion that the number of said bonds subscribed for by him may bear to the whole number of bonds subscribed for by the syndicate. 4. The said Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Company is also authorized to pay R. M. Marshall & Bro.

$2,500; the Bank of Charleston, N. B. A., $1,000; the Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Company, $500, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the syndicate. 5. It is understood that the syndicate shall have the same rights and privileges in the balance of about $3,800,000 of bonds as hereinbefore provided with reference to the said $2,000,000 of said bonds."

The subscriptions first made related only to the sum of two millions of the issue, but under the fifth clause, an option was given to the subscribers to take the residue of the bonds, amounting to $3,250,000, on precisely the same terms. This option was availed of on March 7, 1893. It was understood that the subscriptions for the first two millions were

The rule to be applied to the case of one person falsely representing the value of the property inducing another to join an association with others and take shares in such property, the value of which had been misrepresented, however, is that the person misrepresenting is responsible for those injuries resulting to the other which must be presumed to have been within his contemplation at the time of the commission of the fraud. Grater v. Binnliger, 33 N. J. L. 513.

And the objection that a trustee of an association for the purchase of lands for the purpose of laying out a town cannot make a profit by the purchase of the trust property can only be raised by persons interested. McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681.

And the formation of a company consisting of eight persons, seven of whom were the directors and the eighth a solicitor, for the purpose of working a patent belonging to some of the shareholders, in which the directors allotted shares without consideration to some of their number, to which all the members consented, is not a fraud as against shareholders who became such more than a year afterwards without being informed of the manner in which the original shares had been allotted, where no prospectus was issued and it was at first intended to be a private partnership in which no other members should be admitted; and the official liquidator as representing the company cannot call upon the directors under the company's act to account for the value of shares so allotted to them. Re British Seamless Paper Box Co. L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 467, 50 L. J. Ch. N. S. 497, 44 L. T. N. S. 498, 29 Week. Rep. 690.

But a company organized for the purpose of working certain patents for the defecation and utilization of sewage in the formation of which the promoters and others put in a concession for the working of guano on a certain island, which was voidable and unprofitable through a breach of the conditions thereof, at the price of £85,000, the promoters to be paid the sum of £15,000 out of the purchase money, is not precluded from suing for such fraud by the absence of proof that the present shareholders were shareholders at the time of transactions complained of. Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Hartmont, 24 Week. Rep. 530, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 394, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 661, 37 L. T. N. S. 9.

d. Dealings between associations having common members.

Sales by the general manager of a syndicate organized to deal in mining shares and to purchase from and to sell to other associations, made to an association of which some of the members of the selling syndicate were members, are not beyond the authority of the manager though disadvantageous to a member not belonging also to the other association. Laughton v. Griffin [1895] A. C. 104.

And the manager of a syndicate who sells the 40 L. R. A.

bonds belonging to it to another syndicate having common members, which bonds afterwards improve in value, is not chargeable with their improved value where the former syndicate had over-purchased, and the transfer was of the excess, and was made to relieve it of the difficulty in which it was placed by the overpurchase, and the loss which a forced sale would cause. Laughton v. Griffin [1895] A. C. 104.

So, while a loan by a syndicate to another syndicate having common members is improper there is nothing of which complaint can be made against its manager where the money was repaid with interest exceeding the amount which the bank was charging for interest. Laughton v. Griffin [1895] A. C. 104.

And a transaction by the manager of a syndicate, entered upon his books as being had with another syndicate which in fact had no existence, the entries representing matters in which he alone was interested, could not stand if challenged by a person interested therein, but where the amount involved which would be credited to the person complaining would necessarily fall short of the sum with which he is charged as his share of the general loss on the accounting which he has not paid, the account of the manager will not be opened. Laughton v. Griffin [1895] A. C. 104.

But, contracts for the leasing of rolling stock to a railroad, made by a syndicate composed mainly of directors of the railroad and persons interested in its organization, and the raising of money by car-trust certificates issued to themselves or to other members of the syndicate, are a constructive fraud upon a prior mortgagee, and, so far as they are securities at all, must be treated as mortgages. McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 146 U. S. 536, 38 L. ed. 1079.

And any arrangement by which directors of a corporation become interested adversely to it by entering associations or syndicates for the purpose of making contracts with it or securing to themselves a share in the profits of any transaction to which it is a party is voidable at the election of the corporation or of the party whose rights were sacrificed. McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 146 U. S. 536, 38 L. ed. 1079.

And contracts by which railroads lease or purchase rolling stock by conditional sale made by the contractors with themselves or with others with whom they have associated in confidential relations, which appear to have been made directly or indirectly for their own benefit, will not be given effect by the courts. McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 146 U. S. 536, 38 L. ed. 1079.

So, where persons owning a concession from a foreign government, knowing at the time that through their default it was voidable and liable to forfeiture, combined together to form a company to purchase it, and fraudulently sell it, being aware only to be binding in the event that the syndicate should succeed in disposing of that amount of the bonds to parties in South Carolina or elsewhere outside of the syndicate. This condition having been ultimately complied with, a meeting of the members of the syndicate was held in Baltimore, on January the 11th or 12th, 1898, and this meeting was attended by Lancaster. It is proved, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that Lancaster then and there, and repeatedly afterwards, unequivocally declared that he had no interest, beyond about $500 for traveling expenses, in the fund payable under the second clause of the subscription agreements to R. A. Lancaster & Company "for syndicate expenses."

He urged the members of the syndicate not to press him with inquiries as to what disposition was to be made of this fund for "syndicate expenses," and strongly intimated that it was to be used in some way among parties who exercised political influence in South Carolina, though he declared emphatically that he knew not to whom the money was to go and persistently protested that he did not wish to know. This fund, as the clause already quoted from the subscription agreement shows, was to be raised by deducting two thirds from the amount of interest due July the 1st, 1898, on the new 4½ bonds. The syndicate agreeing to take the two millions of bonds at par flat as of July the 1st and also agreeing under the option to take the remaining three million two hundred and fifty thousand, the interest coupons of the infirmity, to trustees of the intended company, by whom it was transferred to the company, and to whom was to be paid a portion of the purchase money for their share in the transaction, the solicitors of the vendor being also the solicitors for the company, the owners and promoters will be held to repay the whole purchase money on a bill filed by the company against them, and the trustees, directors, and solicitors, and all the defendants interested will be held liable for the costs of the suit. Phosphate Seware Co. v. Hartmont, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 455, 24 Week. Rep. 590, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 661, 37 L. T. N. S. 9.

e. Contribution to capital, expenses, and losses.

The rule applicable to partnerships would seem to apply to the question of contribution between syndicate members to capital stock, and to meet expenses and losses.

Thus, members of a voluntary association formed for the purpose of placing improvements upon their common property to be paid for by assessments upon the members are not exonerated from responsibility by the fact that they have not enjoyed the full benefit of the improvements made, and have refused to participate further in the business of the association, and have sought to abandon their connection with it. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. 231.

And an agreement in articles of association of an unincorporated association formed for the purpose of increasing the head of water in a stream and regulating the flow thereof for the supply of mills of the members, that parties who might cease to be owners or occupants should, upon written notice of the fact to the secretary, be discharged from further assessments, and that their successors should, upon signing the articles, become members of the association, imposes upon those who remain after a withdrawal and neglect of the successor to become a member the burden of contributing their due proportion as previously agreed upon to sustain the expenses of the association, a transfer without the successor becoming a member of the association, not necessarily destroying the plan upon which it was organized; and if a portion of the associates voluntarily pay assessments upon property originally liable but not represented by a member, other members sued upon their assessments cannot avail themselves of the objection that such voluntary payment was illegal and unauthorized. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. 231.

So, losses of moneys coming into the hands of two agents and trustees and shareholders in an association for the prosecution of a sealing voyage, sustained from their joint neglect, which on adjustment of their accounts with their associates are charged to them jointly, ought to be borne, on an adjustment of the accounts between themselves, by them equally, and not in proportion to the number of shares respectively owned. Coit v. Tracy, 9 Conn. 15.

Nor can one of several persons uniting in an enterprise for the purchase of land which proves unsuccessful claim repayment for advances from others because of a clause in the agreement providing for repayment of all sums advanced by him, as, in the absence of agreement, such clause will be considered to mean repayment out of the proceeds. Bell v. McAboy, 8 Brewst. (Pa.) 81.

And a member of an association for the purpose of carrying on the business of mining and collecting gold and other minerals in California, who furnished the money for the enterprise while two other associates agreed to proceed to the mines and engage in digging for gold, but who abandoned the enterprise as fruitless after the capital advanced was exhausted, and engaged in another and different employment of their labor, has no specific lien on the profits produced by such labor which could be enforced in a court of equity; his remedy, if any, would be by action for damages against those who abandon the association. Waring v. Cram, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 516.

So, a person cannot be held liable to contribution as a member of a voluntary unincorporated association with others, where the only organization consisted of a subscription paper by which the subscriber promised to pay a fixed sum of money to such person as a majority of the subscribers should appoint to receive it, containing no contract of association, and there was no stipulation for any other individual or collective action by the subscribers, and no criterion of membership was established, and the membership was not limited to signers of the subscription paper, and it does not appear that the signers present at any meeting were a majority of those present and participating in the meeting, and there was no determinate meeting of the association which could pass votes binding on its members. Cheney v. Goodwin, 88 Me. 563.

And the court in an action to collect an assessment made by a voluntary association upon its members for improvements cannot, by way of affirmative relief to the defendants, interfere with or readjust the apportionment, or relieve them from the obligations which the award and their own agreement contained in the articles of association have imposed upon them. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. 231.

f. Interest in property of association.

An association of individuals may hold property in common for their mutual benefit, and it may confer power on some of their number to hold title for the purpose of sale. Michenor v. Reinach, 49 La. Ann. 300.

And where real estate is purchased by an unin-to mature that day for the preceding six months and amounting to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, were to be the property of the syndicate, and out of their proceeds, when paid by the state treasurer, a portion of the profits of the members was to be derived after the syndicate expenses and other items named in the fourth paragraph of the subscription papers were first subtracted.

It is obvious, therefore, that one of the things which the members of the syndicate contracted to get, and one of the things that was to be their common property, under both the original subscription and the option, was this six-months' interest, amounting to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on the \$2,000,000 to the sum of \$45,000, and on the remaining \$3,250,000 to the further sum of \$73,125, and aggregating the gross sum of \$118,125. The trust company was authorized to disburse in discharge of "syndicate expenses" from this common and partnership fund for the benefit of the whole syndicate two thirds, or \$78,750, if the entire \$5,250,000 of bonds were included under the second clause of the subscription agreements, or \$30,000, if only the \$2,000,000 purchase was embraced in and covered by that clause.

It was perfectly natural that the members of the syndicate should inquire of Lancaster himself, also a member, as to what these expenses were for; and both as a promoter of and a participant in the enterprise he was bound to disclose the literal truth on this subject to his associates; but as already stated, and as the incorporated association formed for the purpose of facilitating the disposition of certain products of the business of the members thereof respectively with funds raised by obtaining subscribers and issuing certificates for shares in the association, the holders of such certificates, and not the whole association, are equitably entitled to such real estate. Crawford v. Gross (Pa.) 7 Ry. & Corp. L. J. 123.

But they have no power to compel a partition thereof or divert it from the use for which it was purchased, without a concurrence of a majority of the stockholders. Crawford v. Gross (Pa.) 7 Ry. & Corp. L. J. 123.

So, the members of a telegraph company by the articles of association of which the promoter was authorized to receive subscriptions to capital stock, and if a subscriber failed to pay he forfeited his stock and became liable to an action at law or bill in equity for any deficiency, the property of which was to be vested in trustees, are not partners, but tenants in common, of the property and franchises of the company, and the majority cannot bind the minority unless by special agreement. Irvine v. Forbes, 11 Barb. 599.

And where six of seven associates in a purchase of land on speculation each agreed to take a specified number of the twelve and one half shares in which the scheme was divided at a fixed price per share, and to take the shares that might remain unsold each in proportion to the shares taken by him at the same price per share, and another associate subscribes for a half share but refuses to enter into an agreement to take a proportion of unsold half shares, the shareholder is not entitled, on winding up, to any part of the unsold shares or of the profits thereon, but the shareholders who agreed to purchase them are bound to pay and account for the full price thereof and the interest thereon out of their own fund, and cannot have any part of the profits in the scheme appropriated to pay for them before such profits are divided. Douglas v. Merceles, 23 N. J. Eq. 381.

And lands held by stockholders of an unincorporated association may be converted into personality as between themselves if the change is one which will promote any beneficial object; but such a conversion merely varies the relations of the parties inter se, and does not affect the nature of the property. Crawford v. Gross (Pa.) 7 Ry. & Corp. L. J. 123.

So, lands conveyed by one of the members of an association for the purchase and division of land after a division among the members to another in good faith in payment of an indebtedness due him cannot be charged in the hands of such innocent purchaser with a sum found due from his vendor upon an accounting because of fraudulent representations made by him to other members of the association. Bunn v. Schnellbacher, 163 Ill. 323.

It has been held, however, that the doctrine 40 L. R. A.

which protects bona fide purchasers without notice is applicable solely to purchasers of the legal title, and does not apply to one who takes a mortgage from two members of a syndicate of their equitable estate when the legal title was vested in other members in trust for the syndicate, the purchaser of an equitable interest purchasing at his peril and acquiring the property burdened with every prior equity charged upon it. Shoufe v. Griffiths, 4 Wash. 491.

g. Compensation for services.

An unincorporated company formed for the purpose of trading in land is to be treated as an ordinary partnership and the members as partners, and if one of them is selected to perform the duties of secretary and treasurer without any stipulation for remuneration he comes within the principle of law that a partner is not entitled to compensation for services performed in furtherance of the partnership interests. Re Fry, 4 Phila. 129.

The manager of a syndicate for the purchase and sale of mining stocks should be allowed brokerage, however, where he devoted his time and skill to the transaction of the business of the syndicate, and employed a broker, and kept the accounts of the syndicate in his office. Laughton v. Griffin [1885] A. C. 104.

But a trustee and agent of an association for the prosecution of a sealing voyage should not be allowed interest on his commissions and disbursements in the adjustment of his accounts during a period when he had in his hands money of the association more than sufficient to cover all his demands upon which he was not charged interest. Coit v. Tracy, 9 Conn. 15.

IV. Remedies.

An undertaking in articles of association of an unincorporated body formed for the purpose of placing improvements upon their common property by which each of the associates severally bound himself to pay a ratable proportion of all expenditures for the improvements made or to be made, is mutual, the covenants of the associates being made with each other, and the liability arises on the promise by each to the other which can only be enforced by an action among themselves, and those to whom the promise is made are the proper parties to bring the action; and it is not essential that there should be a formal division of the interest of the associates into shares where the proportions were agreed upon in the articles, fixing the interest of each and the shares it represented. Troy Iron & Nail Factory v. Corning, 45 Barb. 231.

And where a person subscribes with others a sum of money to carry out some common project lawful in itself, and supposed to be beneficial to the projectors, and moneys are advanced upon the faith of such subscription, an action for money paid, laid sequel will further show, he not only did not content himself with a mere concealment and a suppression of the truth, but he deliberately uttered the most unblushing falsehoods, strictly in keeping with his subsequent reprehensible efforts, during his examination as a witness to deny, avoid, and explain away his glaring duplicity. After the most unqualified declarations on the part of Lancaster, who, it must be borne in mind, was acting throughout this whole transaction as the agent and partner of Rhind, to the effect that he had no interest in these expenses, and was to get no part of the proceeds of these coupons beyond the $500 already named; the arrangement to take the two millions of bonds was concluded, and on January the 19th, 1893, a contract for the purchase of the bonds with the interest coupons attached was entered into between the Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Company, as agent for the syndicate and the governor and the treasurer of South Carolina in behalf of the state. By that agreement it was provided: "That under and by virtue of the act of the general assembly of the state of South Carolina, hereinafter mentioned, the parties of the first part hereby covenant and agree to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, its successors or assigns, and the party of the second part, in its own behalf, to the extent of its subscription and as agent as hereinbefore set forth, hereby covenants and agrees to purchase from the parties of the first part, for itself and its associates, two million ($2,000,000) dollars of the out, and expended may be maintained to recover the amount of the subscription or such part of it as will be equal to the subscriber's proportion of the expenses incurred. Bryant v. Goodnow, 5 Pick. 223.

And a money judgment may be rendered against members of a syndicate who held lands under a secret option at $4,000, and procured their purchase by the syndicate at $8,000, under the supposition on the part of the other members that they contributed their share, in an action to have the title to the land quieted under the Iowa Code, § 2855, providing the court may grant any relief consistent with the case made by the petition and within the issue. Iler v. Griswold, 83 Iowa, 442.

So, members of an association for the purchase of property to which other members had conveyed their own property at an exorbitant price, fraudulently representing that it was purchased from a third person and that they had paid their proper proportion, may each sue the persons thus defrauding him to recover damages for the fraud perpetrated upon him in procuring his subscription, and can probably recover the difference between the actual value of what he received and the amount paid him, but such an action would be a common-law action to which each person or firm defrauded would be plaintiff and the wrongdoers alone would be defendants. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

Nor are the members of a syndicate for dealing in land, who are defrauded by other members thereof by the purchase of lands individually and their transfer to the syndicate at an advanced price confined to the remedy or rescission, but may call upon the members defrauding them to account for the profits thus fraudulently realized. McDowell v. Joice, 149 Ill. 124.

And a bill for an accounting, brought against the trustee of a syndicate for the purchase and sale of property by other members thereof, brings the entire administration of the trustee into review, as it may be developed by the evidence, and embraces a claim that he occupied such a fiduciary relation to the other members of the syndicate that he could not in equity and good conscience retain from them the difference between the price he had paid a person for a piece of property and that at which he had sold it to the syndicate, under a prayer for general relief. Ferguson v. Bateman, 1 App. D. C. 279.

A bill may be filed by one of several associates or shareholders of a private association for the purchase and sale of lands where they are numerous, in behalf of himself and all others, against the trustees thereof, to compel the execution of the trust and for an account and distribution of the funds and property of the association among the shareholders, and it is not necessary that all of the associates should be united in a bill for that purpose; and the court will see that the rights of all to their distributive shares of the trust fund are protected. Mann v. Butler, 2 Barb. Ch. 382.

There must be a community of interest between two or more persons, however, to entitle them to unite in a bill in equity, and members of an association are not entitled to relief from a transaction by which another member induces them into a purchase of particular property for the common benefit, concealing the fact that he was the real vendor and misrepresenting the interest or advantages of the purchase and the value of the property, where one or more of them is without right thereto. Bestor v. Barker, 106 Ala. 240.

And a member of a syndicate who contributes a portion of a sum of money loaned by the syndicate to a railroad company cannot maintain a bill in equity to compel the agents of the syndicate to pay him his share of the loan or damages for its loss, where shortly after it had matured all the other members of the syndicate agreed to extend the time for the payment of the loan at a meeting of which he had notice, in consequence of which the agents failed to proceed to collect the notes, and the fund was finally lost; the remedy, if any, was by assumpsit. Paton v. Clark, 156 Pa. 49.

And the question of the validity of a contract of settlement between a building-lot association and a syndicate which had taken the initiative in securing the land necessary for the purposes of the incorporation before it was organized, and had advanced money for that purpose, allowing the syndicate members paid-up shares of $612 for the payment of $300, cannot be passed upon in an action brought by members of the corporation to be reinstated as such and to have certain acts of the corporation declared void as against them, as the syndicate members are not parties to such action in such a sense that their individual rights to shares can be passed upon. Buker v. Leighton Lea Asso. 18 App. Div. 548.

A trust created by a syndicate agreement between five persons contemplating the purchase of lands, the title to be taken in the name of one of the number who should hold one fifth of the same in trust for each of his four associates, however, is a direct one within exclusive equity jurisdiction, to which the statute of limitations does not apply. Johnson v. Elkins, 1 App. D. C. 430.

And a company to which a sale of property procured to be made by a syndicate at double the price they had given for it, four of the five directors which adopted it being under the control of the syndicate, which was adopted in September, is not debarred from relief by reason of laches where nothing was done at the first general meeting of the company held in the following February, though it appeared that the suspicions of some of the members were aroused and a committee of investigation was appointed at the next ordinary bonds and stocks bearing four and a half (4½) per cent interest, payable semiannually, and issued pursuant to the terms of "an act of the general assembly of the said state of South Carolina, entitled 'An Act to Provide for the Redemption of That Part of the State Debt, Known as the Brown Consol Bonds and Stocks, by an Issue of Other Bonds and Stocks,'" approved the 22d day of December, 1892, upon the following terms and conditions, that is to say: The bonds and stocks so purchased shall bear date January 1, 1893, and shall carry interest from January 1, 1893, payable semiannually; they shall be sold by the parties of the first part, and purchased by the party of the second part at par flat; that is to say, nothing additional shall be paid for any interest which may have accrued at the time of delivery; the purchase money of said bonds and stock shall be due and payable one hundred thousand ($100,000) dollars thereof upon the execution of this contract, and the remainder thereof on or before the 30th day of June, 1893, in such sums and at such times as to the party of the second part may be most convenient, and the said bonds and stock shall be delivered by the parties of the first part to the parties of the second part in such amounts and at such times as they may be called for by the party of the second part upon payment of the balance of ninety-five (95) per cent due thereon the said sum of $100,000, being held and taken to be 5 per cent upon the whole purchase of $2,000,000, and that payments of said balance of 95 per cent, may be made by said party of the second part, either in cash or in Brown Consols, due July 1, 1893, the July coupons thereon being retained by the party of the second part.

A subsequent clause of the same agreement reads as follows: And in consideration of the purchase aforesaid by the party of the second part, the parties of the first part hereby further covenant and agree to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, its successors or assigns, so much of the remainder of the bonds and stock issued, or to be issued, by virtue of the said act, as is salable by the governor and treasurer under the said act, or any part thereof, said bonds and stocks to bear date January 1, 1893, to carry interest from January 1, 1893, and to be paid for at par flat, said remainder of such bonds and stocks being understood to be $8,800,000.

On the 2d of January, 1893, and consequently before the syndicate was fully formed and before its obligation to take the bonds was complete, and before Lancaster made his false representations, Rhind and Lancaster entered into a secret agreement by which it was stipulated that in the matter of the refunding of the "South Carolina state debt," the commissions meeting in June, which reported in August following, when a new board of directors was constituted, and after an ineffectual attempt at a compromise the bill was filed in the following December. Erianger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. 39 L. T. N. S. 269, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 73, 27 Week. Rep. 66.

So, the failure of some of the members of a syndicate, in an action of interpleader brought by a trustee to settle conflicting claims to certain funds, to claim portions that would have gone to them had they made claim thereto, which were fractions of the entire fund which belonged to the syndicate in common, does not divert those portions from, or divest them out of, the syndicate, and does not transfer them to a person who, through an agent employed by him to promote the syndicate, had fraudulently managed to become possessed of some of its funds. Hambleton v. Rhind (Md.) 38 Atl. 40.

And the failure of members of a syndicate who had been made parties to a bill of interpleader in such an action to answer until after the decree directing the parties to interplead had been passed, because of which it was adjudged that they were entitled to no interest in the fund in an interlocutory decree, does not preclude them from answering the claim at any time before a final decree is passed; and where the final decree is reversed and becomes a nullity, it cannot interpose any obstacle or hindrance to the assertion of a claim to participate in the distribution of the fund. Heald v. Rhind (Md.) 38 Atl. 43.

Persons who were members of a syndicate, disposing of their interest therein to another with knowledge that such person claimed to hold certain bonds in his hands as collateral security for the claim of the syndicate against a railroad company of which he was the president, however, and receiving payment therefor with that knowledge, are estopped to assert that such bonds belonged to such railroad company, and to deny that they are held as claimed by him. Hook v. Ayers, 53 U. S. App. 195, 80 Fed. Rep. 973.

But an intent on the part of the president of a 40 L. R. A.

railroad company, who was also a member of a syndicate to which the company was indebted, that bonds of the company in his hands should be pledged to the syndicate as security for such indebtedness, unaccompanied by any act of the debtor company, is not sufficient to constitute an equitable pledge on account of the absence of a sufficient delivery. Hook v. Ayers, 53 U. S. App. 195, 80 Fed. Rep. 973.

So, stockholders of a building-lot association cannot object to a contract between the association and a syndicate which had taken the initiative in securing the land necessary for the purpose of the incorporation, which gave its members a large bonus, as fraudulent and void as against them, where the corporation had settled such matter and put the settlement in its constitution, and received substantial benefit by reason of such settlement, and the stockholders, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, had approved of and consented to it. Buker v. Leighton Lea Asso. 18 App. Div. 548.

And an objection upon the part of one who subscribes to an undertaking between several for the purpose of establishing a line of stages and to raise capital therefor, that he was not notified of the first meeting of the company, is waived so as to constitute no defense to the subscription, where he afterwards offered to pay if oats would be received in payment, and declared that he would have paid but for some supposed ill-treatment. Bryant v. Goodnow, 5 Pick. 228.

But declarations of trust, made by members of a syndicate, representing two of their number to be the owners of a two-fifths interest in the land owned by them, do not estop them to deny that such members of the syndicate owned any interest in the land as against a mortgage made by them on their interest, where such members had induced the others by fraud to pay the full purchase price for the land, and at the time the declaration was made they were ignorant of their rights in the premises. Shouffe v. Griffiths, 4 Wash. 161.

F. H. B.

we expect to earn thereon of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent is to be divided between us in the proportion of two thirds to Colden Rhind and one third to R. A. Lancaster & Co.

When it was concluded to avail of the option provided for in the clause quoted above, as to the residue of the bonds over and beyond the first two millions, a second contract, bearing date March the 7th, was made between the trust company and the state officials of South Carolina. Some of the members of the first syndicate declined or failed to write in the second purchase and other parties took their places, and this is what is called in the record the second syndicate. One of the questions to be disposed of is, whether two thirds of the July, 1893, interest on these $3,250,000 of bonds covered by the second purchase in execution of the option, is payable to Lancaster & Co. under clause 2 of the original subscription agreements for "syndicate expenses."

The trust company conducted the business for the syndicate with the state's officers, and the proceeds of the July coupons were remitted to it or treated as if in actual possession. On the 6th of June, 1893, Lancaster & Company drew five drafts, aggregating $25,250, on the trust company, payable to the order of Colden Rhind, which Rhind at once indorsed in blank without recourse and delivered to Lancaster who procured them to be accepted by the treasurer of South Carolina with the consent of the trust company in part payment of the bonds bought by Lancaster. The drafts for this sum of $25,250 were drawn upon and were ultimately paid out of the fund set apart in the subscription agreement for "syndicate expenses." When it was discovered by other members of the syndicate that Lancaster, one of their number and a copartner with them in the transaction, had received a large sum in excess of his legitimate share of profits, they promptly notified the trust company not to pay out any further portions of this fund and asserted a claim to the residue.

The trust company was thus confronted with conflicting claims to the fund—on the one hand, Rhind asserted that he was entitled to it for two reasons: first, under three drafts drawn in his favor by Lancaster & Co. on the Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Company for sums aggregating $48,500; and secondly, because, though the fund was made payable to Lancaster & Co., it was known and understood by the members of the syndicate that the money was really payable and belonged to Rhind. On the other hand, the appellants insisted that the fund belonged to them to the extent that was necessary to equalize them with Lancaster; and they further contended that only two thirds of the interest due on the first two millions purchase was payable for syndicate expenses under clause 2 of the subscription agreements.

Threatened by these opposing demands, and unable to decide between them, the trust company filed a bill of interpleader against the appellants and other members of the syndicate, including Lancaster, and against Rhind, praying that they be summoned into the circuit court of Baltimore city, and be there required to interplead and adjust their conflicting claims and demands upon this fund amongst themselves. Most of the defendants filed answers. Lancaster disclaimed any interest in the controversy, having been paid by Rhind all he claimed to be entitled to. Subsequently a cross bill was filed, which was, later on, dismissed by a decree of June 13, 1894. By this decree the original bill of interpleader was dismissed as to Lancaster and several other defendants who disclaimed any interest in the fund; and it was adjudged as to certain others of the defendants, who had failed to answer, that they were not entitled to any part of the money in controversy. It was further provided that the remaining defendants should interplead, and for that purpose all except Rhind were made plaintiffs and Rhind was made defendant. An agreement was then signed to the effect that Rhind would not in the subsequent proceedings make claim or contention that Lancaster was a necessary party to the suit. Quite a mass of evidence was taken, and, after the hearing, the court below, on May the 5th, 1896, adjudged and decreed that the funds in court belonged to Colden Rhind, free from any claims or interest of the other parties in the cause. From that decree these ten appeals have been taken.

There are two questions involved: First, It is insisted that the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent for syndicate expenses out of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent interest, does not extend to and include $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on the \$3,250,000 of bonds taken by what has been called the second syndicate. And, secondly, if the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent does extend to the second purchase, then it is maintained that Rhind ought to be required to account for and pay to the appellants out of the funds in court, and which are claimed by him, the amount that he stipulated to pay Lancaster, under the secret agreement between them, in prejudice of the rights of the other members of the syndicate.

With regard to the first question little need be said. While there is some conflict of opinion amongst the witnesses who, being members of the syndicate, have testified as to what their understanding of the matter was, we lay that out of view altogether, and look alone to the face of the written instruments themselves; and from their tenor and terms construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances this first contention must be judged. Now what the syndicate agreed to purchase from the governor and treasurer of South Carolina was, first, a block of two millions of certain bonds with attached coupons; and secondly, if the syndicate availed of an option given to it, another block of three millions, two hundred and fifty thousand of the same series of bonds with attached coupons. The separate obligation of each member of the syndicate bound the individual signing it to pay, first, for such portion of the two millions as he had agreed to take, and secondly, should the option be availed of, then to pay such proportion of the residue as his original subscription would entitle him to in the larger amount.

Each subscriber further stipulated that out of the interest which would accrue July the 1st on the bonds subscribed for, the trust company should pay to R. A. Lancaster & Co. for syndicate expenses two thirds, or, in other words, "a commission of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent out of the interest or profit received on said bonds." So that the rights of the members as to the profits of the venture were restricted to the excess for which the bonds might sell over and above the cost at which they were purchased, plus a share in $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent of the July interest—this $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent being the amount of the July interest remaining after the commission of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent was paid by the trust company. Therefore, though the title to the proceeds of the July coupon vested in the trust company under the agreement with the state of South Carolina, it vested interest for specified purposes. When the option to take the remaining \$3,250,000 of bonds was exercised, the syndicate was to "have the same rights and privileges in them as hereinbefore provided with reference to said two millions of said bonds." That is to say, with respect to the three millions, two hundred and fifty thousand, the title to the proceeds of the coupons should vest in the trust company, subject to the same trusts declared with respect to the proceeds of the July interest on the two million block, viz.: for the payment of two thirds to R. A. Lancaster & Co. for syndicate expenses, and for the payment of the other one third, or the $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent less other syndicate expenses, to the subscribers as part of their profits.

As the rights and privileges which the members of the syndicate were to have under the two millions purchase depended in part on what disposition was provided to be made of the proceeds of the coupon on that block of bonds; and as they were to have precisely the same rights and privileges, and none other, with respect to the second purchase that they had in regard to the first,—it follows that the right to share in the proceeds of the July coupon on the three million two hundred and fifty thousand block could not be larger or more extensive than the right to share in the proceeds of the coupon on the two million block; and that consequently the option subscription was also subject to the provision that two thirds of the proceeds of the July interest was to be deducted for syndicate expenses or commissions.

This brings us to the other question respecting the claim of the appellants to a portion of the funds now in court.

It has been stated in preceding part of this opinion that the syndicate acquired title to the proceeds of the July interest, through the trust company, on the whole issue of $5,250,000 of bonds; but the reasons for that conclusion have not yet been set forth. The correctness of this position is of vital consequence in the discussion still to follow; and it is therefore appropriate that it should now be clearly established. What was it that the syndicate agreed to purchase? Was it the bonds less the coupons, or the bonds plus the coupons? This inquiry is answered by the written contract between the syndicate on the one side through its agent the trust company and the state of South Carolina by her governor and treasurer on the other. Under that contract, dated as already stated on January the 19th, 1893, the parties of the first part, that is, the governor and treasurer, agreed to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, that is, the trust company for the syndicate, and the party of the second part on behalf of itself and as agent for the others whose subscriptions were appended, agreed to purchase from the parties of the first part two millions of bonds and stock of the state; and it was stipulated that "the bonds and stock so purchased shall bear the date January the 1st, 1893, and shall carry interest from January the 1st, 1893, payable semi-annually; they shall be sold by the parties of the first part and purchased by the party of the second part at par flat; that is to say, nothing additional shall be paid for any interest which may have accrued at the time of delivery."

The same terms were prescribed with reference to the remaining bonds over and above the first 2,000,000. It seems too clear for controversy that under this contract the bonds and their accrued interest up to the time of delivery were sold by the state and bought by the syndicate. No other meaning can be ascribed to the written contract; and if this be so, then, as a matter of course, each and every one of the coupons was included in the sale to the syndicate, and of necessity, therefore, the coupon to mature on the 1st day of July, 1898. There being no reservation of this July coupon, and no exception of it from the sale, but, on the contrary, the clearest manifestation of an intention that it should accompany and go with the bonds to which it was attached; when the bonds were sold to the syndicate the July coupon or interest was also sold, and the syndicate—the purchaser—through the trust company, acquired title to that July interest. Under the individual subscriptions, antecedently made, the proceeds of the July coupon thus acquired by the syndicate were impressed with a trust, and the Trust & Guarantee Company was authorized to disburse the fund for account of syndicate expenses and in a particularly designated way. Whatever the antecedent arrangements between Colden Rhind and the authorities of South Carolina may have been, they were obviously superseded by the contracts of January 19 and March the 17th, and no title to this interest passed to Rhind. Whatever claim he has, or can assert, to any part of this interest, whether the claim be preferred as commissions or as syndicate expenses, must now be made through the syndicate, and must be derived from, and founded on, the second clause of the individual subscription contracts which were the basis of the final transaction and of the actual purchases of January the 19th and March the 7th, 1893. As the claim made by Rhind must, to have any standing at all, come through the syndicate, it is necessary to describe his relations with and attitude towards that syndicate, and to define the legal consequences flowing from that relation and attitude, as bearing upon his asserted right to the fund in controversy.

Now, a syndicate, according to the undisputed evidence, is an association of individuals formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. It is, as respects the persons composing it, a partnership, and in so far as these same persons are concerned the legal obligations assumed by them are, as between themselves, substantially the same as those which the law imposes on a member of an ordinary copartnership. Scrupulous good faith is naturally, if not necessarily, implied from the very nature and character of the relation of partnership; and, consequently, intrigues by one member for a private benefit to himself are clearly offenses against the partnership at large, and as such are relievable in a court of equity. For, as observed by Lord Eldon in Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. Jr. 227, there is an implied obligation among partners to use the property for the benefit of those whose property it is. A secret agreement, therefore, that one of the partners shall reap an advantage out of the partnership property to the prejudice and injury of his associates, and of which they are kept in ignorance by his fraud and deception, is essentially at war with the good faith upon which the relation is founded.

The evidence in this record illustrates the truth of this proposition, as the appellants without exception all testify that had they been informed that Lancaster was to receive any share of the sum set apart for "syndicate purposes," they would never have entered the syndicate, for the obvious reason that to the extent that Lancaster received a part of this sum he paid less for his bonds, and could, therefore, sell them at a price below that which the other members were required to pay, whereby he secured an advantage over them wholly at variance with any notion of equality. It was the duty of Lancaster acting for himself and as the agent of Rhind, to be perfectly candid and frank in his dealings with his associates, but he was not, and both he and his principal are answerable for his deception.

Again, both Rhind and Lancaster were promoters of the syndicate, and it was their plain and imperative duty towards the persons who were invited to co-operate in the enterprise, not only to abstain from stating as a fact that which was not a fact, but not to have omitted to state any circumstance within their knowledge, the existence of which might in any way affect the extent or the quality of the advantages held out as inducements to the others. Cortes Co. v. Thannhauser, 45 Fed. Rep. 730, and numerous other cases collected in a very full note to Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 90. Or, as put by Vice Chancellor Bacon in Bagnall v. Carlton, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 385, relying on Imperial Mercantile Credit Assn. v. Coleman, L. R. 6 H. L. 189: "The law I take to be clear, that under such circumstances an agent, whatever may be the nature of his employment, or under whatever circumstances, is bound, if he has any interest in the matter, not only to declare that fact, but to specify the nature of his interest; and that all persons who act with him, and who share in that interest, are jointly and severally bound to make good, when their interest is discovered, to the principals, the whole benefit which has been obtained without the sanction of the principals."

The application of these familiar principles to the facts in these cases inevitably leads to but one result. If we treat the syndicate as a partnership subject to the law incident to that relation, and the fund arising from the July, 1898, interest on the whole $5,250,000 of bonds as a partnership and belonging to the syndicate, then all third persons who dealt with that fund in an unwarrantable way, knowing that it was a partnership fund devoted to a particular purpose, must take the consequences which the law affixes to unauthorized dispositions of trust or partnership property. Rhind knew of the existence of the syndicate. He had commissioned Lancaster to form it. He likewise knew that the money to which he lays claim was payable by the state of South Carolina to the trust company, as the money of the syndicate; and he knew this because it was the legal result of the purchase of the bonds by the syndicate. He also knew that Lancaster was a member of the syndicate, and he was chargeable with knowledge that Lancaster could not stipulate with him for a share of these very funds, unless by the consent of the other members of the syndicate; and was bound to know that the advantage derived by Lancaster under that secret arrangement was one which, under the law, would inure to the use and the benefit of the copartnership.

The payment made by Rhind to Lancaster of $25,250, out of the syndicate funds, and pursuant to the terms of the secret agreement, was, under the facts in evidence, declared a clearly illegal diversion of the partnership funds. As concisely stated by Col. Marshall in his brief: "That money was clothed with a trust—as it were—a partnership money dedicated by contract to the payment of syndicate expenses, and while other persons might become entitled to it for lawful consideration, there was one person who could not become entitled to it without the full knowledge and acquiescence of his associates, and that person was Lancaster." Rhind turned over part of this fund to his confederate, and he used every device to keep the other members of the syndicate in profound ignorance of what he had done. He thus gave to a person who was not entitled to receive any part of the fund, and who was bound in good faith not to receive it, nearly one third of the sum set apart for expenses; and having thus unlawfully dealt with the partnership property, by giving it to a person who he knew was not entitled to receive it, and to whom he knew he had no right to give it, he is as accountable for that misapplication as is his confederate, who clandestinely received it. This was an offense by both Rhind and Lancaster against the partnership, and, as such, is clearly cognizable in equity under the general principle upon which equity prevents the abuse of undue influence and of fiduciary relations.

The arm of a court of equity is strong enough to strike down such transactions as this. That court will not falter or hesitate before mere technical terms of procedure when gross injustice has been done; and where a fund claimed by a wrongdoer is under its control, it will devise a remedy to meet each new emergency, and will enforce a restitution if the ends of justice require it. It is for such exigencies that a court of equity exists. If a decree can be made upon the record to meet the substantial justice of the case, it will be passed. Crain v. Barnes, 1 Md. Ch. 155. As said by Lord Justice James, in Panama & S.

P. Teleg. Co. v. India Rubber, G. P. & Teleg. Works Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 526: "According to my view of the law of this court, I take it to be clear that any surreptitious dealing between one principal and the agent of the other principal is a fraud on such other principal, cognizable in this court. That I take to be a clear proposition, and I take it, according to my view, to be equally clear that the defrauded principal, if he comes in time, is entitled, at his option, to have the contract rescinded, or, if he elects not to have it rescinded, to have such other adequate relief as the court may think right to give him. It is said there is no authority and no dictum to that effect. The clearer a thing is the more difficult it is to find any express authority or any dictum exactly to the point."

But to deal with the transaction from another point of view—Lancaster was confessedly Rhind's agent to form the syndicate—he was intrusted with full authority to accomplish that end—and Rhind is obviously bound by and responsible for the representations and concealments made by Lancaster in the line and within the scope of his employment. Raulins v. Wickham, 3 DeG. & J. 804; Andrews v. Clark, 72 Md. 398; West Maryland R. Co. v. Franklin Bank, 60 Md. 36. Now, as we have said already, before the final formation of the syndicate and at least a week prior to the execution of the contract of January the 19th with the state of South Carolina, consummating the purchase of two millions of the bonds, Lancaster falsely represented to the appellants that he had no interest different from theirs in the undertaking, though at that very time he had in his possession a secret written agreement signed by himself and Rhind, under which he was to receive one third of the sum that might go to Rhind as commissions. He deceived, misled, and deliberately imposed upon the appellants, and induced them to incur obligations to large amounts which they would never have entered into had he revealed the truth with respect to the advantage which this secret agreement gave him. Rhind now comes forward and claims under drafts drawn by his agent Lancaster, the very funds which if demanded by the agent would be payable to the syndicate, and they would be payable to the syndicate upon the theory that the stipulation made by the promoter for his own gain inures to the concern which he organized.

The rule is well settled that if the principal sues upon a contract made with and in the name of his agent, the opposite party is entitled to be placed in the same position at the time of the disclosure of the principal, as if the agent had been the real contracting party. Baltimore Coal Tar & Mfg. Co. v. Fletcher, 61 Md. 295. If Lancaster was seeking to recover the funds in court for his own benefit and behoof after his explicit declarations that he was not to receive any portion of them beyond the $500, there can be no question that he would be denied relief, because as promoter and partner he would not be entitled to them; and as Rhind occupies no better position than his agent could have maintained, he will not be permitted to receive the same funds except those in excess of the amount he unlawfully agreed to pay to Lancaster. In other words, before he can be paid through Lancaster under the drafts he now holds, any part of the fund now in court, he must make restitution of the amount which he participated in the diversion of from the syndicate. There is nothing in the evidence to show that more than one or two of the appellants ever knew that Rhind claimed any of the commissions when the syndicate was organized, and his right to them depends, therefore, not upon any understanding with the appellants, but upon the drafts drawn by Lancaster in his favor and not yet paid. There is, however, part of the fund payable to Rhind under assignments from members of the syndicate other than the appellants, but this is not in controversy.

40 L. R. A.

It is clear that Rhind has no greater or better right to these funds under the drafts drawn by Lancaster, than Lancaster had at the time the drafts were drawn, and it is not material, so far as the consideration of this proposition is concerned, whether Lancaster is still a party to the case or not. He could not transfer to Rhind, under the circumstances stated, a right to or claim upon the funds which would be superior to that which he possessed himself; and consequently any equities which the members of the syndicate had against Lancaster or the fund, growing out of his dealing with them in respect to it as the agent of Rhind, still attach to the fund when claimed by Rhind under the drafts drawn by Lancaster, because Rhind simply stepped into Lancaster's shoes. If Lancaster could not recover the fund, and we have said he could not under the circumstances stated, in what better position does Rhind, his associate and assignee, stand? By his own acts he enabled Lancaster to take an unlawful advantage of Lancaster's fellow partners, and the advantage thus taken and participated in by Rhind is the very occasion that gives the copartners a claim upon the residue of the fund. Rhind comes, therefore, to a court of equity, and asks it to decree to him a fund which it would not have directed to be paid to the very person under whom Rhind claims.

But it is retorted that Rhind was at liberty to employ such agents as he thought fit to form the syndicate, and that he could agree for and pay them such commission as he might be inclined to do, and that this was a matter which concerned only him and his agent, and that, therefore, he is in no sense blamable for not disclosing the secret agreement in which no one but himself and Lancaster were interested. This contention may be briefly but satisfactorily answered in the following sentence from Bagnall v. Carlton, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 385: "But, although this may have a certain air of plausibility, and it might be true if the vendors and their agents were the only persons concerned in the transactions, it is wholly fallacious when applied to the facts of this case. It wholly omits the consideration that the employment of the agent was for the purpose of forming a company and of inducing other persons to subscribe in reliance upon a representation which was untrue."

But it is insisted that the case of Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. v. Green, L. R.

5 Q. B. Div. 109. establishes and applies a principle which sustains the decree appealed from. The learned judge who decided these cases below relied exclusively upon the case just cited. We fail, after a most patient study of that case, to see that it conflicts with any conclusions we have reached. Indeed it is an authority directly in point to support a part of the appellant's contention as will appear in a moment.

The Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co. Case was this: One Robert Ellis Green purchased certain calico printing works for the sum of £15,000. Green and John Smith associated themselves together as promoters of a company formed for the purchase of the works from Green, and for the purposes of the negotiations for such purchase, a contract, which the jury found to be a sham contract, was entered into between them for the pretended sale of the works by Green to Smith for £20,000. The company was ultimately formed, its directors being nominees of Green and Smith, and the works were conveyed by Green and Smith to the company for £20,000. It was agreed between Green and Smith that Green should pay the sum of £3,000 out of the £20,000 purchase money, to Smith, but this agreement was not communicated to the directors of the company when the sale to the company was effected. It was held by Bowen, J., that Smith, as a promoter of the company, was not entitled to secure any profit to himself out of the formation of the company without the knowledge of the directors, and that, such being the case, the company was entitled to treat the agreement made between Green and Smith for the payment of the £3,000, as made by Smith on the company's behalf, and to enforce it against Green, and that consequently the company could recover from Green so much of the £3,000, which he had agreed to pay Smith, as remained unpaid. The action was founded on the contract between Green and Smith, and the company sought to enforce that contract for the payment of the £3,000 as a contract made for the profit of the company, and not for the profit of Smith. The sole defense was made by Green,—Smith not appearing,—and he claimed "that as Smith could not enforce against Green a contract based on an illegal consideration, so neither can the company." But this was brushed aside with the remark that "it does not lie in Green's mouth to say that his own bargain with Smith was a fraudulent one, and therefore cannot be enforced;" and it was decided that it was enough for the company to show that the £3,000 was a profit coming to its agent, Smith, to entitle it to claim the same. As £800 of the £3,000 had been paid by Green to Smith, a judgment was entered against Green for £1,200, and the negotiation of one of the company's promissory notes held by Green for £1,000, and which had been given him in part payment of the purchase money, was restrained, and an order was passed directing the note to be delivered up to be canceled. Apparently no claim was made against Green for the £800 actually paid by him to Smith. If such a claim had been proffered, it is not easy to see how logically there could have been any escape from allowing it. If it was rightly decided that the undisclosed contract between Green and Smith for the payment to the latter of the £3,000 out of the purchase money was a contract for the benefit of the company and not of Smith, then the money was payable by Green to the company and to no one else; and if payable only to the company, obviously a payment by him to Smith was no payment to the company and was no discharge of Green's obligation; and consequently such a payment would have been no defense to a demand by the company that the £800 should be paid to it. In a word, if the money was legally payable to the company, Green could not properly pay it to someone else; but if he did pay it to someone else, that fact did not relieve him of liability to the company. This is inevitable, and to this conclusion the case relied on must logically lead. But the case does not decide that the company could not recover from Green the £800 which Green had paid to Smith—it merely decides that the company could recover the £2,200 remaining unpaid by Green to Smith, whereas in the pending cases what is sought is not only a decree to compel Rhind to pay over to the syndicate what is still unpaid to Lancaster under the secret agreement, but to require him to make good the sum he actually did pay to Lancaster thereunder—this latter exaction being precisely the very thing not discussed, and not decided one way or the other in the Whaley Bridge Case.

The appellants each claim, in the first syndicate, an amount that will bear the same proportion to the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on two millions of bonds that the amount of subscription of each bears to the entire two millions; and in the second syndicate an amount which will bear the same proportion to the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on three million two hundred and fifty thousand of bonds that the amount of the subscription of each bears to the whole three million two hundred and fifty thousand.

We hold, then, for the reasons we have given, that Colden Rhind is accountable for the \$25,250 actually paid over by him to Lancaster; and on the authority of the Whaley Bridge Case we further hold that he is accountable for the \$1,000 not paid over—it being part of the \$26,250 agreed to be paid by Rhind to Lancaster as the latter's one third of the $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent commission under the secret agreement of January the 2d, 1893; and that this sum of \$26,250 with interest from July the 1st, 1893, and the costs of these cases above and below, must be deducted from the funds in court and paid to the appellants, the residue being payable to Rhind. It follows, therefore, that the decree appealed from must be reversed, and the cause must be remanded for a new decree.

Decree reversed, and cause remanded, that a new decree may be passed conformably to this opinion, the costs in this court and the court below to be paid by Rhind out of the funds in court.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

S. D. FERGUSON et al., Appts.,
v.

W. S. GOOCH, Trustee, etc., et al.
(84 Va. 1.)

1. The selection of a trustee to take title to property purchased for a syndicate, and to give a deed of trust thereon for a part of the purchase price, is not within the implied authority of real-estate agents who are members of, and who formed, the syndicate.
2. A purchase of lands by real-estate agents on behalf of a syndicate of which they are members, when the agents are also secretly acting as agents of the vendor, cannot be enforced against the other members of the syndicate.
3. A syndicate agreement which merely provides for raising money to purchase certain lands at a given price, without any provisions for selling the lands and dividing the profits, does not constitute a partnership agreement.
4. A usage or custom of real-estate agents in a certain city to get up syndicates to buy property in their hands for sale will not bind members of a syndicate who have no knowledge thereof, especially if they live at other places, so as to sustain a purchase of property for the syndicate made by such agents, who are also acting as secret agents of the vendor.

(December 3, 1896.)

A PPEAL by interveners from a decree of the Hustings Court of Roanoke disallowing their claim as holders of notes secured by deed of trust upon certain property a sale of which under a prior deed of trust the trustee sought to enjoin in this action and to have the rights of the respective parties determined. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Scott & Staples, for appellants:

The purchase of the property by the beneficiaries constitutes a complete consideration, and makes those beneficiaries liable for all of the liens on the property assumed in the purchase.

Osborne v. Cabell, 77 Va. 462; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, 658-662 et seq.; Whitlock v. Gordon, Va. L. J. 1877, p. 378.

A company which receives the benefit of the transaction, ratifies it, although it did not originally authorize its agent to make the contract. Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 716, p. 924.

If the company does not question the authority of W. S. Gooch, no other person can. Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9.

The consideration operates to bind each subscriber for the benefit of the other; as soon as the company is formed, and accepts the subscription, it binds all for the benefit of the company, and the company has its right of action thereon.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 2d ed. § 69; 1 Beach, Stockholders, § 63.

When one subscribes with others a sum of money to carry on some common project, lawful in itself, and supposed to be beneficial to the projectors, and money is advanced upon the faith of such subscription, an action for money paid may be maintained against a subscriber for the amount of his subscription, or such portion of it as may be equal to his proportion of the expenses incurred.

George v. Harris, 4 N. H. 533, 17 Am. Dec. 447; Bryant v. Goodnow, 5 Pick. 228.

An agreement to share in the profit and loss of a business or adventure shows an intention to create a partnership unless such evidence of intention is controlled by stipulations or interpreted by conduct inconsistent with it.

1 Bates, Partn. § 25; Yeoman v. Lasley, 40 Ohio St. 190; Hulett v. Fairbanks, 40 Ohio St. 238; Canada v. Barksdale, 76 Va. 899; Brinkley v. Harkins, 48 Tex. 225; Fisher v. Sweet, 67 Cal. 228; Hill v. Sheibley, 68 Ga. 556; Richards v. Grinnell, 63 Iowa, 44, 50 Am. Rep. 727; Canada v. Barksdale, 76 Va. 899.

On petition for rehearing.

If Powell were the agent of both, with the intelligent consent of the syndicate, there can be no objection to his acting in that capacity.

Mechem Agency, § 67; Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 78; Colewell v. Keystone Iron Co. 36 Mich. 58; Fitzsimmons v. Southern Exp. Co. 40 Ga. 330, 2 Am. Rep. 577; Rowe v. Stevens, 53 N. Y. 621; Joslin v. Cowee, 56 N. Y. 626; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 34 Ohio St. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 380; Leekins v. Nordyke, 66 Iowa, 471; Alexander v. North-Western Christian University, 57 Ind. 466; DeSteiger v. Hollington, 17 Mo. App. 387; Robinson v. Jarvis, 25 Mo. App. 421.

Powell's agency, if any there were, for the vendors of this property, was not a secret agency; but it was known to at least two of the defendants.

The effect of the fraud upon the contract is to render it voidable only, and it is the duty of the deceived party to elect, on the discovery of the fraud, to rescind it, or else he will be bound by it.

Maz Meadows Land & Improv. Co. v. Brady, 92 Va. 71.

Mr. S. S. P. Patteson, for Cunningham Hall, appellee:

While it was doubtless the purpose of the parties who signed the paper to form a joint-stock company and have the company purchase the property for them, no such company was formed, and there is not a shadow of evidence to show that any agent was appointed by them to purchase for them as a partnership. There is no question at all of ratification, for all of the parties repudiated the alleged purchase as soon as they knew of it.

Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Dix, 123 Mass. 148, 25 Am. Rep. 49.

It was impossible for the defendants to ratify the deed in the case at bar, for they knew nothing of it.

See Bishop, Contr. § 1109.

Messrs. Phlegar & Johnson and Hansbrough & Hall also for appellees.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the year 1890, McC. Willis, who was the owner of certain lots in the city of Roanoke, on which there were two deeds of trust (one to secure to G. A. Camp the payment of two notes, for $2,000 each, and the other to secure the payment of two notes, of $1,333.33 each, payable to J. J. Roberts), conveyed the lots to the Old Dominion Investment Company in consideration of the sum of $12,000. Of this sum it was to pay a portion in cash, assume the payment of the debts due Camp and Roberts, and execute a note for $2,000, the residue of the purchase money, and secure it by a deed of trust upon the lots. Soon after the purchase of the property by the Old Dominion Investment Company L. L. Powell & Co., real-estate agents in that city, and through whom it made its purchase, approached the president of the Old Dominion Investment Company to know if that company would sell the property at the price of $15,000, as it had not yet paid anything upon it. After consultation with the secretary, the president agreed to sell it at that price. To whom the property was sold by Powell & Co. does not clearly appear. There being some delay in closing the contract, the president of the Old Dominion Investment Company spoke to Powell about the delay, and he said he was getting up a "syndicate" to take the property. The syndicate which was gotten up consisted of some nineteen or twenty persons, among whom were L. L. Powell & Co. and the Old Dominion Investment Company. The paper which evidenced the agreement between the members of the syndicate was lost or mislaid, but its contents were proved, and are substantially as follows: We, the undersigned, hereby agree to take the amount set opposite our respective names in the syndicate organizing for the purpose of purchasing certain lands, at the price of $18,000. After the sum of $18,000 had been subscribed, L. L. Powell & Co. collected from the greater portion of the members of the syndicate the cash payment due from each. At the instance of L. L. Powell, Gooch, the president of the Old Dominion Investment Company, on the 8th day of November, 1890, executed a deed for his company, by which it conveyed the lots to him as trustee for the members of the syndicate (naming them, and stating what the fractional interest of each was in the lots conveyed), at the price of $18,000. The deed acknowledged the payment of $4,666.66 in cash, and Gooch, trustee for the syndicate named, "assumed and agreed to pay off and discharge the following interest-bearing negotiable notes: Two notes, for the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) each, said notes executed by D. R. Bowman, and made due and payable to Georgia A. Camp, at the National Exchange Bank of Roanoke, Virginia, at one and two years, respectively, from date of June 13, 1890; two notes, for the sum of thirteen hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents ($1,333.33) each, executed by McC. Willis, and made due and payable to J. L. Roberts, at the National Exchange Bank of Roanoke, Virginia, at one and two years, respectively, from date of September 13, 1890; and one note, for the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000), executed by the Old Dominion Investment Company, and made due and payable to McC. Willis at four months from date of September 17, 1890,—all of said notes bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid. The residue, $4,666.66, as evidenced by four interest-bearing notes of date herewith,—two notes for the sum of $1,500 each, and two notes for the sum of $833.34 each, said notes executed by W. S. Gooch, trustee, and made due and payable to the Old Dominion Investment Company as follows: One of each of said notes payable one year from date hereof, and one of each at two years from date hereof,—all of said notes payable at the Citizens' Bank of Roanoke, Virginia, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum until paid." To secure the $4,666.66 for which Gooch, trustee, executed his four notes as above stated, he executed a deed of trust contemporaneously with the deed made to him by the Old Dominion Investment Company.

Upon the failure of Gooch, trustee, to pay the $2,000 note payable to Mrs. Camp, due one year after date, the trustee, L. L. Powell, in the original deed of trust to secure it, advertised the lots for sale at the instance of the Fidelity Trust & Loan Company, the then holder of the note. Thereupon Gooch, trustee, filed his bill to enjoin the sale. After setting out what debts were liens upon the lots, he alleged that he had no interest in the property; that he became trustee to oblige the parties interested; that the beneficiaries, or members of the syndicate, were all in default in making payments; that there were funds in the hands of L. L. Powell & Co., arising from the rents of houses upon the lots; that he held the mere legal title to the property, and has no means of enforcing collections from members of the syndicate, or of compelling Powell & Co. to pay over the funds in their hands; that there was a controversy between some of the members of the syndicate and L. L. Powell & Co. over the property purchased, and that he was unable to administer the trust without the aid of a court of equity; that a sale of the property under the circumstances would result in great sacrifice,—made the persons interested parties to the bill, and prayed for an injunction, and that the trust might be administered by the court, that he might be allowed to resign, and for general relief.

During the progress of the litigation Ferguson & Fries, the appellants, came into the case by petition, alleging that they were the owners of the notes executed by Gooch, trustee, for the $4,666.66; that they had acquired them before maturity, and were entitled to have them paid; and also asked to have the sale of the lots postponed until the liens could be ascertained, the liabilities of the debtors and the rights of creditors fixed, and the title to the property cleared of the clouds upon it. Some of the persons who had agreed to become members of the syndicate appeared and made defense, but others did not. Upon the hearing of the cause the trial court was of opinion that there was no valid contract of purchase of the lots named in the deed of November 8, 1890, that was binding upon any of the beneficiaries named therein except L. L. Powell & Co., and that they were not liable for the purchase price of the lots, or any part thereof, and decreed that the deed of November 8 between the Old Dominion Investment Company and Gooch, trustee, and the deed of trust executed by him on the same day to secure the purchase money due the Old Dominion Investment Company to be void, except as to L. L. Powell & Co.

It further decreed that L. L. Powell & Co. should refund to the other members of the syndicate the moneys paid by them on account of the purchase of the lots, with interest.

It also decreed that the lots should be sold to satisfy the liens upon them as reported by the commissioner, except in so far as that report was modified by its decree.

From that decree Ferguson & Fries appealed. Neither of the other parties to the controversy is seeking to have the decree reversed.

The only question we have to consider, therefore, is whether there is any error in the decree appealed from to the prejudice of the appellants.

The right of the appellants to have the deed of trust executed to Gooch, trustee, enforced depended upon the question whether Gooch, trustee, was authorized to make the notes held by them, and give a deed of trust upon the lots to secure their payment.

It clearly appears that Gooch, trustee, was not selected as trustee by the members of the syndicate other than Powell & Co., unless Powell & Co. had the right to select him for them. It is not pretended that either of them, except Powell & Co., ever spoke to Gooch upon the subject, or even knew of his action for months afterwards, unless, perhaps, it be the Old Dominion Investment Company, of which he was president. Powell & Co. had not, by virtue of their authority as real estate agents, or by reason of their relation as tenants in common or co-owners with the other members of the syndicate, the right to select a trustee for them, or to do or to authorize to be done for them any of the acts attempted to be done by Gooch, trustee. Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581.

It is claimed that the syndicate was a partnership, and that Powell & Co., under their authority as partners, had the right to select a trustee to hold the title for them, and also to authorize him to make the notes for the purchase price, and to execute the deed of trust upon the lots to secure the notes.

The agreement between the members of the syndicate, by which they undertook to subscribe $18,000 for the purpose of buying the lots, is the only contract between them. It does not appear that the parties to that agreement ever considered the question, or determined how the property was to be held, further than is shown by the agreement itself. Their relations to each other must, therefore, be determined by the terms of that paper. It provided for raising money with which to purchase certain lands at a given price. There is no provision in it for selling the lands and dividing the profits. It may have been, and probably was, the intention of the parties, in that era of wild speculation, to sell the lots and divide the profits; but that does not appear from that agreement, which is the only contract between the parties in reference to the matter. It is wholly wanting in the essentials of a partnership agreement, nor does it show that the parties intended to do these acts from which a partnership could be inferred.

40 L. R. A.

In no view of the case did Gooch have any authority to act as trustee, or bind the members of the syndicate, other than Powell & Co., in making the notes held by appellants, and in executing the deed of trust to secure them.

If it be admitted that the appellants were entitled, in equity, to so much of the purchase price of the lots as was equal to the amount of the notes held by them, their right to subject the lots, or to have a personal decree against the members of the syndicate therefor, would depend upon the question whether, under the facts of this case, a court of equity would specifically execute the alleged agreement for its sale and purchase.

The contract of sale and purchase, if made at all, was made by Powell & Co., representing both the vendor and the vendees. They were the agents of the vendor or vendors to sell the lots, and were to receive, and did receive, a commission for making the sale. They worked up the syndicate, and made the contract of purchase for them, if one was made, and were also members of that syndicate, and interested in its purchase. They did not disclose to the members of the syndicate that they were the agents to sell, though some of them, it appears, knew this fact. Some members of the syndicate, however, especially John H. Powell, of Richmond, Virginia, and James S. Groves, of North Carolina, relied upon the judgment and skill of L. L. Powell, in making the investment for them, and did not know, until long after they had made their cash payments, that their agents were also the agents of the vendors.

Nothing is better settled than that a man cannot be the agent of both the seller and the buyer in the same transaction, without the intelligent consent of both. Loyalty to his trust is the most important duty which the agent owes to his principal. Reliance upon his integrity, fidelity, and ability is the main consideration in the selection of agents; and so careful is the law in guarding this fiduciary relation that it will not allow an agent to act for himself and his principal, nor to act for two principals on opposite sides, in the same transaction. All such transactions are voidable, and may be repudiated by the principal, without showing that he was injured. In such cases the amount of consideration, the absence of undue advantage, and other like features are wholly immaterial. Nothing will defeat the principal's right of remedy, except his own confirmation, after full knowledge of all the facts. Actual injury is not the principle upon which the law holds such transactions voidable. The chief object of the principle is not to compel restitution where actual fraud has been committed, or unjust advantage gained; but it is to prevent the agent from putting himself in a position "in which to be honest must be a strain on him," and to elevate him "to a position where he cannot be tempted to betray his principle." "Under a less stringent rule," it was said by the court in Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174, 180, "fraud might be committed, or unfair advantage taken, and yet, owing to the imperfections of the best of human institutions, the injured party be unable either to discover it or to prove it in such manner as to entitle him to redress. To guard against this uncertainty, all possible temptation is removed, and the prohibition against an agent acting in a dual character is made broad enough to cover all his transactions. The rights of the principal will not be changed, nor the capacity of the agent enlarged, by the fact that the agent is not invested with a discretion, but simply acts under an authority to purchase a particular article at a specified price, or to sell a particular article at the market price. No such distinction is recognized by the adjudications, nor can it be established without removing an important safeguard against fraud." Buckles v. Lafferty, 2 Rob. (Va.) 292; Hovory v. Helms, 20 Gratt. 1; 1 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 244; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 959; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 315; Mechem, Agency, §§ 454, 455, 713; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 11 L. ed. 1076; Story, Agency, §§ 210, 211; Raisin v. Clark, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 882.

It is claimed that it was at that time common for real estate agents in that city to get up syndicates to buy property in their hands for sale. No such custom or usage is proved; and, if it were, it could not avail unless it were clearly shown (and it was not) that the members of the syndicate, many of whom did not live in or near Roanoke city, had knowledge of the usage or custom when Powell & Co. became their agents. To be secretly in the service of the opposite party, while the agent is acting ostensibly for his principal only, is a fraud upon the latter, and a breach of public morals which the law will not permit. "It is also an elementary proposition," said Willes, J., "that a custom of trade may control the mode of performance of a contract, but cannot change its intrinsic character." In the case of Robinson v. Mollett, L. R. 7 H. L. 802, this question was very fully discussed in the House of Lords. It was said by Baron Cleasby in that case, after quoting § 210 on Story on Agency, which declares "that, in matters touching the agency, agents cannot act so as to bind their principals where they have an adverse interest in themselves:" "I submit that this fundamental and important rule cannot be defeated by a usage, or, as Mr. Justice Willes calls it, a lax practice, of brokers, which is plainly of their own creation, for their convenience and advantage in the settlement of speculative dealings." Mr. Justice Grove said: "I am of opinion, with the late Mr. Justice Willes, that here the importation of the usage 'does not merely control the mode of performance of the contract, but that it changes its intrinsic character' (L. R. 5 C. P. 656); that it converts a broker into a principal seller without the knowledge of the buyer who employs him, and that it must be rejected." Pages 829, 831.

Lord Chelmsford said in the same case (p. 838): "But the usage is of such a peculiar character, and is so completely at variance with the relation between the parties, converting a broker employed to buy into a principal seller for himself, and thereby giving him an interest wholly opposed to his duty, that I think no person who is ignorant of such an usage can be held to have agreed to submit to its conditions, merely by employing the services of a broker, to whom the usage is known, to perform the ordinary and accustomed duties belonging to such employment." In the views expressed by both of these judges the lord chancellor (Cairns) concurred.

Such a usage was held by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Farnsworth v. Hemmer, 1 Allen, 494, 79 Am. Dec. 756, to be contrary to good morals and sound policy, because it would tend to sanction an unwarrantable concealment of facts essential to a contract, and operate as a fraud on parties who had a right to rely on the confidence reposed in their agents. Raisin v. Clark, 41 Md. 158, 20 Am. Rep. 66.

The evidence wholly fails to show that the members of the syndicate, for whom Powell & Co. were agents, after full knowledge of all the facts, confirmed or ratified the action of Powell & Co. in purchasing the lots, or in selecting Gooch as trustee for them.

Under these circumstances, without passing upon the other grounds relied on to defeat a specific execution of the agreement, it is clear that the members of the syndicate other than Powell & Co. could not, upon well-settled principles of equity, be compelled to specifically perform the agreement for the purchase of the lots. Pom. Spec. Perf. Contr. §§ 267, 268.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that there is no error in the decree appealed from to the prejudice of the appellants, and, as no other party is complaining of it, it must be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

VIRGINIA FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

NEW YORK CAROUSAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(.....Va.....)

1. Motion to dismiss an appeal because the appeal bond does not provide for payment of all actual damages incurred in consequence of the supersedeas is too late if not made until the time has elapsed in which a new bond might have been given or a new appeal taken.
2. One garnished for a debt due a non-resident creditor may prevent a judgment against him in the garnishment proceeding by showing that, without his collusion and notwithstanding his plea of the pendency of the garnishment proceeding, a court at the creditor's domicile, having jurisdiction, rendered a judgment against him on the debt in favor of the creditor, which, having property in that jurisdiction, he was compelled to pay.

(January 20, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond to review a judgment in favor

NOTE.—As to garnishment of debt of nonresidents, see Illinois C. R. Co. v. Smith (Miss.) 19 L. R. A. 577, and note; also Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts (Ill.) 86 L. R. A. 640, and other cases cited in footnote.

of plaintiff in a proceeding to reach money in the hands of defendant as garnishee which was alleged to belong to a person residing in the state of North Carolina. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Beverley T. Crump, for plaintiff in error:

The trustees, i. e., the garnishees, cannot equitably be put to the trouble and expense of protecting themselves against a double liability put upon them for the plaintiff's benefit. It is for the plaintiff to employ all procedure necessary for the trustee's safety.

Burke v. Adams, 64 N. H. 86.

The prevailing doctrine according to the weight of authority, in the states which have enactments substantially like those in Virginia, is that a judgment debtor cannot be garnished, even in his own state, except by a proceeding in the same court in which the original suit is pending.

Scott v. Rohman, 43 Neb. 618.

On principle the North Carolina court was right in insisting upon its prior jurisdiction.

Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Pet. 136, 10 L. ed. 95; Mack v. Winslow, 16 U. S. App. 602, 59 Fed. Rep. 316, 8 C. C. A. 134; Burke v. Hance, 76 Tex. 76.

Messrs. Anderson & Anderson, for defendant in error:

The attaching creditor in this case, the New York Carousel Manufacturing Company, in suing out and levying its attachment complied strictly with the provisions of §§ 2959, 2967, of the Code of Virginia.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gallahue, 12 Gratt. 663, 65 Am. Dec. 254.

The Virginia Fire & Marine Insurance Company, chartered under the laws of the state of Virginia, and having its home office in Richmond, Virginia, was a citizen of the state of Virginia, which gave the circuit court of Richmond jurisdiction.

Concardin v. Universal L. Ins. Co. 32 Gratt. 445; Drake, Attachm. 597; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 83 Ala. 464.

Full protection would have been afforded the garnishee in this case had application been made to the North Carolina court after the rendition of judgment, for a stay or suspension of execution, until the attachment proceedings in Virginia could be determined, when the amount for which the garnishee might be held liable could easily be credited upon the North Carolina judgment.

Crawford v. Clute, 7 Ala. 157, 41 Am. Dec. 92; Crawford v. Slade, 9 Ala. 887, 44 Am. Dec. 463; Drake, Attachm. 7th ed. § 701; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Fulton, 71 Miss. 385; Gray v. Henby, 1 Smedes & M. 598; Jones v. New York & E. R. Co. 1 Grant, Cas. 457; Minor v. Rodgers Coal Co. 25 Mo. App. 79; Allen v. Watt, 79 Ill. 284; McKeon v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 669, 83 Am. Dec. 86; Harvey v. Great Northern R. Co. 50 Minn. 405, 17 L. R. A. 84.

Riely, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, at the hearing of the case, moved to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the appeal bond is defective, in that it omits to provide, as a part of the condition, for the payment of "all actual damages incurred in consequence of the supersedas."

The statute (Code, § 3471) prescribes that the bond is to be given before the clerk of the court below, and requires that this officer shall take the bond and indorse on the process that it has been given. The plaintiff in error, upon the allowance of the writ of error, promptly gave bond in the required penalty, and with all the prescribed conditions, save the one above stated, before the clerk of the circuit court, who accepted the same, and indorsed on the process that the bond had been given.

It is usual for the clerk, whom the law designates as the officer to take the bond, to prepare it; and the bond in this case was no doubt prepared by him, and not by counsel. The plaintiff in error executed it, and the clerk took it, presumably in good faith, both of them supposing that it conformed to the requirements of the statute; and the defendant in error acquiesced in its sufficiency, and in the perfection of the appeal, until the hearing.

If the defendant in error was not satisfied with the bond, or deemed the defect now pointed out a sufficient ground for the dismissal of the appeal, he should have taken the necessary steps, within the time that a new bond might have been given or another appeal allowed (Code, § 3474), where he has had a reasonable time in which to do so, to require a proper bond to be given, and, in the event of a failure to give it, moved to dismiss the appeal. It is too late to wait, before making such motion, until a new bond cannot be given or another appeal allowed. To dismiss the appeal at this late day, under these circumstances, would be grossly unjust. The appellee, after such delay, must be considered as having waived any objection to the defect in the bond. Following the course which has been heretofore pursued by this court in dealing with similar cases, the motion to dismiss must be overruled. Jackson v. Henderson, 3 Leigh, 196; Pugh v. Jones, 6 Leigh, 299; Brown v. Matthews, 1 Rand. (Va.) 462; Syme v. Johnston, 3 Call (Va.) 522; Acker v. Alexandria & F. R. Co. 84 Va. 648; Orr v. Pennington, 93 Va. 268.

The judgment appealed from was rendered against the plaintiff in error as garnishee under an attachment sued out by the defendant in error against the garnishee's creditor, who was a nonresident of this state.

The creditor resided in the state of North Carolina, and, prior to the issue of the attachment, had brought suit in that state against the garnishee to recover the same debt which it was sought to subject by the attachment. This suit was still pending and undetermined when the attachment was sued out.

The writ of error awarded by this court brings under review the right of the circuit court of the city of Richmond, upon the facts disclosed by the record, to give judgment against the garnishee.

Where there is an action by a creditor against his debtor to recover a debt due to him pending in a court in one jurisdiction, and at the same time an attachment against the creditor and a garnishment against his debtor pending in another court in a different jurisdiction, to subject the same debt to the satisfaction of a liability of the creditor, there is a conflict among the authorities as to the proper course to be pursued by the respective courts.

It is held by one line of the authorities that the court which first acquires jurisdiction over the debt has the right to maintain it to the end of the litigation, and enforce or subject the debt, irrespective of the proceedings in the other court; and that the court which last acquires jurisdiction as to the debt, whether it be by the action of the creditor to recover his debt or under a garnishment by his creditor, must dismiss the action or garnishment, when the pendency of the prior action or garnishment is duly brought to its notice. Wallace v. M'Connell, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 136, 10 L. ed. 95; Whipple v. Robbins, 97 Mass. 107, 93 Am. Dec. 64; American Bank v. Rollins, 99 Mass. 813; Embree v. Hanna, 5 Johns. 101; Shrewsbury v. Tufts, 41 W. Va. 212; Drake, Attachm. 7th ed. § 700; 2 Wade, Attachm. § 494.

The other line of the authorities holds that whether the action by the creditor to recover his debt or the garnishment be first commenced, the court in which the action by the creditor is pending should, upon due notice of the garnishment, either suspend all proceedings in the action to await the determination of the garnishment, or, which is deemed better, proceed to judgment on the debt, with a stay of execution on the judgment until the garnishment is determined, which stay can be removed or made perpetual, in whole or in part, as the exigency of the case may require. By this course the rights of the attaching creditor would not be injuriously affected, and the garnishee would at the same time be effectually protected against a double liability. Crawford v. Clute, 7 Ala. 157, 41 Am. Dec. 92; Crawford v. Slade, 9 Ala. 887, 44 Am. Dec. 463; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Merrick, 61 Ala. 534; McFadden v. O'Donnell, 18 Cal. 160; McKeon v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 667, 88 Am. Dec. 86; Harvey v. Great Northern R. Co. 50 Minn. 405, 17 L. R. A. 84; Howland v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 134 Mo. 474; Drake, Attachm. § 701; Gallego v. Chevallie, 2 Brock. 285, note at end of the opinion.

It is unnecessary in this case, however, to decide between these conflicting authorities, for under neither line of them can the judgment appealed from be upheld.

The insurance company (the plaintiff in error), on January 18, 1895, filed its answer to the complaint in the suit brought against it in the superior court of Lenoir county, North Carolina, by its creditor, J. H. Turnage, who was also the debtor in the attachment suit, and duly set forth, among other defenses, the pendency of the attachment suit in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, and the garnishment against the company, averred the validity of the said proceedings according to the laws of Virginia; and asked that it be protected against the recovery of any part of the debt sued for which it might be adjudged to pay by the circuit court of the city of Richmond under the garnishment.

It also, on February 4, 1895, filed its answer to the garnishment in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, wherein it referred to the action brought against it in the court in North Carolina, and exhibited with its answer a certified copy of all the proceedings in the said action up to that time. The circuit court thereupon without entering a formal order to that effect, directed that the garnishment should await the result of the suit in North Carolina.

At the May term, 1895, of the superior court of Lenoir county, North Carolina, it presented to the court a certified copy of the proceedings in the attachment suit in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, and claimed that the court should not, and moved that it do not, proceed to the trial of the action of Turnage against the company until the attachment suit was determined. The court, however, overruled the motion, and on May 17, 1895, gave judgment against the company for the entire amount of the debt. Execution was issued on the judgment on May 22, 1895, directed to the sheriff of Lenoir county, whereby the company was obliged to pay, and did pay, the same on October 12, 1895.

On November 22, 1895, the garnishee filed an amended and supplemental answer to the garnishment in the circuit court of the city of Richmond, in which it set forth that the court in North Carolina had overruled its plea of the pendency of the attachment suit and garnishment against it on the ground that the suit in North Carolina was instituted prior to the attachment suit, and that, therefore, the court in that state acquired priority of jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation; and that the court had given judgment against it for the full amount of the debt; that execution was at once issued on the judgment; and that, having moneys in the hands of its agents in that state liable to the execution, it had been compelled to pay the same. It exhibited with its amended answer a certified copy of the record of the suit in the court in North Carolina, containing all the proceedings had therein subsequent to the proceedings contained in the copy of the record filed with its former answer, the two making a complete record of the suit, and prayed a dismissal of the garnishment against it. This the circuit court refused to do, and gave judgment against the garnishee for the amount of the debt of the attaching creditor, the defendant in error. If this judgment be sustained, then the garnishee will, to that extent, have to pay its debt over again.

It is a settled rule, founded on obvious principles of natural justice, that a garnishee cannot be lawfully compelled to pay the same indebtedness twice. Nothing can be more clearly just than that a person who has been compelled by a court of competent jurisdiction to pay a debt should not be compelled to pay it over again. Consequently, when he is in such a situation that, if charged as garnishee, this would be the result, he will not be charged, unless his situation is due to his own fault or neglect.

The garnishee in this case was guiltless of any fraud or collusion. It took all necessary steps to prevent a recovery in the suit in the state of North Carolina of the debt against it. It made a full disclosure to the court of the facts of its situation. It duly pleaded the pendency of the attachment suit and the gar-nishment against it. It endeavored to obtain a suspension of all proceedings in the suit until the determination of the garnishment against it, but the court, holding that it had priority of jurisdiction, refused to stay the suit, and gave judgment, upon which it allowed execution to be issued.

The garnishee is a corporation created under the laws of the state of Virginia, with its home office in the city of Richmond, and was engaged in the business of insuring property against loss by fire in this and other states. It had complied with the laws of North Carolina, by which foreign corporations were authorized to do business in that state, and under its laws, for the purposes of suit, was deemed a resident of that state, and amenable to a personal judgment. It had moneys in the hands of its agents in that state, and execution having been issued on the judgment, it could not escape its payment.

Under these circumstances, the circuit court should not have given judgment against the garnishee. It had been compelled, after a full disclosure, to pay the debt once under the judgment of a tribunal having legal jurisdiction to decide and adequate power to enforce its decision, and had therefore an indisputable claim to the protection against the second payment of the debt. Garity v. Gigie, 180 Mass. 184; Eddy v. O'Hara, 132 Mass. 56; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetta, 165 Ill. 592, 36 L. R. A. 640.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from must be reversed, and the garnishment against the plaintiff in error be dismissed.

W. D. CARDWELL, Receiver of the Virginia Steel, Iron, & Slate Company, Appt.,

v.
; M. KELLY.

(.....Va.....)

1. Stockholders cannot set up the illegality of the scheme of the corporation, which did not appear on the face of the contract of subscription or the prospectus therein referred to, in order to escape liability to creditors whose debts had been contracted upon the faith of the subscriptions to the stock.

2. A subscriber is estopped, as against creditors, to set up the invalidity of a subscription to capital stock, as to which, if invalid, he was in part delicto.

(January 27, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of a stock subscription. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cardwell & Cardwell, Leake & Carter, and Christian & Christian, for plaintiff in error:

In partitions of land under the law, the usual and proper method of assigning the parcels to NOTE.—For fraud or misrepresentation to justify rescission of subscription for stock, see note to Fear v. Bartlett (Md.) 38 L. R. A. 721.

40 L. R. A.

the different part owners is by allotment, and this method is always practised unless there is a strong reason against it.

See 2 Minor, Inst. p. 423; Cox v. McMullin, 14 Gratt. 91.

The distribution by lot, then, is in no way inconsistent with the idea that it was contemplated that the lots should be of substantially equal value; and if that is the case it is admitted on all sides the distribution would not constitute a lottery.

The only extrinsic evidence tending to show that a lottery or unequal distribution was contemplated or intended is the testimony of the defendant who states that the agent of the company who took his subscription told him that one of the lots drawn by him might be equal to his whole subscription.

Such oral statements, unless constituting fraudulent representation inducing the subscription, cannot be relied upon by a subscriber in defense of an action to recover his subscription.

2 Thomp. Corp. § 1311.

Nemo allegans turpitudinem suam est audiendus.

Where one of the parties to an agreement, invalid on the ground of fraud, can make out his case without proving the fraud, it is established that the defendant will be estopped from alleging his own fraud in defense.

Colins v. Blantern, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. pt. 2, p. 750; Martin v. South Salem Land Co. 2 Va. Law Reg. 743; Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp 348; Starke v. Littlepage, 4 Rand. (Va.) 372; Montefiori v. Montefiori, 1 W. Bl. 364; Doe, Roberts, v. Roberts, 2 Barn. & Ald. 368; Hendrickson v. Evans, 25 Pa. 444; Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. (Va.) 676; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 197; Biglow, Estoppel, pp. 484 et seq.; Brogden v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 666, 6 English Ruling Cases, 103; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, §§ 3683, 3684; Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 680, 24 L. ed. 170.

Equitable estoppel or estoppels by conduct, are created for the purpose of promoting justice and to repress fraud upon third persons; and such estoppels, where the requisites therefor exist, are not disfavored by the courts, for fraud is prevented and justice is attained by means of them.

See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 802, and note; Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 12 Am. Rep. 111.

If the circumstances were such that the party against whom the estoppel is sought to be raised so conducts himself that a reasonable person would infer that a certain state of things existed and acts upon that inference, he shall afterwards be estopped from denying it.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 805, 811; 2 Best, Ev. § 543; Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 541; Brogden v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 666, 6 English Ruling Cases, 103.

Messrs. Pollard & Sands, for appellee:

Contracts partaking of the characteristics here admitted to exist are incapable of enforcement between the parties or their privies.

Evell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682; Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 341; 1 Parsons, Contr. 392; Middleton v. Arnolds, 13 Gratt. 489.

The term "lottery" includes, not only a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance, but the distribution itself

2 Whart. Crim. Law, §§ 1490, 1491; United States v. Olney, Deady, 461; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1187; Seidenbender v. Charles, 4 Serg. & R. 151, 8 Am. Dec. 682; Ridgeway v. Underwood, 4 Wash. C. C. 129; Den, Wooden, v. Shotwell, 23 N. J. L. 465; United States v. Olney, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 275; United States v. Zeisler, 30 Fed. Rep. 501; Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 469; Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160; Lynch v. Rosenthal, 144 Ind. 86, 31 L. R. A. 835.

Where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it, that is a lottery.

Bull v. Ruggles, 56 N. Y. 425. See also Horner v. United States, 147 U. S. 449, 37 L. ed. 287; Phalen v. Com. 1 Rob. (Va.) 718; Watson v. Fletcher, 7 Gratt. 1; Embrey v. Jamison, 131 U. S. 336, 33 L. ed. 172; 1 Parsons, Contr. 380-382, and note Bon p. 382; Bank of United States v. Owens, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 527, 7 L. ed. 508; Niemeyer v. Wright, 75 Va. 239, 40 Am. Rep. 720; Yellow Stone Kit v. State, 88 Ala. 196, 7 L. R. A. 599.

Contracts, void as this one is, between the parties cannot be enforced for the benefit of the creditors of one of the parties.

Bank of United States v. Owens, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 527, 7 L. ed. 508.

Nihilum ex nihilo oriatur is as true in law as in philosophy.

Williams v. Gibbs, 58 U. S. 17 How. 265, 15 L. ed. 144; Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 83, 3 Am. Dec. 612; McBlair v. Gibbs, 58 U. S. 17 How. 232, 15 L. ed. 132; Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 133 U. S. 469, 33 L. ed. 760; Union Nat. Bank v. Bank of Kansas City, 136 U. S. 236, 34 L. ed. 346.

That the receiver takes property subject to all subsisting liens and vested rights, carries with it the correlative proposition that he is in no sense what is called a bona fide purchaser for value.

5 Thomp. Corp. § 6917; Lincoln v. Fitch, 42 Me. 456; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 425, 24 L. ed. 205; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 151.

But here we would have the court bear in mind that the contract is void and no action can rest upon it.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 473.

The so-called maxim, Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus has no sort of application to cases where the contract is void ab initio.

Rosebrough v. Ansley, 35 Ohio St. 118; Tribble v. Anderson, 63 Ga. 31; Harris v. Harris, 23 Gratt. 787; Hanauer v. Doane, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 842, 20 L. ed. 439; Starks v. Littlepage, 4 Rand. (Va.) 868; James v. Bird, 8 Leigh, 510, 31 Am. Dec. 668; Terrell v. Imboden, 10 Leigh, 321, and Owen v. Sharp, 12 Leigh, 429.

The defendant in error cannot have the doctrine of estoppel urged against him, for the plaintiff in error did not show, nor attempt to show, that there was any misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact, made with knowledge of the facts, to one who was ignorant of the truth, with the intention that he should act upon it, and leading him, to act upon it. This is essential.

Stebbins v. Bruce, 80 Va. 389; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 469; Bower v. McCormick, 40 L. R. A.

23 Gratt. 321; Jones v. Sasseeer, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 464.

The maxim, Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus does not reach to the height of being a definitive rule of decision, but, when properly understood and applied, it is addressed to the credibility of the testimony of a party alleging his own wrong.

United States v. Leffler, 38 U. S. 11 Pet. 94, 9 L. ed. 645; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423, 24 L. ed. 204; Jordaine v. Lashbrooke, 7 T. R. 601.

A voidable act will have all its proper legal effects unless and until it is disputed and pronounced invalid. And it can be disputed only by certain persons and under certain conditions.

Pollock, Contr. p. 8; Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 272, 6 L. ed. 472.

If any part of the consideration for a promise or set of promises is unlawful, the whole agreement is void.

Pollock, Contr. p. 318; Story, Contr. § 700; Whart. Contr. § 363; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421-427, 36 L. ed. 759-762; Bartlett v. Vinor, Carth. 252; Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 343; Hunt v. Knickerbacker, 5 Johns. 327.

Contracts founded on an act prohibited by a statute under a penalty are void, although not expressly declared so to be.

Wilson v. Spencer, 1 Rand. (Va.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 491; O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 467, 39 Am. Dec. 386; Lemon v. Grosskopf, 22 Wis. 447, 99 Am. Dec. 58, and note; Gravier v. Carraby, 17 La. 118, 36 Am. Dec. 608; Deventorf v. Beardsley, 23 Barb. 656.

On petition for rehearing.

An English judge has said: "All authorities, from first to last, concur in one thing—viz., that the doctrine on this subject is founded on 'public policy,' and I cannot but regard the jarring opinions as exemplifying the well-known dictum of Mr. Justice Burrough in Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229, that public policy 'is a very unruly horse, and when once you get astride it you never know where it will carry you.' Public policy does not admit of definition, and is not easily explained. . . .

Egerton v. Earl Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 1, . . . Public policy is a variable quantity; . . . it must vary and does vary with the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public; . . . it cannot have been the same when Chief Justice Tindal decided Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 785, in 1831, as it was when Chief Justice Parker decided Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, in 1711; . . . it must have changed, and did change, between 1831 and 1869 when Vice-Chancellor James decided Leather Cloth Co. v. Lonsont, L. R. 9 Eq. 345; and if there had not been a further change before Lord Justice Fry decided Rousillon v. Rousillon, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 351, in 1880, it must have occurred ere now."

Davies v. Davies, L. R. 36 Ch. Div. 364.

No case can be found where an action has been sustained, which goes in affirmance of an illegal contract; and where the object of it is to enforce the performance of an engagement prohibited by law. Wherever an action has been sustained against a party, to prevent him from retaining the benefit derived from an unlawful act, the action proceeds in disaffirmance of the contract; and, instead of endeavoring to enforce it, presumes it to be void.

Hunt v. Knickerbacker, 5 Johns. 327; Wilson v. Spencer, 1 Rand. (Va.) 76, 10 Am. Dec. 491; Jones v. Comer, 5 Leigh, 358; Didier v. Patterson, 98 Va. 586; Gravier v. Carraby, 17 La. 118, 36 Am. Dec. 606; Decendorf v. Beardsley, 23 Barb. 656; Bower v. McCormick, 23 Gratt. 821; Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 469.

The court errs when it brings forward the maxim, Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus, as furnishing a positive rule of law essential to create an estoppel.

United States v. Leffler, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 94, 9 L. ed. 645; followed in Davis v. Broten, 94 U. S. 423, 24 L. ed. 204; has approved of Jordaine v. Lashbrooke, 7 T. R. 601.

Riely, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The sole question for decision is whether a subscriber to the stock of a corporation, who was allured to make the subscription by the chance of being allotted a lot or lots in a drawing for distribution of lots of unequal value, can by reason thereof escape the payment of the money due on his subscription, not to the corporation, but to its creditors, whose debts were contracted upon the faith of his and other subscriptions.

It is a fact conceded in the record that the corporation, the Virginia Steel, Iron, & Slate Company, is insolvent, and that its creditors cannot be paid their debts unless the assessment of 45 per cent made by the chancery court of the city of Richmond on its stockholders is collected.

In conformity to the Constitution of the state, the buying, selling, or transferring of tickets or chances in any lottery is prohibited by statute, and a penalty therefor prescribed. Const. art. 5, § 18; Code, §§ 3825, 3826. Whether the scheme out of which this controversy has arisen is within the prohibition of the statute, we express no opinion, as, in the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to decide that question.

It is a general rule, as stated by an able law writer, that a contract or an agreement cannot be made the subject of an action if it can be impeached on the ground of dishonesty, or as being opposed to public policy,—if it be either contra bonos mores, or forbidden by the law. Broom, Legal Maxims, 706.

A defendant, against whom it is sought to enforce such a contract, may show its illegality, and a court of justice will decline to lend its aid to enforce a contract thus wrongfully entered into. Where, however, the parties are in pari delicto, but the plaintiff can make out his case without disclosing the unlawful nature of the contract, it is not a universal rule that the defendant will be allowed to show its illegality for the purpose of defeating the action.

Contracts which are founded upon an illegal consideration, as being immoral or contrary to public good, or which are forbidden by law, are void; and in the language of Chief Justice Wilmot in Collins v. Blantern, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 646, "the reason why the common law says such contracts are void, is for the public good." They are injurious to the community, and violative of the policy of the law; and so the courts, having in view the good of the public, and the policy of the law, will not lend their aid to enforce such a contract unless they can see that to do so will defeat the object of the illegal transaction, and promote the interests of society and the policy of the law. But where, in the particular case, it appears that this will be the result of the enforcement of such contract, the maxim, Nemo allegans turpitudinem suam audiendus, is rigorously applied, and the defendant will not be allowed to plead and prove his own wrong.

40 L. R. A.

In Starke v. Littlepage, 4 Rand. (Va.) 369, Judge Green, in commenting on the maxim, In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, said: "But this rule operates only in cases, where the refusal of the courts to aid either party frustrates the object of the transaction, and takes away the temptation to engage in contracts contra bonos mores, or violating the policy of the laws. If it be necessary, in order to discountenance such transactions, to enforce such a contract at law, or to relieve against it in equity, it will be done, though both the parties are in pari delicto. The party is not allowed to allege his own turpitude in such cases, when defendant at law, or prevented from alleging it when plaintiff in equity, whenever the refusal to execute the contract at law, or the refusal to relieve against it in equity, would give effect to the original purpose, and encourage the parties engaging in such transactions."

In a case of the nature of that at bar, the court will be governed in some degree, at least, by its particular circumstances. It will consider whether the good of the public and the policy of the law will be subserved, and the making of such contracts be discouraged, by enforcing the contract in the case before it, or by refusing to do so, and will do the one or the other as will advance the interests of the public and the policy of the law.

It is apparent that to enforce the contract in this case will defeat the illegal purpose of the parties to it, and tend to deter other persons from entering into similar contracts, thereby upholding the policy of the law and promoting the public good. To refuse to enforce it would encourage the making of such contracts; for, if the venture succeeded, the parties would reap the profits, and, if it failed, would suffer no loss.

If the corporation was seeking to recover the subscription, and was solvent, then, inasmuch as its payment would enable the unlawful design of a lottery to be carried out, it would be proper to allow the defendant to show the unlawful purpose, in order to defeat the transaction and prevent similar ones in the future; but to allow him to do so after it has become insolvent would confer immunity from liability on the guilty, and not restrain, but encourage, such illegal schemes.

Moreover, the refusal to enforce payment of the subscription after insolvency of the corporation would not only fail to advance the interests of the public, and contravene the policy of the law, but would result in great injustice to innocent creditors. This is not an action by the corporation, one of the guilty parties, seeking to enforce payment of the illegal subscription, but an action by the receiver of the court, appointed at the instance of creditors of the corporation, to collect the subscriptions due to it, for the purpose of paying its debts.

It was asserted by Lord Mansfield in Montefiori v. Montefiori, 1 W. Bl. 864, and repeated by Broom in his work on Legal Maxims, that "it is an indisputable proposition that, as against an innocent party no man shall set up his own iniquity as a defense, any more than as a cause of action."

In Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. (Va.) 676, we have a forcible illustration of the application of this principle in the case of an illegal and void contract. In that case the attempt was made to be relieved from the payment of a bond that was alleged to have been given for a gaming consideration, as against the assignee thereof, who had been induced to purchase the bond by the assurance of the obligor that there was no objection to its payment, and that it would be paid. The court denied relief to the obligor, upon the ground that he was estopped by his conduct from showing the unlawful consideration of the bond. Judge Baldwin, who delivered the prevailing opinion in the case, said, after adverting to the doctrine of estoppel: "I can perceive no good reason why a gaming security should form an exception to the general rule on this subject, which rests upon principles of justice equally applicable, whether the debt be void in its inception, or be avoided by payment or release, or by any other matter ex post facto. It is true that a contract or security which is void, either by positive law or upon principles of public policy, is deemed incapable of confirmation; but the doctrine we are considering is not based upon the idea of confirmation, which excludes the supposition of fraud, but upon the fact of fraud in the original representation or subsequent denial, which, to prevent iniquity, is made to operate as an estoppel. Admissions which have been acted upon by others are conclusive upon the party making them, in all cases between him and the person whose conduct he has thus influenced; and the party is estopped, on grounds of public policy and good faith, from repudiating his own representations."

The capital stock of a corporation is its basis of credit. It is to this that persons dealing with the corporation look, and upon which they rely as security for the payment of its obligations. They have the right to assume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that it exists in fact; that it has been fully paid, or is vouched by valid subscriptions. The defendant in error and his fellow subscribers by their subscriptions, enabled the Virginia Steel, Iron, & Slate Company to organize and engage in the business for which it was incorporated, and in the prosecution whereof it contracted debts to insolvency. Those who dealt with it, having no knowledge of any vice in the subscriptions, were entitled to rely upon its capital stock as having been lawfully created. The subscribers to its stock, having by their conduct enabled the company to hold out to the public that it had a validly subscribed capital stock, are estopped to deny the reality of what they made to appear to exist, and upon which others were led to rely. The law in such a case makes the apparent real, as to those who have been thus misled to their injury.

In Martin v. South Salem Land Co. 94 Va. — (a case that was most carefully considered), subscribers to the stock of a joint-stock company, who asserted that they had been defrauded in making their subscriptions, were held to be estopped, though innocent, from setting up the fraud as a defense, because they had failed to repudiate their subscriptions until after the company had become insolvent. The estoppel was raised in that case in favor of the creditors of the company, against innocent subscribers, merely because they had delayed too long in repudiating their subscriptions. There mere delay was the ground of the estoppel. How much greater reason is there for holding that subscribers to the capital stock of a company are estopped, as against creditors, from setting up the invalidity of their subscriptions, as to which, if invalid, the subscribers were in pari delicto? By their conduct in making the subscriptions they enabled the company to obtain credit on the faith thereof, and to allow them now to repudiate their subscriptions would operate as a fraud on the creditors.

Neither the contract of subscription, nor the prospectus which was referred to and made a part of it, was unlawful on its face. Their introduction in evidence was all that was necessary to make out a prima facie case, so that the plaintiff could make out his case without disclosing anything unlawful in the transaction. Its unlawfulness had to be shown by the defendant. This he could only do by pleading and introducing proof of his own unlawful conduct. And this he was estopped from doing as against creditors whom his unlawful conduct had contributed to mislead, and whom the plaintiff represents.

The circuit court erred in the admission of evidence on the part of the defendant to prove the illegality of the contract of subscription, and its instruction to the jury. Its judgment must therefore be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and a new trial awarded, to be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Cardwell, J., absent.

Rehearing denied.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Fred HAUG, Plff in Err.,

v.

C. F. RILEY, Admr., etc., of M. W. Hall, Deceased.

(..... Ga.)

1. It is, on the trial of an action upon a promissory note, after showing the loss or destruction thereof, competent to prove by parol that a paper attached as an exhibit to the plaintiff's declaration is a true and correct copy of the lost original. In the present case the court properly allowed proof of the contents of the instrument declared upon, over objection that the same was not, and had never been, "an office paper," and that the alleged copy thereof showed "only one credit of $30, while the allegations in the declaration admitted and allowed four credits amounting to $140."

2. The indorsee of a negotiable promissory note has a right, as the legal holder thereof, to institute a suit thereon in his own name, notwithstanding the fact that, before bringing his action, he had, by a written assignment, not indorsed on the note itself, but on a separate paper, transferred the note to another as collateral security, who subsequently surrendered the note to him merely for the purpose of collection; and, nothing more appearing, the plaintiff will be entitled to recover.

3. A negotiable promissory note, payable at bank, does not become due until the last day of grace; and one to whom such an instrument is indorsed and transferred on the second day of grace takes the same before maturity, and will be presumed to have been a bona fide purchaser for value.

4. Even where such a note is, before maturity, actually paid by the maker to the payee, and by the former again put in circulation, as against one signing apparently as a joint principal, but who is in fact a surety only, such a purchaser will, nevertheless, be protected.

5. In view of the evidence submitted on the trial of the present case, a verdict for the plaintiff was the only legal result which could have been reached, and the court did not err in directing the jury to find in his favor.

(July 10, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Baldwin County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Daniel B. Sandford, for plaintiff in error:

Whitfield, maker of the note, paid the same in full on the 21st of January, 1892, and had it transferred to his firm, Whitfield & Allen, when Haug was not present. This was the payment of the note by the proper party to the proper payee; and no transfer or assignment of the same to another person could be valid and binding on Haug, without his knowledge and consent expressly given.

Story, Prom. Notes, §§ 180, 373; Mickelberry v. Shannon, 25 Ga. 237; Ga. Code 1892, §§ 2153, 2154; Georgia Southern R. Co. v. Reeves, 64 Ga. 496; Hall v. Capital Bank, 71 Ga. 715; Tanner v. Gude (Ga.) 27 S. E. 938.

The court erred in establishing a copy of the note sued on, as it was not an office paper and varied materially with the allegations in the declaration. The facts on this point take the case out of the rule in Jernigan v. Carter, 60 Ga. 131.

The court erred in directing the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff against Robert Whitfield, principal, and F. Haug, security, for the amount sued for, notwithstanding the contention of plaintiff in error by his pleas and the evidence in support thereof made issues for the jury to pass on.

Collier v. Barnes, 64 Ga. 485.

The note was payable to a chartered bank, or its order, and if the same was not paid by the maker, Whitfield, at maturity, then the note was subject to protest, and F. Haug, as security, was entitled to notice of nonpayment and of the protest of same within a reasonable time.

Ga. Code 1892, § 2781.

The bank being the original payee could not deprive the security of this statutory right by a transfer of the note, and the same was still subject to protest, and the security entitled to notice thereof.

Randolph v. Fleming, 59 Ga. 776; Pritchard v. Smith, 77 Ga. 463.

Messrs. Roberts & Pottle and J. D. Howard, for defendant in error:

The copy of the note sued on was tendered in evidence as secondary evidence under Code, 3767. There was a complete showing as to diligence. When a bond for title, counted on as a part of the abstract of title, was lost, and diligence shown, a copy was admissible.

Whether secondary evidence will be admitted is largely in the discretion of the court. Code, 3882; Jernigan v. Carter, 60 Ga. 131.

The assignment was before the grace on the note expired, and this, under our law, was before its maturity.

Dalton City Co. v. Haddock, 54 Ga. 584.

Even admitting that Haug was surety only, he is manifestly liable if the principal is liable.

Camp v. Simmons, 62 Ga. 73.

The note showing on its face that he is joint maker, he cannot set up, as against an innocent holder, that he is surety.

Ferst v. Larkin, 68 Ga. 293; Meador v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 56 Ga. 605; Yates v. Donaldson, 5 Md. 389, 61 Am. Dec. 283; Stubbs v. Goodall, 4 Ga. 106; McLaren v. Marine Bank, 52 Ga. 181; Code, 2151.

Lumpkin, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit was brought in the court below against Robert Whitfield and F. Haug upon a promissory note signed by them as joint makers. The court directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and Haug brings the case here for review. As his codefendant filed no defense

Headnotes by LUMPKIN, P. J.

NOTE.—For recovery on lost negotiable instrument, see also Butler v. Joyce (D. C.) 16 L. R. A. 205, and note; see also Kirkwood v. First Nat. Bank (Neb.) 24 L. R. A. 444.

40 L. R. A.

to the action, and is not a party to the present writ of error, we shall, for convenience, deal with the case as though the plaintiff in error was the only party defendant in the lower court.

1. Complaint is made that the court, over the defendant's objection, allowed the plaintiff "to establish a copy of the note sued, in lieu of the alleged lost original, by oral testimony, . . . said original note not being, or having ever been, an office paper, and the note so allowed to be established showing only one credit of $60, while the allegations in the declaration admitted and allowed four credits, amounting to $140." As to the first ground of objection urged, the law in this state is well settled. "A party is not obliged to establish a lost paper under the judiciary act, but may, by showing its loss or destruction, as in this case, give in secondary evidence of its contents, and, upon sufficient proof, recover on it as a lost or destroyed paper." Lindsay v. Kendrick, 30 Ga. 546, citing Ross v. Wright, 12 Ga. 509. "A lost note may be sued upon without taking steps to establish a copy; Code, § 3986 [Civ. Code, § 4750], being permissive or cumulative, not mandatory or exclusive. Wallace v. Tumin, 42 Ga. 462. The loss of the note while suit upon it was pending did not render the establishment of a copy indispensable in order for the suit to proceed." Jernigan v. Carter, 60 Ga. 133. "The genuineness of the original, and the correctness" of a copy thereof attached as an exhibit to the plaintiff's petition, "may be established by parol evidence." 60 Ga. 181. And "on proof of loss of the original agreement, and the correctness of a copy, the copy may go to the jury as evidence." Goodman v. Henderson, 58 Ga. 567. Nor is there any merit in the objection that the paper which the plaintiff was allowed to introduce in evidence, upon proof that it was a correct copy of the lost original, showed only one credit, whereas, "the allegations in the declaration admitted and allowed four credits." A plaintiff may very properly admit more payments than are actually entered upon the instrument on which he brings his action. This, apparently, is what was done in the present case; for, although the exhibit attached to the plaintiff's petition showed only one credit, it was nevertheless, according to the undisputed evidence, a true and correct copy of the lost original. This copy was simply used as evidence to show the basis of the plaintiff's cause of action, and the amount claimed and recovered was not that which on the face of the instrument purported to be due, but only that which was sued for.

2. As originally brought, this was a suit instituted by M. W. Hall, to whom the original note in question had been transferred by proper indorsement. He having died before the trial, the case was prosecuted by his administrator. It appears from the evidence that, prior to bringing his action, Hall had assigned this note to Mrs. Brake, as collateral security, the assignment being written on "a paper other than the note" itself; and that, subsequently, the note had been returned to him, he executing and delivering to Mrs. Brake a receipt in the following words: "Received of M. L. Brake note signed by F. Haug and Robert Whitfield, for collection, said note being transferred by myself to said M. L. Brake to secure my note given said Brake for $320, and due May 1st, 1892."

A motion was made in the court below to dismiss the plaintiff's action, on the ground "that the legal title to the alleged lost original note was in" Mrs. Brake "when said action was brought and filed;" and the overruling of this motion is here assigned as error. As a matter of course, if it be true that the legal title to the note was not in Hall at the time he instituted his action, this would constitute an insuperable obstacle to the prosecution of his suit, and the defendant's motion should have been sustained; for one who is a mere stranger to the legal title, albeit he may have possession of the instrument upon which suit is brought, cannot maintain an action thereon against the maker. Dalton City Co. v. Johnson, 57 Ga. 398. In the present case, however, it unequivocally appeared that the instrument sued on was expressly made payable "to order," and was regularly indorsed to Hall; so, he certainly cannot be regarded as a stranger to the note. On the contrary, so far as the instrument itself furnishes evidence as to its ownership, title thereto passed into Hall, and remained in him as the last indorsee, no indorsement by him to Mrs. Brake or to anyone else appearing either upon the back or upon the face of the note. It is claimed, nevertheless, that Mrs. Brake became the holder of the legal title by reason of the assignment to her above mentioned. Tested by the familiar and universally recognized rules of the law merchant, this contention is not well founded. The note being payable "to order," mere delivery of it to Mrs. Brake certainly would not pass the legal title. Nor would a mere assignment thereof, evidenced by another and entirely distinct instrument in writing, have that effect; for, "where a bill or note payable 'to order' is transferred without indorsement, the transferee does not acquire the legal, but only the equitable, title." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 741. Indorsement is the only method by which the legal title to such an instrument can be transferred. Id. § 664a. True, it may be transferred without indorsement; "but in such case the assignment is not in the usual course of business, in accordance with mercantile custom, only the equitable title passing to the assignee." Id. § 729. And, to the same effect, see 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 255, 257, citing numerous cases, both English and American: Norton, Bills & Notes, 94, 155. "The indorsement must be written on the instrument transferred,"—"must be somewhere on the instrument." See authorities last cited. Of course, if necessary or convenient, another slip of paper, "generally called the French name 'allonge,'" may be annexed to the instrument, on which subsequent indorsements may be written, which will have the same effect as if written upon the instrument itself, such paper being deemed a part thereof. Ibid.; Wood's Byles, Bills, 152. But a written transfer upon another and entirely distinct instrument is not permissible, and will not have the effect of passing the legal title to a note or bill expressly made payable "to order." French v. Turner, 15 Ind. 59; Doll v. Hollenbeck, 19 Neb. 689, 641. The fact that the maker expressly stipulates that he shall be called upon to pay none other than one to whom the instrument is transferred by regular indorsement should answer as furnishing a sufficient reason upon which this rule may rest. Norton, Bills & Notes, 156. Another and equally important reason may, however, be given. It is indispensably necessary, if such instruments are to fulfil the object for which they were designed, that they should carry with them the indicia by which their ownership is to be determined; otherwise, their value as a circulating medium would be largely curtailed, if not entirely destroyed. Adding an allonge when necessary or convenient is permissible only because furthering the object of their creation, viz., free and unrestrained negotiability. This is and can be the only exception to the rule that the indorsement to pass the legal title must be entered upon the instrument itself. If this rule were so relaxed as to admit of transfer evidenced by an independent slip of paper, unattached to and forming no part of the instrument, the sole purpose it was intended to subserve would be defeated; for it would necessarily lose one of the most essential characteristics of "negotiable" paper, in the ordinary and technical sense of that term, and would stand upon practically no better footing, as a circulating medium, than strictly "non-negotiable" choses in action.

We believe the rule which obtains in this state is strictly in accord with what is immediately above announced. The only embarrassment with which we have met in arriving at our conclusion in the present case is some of the reasoning employed by Mr. Justice Speer in delivering the opinion of this court in Adams v. Robinson, 69 Ga. 627. The facts of that case were, in brief, as follows: The instrument sued on was a draft, payable "to the order of B. H. Robinson," drawn upon D. C. Adams by F. E. Grist, agent, and duly accepted. This draft was, for value and before due, transferred to Jones & Singleterry, "by an assignment in writing in a separate paper," but was not indorsed to them. The suit proceeded in the name of Robinson for their use. The defendant sought to set up the defense that the draft was delivered to Robinson, through his agent, under an express agreement in writing that it was to be deemed void, and was to be returned, upon a certain contingency, which had subsequently happened. To this defense the plaintiff interposed the objection that the instrument was on its face negotiable, and had been regularly transferred to his uses, Jones & Singleterry, before maturity and for value, who took the paper without notice of the stipulation upon which the defendant relied as a defense. Dealing with the question thus presented, this court held (1) that the instrument was negotiable; (2) that "while the ordinary mode of transferring a negotiable instrument, payable to order, is for the payee to indorse it, an assignment thereof by the payee on a separate paper is good, and passes title to the assignee for value, before due, and without notice of any equities between the parties, free from them;" and (3) that "such assignees could sue on the paper in their own names, but, if they saw fit to sue in the name of the payee for their use, it did not render them subject to the equities between the payee and maker." In view of our conclusion, the reasons for which we shall presently state, that this decision is not unauthoritative upon our present question, we feel at liberty to comment upon it somewhat freely, and to point out wherein we think it cannot stand the test of close scrutiny.

In the first place, if the second proposition announced therein be sound, that which follows would seem to be a palpable non sequitur, in so far as it is susceptible of the construction being placed upon it (as we think was intended), that notwithstanding the legal title to the instrument was in the parties named as uses, and had passed completely out of the plaintiff, he could nevertheless maintain his action. It would, indeed, lead to a most remarkable state of affairs if one who had entirely parted with all interest, legal and equitable, in a chose in action were allowed to subsequently come into court, in the role of an intermeddler and volunteer, and maintain an action, in his own name and based upon his own right, for the use of the holder of the legal title. But we cannot assent to the soundness of the court's second proposition in the Robinson Case. The only authority relied upon in support of the holding that the assignment then under consideration passed the legal title was § 2244 of the Code of 1882 (§ 3077 of the new Civil Code), declaring that "all choses in action arising upon contract may be assigned so as to vest the title in the assignee, but he takes it, except negotiable securities, subject to the equities existing between the assignor and debtor at the time of the assignment, and until notice of the assignment is given to the person liable." The object and meaning of this section can readily and clearly be ascertained by applying the old and well-known rule of construction laid down in § 9 of the Political Code, viz.: "In all interpretations, the courts shall look diligently for the intention of the general assembly, keeping in view at all times the old law, the evil, and the remedy." What, then, was "the old law" when the section to be construed was, by legislative sanction and direction, incorporated into the first Code of this state? The answer is, that which we had borrowed from England, familiarly known as the "law merchant." Nothing is better settled than that, "under the common law, choses in action, except negotiable securities, could not be assigned so as to carry the legal title; and, in a court of law, any rights in them acquired by other persons than the owner could be enforced only in his name." Western Nat. Bank v. Mackerick Nat. Bank, 90 Ga. 342, 343. This was the evil to be corrected. As is clearly indicated by the language employed, the "remedy" adopted was to declare that an assignment of a chose in action should operate to "vest the title in the assignee," in order simply that he might accordingly have the right to sue in his own name, it being further distinctly provided that "he takes it, except negotiable securities, subject to the equities existing between the assignor and debtor," etc. Obviously, the only reason for mentioning "negotiable securities" at all was to negative any possible inference which might be drawn from the use of the general words "all choses in action arising upon contract," that the section was intended in any manner to affect the status of such securities. The correctness of this view is made apparent by what is said by the supreme court of Nebraska in Doll v. Hollenbeck, 19 Neb. 639, 641, when construing a similar section of the Code of that state. In summing up, Cobb, J., says: "The object of the enactment of the 29th and 30th sections of the Code was to do away with the necessity of uses and trusts, in the matter of bringing and prosecuting actions at law; and the object of the 31st section [providing that, 'in the case of an assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee shall be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense now allowed, but this section shall not apply to negotiable bonds, promissory notes, or bills of exchange, transferred in good faith and upon good consideration, before due'] was to prevent such change in the practice affecting injuriously the rights of defendants. But, as the rule which was thus being changed never had any applicability to negotiable paper, the latter clause of said section was added ex majori cautela, lest the language of the first clause might be construed to change the existing law applicable to such securities."

It is further to be observed that the section of our Code with which we are now dealing does not undertake to prescribe the manner in which choses in action "may be assigned so as to vest the title," its object, as has just been seen, being merely to declare generally, by way of correcting the evil in "the old law," that they could be legally so assigned. The term "assigned," in this connection, is used in the sense of "transferred." Indeed, in its ordinary acceptation, the word "assign" means "to transfer to another." It is the appropriate word for a transfer of personal property, and particularly for a transfer of rights in action. 1 Abbott, Law Dict. 95. In other words, this section leaves the method of transfer to be determined according to the law governing this matter theretofore existing. Section 3681 of the Civil Code (the provisions of which were incorporated into the first Code simultaneously with those of the section now under review, and are therefore to be read in pari materia with the latter section) distinctly provides that the manner of transferring the legal title to a negotiable instrument not payable to bearer is by indorsement. "As the derivation of the word would indicate, an indorsement is properly written upon the back of an instrument, and this is the ordinary mode in which an indorsement is made;" yet it is now well settled that it "may be made on the face of the instrument with the same effect as if made upon the back, if such is the intent of the indorser." The rule is imperative, however, that "the indorsement must be written on the instrument transferred." See 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 259. This was the law when the legislature, upon its adoption of the first Code, undertook to effect a change in the law regarding the assignability of non-negotiable choses in action, but to leave negotiable securities upon the same footing as that upon which they had always stood.

In order to bring about the desired change in "the old law," the general assembly might have provided in general terms that "the real party at interest" should have a right to maintain an action in his own name, regardless of the question whether the legal title was or was not in him. But this was not the "remedy" adopted. On the contrary, it was doubtless thought advisable not to disturb the time-honored rule that none save the holder of the legal title could prosecute his action; and, to that end, it was in effect provided that a regular assignment, in conformity to established custom, should operate to pass the legal title, and thus enable the assignee to maintain a suit in his own name. That this is true is evidenced by numerous decisions of this court giving effect to the legislative intent in adopting the section under discussion. Thus, in the recent case of Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Amos, 98 Ga. 534, which cites previous decisions made by this court, it was said: "If the assignment is not in writing, the assignee cannot bring an action thereon in his own name, but must necessarily use the name of the assignor, as suing for his use." To the same effect, see also Foster v. McGuire, 96 Ga. 447. This was the rule applied in Cochran v. Strong, 44 Ga. 636, wherein it was held that where a non-negotiable "instrument is assigned to A, who, in turn, assigns it to B, and, by some means it again comes into the hands of A, he cannot sue on it in his own name for use of last assignee." On the other hand, it is no defense to an action by the holder of the legal title that he has no pecuniary interest in the suit. Houser v. Houser, 43 Ga. 416; Greer v. Woolfolk, 60 Ga. 623. The question of title is to be determined "according to the words of the instrument or some indorsement or assignment thereof," and a mere "stranger to a contract which is not payable to bearer, and not indorsed or assigned, . . . [cannot] enforce it in his own name by reason of mere possession of the writing." Dallan City Co. v. Johnson, 57 Ga. 398. "Where a note, draft, or check is made payable to order, the indorsement of the payee is necessary to transfer the legal title to another." Farris v. Wells, 68 Ga. 604. There the plaintiff brought suit upon two bank checks, drawn by the defendant on a named bank, "payable to his own order, but not indorsed." The case was dismissed on demurrer in the court below, and, in affirming the judgment, this court said: "We know of no exception to the rule that where an instrument is made payable to order the indorsement of the payee is necessary to transfer the legal title to another."

All of the cases last above cited were decided prior to that of Adams v. Robinson; and as the decision in the latter case would seem to be in the very teeth of the law as previously announced, if any regard is to be paid to the principle upon which all of these former cases rest, there is, at least, strong reason for doubting whether Adams v. Robinson is to be considered authoritative. Certainly, the doctrine it lays down has not been followed, so far, at least, as it disregards the rule of law that none other than the holder of the legal title can bring his action. Thus, in Benson v. Abbott, 95 Ga. 69, it was held that where a promissory note, payable to order, was transferred by delivery to another, "but, by mistake or inadvertence, the note was not indorsed or otherwise transferred in writing," the transferee took only an equitable title; and suit could be brought only in the name of the payee, in his right, and subject to all defenses which could be urged against him by the maker. In National Bank v. Leonard, 91 Ga. 805, it appeared that, "at the time a promissory note was indorsed in blank, another between the same parties was folded in it," and both delivered to the bank, which, upon nonpayment of the notes, brought suit thereon in its own name. It was accordingly held that the indorsement written upon the note first above mentioned "did not operate as an indorsement or to more than an equitable assignment of the" other note, "although such may have been the intention of the parties," and that, consequently, the bank "could not maintain a suit upon the latter in . . . [its] own name without equitable pleadings setting up the requisite facts."

As the law, in positive and unequivocal terms, declares indorsement to be the method by which a transfer of the legal title to a promissory note payable "to order" shall be evidenced, it would seem that nothing short of strict compliance with this plain mandate can operate to effect such a result. Were really sought to be transferred by a mere scratch of the pen, or in any less formal manner than the law prescribes, it would not for a moment be doubted that the legal title could not be deemed to have passed, no matter what may have been the intention of the parties; the test being, not what the parties intended to do, but whether they have complied with the requirements of the law. Is there any good reason for assuming that, although the law is imperative in regard to the mode of transferring title to real property, it does not mean what it says when it in no less positive and unequivocal terms declares what shall be the manner in which the legal title to a particular kind of personal property may be transferred? Although the reasoning employed in Adams v. Robinson seems anything but satisfactory, and conflicts with the views herein expressed, the decision in that case may, nevertheless, stand with what is now decided. It is not authority for the proposition that a regular indorsee of a negotiable promissory note payable to order, who is apparently the holder of the legal title, cannot recover in a suit thereon if it appears in evidence at the trial that he had, prior to bringing his action, made a written assignment of the note to another, evidenced by an independent slip of paper. On the contrary, although it was held that Robinson, the plaintiff in that case, was not the holder of the legal title when suit was brought, this court, nevertheless sustained a recovery in his favor. Indeed, we might in the present case waive the question whether or not title passed out of Hall and into Mrs. Brake by reason of his written assignment to her, and, conceding that it did, cite the case of Adams v. Robinson as a precedent for holding that, notwithstanding this fact, Hall was entitled to institute and maintain his action. It is to be observed that the defendant in this case, while contending that the legal title was in Mrs. Brake, and not in Hall, did not undertake to urge, or even suggest, any defense against the former. This being so, and Hall, according to the terms of the instrument and the formal entries thereon, being the ostensible holder, his title to the note could not be inquired into. Civ. Code, § 8698; Atkins v. Cobb, 56 Ga. 88; Greer v. Woolfolk, 60 Ga. 623; Davis v. Baker, 71 Ga. 33, 34. This rule evidently proceeds upon the theory that the instrument itself is to be looked to in determining the question of ownership; that the maker will be fully protected in treating the holder and ostensible owner as the party to whom payment is due (if at all), and therefore is not concerned with the question as to who may be equitably entitled to the proceeds, as between such holder and third persons, unless some defense be shown which would be good as against the real party at interest.

8. It appears that this note was transferred to Hall after the day therein appointed for payment, but on the second of the three days of grace allowed by law on such instruments, it being one payable at bank. The question therefore arises whether he is to be regarded as having taken the note before maturity. Mr. Parsons says in his work on Notes & Bills (vol. 1, p. 416): "A note may be negotiated on the second day of grace, and the holder will then be protected; but if negotiated on the third, there is a conflict of authority on the question whether the note is dishonored." He adds that he considers the correct rule to be that a note is negotiable even on the last day of grace; and such is the view entertained by Mr. Daniel, also. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 787a. See further, 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1037. This rule obtains in New York, Illinois, New Hampshire, Maine, and Iowa. See Continental Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 87 N. Y. 8; Walter v. Kirk, 14 Ill. 55; Crosby v. Grant, 36 N. H. 273; Farrell v. Lovett, 68 Me. 330, 28 Am. Rep. 59; Bosch v. Kassing, 64 Iowa, 312. A contrary rule is of force in Massachusetts. Pine v. Smith, 11 Gray, 38. That case does not, however, go further than to rule that a transfer on the last day of grace is not to be considered as before maturity, it being conceded that a transfer on the first or second day of grace would clearly be before dishonor. In Fox v. Kansas City Bank, 30 Kan. 441, it was held that a negotiable bill or note indorsed and transferred on the first day of grace was negotiated before maturity. And see Savings Bank v. Bates, 8 Conn. 505, in which it appeared that the transfer was made on the second day of grace. In the latter case, Bissell, J., said (p. 511), in delivering the opinion of the court: "It is too well settled to admit of dispute, that in regard to negotiable notes, the days of grace make a part of the original contract. Such a note, payable by the terms of it in sixty days, is in law a note payable in sixty-three days. Before the expiration of that time, no demand of payment can be made; and, if negotiated on the sixty-first or sixty-second day, it is not negotiated overdue." Thus, it will be seen that, while there is not unanimity of opinion upon the question whether or not a bill or note on which grace is allowable negotiated on the last day of grace is taken subject to existing equities, etc., the entire current of authority is to the effect that the time for payment expressed on the face of such an instrument is not to be regarded as fixing the day upon which the same will become due, but that days of grace are to be computed in determining the date of its maturity. Were this otherwise, however, we think our statute on the subject (Acts 1875, p. 92) would be conclusive, and should control our decision; for it was therein provided that "the last day of grace shall be deemed the date of maturity of any bill of exchange, check, or promissory note entitled to the three days known as 'days of grace,' for all the purposes of this act." Civil Code, § 8679. Accordingly we hold that one to whom a negotiable promissory note is transferred on the second day of grace takes the same before maturity, and therefore he will be presumed to have been a bona fide purchaser for value. Whether the same would be true as regards a transfer made on the last day of grace, we are not now called upon to decide.

4. Although, apparently, a joint principal, the defendant Haug filed a plea in which he set up the defense that his true relation to the note was that of a surety only, and that he had been discharged from all liability thereon by reason of the fact that his principal had, prior to its transfer to Hall, and with full notice to the latter of all the facts, paid off the note in full. In support of this defense, sufficient evidence was introduced at the trial to establish the following facts: Haug really signed the note as surety, and merely for the accommodation of his principal, Whitfield, receiving none of the money, and deriving no benefit therefrom. On January 21, the second day of grace, Whitfield went to the Milledgeville Banking Company, the payee, named in the note, paid it in full, and had it indorsed by the bank to his firm, Whitfield & Allen. Subsequently, on the same day, the note was indorsed and transferred by Whitfield & Allen to M. W. Hall, or order. This was all done without the knowledge or consent of Haug. No proof whatever was offered as to the circumstances connected with the transfer of the note to Hall, nor was there any evidence showing that he had any knowledge or even an intimation that the note had been paid, or had any reason to suspect that Whitfield & Allen were not at liberty to negotiate it. Plainly, then, the defense set up by Haug was not made out; for in the absence of proof showing that Hall had notice of the defendant's true relation to the paper, and of the fact that, notwithstanding it had been paid off in full, it had, without his consent or authority, again been put into circulation, his plea could avail him nothing. Although Whitfield & Allen may not have occupied the position of a bona fide holder for value, yet, if Hall purchased the note from them in perfect good faith, he would be fully protected against the defense interposed by Haug. It cannot be questioned that "one may be a bona fide holder, despite bad faith on the part of his indorser." 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. 390." Nor would the mere fact that Whitfield was a member of the firm having possession of the paper be notice to Hall that it had been paid. Indeed, it has been held that, even though the maker himself may be in possession of a note before it has fallen due, this fact will not charge a purchaser with notice that it has been paid off and discharged. Mishler v. Reed, 76 Pa. 76. And in that case, although it appeared that the note had been discounted at the instance of the maker himself, and its proceeds placed to his credit, the plaintiffs were allowed to recover in a suit against one signing as indorser, notwithstanding the latter's agreement with the maker was that the proceeds should be placed in bank to the credit of himself as indorser. As a general rule, "payment before maturity is at the risk of the party making it, and constitutes no defense against a subsequent bona fide holder for value before maturity." 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1470. "Payment can only be made before maturity by consent of both debtor and creditor. And it can only be made with perfect safety at or after the maturity of the instrument, unless the payor receives it in his hands and cancels it; for a payment before maturity is not in the usual course of business; and should the bill or note afterwards, and before maturity, reach the hands of a bona fide holder for value, without notice, such holder could enforce a second payment." 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1283. And, to the same effect, see Paris v. Moe, 60 Ga. 90. Thus, it will be seen how strictly are the rights of a bona fide purchaser guarded; and rightly so, for otherwise commercial paper could not possibly serve the great beneficial purpose for which it is intended.

If, as we are bound to assume from the record before us, Hall purchased in entire good faith, Haug would have no right—legal, equitable, or moral—to claim that he was discharged from liability simply because his principal, before maturity, got possession of the note by paying the original payee, and without express authority from Haug and without his knowledge, again put the paper in circulation. Haug, in the first instance, allowed this paper, a negotiable promissory note, to be floated into the channels of trade, representing to the world that he was a joint principal with Whitfield, bound to make payment at maturity, without reference to how many times, or through whom, the note might in the meantime be negotiated. Therefore, as against an innocent holder of the paper, he should not be permitted to urge his secret relation thereto, and set up a defense which he could not assert in the capacity in which he executed the payer, and in which he held himself out as being bound.

5. Under the facts disclosed by the evidence, a finding for the plaintiff was inevitable. Accordingly, it was proper to direct a verdict in his favor.

Judgment affirmed.

AMERICAN TRUST & BANKING COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

R. W. BOONE, Admr., etc., of B. F. Cooper, Deceased, et al.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. As a general rule, a bank may assume that a trustee will apply money deposited by him to its proper purposes under the trust, and is not accountable for any misappropriation of trust funds in which it does not participate; but a bank cannot, without incurring liability to the true owner, knowingly appropriate to the satisfaction of a debt due to it by another trust funds deposited with it by him after the creation of such debt.
2. Where, in this manner, a bank improperly appropriates a portion of a fund to its own use, it is liable for interest thereon from the time of demand by the true owner and its refusal to pay, and is also liable for interest computed from the same time upon a balance of the identical fund not so appropriated, but payment of which was then demanded and refused.
3. A bank in this state will not be protected in paying a check of a person who had been lawfully adjudged to be insane, and who was in fact insane when the check was drawn. This is true though the fact of insanity was unknown to the bank at the time of payment, and though the adjudication of insanity was made in another state.
4. The grounds of the motion for a new trial based on alleged error in admitting evidence did not disclose what, if any, objections to the same, were made at the trial. There was no error in the charges complained of. The charge as a whole fairly submitted to the jury the issues involved. The evidence warranted the verdict, and there was no error in denying a new trial.

(August 7, 1897.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to reach funds which plaintiff's intestate had deposited with the defendant bank. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ellis & Gray, for plaintiffs in error:

An administrator is a public officer created by law, required to give bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, and charged with the sole responsibility of administering his estate in a proper and lawful manner.

Code, § 2505.

Nobody has the right to question his acts, or his manner of conducting business, unless there is a manifest misappropriation of the assets. The law imposes upon him the duty of making periodical reports of his actings and doings, and so long as he is prudently and honestly

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to the validity of a deed made by an insane person, see Riley v. Carter (Md.) 19 L. R. A. 489, and note.

As to the civil liability of an insane person for torts or negligence, see Williams v. Hays (N. Y.) 26 L. R. A. 153, and note.

As to contracts of insane persons generally, 40 L. R. A.

managing the estate not even the beneficiaries under his trust can call his methods in question.

Carter v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 71 Me. 448, 36 Am. Rep. 338; 1 Wms. Exrs. 6th ed. p. 709; 2 Wms. Exrs. p. 998; 1 Perry, Tr. § 225.

Third parties dealing with him are entitled to the benefit of the presumption that his acts are proper unless a corrupt motive is manifested.

Wood's Appeal, 92 Pa. 379, 37 Am. Rep. 696; Munnerlyn v. Augusta, 88 Ga. 336.

The bank had the right to deal with him as with any other individual, presuming that in his capacity as administrator his duty would be performed.

Carter v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 71 Me. 448, 36 Am. Rep. 342; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. 150, 11 Am. Dec. 441; Wood's Appeal, 92 Pa. 379, 37 Am. Rep. 694.

If the check was payable to Cooper as administrator, a proper indorsement by him as administrator was all the bank could require; and if, under his direction, the deposit was made to his individual credit, it was exactly the same as if he had drawn the actual currency and afterwards deposited this to his individual credit.

Gate City Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401; Benton v. German-American Nat. Bank, 122 Mo. 332; 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 457.

The administrator clearly had the right to sell the exchange, the bank had the right to buy, and the sale and purchase of the paper carried no notice of misappropriation or intended misappropriation.

Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333, 94 Ga. 356; City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283; Gate City Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. National Bank of Commerce, 126 Mo. 82, 27 L. R. A. 401; Kaiser v. United States Nat. Bank, 99 Ga. 258.

Keeping a deposit of trust funds by the trustee, in bank to his individual credit, is not a conversion. There must be a misappropriation of such funds, and a failure to account for them.

Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333.

If the money was properly deposited, and the bank had no notice that the administrator was misapplying the funds, or intended to misapply them, then, as to such funds, the only relation that existed between the bank and Cooper was that of debtor and creditor.

Williams v. Williams, 55 Wis. 300, 42 Am. Rep. 708; Etna Nat. Bank v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 82, 7 Am. Rep. 314; Case v. Henderson, 23 La. Ann. 49, 8 Am. Rep. 500; Carr v. National Security Bank, 107 Mass. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 6.

If Cooper, by depositing the money of his trust estate to his individual credit, became a there are a few cases in a note to Howard v. Howard (Ky.) 1 L. R. A. 610; and see also Atwell v. Jenkins (Mass.) 28 L. R. A. 604.

As to renewal of obligations by incompetent persons, see Memphis Nat. Bank v. Neely (Tenn.) 84 L. R. A. 274, and note.

creditor only of the bank, and the bank by receiving such deposit in ignorance of any misapplication or intention to misappropriate the same, only became his debtor, then such funds were entirely subject to Cooper's check, and likewise subject to all other rights which the creditor would have against the bank, such as refusal to pay checks, etc., and also subject to all other rights which the debtor bank would have against its creditor, such as charging up indebtedness, etc.

Mount Sterling Nat. Bank v. Greene, 99 Ky. 262, 32 L. R. A. 568; Bank of Marysville v. Windisch-Muhlhauser Brewing Co. 50 Ohio St. 151; Re Franklin Bank, 1 Paige, 249, 19 Am. Dec. 413, and note; Grissom v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 87 Tenn. 350, 3 L. R. A. 273, 10 Am. St. Rep. 669, and note.

If funds so deposited were subject to Cooper's check, they were likewise subject to anything else equivalent to a check, and to the rights of the banker as to obligations due the bank.

Marsh v. Oneida Central Bank, 84 Barb. 298; Ketchum v. Stevens, 6 Duer, 463.

A promissory note payable at bank is equivalent to a check or draft of the maker upon any funds standing to his credit in the bank.

3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1441; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 326 (a), note 3, p. 302; 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 557; Bolles, Banks, § 453; Manderille v. Union Bank, 9 Cranch, 9, 3 L. ed. 639; Griffin v. Rice, 1 Hilt. 184.

The bank is bound to apply all available means to the payment of a note which by its terms is payable in bank.

Georgia Seed Co. v. Talmadge, 96 Ga. 254; German Nat. Bank v. Foreman, 188 Pa. 474; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Henninger, 105 Pa. 496; Bedford Bank v. Acoam, 125 Ind. 584, 9 L. R. A. 560.

Where a note is by its terms made payable at a bank, upon which there is an indorser, and at the time of maturity there are sufficient funds to the credit of the maker to meet such note, and such funds have not been otherwise appropriated by the maker, the bank is bound to pay such note by charging the same up against such deposit, and its failure to do so operates as a release of the indorser.

First Nat. Bank v. Peltz, 176 Pa. 513, 36 L. R. A. 832; German Nat. Bank v. Foreman, 188 Pa. 474; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Henninger, 105 Pa. 496; Bedford Bank v. Acoam, 125 Ind. 584, 9 L. R. A. 560; Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Seitz Bros. 150 Pa. 632.

It is immaterial that the notes were for pre-existing debts. Taking funds in payment of such debts is taking for value.

Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. v. National Bank of the Republic, 102 U. S. 14, 26 L. ed. 61; Atlantic Cotton Mills v. Indian Orchard Mills, 147 Mass. 268-273; Kaiser v. United States Sav. Bank, 99 Ga. 258; Colebrooke, Collateral Securities, § 18; 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 600; Gibson v. Conner, 3 Ga. 47.

The presumption is that every person who is capable of carrying on a business is sane, and third parties have the right to act upon this presumption, unless there is some notice of some insanity.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 155, and note 1, p. 159, and note 1; Carter v. State, 12 Tex. 40 L. R. A.

500, 62 Am. Dec. 539; Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 304, 83 Am. Dec. 514.

Even an insane person may pay his debts, and where there was no fraud exercised, and the check was given for a legitimate purpose, such a check would be valid.

Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407, 21 Am. Rep. 24; Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa, 383, 92 Am. Dec. 428; Young v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 183, 97 Am. Dec. 592.

If the bank had no knowledge of Cooper's insanity, it was bound to pay his checks.

Rusk v. Fenton, 14 Bush, 490, 29 Am. Rep. 413; Wallace v. Jones, 93 Ga. 420.

Messrs. Clay & Blair, Arnold & Arnold, W. R. Power, and King & Anderson for defendant in error.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Boone, as administrator of B. F. Cooper, brought suit against the American Trust & Banking Company. The case made by the evidence was as follows: B. F. Cooper died on November 2, 1893, and J. H. Cooper, a resident of Atlanta, Georgia, was appointed administrator of his estate by the county court of Orange county, Florida. Among the assets of the estate was a policy of life insurance for the sum of $5,000. A check for this amount, payable to J. H. Cooper, as administrator of B. F. Cooper, was received by such administrator on December 21, 1893. It was indorsed by him as administrator, and deposited to his individual credit in the defendant bank. He stated to the bank's officer that he was the sole heir of the estate. Having been in business, and having an account with the bank, he had become indebted to it in the sum of $1,910.74, evidenced by promissory notes. The bank, claiming to act under instructions from him, charged against his account the amount of the notes. After the payment of sundry checks drawn by him, there remained to his credit the sum of $1,810.53. About December 26, 1893, he became insane; and on the 30th day of December, 1893, he was adjudged a lunatic by the circuit court of Orange county, Florida. The fact that he was insane, and had been so adjudged, was unknown to the bank when it paid checks drawn subsequent to the judgment. He died shortly afterwards. The plaintiff was appointed administrator de bonis non of B. F. Cooper on April 19, 1894. B. F. Cooper left a number of heirs, and no settlement of the estate was ever made by J. H. Cooper, as administrator. The plaintiff contended that the bank received the check of $5,000 knowing that it was an asset of the estate of B. F. Cooper, and that the crediting of the amount to the individual account of J. H. Cooper was such a misappropriation of the fund as to render it liable to the legal representatives of B. F. Cooper. The bank denied any notice or knowledge that J. H. Cooper contemplated misappropriating the money, or that the money did not in fact belong to him, and claimed to have received the deposit in the regular course of business, and to have paid upon his checks all of the sum so deposited, except $1,810.53, which amount it has always been ready and willing to pay to the person entitled thereto. It further claimed that the deposit being general, without agreement to pay interest, it was not liable to pay interest thereon. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $3,860.27, principal, besides interest. This amount was made up of the following items: Balance admitted, as standing to the credit of the estate, $1,810.53; amount of notes due the bank, charged to the account of J. H. Cooper, $1,910.74; check paid on January 2, 1894, drawn by J. H. Cooper after he had been adjudged insane by the courts of Florida, $139. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which the court overruled, and it excepted.

1. Every person is presumed to have the intention of discharging whatever duty the law may cast upon him. It is therefore presumed that a trustee will faithfully administer the trust, and will not misappropriate the funds of the estate which are committed to his care. When a trustee deposits money in a bank, the bank has a right to assume that the money so deposited will be applied by the trustee to the proper purposes under the trust; and, acting under this assumption, it may lawfully pay the checks drawn by the person depositing the money, whether signed in his representative capacity or not. But while this is true, if it actively aids the trustee in misappropriating the fund, and especially if it participates in the misappropriation, and receives the fruits of such misappropriation by obtaining payment of a debt due it by the trustee in his individual capacity, the bank would be liable to the true owners of the fund for the amount thus wrongfully appropriated by it to its own uses. Munnerlyn v. Augusta Sav. Bank, 88 Ga. 333; Morse, Banks & Banking, 3d ed. § 317. Where a debt thus paid was created before the trust funds were deposited, and the fact that such funds were impressed with the trust was known to the bank by entries upon the check which was delivered to it, the fact that the depositor made statements to the bank that he was the real owner of the fund, and the bank acted upon such statements, would not relieve the bank from its liability to the true owner of the fund when it appeared that such statements were not true.

2. Where it appeared in such a case that a demand was made upon the bank by the true owner for the amount which had been misappropriated, as well as for the amount which was admitted to be due, and the bank refused payment under such demand, it became liable for interest upon the whole amount from the date of such refusal.

3. On January 2, 1894, when the bank paid the check for $139 drawn by J. H. Cooper, he had been adjudged to be insane by a court in Florida having jurisdiction of such matters, and there was also other evidence that he was at that time, and subsequent thereto, in fact insane. This being true, was the bank, which had no notice of the fact of insanity, or that J. H. Cooper, by a judgment of a court, had been adjudged to be insane, protected on account of such ignorance in the payment of the check? The law of this state upon such question is to be found embraced in § 3652 of the Civil Code. It is there provided that an insane person cannot contract prior to commission sued out and guardianship appointed; that a lunatic may contract during lucid intervals; after guardianship, he cannot. By the terms of this section it is declared that an insane person, using this expression in the sense of a person non compos mentis, whether idiot, lunatic, or imbecile, has no power to enter into a contract after such insanity takes place. While there is a conflict in the authorities as to the effect to be given to a contract made by insane persons, "it may now be regarded as a general rule of universal law, that the contracts of a lunatic, idiot, or other person non compos mentis, from age or other infirmity, are utterly void." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. § 209; Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 Mich. 192; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. ed. 73; Seaver v. Phelps, 11 Pick. 304, 22 Am. Dec. 372; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Ames, 27 Fed. Rep. 727. Judge Story, in his treatise on Bills of Exchange, discussing the question of the disability of insane persons to bind themselves as drawers, indorsers, or acceptors of such papers, says: "This disability flows from the most obvious principles of natural justice. Every contract presupposes, that it is founded in the free and voluntary consent of each of the parties, upon a valuable consideration, and after a deliberate knowledge of its character and obligation. Neither of these predicaments can properly belong to a lunatic, an idiot, or other person, non compos mentis, from age, or imbecility, or personal infirmity. Hence, it is a rule, not merely of municipal law, but of universal law, that the contracts of all such persons are utterly void. The Roman law, in expressive terms, adopted this doctrine: Furiosus nullum negotium gerere potest, quia non intelligit, quod agit." Story, Bills of Exchange, § 106.

The authorities above cited establish the doctrine that a contract by an insane person, whether executory or executed, is utterly void; and this, too, when there has been no judicial determination of the fact of insanity except in the trial of the issue where the question is raised to defeat the contract which is sought to be enforced or set aside. Where there has been a judicial determination of the fact of insanity by a court having jurisdiction to inquire into and determine the mental condition of the individual concerned, it would seem that this would be simply evidence admissible for the purpose of proving the fact of insanity, and evidence of a high character, but only cumulative of other competent evidence on the subject. That an adjudication by a court having jurisdiction to determine the question is prima facie evidence everywhere of the fact of insanity is well established by authority. 2 Black. Judgm. § 803; Buswell, Insanity, §§ 197-199; Woerner, American Law of Guardianship, § 128. Under the law of this state above quoted, after the fact of insanity has been established by a court of competent jurisdiction in this state, and the affairs of such person vested in a guardian, the power of such person to contract is entirely gone, and such contracts are absolutely void. This part of the section is consonant with the adjudications on the same subject in other states. In the case of Pearl v. M'Donnell, 3 J. J. Marsh. 659, 20 Am. Dec. 199, it was held that, after office found, the contracts of idiots or lunatics were void. Judge Buckner quotes in his opinion to sustain this decision the following extract from Bacon's Abridgment: "Yet it seems that even at law, the contracts of idiots and lunatics, after office found, and the party legally committed, are void, and it must be at the peril of him, who deals with such a one." 3 Bacon, Abr. 539. The same principle is recognized in the case of Wait v. Maxwell, 5 Pick. 217, 16 Am. Dec. 391. It is true that, in the cases cited, the adjudication of lunacy was had in the same jurisdiction in which it was pleaded; but this would not alter the application of the doctrine so far as the adjudication of lunacy is to be used as evidence of the fact. While it may be that, in the jurisdiction in which the person is declared to be insane, the judgment would be conclusive, still the judgment on this subject lawfully rendered in any other jurisdiction would be at least prima facie evidence of the fact of lunacy; and, in any case where it is shown either by a judgment of a court or other competent evidence that the person making the contract was at the time of its execution non compos mentis, such contract is void. And "the mere circumstance that, for the time being, he so deputed himself as to conceal his lunacy or imbecility, cannot alter his right to be protected against his own misfortune. And, though honest persons may be ignorant of his condition, that is their misfortune, and they should not be allowed to throw it upon one already helpless." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 210. "The right of avoiding a contract exists, notwithstanding the person with whom the insane man contracted was not apprised of and had no reason to suspect the existence of such insanity, and did not overreach him by any fraud or deception." Hovey v. Hobson, 53 Me. 451, 453, 89 Am. Dec. 705.

There being evidence that at the time the check in question was drawn by Cooper, and at the time it was paid by the bank, Cooper had not only been adjudged insane by a court in another state, but was in fact insane, shown by other evidence than the judgment, the check was absolutely void, and the bank paid it at its peril, and must bear the loss. The judgment of the court in Florida adjudicating the question of J. H. Cooper's insanity, if not absolutely binding and conclusive upon the question of his mental condition, on account of his not having been domiciled in the state of Florida at the time the court passed upon the question, would still be admissible in evidence, and would be prima facie proof of the fact that the judgment sets up. Cooper, though a citizen of Georgia, having submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the courts in Florida by accepting an appointment as administrator of B. F. Cooper's estate, gave to the courts of that state the right to inquire into his mental condition in order to determine whether he was still able to discharge the duties he had assumed under the Florida law; and, having jurisdiction for this purpose, the judgment of the courts of that state would be prima facie evidence in the courts of this state.

4. The record discloses no error which would require the granting of a new trial, and the motion was properly overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

40 L. R. A.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Sherman COVENIA

(.....Ga.....)

1. Although the declaration stated facts showing the tortious killing of the plaintiff's child by the defendant, and alleged that the child "was a boy well formed, precocious, and of strong and robust physical powers for a child of his age; that he was physically sound in every respect, and was capable of rendering, and did render, to the plaintiff valuable services, by going upon errands to neighbors residing near to plaintiff's residence, picking up and bringing in coal and chips to make and keep burning fires in the house, bringing the broom and other articles used in house cleaning to his mother, picking up and carrying out of the house trash and litter which tended to render untidy in appearance plaintiff's home, watching and amusing plaintiff's younger child while his wife was engaged in cooking and attending to her household duties; and that these services were worth to the plaintiff the sum of $2 per month,"—no cause of action entitling the plaintiff to recover for the child's services was set forth, it being also alleged in the declaration that the child was only one year, eight months, and ten days old. The allegations of the declaration should be construed all together, and the courts will take judicial cognizance of the fact that an infant of this age is incapable of rendering valuable services.

2. In such a case the father of the child killed is entitled to recover the expenses necessarily and reasonably incurred in the burial of the child, including compensation for the loss of such time on the father's part as was needed for this purpose.

(Atkinson, J., dissents.)

(December 17, 1896.)

ERROR to the City Court of Brunswick to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful killing of plaintiff's minor child. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Goodyear & Kay, for plaintiff in error:

An action is not maintainable where the child injured was of such tender years as to be then unable to render any services capable of being estimated as a monied value.

6 Bacon, Abr. ed. 1856, p. 551; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 773; Hall v. Hollander, 7 Dowl. & R. 133; Nederlandsch-Amerikaansche Stoomvaart Maatschappij v. Hollander, 20 U. S. App. 225, 59 Fed. Rep. 419, 8 C. C. A. 169; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 39 Ark. 491.

The English rule is of force in Georgia by the adoption of the common law, and because of no statutory change.

Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349; Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503; Ellison v. Georgia R. Co. 87 Ga. 710.

One of the facts pleaded was that the

*Headnotes by SIMMONS, Ch. J.

NOTE.—For a large collection of authorities as to judicial notice, see note to Olive v. State (Ala.) 4 L. R. A. 33.

Covenia child was twenty months and ten days old, and this allegation, judged by human experience, shows that it was a physical impossibility for a child at that age to render any services capable of a moneted value.

The court should take judicial knowledge of the absurdity of a twenty-months-old child being capable of performing services for the loss of which a recovery could be had.

Western & A. R. Co. v. Young, 81 Ga. 416.

No recovery for any expense can be had.

See Nederlandsch-Amerikaansche Stoomvaart Maatschappij v. Hollander, 20 U. S. App. 225, 59 Fed. Rep. 417, 8 C. C. A. 169; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 259; Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. (Mass.) 48 Am. Dec. note commencing p. 619; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 227, 228.

Messrs. Symmes & Bennet and Johnson & Krauss, for defendant in error:

The allegations of expenses of the funeral would, in any event, sustain the court's ruling.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 366, 74 Am. Dec. 260; Cary v. Berkshire R. Co. (Mass.) 48 Am. Dec. 623, notes; Field, Damages, p. 507.

We know of no law that authorizes this court to judicially determine that a child of any given age, and especially of an age at which it would be ordinarily capable of locomotion, and under the allegation was capable of such locomotion, and capable of ordinary conception and understanding, would be incapable of rendering services of any value whatever under any circumstances, to its parents, in spite of the admission of truth that must be conceded in considering the demurrer. Code, § 2960; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Rylee, 87 Ga. 491, 13 L. R. A. 634; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Golden, 93 Ga. 510; Savannah, P. & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ga. 743; Sugarman v. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. 94 Ga. 604.

In an action for causing the death of a child about three years old, proof of special pecuniary damages is not necessary to maintain the action, etc.

Ihl v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Bliss v. South Hadley, 145 Mass. 91; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 258, p. 405; Nederlandsch-Amerikaansche Stoomvaart Maatschappij v. Hollander, 20 U. S. App. 225, 59 Fed. Rep. 417, 8 C. C. A. 169.

The services of the child, no more than those of the wife, are to be estimated by the merely physical and gross standard.

Cooley, Torts, 228, note; Hartfield v. Roper 21 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 274; Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. (Mass.) 48 Am. Dec. 622, 623, notes.

Simmons, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, it is well settled in this state that the gist of an action by a parent to recover damages for the death or injury of a minor child is the loss of services. Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349; Allen v. Atlanta Street R. Co. 54 Ga. 503. The loss of service being the cause of action, it follows that when the infant is incapable of rendering service at the time of its death or injury the parent cannot recover. This principle was recognized by the counsel of the 40 L. R. A.

plaintiff in the court below, for he alleged in the declaration that the child was capable of rendering service, and also specified what acts of service it did render, and the value thereof per month; but in the same declaration it was alleged that the child was but one year, eight months, and ten days of age. One of the grounds of the demurrer was that the plaintiff shows by his allegations in his petition that the child "was of such tender years as to be unable to have any earning capacity, and hence the defendant could not be held liable in damages for the killing of said child, even if negligently done." The question is, therefore, squarely made whether the court, on demurrer, can take judicial cognizance of the fact that a child of this tender age is incapable of rendering such service as would authorize the parent to recover, or whether, in such a case, the court is bound to submit the matter to the jury. In the case of Minnesota v. Barber, 186 U. S. 321, 34 L. ed. 457, Mr. Justice Harlan said: "If a fact alleged to exist, and upon which the rights of parties depend, is within common experience and knowledge, it is one of which the courts will take judicial notice." In Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 560, Mr. Justice Field said: "We cannot shut our eyes to matters of public notoriety and general cognizance. When we take our seats on the bench, we are not struck with blindness, and forbidden to know as judges what we see as men." In the case of King v. Gallun, 109 U. S. 99, 27 L. ed. 870, it was held that "the court will take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge, and of things in common use." "Courts will take judicial notice of facts generally known as of uniform occurrence, or the invariable action of natural laws." 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 196. The fact that a child of less than two years of age cannot perform any services of value to its parent is a matter of common knowledge to all men. It is as well known to the judge as it is to the jury. It being so known to the judge, why should he not act upon it, when he is called upon to do so by proper pleading? Why is he less qualified than the jury to declare a well-known fact? Why should he submit such a question to a jury, when, if they found contrary to this well-known fact, he would be compelled to set aside their verdict? Why should he go through the farce of a trial, at the expense of the country in time and money, in order to have a jury decide a fact which is already well known to everyone? There is no necessity for a jury trial when there is no issue of fact. In our opinion, there can be no issue of fact as to the ability of a child two years old to perform valuable services. Even if the parent should testify that a child of that age could render services of the value of $2 per month, it would be so inconsistent with every person's knowledge of the incapacity of children of that age to render service that such testimony would be unworthy of credit. In the case of Hall v. Hollander, 4 Barn. & C. 660, Bayley, J., in discussing an injury to a child two and a half years old, said: "It is manifest that the child was incapable of performing any service." All courts of any respectability, so far as I know, decide as a matter of law that children of tender years cannot be guilty of contributory negligence. Upon what reason are these decisions made? Upon what theory do the courts hold this as a matter of law? The answer is apparent. Because reason, experience, and common sense teach that a child of that age has not the sense or the capacity to contribute to any injury to itself. It cannot at that age be guilty of any negligence. If the courts can decide this as a matter of law, why can they not decide also, as matter of law, that such a child has no earning capacity? We see no reason why it cannot be done.

But it is contended by the demurrer in the court below that it was admitted that the child was capable of rendering service, and that therefore the court was right in overruling the demurrer. The declaration enumerated certain services of the child, which is alleged were worth $2 per month. In passing upon a demurrer to a declaration, the court considers all the allegations therein. The demurrer admits all the facts well pleaded. If all the facts, taken together, show that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, the court should sustain the demurrer, although some of the facts alleged would show the measure and amount of the damages. If the major premise in the declaration shows no cause of action, the minor premise will not aid in sustaining it. The controlling fact alleged in this declaration was the age of the child and consequently its incapacity to render service. We have shown that by reason of its tender age it could not perform service for the parent. Conceding, for the sake of the argument, that the fact alleged in the declaration that the child picked up chips, amused the baby, etc., was admitted by the demurrer, there was still no admission that these simple acts were of any value. The allegation in the declaration that they were valuable to the amount of $2 per month was an opinion or conclusion of the pleader. It was necessarily an opinion or conclusion, because there was no standard by which services of this sort could be valued. We know, as matter of fact, that children of this age are not hired or employed. There can, therefore, be no criterion by which the value of such services could be estimated but that of an opinion. It is well settled that a demurrer does not admit opinions or conclusions of the pleader. If a man, in his action for personal injuries, alleges that he was damaged $10,000, and there is a demurrer to the declaration, the demurrer does not admit the amount of damages claimed. Moreover, a demurrer does not admit facts which are in their nature improbable or impossible. In the case of Cole v. Maunder, 2 Rolle, Abr. 548, one person sued another for damages for throwing at and striking him with a stone. Defendant pleaded that he threw stones at him "molliter et molli manu," and that they fell upon him "molliter," and it was held not a good justification; the judges saying that one cannot throw stones "molliter," although it were confessed by demurrer. Suppose this child had been only six months old, and these allegations as to service and value had been made; it could not be held that a demurrer to the declaration admitted that a child six months old could render service. The allegation would have been improbable and impossible. Suppose a boy five years old were indicted for the crime of rape, all the necessary allegations being made, certainly a demurrer to such an indictment would not admit that the boy did or could commit the offense charged. Suppose, again, that one female should sue another for the offense of seduction, and the declaration contain all the necessary allegations, would it be held that a demurrer by the defendant would admit that she did commit the act necessary to constitute the crime? These illustrations are given for the purpose of showing that a demurrer to a declaration cannot be held to admit impossible or improbable allegations of fact, so as to prevent the court from passing upon the allegations which in their nature are contrary to common experience and common knowledge as matter of law; and to compel him to submit them to a jury. We think, therefore, that the court should have sustained the demurrer in so far as to hold that the parent could not recover damages for the death of the child on account of loss of its services.

2. It is well settled that, although a parent cannot recover damages for the death or injury of his child unless the child was capable of rendering service, he can recover, in an action against the person who inflicted the injury, for his trouble and expense in caring for the child, and, if it dies from the injuries inflicted he can recover his necessary and reasonable expenses in the burial, including compensation for the loss of such time on the parent's part as was needed for this purpose. See Dennis v. Clark, 2 Cush. 347, 48 Am. Dec. 671, where this subject is elaborately discussed by Metcalf, J. We therefore hold that, while the father in this case cannot recover for the death of his child, he can recover for the expenses he incurred and the loss he sustained rendered necessary by the conduct of the servants of the railroad company; and on this latter ground we affirm the judgment of the court below. If it is necessary, let this part of the declaration stand, in order to try the amount of expenses necessarily incurred by the father.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

Atkinson, J., dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment as rendered. There should be an affirmance without qualification.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Charles ORCHARDSON, Appt.,
v.

Amelia T. COFIELD et al.

(171 Ill. 14.)

1. A general verdict of invalidity of a will is not inconsistent with a special verdict finding capacity to transact general business, and to understand the business in which testatrix was engaged when making the will, but also finding undue influence over her at the time.
2. A will prompted by the testatrix's delusion induced by her belief in spiritualism that the chief beneficiary, who was not the natural object of her bounty, was gifted with supernatural powers, is invalid for want of testamentary capacity of the testatrix, although a mere belief in spiritualism is not proof of insanity.
3. A will is void if procured by a stranger to be executed in his own favor by an aged and feeble woman laboring under the influences of an insane delusion brought upon her through his machinations.
4. A morbid delusion relating to the very matter of the testamentary disposition of one's property deprives her of testamentary capacity, notwithstanding she has capacity to transact ordinary business and knows and understands the business in which she is engaged at the time of making the will.
5. A marriage is absolutely void where one of the parties was insane at the time, and may be annulled by her heirs after her death where she was never in a condition to ratify the same.
6. A woman eighty-six years old, suffering from an incurable disease and having an insane delusion respecting the superhuman powers of a man much younger than herself, and whose character for morality is notoriously the very opposite of her own, is incapable of contracting a valid marriage with him, especially where her object was merely to enable him to obtain her money for the accomplishment of the great plans for mankind which he claimed to have conceived, and the marriage is brought about in pursuance of his fraudulent scheme to obtain her money.

(December 22, 1897.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Adams County in favor of complainants in a suit brought to set aside a pretended marriage and annul the alleged will of Minerva Merrick, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John H. Williams and Jesse B. Barton, for appellant:

Decedent was not an insane person in the purview of the statutes at the time of her marriage with appellant, and was therefore not incapable of contracting a marriage.

NOTE.—For belief in spiritualism as affecting testamentary capacity, see note to Lewis v. Arbuckle (Iowa) 16 L. R. A. 677.

For such belief as an insane delusion, see also note to Kimberly's Appeal (Conn.) 37 L. R. A. 261. 40 L. R. A.

Whipple v. Eddy, 161 Ill. 114; Burt v. Quisenberry, 132 Ill. 385; Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106; Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308; Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 543, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376, 36 Am. Rep. 422; Guild v. Warr, 149 Ill. 105.

A marriage voidable only cannot be avoided after the death of either party.

Bonham v. Badgley, 7 Ill. 622; Schouler, Dom. Rel. p. 24.

Undue influence to avoid an act or nullify a will must be a wrongful influence, and must have the effect of completely subjugating the mind of the actor or testator, so that he or she was incapable of withholding it or of acting independently of it.

Re Williams, 2 Connoly, 579; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 595-601; Kern v. Kern, 51 N. J. Eq. 574; Massey v. Huntington, 115 Ill. 80; Hill v. Bahrns, 158 Ill. 314; Beckel v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 129 Ill. 393, 138 Ill. 446; Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Rutherford v. Morris, 77 Ill. 412; Pooler v. Cristman, 145 Ill. 405; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 116 Ill. 340; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 379; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 44; Kimball v. Cuddy, 117 Ill. 213; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 43 Minn. 73; Re Snelling, 136 N. Y. 515; Mackall v. Mackall, 135 U. S. 167, 34 L. ed. 84; Norton v. Par-ton, 10 Mo. 456; Knorr v. Knorr, 95 Ala. 495; Berberet v. Berberet, 131 Mo. 399; Delgado v. Gonzales (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 459; Salisbury v. Aldrich, 118 Ill. 199; Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9; Re Storey, 20 Ill. App. 183; Carpenter v. Bailey, 94 Cal. 406; Re Sheldon, 40 N. Y. S. R. 369; Schmidt v. Schmidt, 47 Minn. 451.

Influence acquired through affection or by honest argument or persuasion is not undue, and will not invalidate a will.

Beckel v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 116 Ill. 340; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 379; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 44; Kimball v. Cuddy, 117 Ill. 213; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 43 Minn. 73; Re Snelling, 136 N. Y. 515; Mackall v. Mackall, 135 U. S. 167, 34 L. ed. 84; Norton v. Par-ton, 110 Mo. 456; Knorr v. Knorr, 95 Ala. 495; Re Halbert, 15 Misc. 308.

Nor do close relationships, or the charge and control of decedent's business affairs, or the presence of the chief beneficiary when the will was executed, raise a presumption of undue influence.

Berberet v. Berberet, 131 Mo. 399; Delgado v. Gonzales (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 459; Mackall v. Mackall, 135 U. S. 167, 34 L. ed. 84.

Nor does the fact that a testator discriminates against relatives and in favor of a stranger to the blood raise a presumption of undue influence.

Salisbury v. Aldrich, 118 Ill. 199; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 43 Minn. 73; Re Snelling's Will, 136 N. Y. 515.

Nor will the probate of a will be set aside on proof of facts which at most do no more than show that opportunity to exercise undue influence may have existed, or raise a bare suspicion that such influence may have been used.

Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9; Knorr v. Knorr, 95 Ala. 495; Berberet v. Berberet, 181 Mo. 399.

Messrs. James N. Sprigg and Govert & Pape, for appellees:

A void marriage is good for no legal purpose, and its invalidity may be shown in any court, between any parties, either in the lifetime of the parties thereto, or after their death.

Cartwright v. McGown, 121 Ill. 393; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 487, 44 Am. Dec. 54; Unity v. Belgrade, 76 Me. 419; Bell v. Bennett, 73 Ga. 784; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 487; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Finster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 332; Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69; Parker v. Parker, 2 Lee, Eccl. Rep. 383; Ex parte Turing, 1 Ves. & B. 140; Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271; Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; Clement v. Mattison, 3 Rich. L. 98; Jagues v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 499; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343; Middleborough v. Rochester, 12 Mass. 363; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 28 Am. Dec. 437; 4 Bl. Com. Wendell's ed. 458; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 553; Christy v. Clarke, 45 Barb. 529; 1 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. §§ 18, 19, pp. 123, 124; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 258, 548, 600, 622, 645.

One not competent to carry on ordinary transactions of life is not competent to contract marriage.

3 Walt. Act. & Def. 629; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed, 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Re Spencer, 96 Cal. 448.

A simple marriage ceremony will not make a man and woman husband and wife. Capacity and consent are absolutely essential, but celebration only contingently so.

Cartwright v. McGown, 121 Ill. 397; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 327, 588, 645.

In the case at bar the essentials, capacity and consent by Mrs. Merrick are absent.

Cohabitation itself, if inferred, which appellant knew to be contrary to law, could not be an element of marriage available in his behalf.

Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 26 Am. Dec. 437; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774.

Monomania, or partial insanity, made the pretended marriage and relation between appellant, Charles Orchardson, and Minerva Merrick and the pretended will, void.

American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 643; Lucas v. Parsons, 24 Ga. 640, 71 Am. Dec. 147; Connor v. Stanley, 72 Cal. 556; Banks v. Goodfellow, 22 L. T. N. S. 818; Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586; Thomas v. Carter, 170 Pa. 272; Houghton v. Knight, L. R. 3 Prob. & Div. 64; Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 369, 16 Am. Rep. 473; Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 543, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Woodbury v. Obeart, 7 Gray, 467; American Seaman's Friend Soc. v. Hopper, 33 N. Y. 624; Lathrop v. American Bd. of Foreign Missions, 67 Barb. 590; Re White, 121 N. Y. 406; Stanton v. Wetherbar, 16 Barb. 259; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 483.

This monomania was present with and operative upon Minerva Merrick at the time of the pretended marriage, and continuously thereafter until her death, and was itself the present and continuous occasion of the entire relation between Minerva Merrick and Charles Orchardson, including both the pretended marriage and will.
40 L. R. A.

A mere belief in spiritualism, or other religious opinions, does not constitute monomania. But when from such or any other cause the mind assumes a chronic condition of delusion, which controls and dictates conduct, and subverts and sets aside individual judgment, will, and conscience, then the victim of such condition is a monomaniac, and unable to marry or make a will.

Rice, American Probate Law & Practice, pp. 224-227; Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts. 66; Balantine v. Proudfoot, 62 Wis. 217; Re Dorman, 5 Dem. 112; McClary v. Stull, 44 Neb. 175; Cassoday, Wills, 478; Beach, Wills, § 102; Spratt v. Spratt, 76 Mich. 384; Fraser v. Jenkinson, 42 Mich. 206; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448; Smith v. James, 72 Iowa, 515; Lee v. Scudder, 31 N. J. Eq. 633; Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 4 L. R. A. 738; Potter v. Jones, 20 Or. 289, 12 L. R. A. 161; 1 Redf. Wills, p. 90; Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586; 1 Wharton & Stillé, Med. Jur. p. 65; Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 398, decided in 1867 by Sir J. P. Wilde cited in Wharton & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 45; Taylor, Med. Jur. p. 638; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. ed. 1891, §§ 591, 592.

Where there is insane delusion in regard to one who is an object of the testator's bounty, which causes him to make a will which he would not have made but for that delusion, such will cannot be sustained.

1 Redf. Wills, 3d ed. 72, 74 et seq. and notes; 1 Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. 33 et seq. and notes; Buswell, Insanity, §§ 13, 381; American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 638.

The marriage in question was also void, not only because of monomania, but because not consummated and on account of wilful fraud and deception.

Lyndon v. Lyndon, 69 Ill. 43; 2 Kent, Com. 9th ed. p. 41; 1 Scribner, Dower, §§ 22, 25, p. 125; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 206, 207; Cartwright v. McGown, 121 Ill. 397; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 464; 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 543.

There were undue influence and fraud by appellant through his entire relation with deceased; all with one continuing purpose to obtain her property, and the verdict and decree were fully warranted by the evidence.

Thompson v. Hawks, 14 Fed. Rep. 903; Primmer v. Primmer, 75 Iowa, 415; Hugenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. Jr. 299; Cassoday, Wills, §§ 484, 506.

Where one person is in relation of mastery of another as to property, support, or as religious adviser or counsel, and writes a will in his own favor, causing the dependent to sign it, it is presumed fraudulent.

Thompson v. Hawks, 14 Fed. Rep. 902; Lyon v. Home, L. R. 6 Eq. 655; 1 Redf. Wills, §§ 12, 13, p. 415; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; St. Leger's Appeal, 34 Conn. 450, 91 Am. Dec. 735; Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Younge & C. Exch. 358; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 508 et seq.; Drake's Appeal, 45 Conn. 9.

Mr. William L. Vandeventer, also for appellees:

There is a form of insanity known as monomania, which is characterized by a perversion of the understanding in regard to a single object or series of objects. It is especially a symptom of monomania to imbibe delusions which exercise a governing influence over the mind of the affected individual and force him to the commission of acts which in a state of sanity he would not perpetrate.

1 Wharton & Stillé, Med. Jur. p. 65.

A true monomaniac cannot be convinced of his error, and he thinks that his acts are consistent with reason and the general conduct of mankind.

Smith v. Tebbitts, L. R. Prob. & Div. 398; referred to in Wharton & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 45; Taylor, Med. Jur. p. 638.

It is immaterial what is the form of the defect of reason, or by what distinctive name—such as idiocy, lunacy, mental weakness, or the like—it is known. For those who have not sufficient understanding to deal with a particular affair of life, whether from derangement of the intellect or from its equivalent in feebleness, cannot bind themselves by a contract relating to such affairs.

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. ed. 1891, §§ 591, 592; Redf. Wills, 123, 124; Campbell v. Campbell, 180 Ill. 481, 6 L. R. A. 167; Greene v. Greene, 145 Ill. 265; Den, Stevens v. Vanclee, 4 Wash. C. C. 262; Harrison v. Rowan, 8 Wash. C. C. 580; Craig v. Southard, 148 Ill. 37.

The question does not depend upon the soundness of the views entertained by the testatrix, but, Was she "guided by insane delusions which so impressed her mind as to control her judgment in the disposition of her property, so as to prevent her from appreciating the duty she owed to her family?"

Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586; Woodbury v. Obear, 7 Gray, 467.

The widest possible range of evidence is permitted to show fraud or undue influence.

Schouler, Wills, §§ 240, 242; 1 Redf. Wills, § 51, p. 586; Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. 269, 25 Am. Dec. 294; Jackson, Coe v. Kniffen, 2 Johns. 31, 3 Am. Dec. 390; Reynolds v. Adams, 90 Ill. 134, 32 Am. Rep. 15; Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

Where there are unreasonable changes of disposition, especially in superseding the natural objects of bounty in favor of others who give casual attention, where no relative is at hand, and mental incapacity is shown, it is immaterial whether undue influence is exerted or not, the will is sufficiently vitiated.

Van Kleeck v. Phipps, 4 Redf. 99; Schouler, Wills, p. 247, note 9.

Undue influence has always something sinister, corrupt, and selfish about it, when properly viewed, however sly and secret in its workings, or varnished over with hypocrisy, and hence difficult to be traced except in the effect it has produced.

Schouler, Wills, § 226; Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 63 N. Y. 504.

The declarations of the alleged testatrix, Mrs. Merrick, made before and after the execution of the will, are proper to be proved, so 40 L. R. A.

far as they tend to show her mental condition at the time the will was executed.

1 Redf. Wills, p. 542; Schouler, Wills, § 243; Massey v. Huntington, 118 Ill. 80; Reynolds v. Adams, 90 Ill. 134, 32 Am. Rep. 15; Moore v. Gubbins, 54 Ill. App. 164; Hill v. Bahrns, 158 Ill. 315; Berelot v. Leatrade, 153 Ill. 625; Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157, 62 Am. Dec. 71; Craig v. Southard, 148 Ill. 37; Terry v. Buffington, 11 Ga. 337, 56 Am. Dec. 423; Davis v. Calvert, 5 Gill & J. 269, 25 Am. Dec. 282.

Where the testator is not claimed to have been generally insane, but controlled by insane notions, the question to be determined is whether he was the victim of such delusions as controlled his action and rendered him insensible to the ties of blood and kindred.

McClary v. Stull, 44 Neb. 175; Cassoday, Wills, 478; Beach, Wills, § 102; Spratt v. Spratt, 76 Mich. 384; Fraser v. Jernison, 42 Mich. 206; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448; Smith v. James, 72 Iowa, 515; Lee v. Scudder, 31 N. J. Eq. 633; Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 4 L. R. A. 738; Potter v. Jones, 20 Or. 239, 12 L. R. A. 161; 1 Redf. Wills, p. 90; Taylor v. Trich, 165 Pa. 586; Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 332; Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 475, 6 L. R. A. 167; Converse v. Converse, 21 Vt. 168, 52 Am. Dec. 58; American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 638; Brownfield v. Brownfield, 43 Ill. 147; Rutherford v. Morris, 77 Ill. 397; Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 38; Pooler v. Cristman, 145 Ill. 405; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 138 Ill. 446; Taylor v. Pegram, 151 Ill. 106; Roe v. Taylor, 45 Ill. 485; Re Storey, 20 Ill. App. 188.

In the absence of any affirmation on return of mental capacity, the marriage of an insane person is in such sense void that its invalidity may be relied upon in avoidance of it, not only in a suit between the parties to set it aside, but in any cause between the same parties, or any other, wherein, either during the life of the married persons, or afterward, it is judicially called in question.

1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 622; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 487; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 42 Am. Dec. 332; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 871, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Cole v. Cole, 5 Ga. 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275; Crump v. Morgan, 88 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69; Parker v. Parker, 2 Lee, Eccl. Rep. 382; Ex parte Turing, 1 Ves. & B. 140; Unity v. Belgrade, 76 Me. 419; Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271; Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; Clement v. Mattison, 3 Rich. L. 93; Jacques v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 499; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343; Middleborough v. Rochester, 12 Mass. 363; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 26 Am. Dec. 437; 4 Bl. Com. Wendell's ed. 438; Ward v. Dulaney, 23 Miss. 410; Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 553; Christy v. Clarke, 45 Barb. 529; 1 Scribner, Dower, 2d ed. §§ 18, 19, pp. 123, 124; Cartwright v. McGown, 121 Ill. 396.

The influences to avoid a will must be such as destroy the free agency of the testator's will, and thus render his act obviously more the offspring of the will of others than his own

This is far from "completely subjugating" the mind of the testator.

Massey v. Huntington, 118 Ill. 80; Rutherford v. Morris, 77 Ill. 418; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 116 Ill. 354; Yoe v. McCord, 74 Ill. 44; American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 623.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

To the October term, 1894, of the circuit court of Adams county, appellees, two of the heirs of Minerva Orchardson (or, as appellees insist, Minerva Merrick), deceased, filed their bill in chancery against appellant and others to contest the validity of the last will and testament of said Minerva upon the ground of mental incapacity, and that its execution was procured by the said Charles Orchardson through fraud and undue influence, and also to set aside and have declared null and void a marriage which appellant, Orchardson, claimed existed between himself and the said Minerva at the date of her death, on the ground of her mental incapacity to enter into a marriage contract at the time of the alleged marriage, and the fraud of said Orchardson. The defendants, except Orchardson and one William H. Boyer, were also heirs of the testatrix. Orchardson alone answered the bill, and he denied each of its material allegations. Replication being duly filed, the trial and hearing below were upon the issue thus formed. On that branch of the case involving the validity of the will an issue at law was made up whether the writing produced was the will of the testatrix or not, and tried by a jury, resulting in a verdict that it was not. The court also submitted to the jury certain interrogatories for special findings, which it returned with a general verdict, as follows: "First. Did Minerva Merrick Orchardson, at the time said will purports to have been signed, possess sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business?—Yes. Second. Did said Minerva Merrick Orchardson, at the time said will was signed by her (if it was so signed), have sufficient mental capacity to know and understand the business in which she was then engaged?—Yes. Third. Was there any undue influence exercised over Minerva Merrick Orchardson, connected with or operating upon her at the time she executed the will in question (if she did execute it)?—Yes." A motion for new trial was overruled, and a decree entered upon the general verdict, setting aside the will and probate thereof. By agreement of the parties the issue as to the validity of the marriage was submitted to the chancellor on the same evidence produced before the jury, with such additional testimony as either party saw fit to introduce, and that issue was also found for the complainants, and a decree entered that the "alleged marriage of Minerva Merrick to the said Charles Orchardson, of date April 9, 1893, was and remained, at and from the time thereof, and is, null and void." From both these decrees Orchardson has prosecuted this appeal. Several errors are assigned upon the record, but the only grounds of reversal insisted upon are that the evidence is insufficient to authorize either decree, and that on the issue as to the will the special findings of the jury are conclusive.

40 L. R. A.

The facts found by the chancellor, material to a consideration of the first position, are as follows:

"That Minerva Merrick, at the time of her alleged marriage with Charles Orchardson, of date April 12, 1893, was of age about eighty-three years; that she had been for several years afflicted with cancer, and her physical health had become poor; that her mind and memory had become greatly weakened and impaired; that she had been a widow since the year 1876, and lived in her own home, with her servants, in Quincy, Illinois. That she was possessed of a considerable fortune. That from a time shortly after her husband's death, in 1876, she had believed in what was commonly known as spiritualism, and her views concerning spiritualism had grown upon her of later years, and she had been for some time last preceding her alleged marriage to Charles Orchardson, and was at the time of such alleged marriage, and remained continuously thereafter until her death, on June 11, 1894, a monomaniac on the subject of spiritualism, and insane upon all matters into which the subject of spiritualism entered, or which were connected therewith, and was and remained during all that time wholly dominated and controlled by insane delusions; among other things believing she could receive and did receive, through the intervention of other persons as mediums,—not claiming to be in any sense a medium herself,—communications, advice, and directions concerning the conduct of her affairs and business from disembodied spirits generally, and particularly from the spirit of her deceased husband, Dr. Marcus Merrick; and was and remained so controlled thereby, and by such communications, advice, and directions, and insanely believed it to be her religious and conscientious duty to obey such directions, without heeding the advice of her formerly trusted friends or her counsel, and without consulting or relying upon her own mind and will she followed, obeyed, and acted upon such supposed spirit communications, advice, and directions concerning any matter or matters, and in all matters requiring her attention and action during that time she first submitted, and considered it her duty to submit, to the same, through medium or mediums, for advice and direction of such supposed spirits, as to what her actions should be, as to such supposed advice which had been received by her. That preceding said alleged marriage, and during the month of October, 1892, the said Charles Orchardson, then about the age of fifty-seven years, a person substantially without means or property, and a stranger to Mrs. Merrick and to the community in which she lived in Quincy, appeared in Quincy, and within a few days of his arrival inquired for Mrs. Merrick's place of residence, and evinced a knowledge that she was a spiritualist, and the wealthy widow of Dr. Marcus Merrick, deceased. That the said Orchardson was then a married man, having a wife living in the state of Michigan, and who, some two months thereafter, procured a divorce from the said Charles Orchardson on account of cruelty. That the said Minerva Merrick was informed of these facts concerning said Charles Orchardson, and also informed that such application had been made also upon the charge that said Orchardson had consorted with a woman notoriously lewd, which woman came with said Orchardson to Quincy, Illinois, and that said information came to said Minerva Merrick some time preceding her alleged marriage to him; and at said time she was also informed that he had consorted in a lewd manner with women after coming to Quincy, and during the time as hereafter mentioned, in which he was engaged in writing a book at said Mrs. Merrick's house; and said Minerva Merrick admitted and believed said information to be true. That, beginning within a few days after he, said Orchardson, so first came to Quincy, he made the acquaintance of said Minerva Merrick, and from that time until the alleged marriage spent much of his time at her house. That he had with him, and said Minerva Merrick read, a number of what he falsely and fraudulently alleged to be the writings from the spirits or persons distinguished in history, and long since dead, which writings he falsely and fraudulently professed to have seen written in a miraculous manner without human hands. That in these supposed communications the said Orchardson professed to be directly addressed by the spirits as 'The Son of Wisdom,' and by other laudatory titles. That they purported to speak at considerable length in exalted terms of the powers of the person addressed, defining them as like unto those of Jesus Christ; referring to said Orchardson as destined to be the savior of the human race, and as commissioned by the spirits to reform and regenerate mankind. That they also indicated that these communications and other phenomena, supposed to be in the possession of said Orchardson, of like character, should be prepared and published as a book, the sales of which should net a very large sum of money. That some of them referred to the want of means on the part of said Orchardson to carry out the supposed commission, and intimated that this want should be supplied, and that he should persevere. That said Orchardson also referred in credulous terms to his confidence in the statement that he had been on the planet some centuries prior to his present nativity, to the fact that many most important communications from the spirit world had come to him directly without the intervention of any other medium, and under conditions which he stated as, from his personal knowledge, they could not possibly be untrue or unreal. That within a few days after the said Orchardson commenced to visit at said Mrs. Merrick's house, he commenced to write said book, wrote the same at her house, spending most of his time there, and finished the book, and had it printed and issued from the bindery, at Mrs. Merrick's expense, a few days before the alleged marriage, the book being entitled 'The Light of the Ages and Deathblow to Poverty.' That it was by dedication addressed to Mrs. Merrick, contained numerous flattering references to her, represented that his opinion and hers on the subject treated were in accord, also represented that Mrs. Merrick had become the financial support of the book and of Orchardson in carrying out the commission referred to in the spirit writing. That a considerable part of the book was occupied with a reproduction of the said supposed spirit communications, and a recital of extravagant spirit phenomena, supposed to have come within said Orchardson's personal observations and experience. That the said Minerva Merrick was informed of the contents of said book and the matters referred to, and by reason of her said weakness and delusion of mind and monomania, and the false and fraudulent representations of said Charles Orchardson, believed the same implicitly to be true, and believed the said Orchardson to possess the attributes, and to be charged with the commissions, referred in the alleged spirit writings; and that in so believing she refused to consider the advice and caution of her formerly trusted friends and counsel, or to be influenced by her own mind and will, and was in that respect controlled wholly by her said weakness and insane delusions of mind, and was not possessed of sufficient mental capacity to free her mind from that belief and delusion. That the said pretences and representations of the said Charles Orchardson were made by him falsely, and with a design and purpose by fraud and falsehood to obtain the confidence of the said Minerva Merrick, to obtain control of her person, and bring about the alleged marriage, and with a fraudulent scheme and purpose of obtaining her property. That a short time prior to the time when said alleged marriage occurred the said Charles Orchardson, together with one William H. Boyer, who also claimed to be a spirit medium, knowing of the aforesaid weakness and insane delusion of mind of the said Minerva Merrick, and by further fraud, artifice, and deceit, and in furtherance of said scheme and the design of the said Charles Orchardson, and with intent to defraud and entrap the said Minerva Merrick into the relation and state of marriage with the said Charles Orchardson, falsely and fraudulently caused the said Minerva Merrick to believe, through the medium of the said William H. Boyer, that he (said Boyer) was in communication with the spirit of her said deceased husband, Dr. Marcus Merrick, and it was the will and direction of her said deceased husband, who was represented to be then and there present, and addressing her, that she should marry said Charles Orchardson. That the said Minerva Merrick then insanely believing such communications and directions to come from her said deceased husband, and that he was then so present as represented, and that it was her duty to obey his said supposed directions, and then laboring under her aforesaid weakness and insane delusion of mind, and without the intervention and exercise of her own mind and will, and without having sufficient mental capacity to disenthral herself from said belief and delusion, and by means aforesaid, and not otherwise, shortly thereafter was procured by the said Charles Orchardson, and through his said falsehood and fraud, to submit with him to a ceremony of marriage, and did submit to such form and ceremony of marriage. That the said alleged marriage ceremony was procured and brought about wholly by the fraud, artifice, imposition, and deceit of the said Charles Orchardson, acting in person and through others, practised upon her while she was in the condition of mind aforesaid. That the said Minerva Merrick, at the time of said marriage, was, and from the time of said marriage down to her death, enthralled, dominated, and controlled by the said weakness and insane delusions on her part, and by her belief in said pretended spiritualistic communications and directions, and representations, and by the fraud of the said Charles Orchardson, and by her said belief and insane delusions that it was and continued the wish and direction of her said deceased husband that she should become and remain the wife of the said Charles Orchardson, and that it was her duty so to do. That there was no time at or after said marriage when she was released from said insane delusions and weakness of mind, or was able to exercise her own mind, will, or judgment in regard to said marriage, or knew or realized in her own mind the fraud so practised upon her, or when she was possessed of the mental capacity to ratify or consent to said alleged marriage, or to consider in and by the exercise of her own mind and will the situation in which she had been placed, or which she occupied, by reason of the said pretended marriage, and the aforesaid fraudulent representations and conduct of the said Charles Orchardson. That said alleged marriage was never consummated by coition between the parties thereto as husband and wife, and that it was never consented to or ratified by the free will and consent of the said Minerva Merrick. That no issue was born of said alleged marriage. That said Minerva Merrick did not, at the time of said marriage, or thereafter discover said fraud so practised upon her by said Orchardson or said Boyer, and did not, at any time after said marriage, possess sufficient mental capacity to ratify or disaffirm the said marriage, or to assume relation of wife to the said Charles Orchardson.

"Concerning the mental condition of the said Minerva Merrick, the court found from the evidence that for a number of years last preceding her said alleged marriage to Charles Orchardson she had in numerous instances invested large sums of money unprofitably, wastefully, and irrationally, wholly at the dictation of what she supposed to be disembodied spirits, deeming it to be her duty to do so, and without the exercise of her own mind and will in so doing. That she had also at times, under the advice of the so-called spirits, been greatly suspicious and troubled concerning her business matters where no ground of suspicion existed, and where to a rational mind the security of her business, in the matters about which she was so suspicious, would have been readily perceived, and in such matters she was incapable of receiving rational advice and acting thereon; and her suspicion could only be allayed by following the course mapped out by the spirits, and then at a wholly unnecessary cost and waste of her property, to which cost and waste she readily yielded, and without sufficient mind to realize the imposition to which she had been subjected. That she had, during all her life, been a woman of chaste and pure thought and morals, but, owing to the domination and influence of her said mental delusions and her infatuation therewith, she had, at the time of said alleged marriage, become an apologist for the debauchery of others, and insensible to the immoral contamination surrounding her; and from that time to her death she so acted as to belie the purity and womanhood of her former life. That during the many years of her widowhood, and down to a very short time preceding said alleged marriage, she often expressed her aversion to a second marriage, and had steadily adhered thereto until the pretended message from her departed husband came, as she believed, when, under the irresistible influences of her insane delusions, and particularly under the belief and delusion that her husband had so directed, and that it was her duty to obey such directions, and to disregard her own inclination, will, and judgment, and under the delusion that alleged spirits had commissioned the said Charles Orchardson as aforesaid, and that he was possessed of the powers and functions aforesaid, by and through such spirits, and that she was assisting him therein, she was taken possession of, dominated and controlled by said delusions and beliefs, and wholly unable to exercise her own judgment, and took part in and became party to said alleged marriage, and in doing so believed and felt concerning said Charles Orchardson that she had found one who espoused the doctrines so near to her heart and who would revolutionize the world, and eliminate the misery and sorrows from the conditions of men. That the said Minerva Merrick was at the time of said alleged marriage, and from that time continuously down to the time of her death remained, insane upon the subject of spiritualism, and that insane delusions arising from her monomania were and continued during all that time officious, operative, controlling, and influential in producing an insane consent to the said alleged marriage, and that, but for such insane delusions, she would never have married the defendant Orchardson, or have continued thereafter during her life to be known as his wife; and that by reason of such insane delusions she was not at or at any time after said marriage of sufficiently sound mind to consent to become or be the wife of the said Charles Orchardson, and that the alleged marriage of Minerva Merrick and said Charles Orchardson was, and remained until the death of the said Minerva Merrick, null and void."

The will was executed February 3, 1894, about ten months after the marriage. It gives to the defendant George H. Turner, $3,000, and to Minerva Merrick Sales, a grandniece, another of the defendants, $2,000. All the remainder of her estate, real and personal, she willed to Charles Orchardson, and appointed him executor of the will, without bond. She died June 11, 1894. The contention that the special verdicts of the jury on the issues submitted to it should be held conclusive as to the validity of the will could only be sustained upon the ground that they are so inconsistent with the general verdict that the latter cannot stand. The testatrix may have "possessed sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business," and at the time that she signed the will "had sufficient mental capacity to know and understand the business in which she was engaged," and still under the issues in this case, have been wholly incapable of making a will. Complainants do not allege in their bill, nor is it the theory of their case, that she was insane or of unsound mind generally, but that she was the victim of an insane delusion, under which she labored at the time she made the will. Capacity to transact ordinary business, and to know and understand the business in which one is engaged at the time of making a will, are evidence of testamentary capacity, unless the testator was at the time affected with some morbid delusions which influenced his action. American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 623, and authorities there cited. The question here is, "Was her natural mental capacity exercised in the making of her will, or was she at the time influenced and controlled by the alleged insane delusion?" The special findings of the jury were not, therefore, irreconcilable with the general verdict. The question on this branch of the case, then, is: "Does the evidence sustain the general verdict of the jury? And, first, was the testatrix the victim of an insane delusion to the extent of destroying her testamentary capacity when influenced or controlled by that delusion? And, second, was she so influenced in making this will?" We said, in American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 638: "Beyond all question it is within the previous rulings of this court, and abundantly sustained by the rulings of other courts of the highest respectability, that where there is insane delusion in regard to one who is an object of testator's bounty, which causes him to make a will which he would not have made but for that delusion, such will cannot be sustained, and so also, where there is insane delusion in regard to the duty or moral obligation of a party to make a will in favor of a particular individual, corporation, or society and a will is made as the result of that insane delusion, it cannot be sustained. 1 Redf. Wills, 3d ed. 72-74 et seq., and notes; 1 Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. 38 et seq., and notes; Buswell, Insanity, §§ 13, 381." The testimony in the record is so voluminous as to forbid an attempt to review it here. Much of it on either side is of very little or no relevancy to the issues in the case. Our examination of it, taken as a whole, has led us to the conclusion that it sustains, in substance, the findings of the chancellor as recited in the decree.

It thus appears that Orchardson represented to Mrs. Merrick that he had in certain communications from spirits been addressed as "The Son of Wisdom," speaking of his powers as like unto those of Jesus Christ, referring to him as destined to be the savior of the human race, and as commissioned by the spirits to reform and regenerate mankind; that it was indicated that these communications should be published in a book, the sales of which would yield large sums of money, etc.; that Orchardson shortly thereafter commenced to write such a book at her house, where he completed the same, and had it printed at her expense a few days before the marriage, and dedicated to her; that the book contained numerous flattering references to her, representing that her opinions on the subject treated were in accord with those of Orchardson; that she had become the financial support of the book and of Orchardson in carrying out the commission referred to in the spirit writings, a considerable part of the book being occupied with a reproduction of the supposed spirit communications, claimed to have been made to him. And the court found from the evidence that she was informed of the contents of said book and the matters referred to, "and by reason of her said weakness and delusion of mind and monomania, and the false and fraudulent representations of said Charles Orchardson, believed the same implicitly to be true, and believed the said Charles Orchardson to possess the attributes and to be charged with the commission referred to in the alleged spirit writings." From these recitals of facts, as well as from a careful reading of the testimony, we are forced to the conclusion that from a time prior to the marriage to the making of the will, and until her death, Mrs. Merrick was the victim of a morbid and insane delusion as to the character, powers, and mission of Orchardson, believing him to be possessed with superhuman attributes and powers, and charged with a commission beyond that committed to ordinary men; and that in making him the principal recipient of her bounty she was influenced by that delusion. There is not in this voluminous record, a particle of proof that she entertained for him the remotest sentiment of affection, gratitude, or admiration except as she was controlled by the delusion that he was more than a mere man, and that he was, under the influence of spirits, commissioned to do and perform superhuman acts. He was in no rational sense the object of her bounty, nor can we believe from this evidence that she was influenced to so treat him, except through the delusion referred to. The gifts to him were not prompted by a desire or sense of duty to provide for him as a man, but because she had been, by reason of her diseased mind, and through the influence and desire of Orchardson, made to believe that he was more than a man,—gifted with superhuman faculties. She believed it her duty to bestow her property upon him because of her morbid insane delusion as to him; and we repeat, as said in the Price Case, it appearing that such insane delusion in regard to her duty or obligation to make the will in his favor was the result of that insane delusion, the will cannot be sustained. On this ground the general verdict was warranted by the testimony. In reaching this conclusion we do not hold that a mere belief in spiritualism is proof of insanity. A charge of general insanity is not supported by proof of mere belief on questions of opinion, however absurd; but when, as here shown, an act was done under the promptings of an insane delusion, and the proof shows that it was the result of belief in facts the existence of which no rational person would believe, insanity is proved. Belief in spiritualism, though not proof of insanity, if through that belief one is led into a delusion that another is a God, a Christ, or gifted with powers and faculties belonging only to supernatural persons, the believer of the delusion is insane on that subject; and, if he is prompted to make a will by that delusion, his will cannot be sustained.

Counsel for appellant cite and rely upon Whipple v. Eddy, 161 Ill. 114, as an authority sustaining the validity of this will. The contestant in that case was the adopted daughter and sole legatee of the intestate. She sought to have the will set aside, so that she might come into immediate possession of the estate, instead of being prevented from doing so until she reached a certain age, as provided by the will. There was nothing in the bill or proof in that case to the effect that the testator was influenced in making his will by a belief in spiritualism, or any other delusion. The charge was that he was insane, and it was shown he had been a believer in spiritualism, and had been influenced by that belief to do many irrational things. But there was an absolute absence of testimony to the effect, or even tending in the slightest degree to show, that he was prompted to make his will by his belief in spiritualism. What we there said as to the effect of belief in spiritual influences, etc., was thought to be applicable to the issues and facts of that case; but the statement in the opinion, "The record is barren of proof even tending to show that the subject of spiritualism ever entered his mind in connection with his will," sufficiently distinguishes that case from this.

We also think the verdict of the jury is abundantly sustained on the ground of undue influence. The third special interrogatory propounded to the jury was answered in the affirmative; that is, that there was undue influence exercised over the testatrix, connected with or operating upon her at the time she executed the will. That appellant sought out Mrs. Merrick at her home in Quincy, and took advantage of her extreme views on the subject of spiritualism, with the design and for the purpose of obtaining her property, is morally certain. That he obtained complete mastery over her will is equally certain. He procured the will to be written; and, while it is claimed he acted under her directions, we are satisfied that the directions were of his own procurement. There is every reason for believing from the evidence that he brought about its execution in privacy, himself selecting and procuring the attendance of witnesses in whom he could confide. He it was who prompted her, when the witnesses and parties selected to be present had assembled in her room, to declare that the paper was her will. While there was not little skill and ingenuity displayed by him in concealing the fact, we cannot doubt that he was the real, active moving agency in having the will executed, and that she was induced to make it through his influence and procurement. Certainly, there was sufficient evidence of that fact to justify the special finding of the jury that there was undue influence.

We do not overlook the fact that it is not every influence exercised over a testator or testatrix by the beneficiary under a will which will justify a decree setting it aside; but, when the relative positions of these parties are considered, she being an aged and feeble woman, laboring under the influences of an insane delusion brought upon her through his machinations, the rule can have no proper application. The verdict of the jury that the alleged will was not the last will and testament of the testatrix was, we think, fully authorized by the testimony on both grounds alleged.

On the issue as to whether the marriage between Mrs. Merrick and Charles Orchardson was void because of her want of mental capacity to enter into the marital relation, we think the court below decided correctly. Section 2, chap. 89, of our statute provides: "No insane person or idiot shall be capable of contracting marriage." Section 1, cl. 6, chap. 181, says: "The words 'insane person' and 'lunatic' shall include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, insane or distracted person." These provisions are declaratory of the common law. 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 136; 1 Kent, Com. 76; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 2 Dana, 102, 26 Am. Dec. 437; Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447. In the latter case it was said: "We have no doubt that by the common law of England, . . . as far as can be traced for four or five centuries, a marriage of a lunatic is void, and must be so pronounced by every court to each and every form in which the subject can be presented." And we said in Carterright v. McGowan, 121 Ill. 388: "A void marriage is good for no legal purpose, and its invalidity may be shown in any court, between any parties, either in the lifetime of the parties thereto, or after their death." Also: "A simple marriage ceremony will not make a man and woman husband and wife. Capacity and consent are absolutely essential, but celebration only contingently so." It is clear from all the evidence that the mental condition of Mrs. Merrick did not materially change after the marriage,—certainly not for the better,—and therefore, if void when entered into, the marriage continued so to her death, and her heirs may have it annulled. The controlling question, therefore, now is, "Was she mentally capable of entering into the marriage relation on April 12, 1893, the date of the marriage?" It is impossible to prescribe a definite rule by which the mental condition as to sanity or insanity can in every case be tested. That laid down by Mr. Bishop in his work on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation (vol. 1, § 600) is generally approved. After referring to the decisions of the different courts on the subject, he says (§ 599): "Marriage is the legal band around affections assumed to be already united, and the blending in law of two lives into one. And while it is in some degree of the head, it is primarily and chiefly of the heart. Hence, in reason, the test question should be, whether or not the parties have the capability of mind required for duly comprehending this union." He then states in the following section (600) the "true doctrine" as follows: "Assuming this to be the correct idea of the subject-matter of the contract; none of the foregoing enunciations from the bench are precisely accurate; but the true view, in principle, is as follows: The mental incapacity which disqualifies one for crime is such as renders it impossible he should entertain the criminal intent. The disqualifying incapacity for making a deed, a will, or a bill of sale of personal property, is such as puts it out of the power of the person to exercise a disposing mind in respect of the particular thing. The question is not altogether of brain quantity, or of brain quality, in the abstract; but it is whether or not the mind could and did act rationally regarding the precise thing in contemplation,—[marriage]. In a marriage case it is whether the alleged insane person acted rationally regarding marriage, and the particular one in dispute, not, indeed, whether his conduct was wise, but whether it proceeded from a mind sane as respects the thing done," etc. It would be hard to conceive of a more irrational act than that of Mrs. Merrick in becoming the wife of Charles Orchardson. She had reached an extreme old age; was afflicted with an incurable disease; was possessed of a comfortable home, and an abundance of money and property with which to satisfy her every want and taste. She had many attentive and devoted friends and neighbors, with whom she had been associated for years. Her tastes were refined and her moral sense unperverted, disapproving of immorality, intemperance, and other like sins. She held in the highest esteem the memory of her husband, who had been a man of superior character and intelligence. The uncontradicted evidence produced upon the trial before the jury, and upon which the decree of the chancellor voiding the marriage was based, shows that as to each of these ennobling characteristics and virtues in Mrs. Merrick, Charles Orchardson was as completely her antithesis as it is possible for one person to be unlike another. Especially must his debaucheries and associations with lewd women have shocked her sense of virtue and morality, and repelled her from coming in contact with him, had she been in the exercise of her normal faculties. It is true that many strange and unnatural marriages are contracted, and the sanity of the parties not questioned. But it is also true that, when the question is raised, it not infrequently appears that some insane delusion prompted one or the other of the parties in contracting such unnatural marriages. Certainly, in so extreme a case as this, the mind naturally attributes the act to some unusual motive or influence; and we think it is found here both in Mrs. Merrick's belief in the superhuman powers and attributes of Orchardson and the insane delusion that the spirit of her dead husband dictated and approved of the marriage. All the evidence shows that she never conceived the idea of assuming the relation and the duty of a wife by the marriage as ordinarily understood. Whether she should marry the man, or adopt him as her son, was a matter of indifference, her sole object and purpose being to place herself and her property in such relation to him that they might be used by him through his extraordinary powers in the accomplishment of his wonderful mission.

Counsel for appellant reiterate the proposition that the fact that a person believes in spiritualism, ghosts, dreams, etc., is not proof of his or her insanity, and cases are cited holding, where general insanity is charged, and without proof that the belief led the believer into some insane delusion which prompted the act sought to be set aside, the act was valid, however extreme or unreasonable the belief in spiritualism or other like beliefs. We have no criticisms to make upon those authorities. They are not in conflict with that other class of cases which hold, that if a person labors under a mental delusion on a subject at the time of making a will or entering into a contract, and the will or agreement is the result of such delusion, then the will or contract is void, notwithstanding the person may have been sane on all other subjects. In American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 632, the circuit court instructed the jury: "If the jury believe, from the evidence, that although Isaac Foreman had sufficient capacity to attend to the ordinary business affairs of life, yet that with regard to subjects connected with the testamentary disposition and distribution of his property and the natural objects of his bounty he was insane, and that while laboring under such insanity, he made the will in question, and that in making it he was so far influenced or controlled by such insanity as to be unable rationally to comprehend the nature and effect of the provisions of the will, and was thereby led to make the will as he did, then the jury must find the will not to be the will of the said Isaac Foreman. An insane delusion is a fixed and settled belief in facts not existing, which no rational person would believe. Such delusion may sometimes exist as to one or more subjects and if the jury believe from the evidence in this case, that Isaac Foreman was laboring under such insane delusions upon subjects connected with the testamentary disposition of his property and the natural objects of his bounty when he made the will in question, and was thereby rendered incompetent to comprehend, rationally, the nature and effect of the act, and that, but for such delusions he would not have made the will as he did, then the jury should find against the validity of the will." And it was insisted upon appeal to this court that the giving of that instruction was error, but we held otherwise, and sustained the ruling of the court below upon the ground that it announced the correct rule of law. It was also held in that case that the belief of the testator, Foreman, that by placing his property in religious institutions for charitable purposes it would continue to increase until the day of judgment, to work for him, was evidence of a morbid delusion sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury holding his will to be invalid. It cannot be said that the law is different as to marriage or other contracts. Judge Bonney, who heard the case below, in his able and elaborate written opinion filed with his decision, on this branch of the case, after summing up the evidence tending to show that Mrs. Merrick was the victim of an insane delusion growing out of and resulting from her belief in spiritualism, said: "Numerous witnesses who knew her well, who were her immediate neighbors, and who saw her frequently, declare her insane upon the subject of spiritualism; and to four physicians were put hypothetical questions, every element of which was abundantly proved by the testimony in the case, who gave the opinion, as experts, that she was insane. She built Merrick Hall at a place which rendered the construction of the building unusually expensive, because she was under the delusion that the spirit of her dead husband directed her to build it, and to build it at that particular place. She sent to Washington, and brought hither an attorney to collect a claim against an estate perfectly solvent, and paid him the sum of $500 therefor, because she had been advised by the spirits, and was under the insane delusion that she was about to lose her money or some of it, and it must be the Buckley money; and this, too, when she had an attorney here who had attended to her business affairs for several years, and whom she had known much longer, and against whose honesty and integrity the finger of suspicion had never turned. So strong was the delusion that she offered him $500 to collect the same moneys and when he assured her that the claim was safe, and refused her exorbitant offering, instead of listening to his advice and the voice of reason, she blindly followed the behests of her delusion in the manner so characteristic with persons afflicted with this form of insanity, and brought the Washington lawyer to her aid. The surrender of the mortgage to Clara Robinson, her dealings with Hainer, — both of whom were mediums, — evince her deranged condition whenever the circumstances offered an opportunity for her belief in spiritualism to become influential. Though highly moral, and absolutely pure in every thought and deed that sprang from her long life, through the influence of spiritualism she became an apologist for the debauchery of others, and so acted as to belie every element of her purity and womanhood. A radical change takes place in the very essentials of her character. She had frequently expressed her aversion to a second marriage, and steadfastly adhered to her resolution until the pretended message from her husband came; and then under the irresistible influence of her insane delusion, she assented, believing she had found one who espoused the doctrine so near to her heart, and who could revolutionize the world, eliminate misery and sorrow from the conditions of men, and, as it were, make earth a paradise." It is also to be kept in mind that in the view we have already expressed, the marriage in question was brought about and procured by Charles Orchardson in the accomplishment of his scheme and purpose to obtain possession of the property of Mrs. Merrick, and this fraud is to be taken into consideration in connection with the evidence of the mental incapacity of Mrs. Merrick at the time of the alleged marriage. Bishop, in his work on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation (vol. 1, § 611), says: "The intellect may be very weak, not absolutely free from derangement, while yet not to an extent disqualifying the person to contract matrimony; for the disorder or feebleness, to have this effect, must have reached a standard magnitude." And he adds, in § 612: "The cases oftenest occurring are where partial insanity or great weakness of intellect, is circumvented by fraud. Such a case was the Earl of Portsmouth's who, being of weak and somewhat disordered mind, was led by the artifice of his trustee and solicitor, whose influence over him was great, into a marriage with the latter's own daughter. The marriage was declared void. And in another case of the like nature, a man of forty contrived to bring about between himself and a woman of seventy—a drunkard with considerable property, which he sought to secure—a marriage, without a settlement, or the knowledge of her friends. It also was adjudged void." And again in § 613: "The two ingredients of fraud and insanity, thus blending, often, in matrimonial causes, produce by their united action a nullity which neither could alone effect." Lyndon v. Lyn- don, 69 Ill. 43, is in harmony with this principle. In the case of the man of forty intermarrying with the woman of seventy, referred to above, which is the case of Browning v. Reane, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69, 1 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 190, the evidence was to the effect that the woman was not only addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, but that she had been from childhood of very weak intellect. But the court does attach importance to the fact that the evidence disclosed that the marriage was procured by the man for the purpose of obtaining the estate of the woman, and in speaking of the weight to be given to the alleged fact of marriage it is said: From "merely pleading the fact of marriage, the court could not expect much that was satisfactory. If the marriage was brought about by a fraudulent confederacy, there would be two descriptions of persons present at it,—the parties confederating and those whose presence was necessary, and who might be deceived and imposed upon." This language we think, is peculiarly applicable to the facts in this case as to the manner in which the empty ceremony of marriage was pretended to be celebrated. In Foster v. Means, Speers, Eq. 569, 43 Am. Dec. 332, a marriage was held null and void between a man and a woman on the ground of the mental incapacity of the man, and fraudulent procurement of the woman. In that case, as in the Browning Case, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 69, 1 Eng. Eccl. Rep. 190, the mental defect was from childhood; and, while there was some evidence to the effect that the man was capable of reasoning to a limited extent, and comprehending some of the ordinary matters of life, the judgment avoiding the marriage was based upon the mental weakness together with the undue influence exercised by the woman in the procurement of the marriage. In rendering the opinion the court says, after speaking of the mental infirmity: "I have no doubt but that the complainant availed herself of this imbecility of mind and the natural instincts which might prompt him to marry, either to induce him to propose marriage, or to propose it herself, with the expectation of securing his property to herself. There could have been no other motive on her part to enter into such a contract with such a man." So here it appears beyond cavil that Charles Orchardson entertained for this deluded old lady no single sentiment of affection or esteem, which must prompt every honorable marriage; and that he married her for her money and nothing else. "There could have been no other motive on his part to enter into such a contract with such a woman." Still less could Mrs. Merrick have entered into such a contract with such a man, had not her reason been dethroned. No one will suffer by the decree below, unless it be the wrongdoer himself. No right or interest of society demands that such a marriage should be upheld.

We think the chancellor rendered his decree in accordance with the law and the evidence upon both branches of the case, and it will accordingly be affirmed.

Carter, J., took no part.

Rehearing denied February 4, 1898.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

William E. DETLOR et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.

Upton HOLLAND.

(.....Ohio.....)

1. A conveyance of a mining right in lands was made as follows: "Do hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey to the said Michael L. Deaver, his heirs and assigns, forever, all the coal of every variety, and all the iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals, in, on, or under the following described premises: . . . together with the right in perpetuity to the said Michael L. Deaver, or his assigns, of mining and removing such coal, ore, or other minerals; and the said Michael L. Deaver, or his assigns, shall also have the right to the use of so much of the surface of the land as may be necessary for pits, shafts, platforms, drains, railroads, switches, sidetracks, etc., to facilitate the mining and removal of such coal, ore, or other minerals, and no more." Held, that such deed did not convey title to the petroleum oil and natural gas in the lands described in the deed.

2. A person in peaceable possession of real estate, under a defective deed, may have his title quieted by action, as against a stranger who makes claim to such real estate, but has no right or title thereto.

3. A written instrument was duly executed as follows: "Do hereby grant unto second party, their heirs and assigns, the sole right to produce petroleum and natural gas from the following named tract of land: . . . specifically granting to said second party, for and during the term of ninety (90) days from this date, and as much longer as oil or gas is found, operated, and produced in paying quantities, with the exclusive right to drill and operate oil and gas wells." Held, that such written instrument is not a lease of the lands, but only a grant of the sole right to produce petroleum and natural gas for the term mentioned; that the grant expired by its own limitation at the end of ninety days, unless within that time at least one well was drilled which produced oil or gas in paying quantities; and that, upon failure to drill one paying well within ninety days, there was no right to drill thereafter.

4. The term of the grant in such instrument having expired, and the grantees still claiming a right to drill under such grant, the grantor has a right to have his title quieted as against such claim, on the ground that the term of the grant has expired, without resorting to the law of forfeitures.

5. Under such an instrument, the sum paid as a consideration for the grant need not be returned in order to maintain an action to quiet title.

6. Expenses incurred by the grantees in drilling wells on the lands after the expiration of the grant, and after notice not to drill such wells, cannot be recovered from the grantor.

7. Such grant being made to four persons jointly, a notice addressed to all of them, to the effect that the grant has expired, and to keep off the premises, and served on one of them, is sufficient. In such case notice to one is notice to all.

(February 1, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Perry County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to quiet title to certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Burket, Ch. J.:

The action in the courts below was brought by Upton Holland, defendant in error, against William E. Detlor and others, plaintiffs in error, seeking to quiet title to 80 acres of land, the possession of which was in the plaintiff below, and the defendants below claimed some interest therein under two several oil and gas leases. The validity of one of the leases depends upon the construction to be placed upon a conveyance of a mining right in the same lands. Issues were joined involving the questions disposed of in the opinion. The material facts of the case, as shown by the record, are as follows:

Francis G. Deaver made a conveyance of a mining right in said lands to Michael L. Deaver, as follows: "Do hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey to the said Michael L. Deaver, his heirs and assigns, forever, all the coal of every variety, and all the iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals in, on, or under the following described premises: . . . together with the right in perpetuity to the said Michael L. Deaver, or his assigns, of mining and removing such coal, ore, or other minerals; and the said Michael L. Deaver, or his assigns, shall also have the right to the use of so much of the surface of the land as may be necessary for pits, shafts, platforms, drains, railroads, switches, side tracks, etc., to facilitate the mining and removing of such coal, ore, or other minerals, and no more." Afterwards Michael L. Deaver made and delivered an oil and gas lease of these lands to one James W. Taylor, claiming that he had title to the oil by virtue of the said mining right. James W. Taylor assigned this oil and gas lease to one of the defendants below, and said lease had not expired by limitation at the commencement of this action. After granting said mining right, Francis G. Deaver died, leaving two sons, one of full age and the other a minor, for whom a guardian was appointed in the state of Wisconsin, where they both resided. After the death of the father, the two sons, by separate deeds, conveyed the lands to Upton Holland, the plaintiff below. The deed from the son, who was a minor, is signed by himself and his guardian, but there is nothing to show any proceedings in any court authorizing the making of the deed, but Mr. Holland went into possession of the lands under said deeds, and has held the same ever since. The said conveyances and lease were all properly recorded. On the 28th day of May, 1893, Upton Holland and wife, and William E. Detlor and his associates, executed and entered into a written instrument as follows: "This said lease, made and entered into this 28th day of May, A. D. 1893, by and between Upton Hol-

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to forfeiture of oil and gas lease, see note to Evans v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co. (Ind.) 31 L. R. A. 673.

40 L. R. A.

land, party of the first part, and W. E. Detlor, James P. Lang, Henry Rosier, and William Rosier, parties of the second part, witnesseth that, in consideration of the covenants herein contained and by said second parties to be performed, do hereby grant unto second party, their heirs and assigns, the sole right to produce petroleum and natural gas from the following named tract of land situate in Monroe township, Perry county, Ohio, to wit: The northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section twenty-seven (27), township twelve (12), range fourteen (14), in said county, containing about forty acres (40), reserving five acres (5) around the buildings to be located by first party, and whereon there shall be no wells drilled by either party; specifically granting to said second party, for and during the term of ninety (90) days from this date, and as much longer as oil or gas is found, operated, and produced in paying quantities, with the exclusive right to drill and operate oil and gas wells, to lay and operate pipe line, the necessary rights of way over premises, the use of enough land on which to preserve the products of such wells, to erect such buildings as may be necessary to carry on such work, the right of sufficient gas and water from the premises to run the necessary engine, reserving to first party all wells now on said premises, the right to remove all machinery, buildings, and fixtures belonging to them, and the full rights to release and subdivide said premises. In consideration for which the second party covenants and agrees as follows: To use and occupy only so much of said lands as may be actually necessary for the purpose herein granted. (2) To complete one well in addition to the one already on the said premises in ninety (90) days from said date, unavoidable casualties excepted, and to continue to complete one well each succeeding ninety (90) days thereafter, until four (4) wells have been completed on said premises, provided that oil is found in paying quantities in such succeeding wells. (3) To pay said party of the first part one hundred dollars ($100) upon the delivery of this lease, and to pay said first party his attorney fees herein. (4) To pay all increase taxes by reason of such oil operations, and all damages to fences and growing crops. (5) To deliver to first party in pipe lines, free of charge, the one-eighth part of all the oil they may produce and save from said premises. (6) To pay first party for each well from which gas is obtained and marketed the sum of two hundred dollars ($200) per year, first payment to be made at Corning, Ohio, thirty (30) days after the sale of said gas; and thereafter yearly in advance at the same place, so long as sale of gas continues. Provided that, if second party shall violate any of the conditions of this lease on their part to be kept and performed, then this lease shall cease, terminate, and be void at the option of the first party, and all moneys paid hereon be forfeited to the party of the first part. It is understood by the second party hereto that one M. L. Deaver, claiming the oil and gas under premises prior to this date, leased the oil and gas to one J. W. Taylor. Said second party accepts this lease knowing said fact, and agrees to operate this land, and not to recognize said Deaver claim, and to pay all royalty to said first party as herein stipulated, and to protect said first party against any loss by reason of any litigation upon the part of said Deaver. In witness whereof we, the first and second parties, have hereunto set our hands the day and year above written." Said instrument was signed by all the parties, and was duly attested, and was acknowledged by the grantors, but was never recorded.

40 L. R. A.

After the expiration of ninety days, and after Mr. Holland had notified the grantees that the term of the grant had expired, they drilled one well on said lands, and thereafter drilled another well, but always refused to pay plaintiff below any royalty for oil produced, and denied his right to royalty, and claimed all the oil themselves under the James W. Taylor lease. All the wells were drilled without the consent of plaintiff below, and against his protest, both in writing and verbally. The grantees paid the $100 at the time the grant was delivered, and did not comply with any other condition of the lease. At the time said mining right was granted petroleum oil was produced in small quantities within 10 or 20 miles of these lands. The cause was tried in the circuit court on appeal, and the court stated its findings of facts and conclusions of law separately, and rendered a decree in favor of the plaintiff below, quieting his title to the lands as against the defendants below, and sustaining the right of the plaintiff below to the oil and gas in said lands. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and exceptions taken, and a bill of exceptions containing all the evidence was also allowed and made part of the record. Thereupon the defendants below filed their petition in this court, seeking the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court.

Messrs. Elwood Newberry, L. Tussing, and W. B. Loomis for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. T. M. Potter and Donahue, Spencer, & Donahue, for defendant in error:

A tenant is not permitted to dispute the title of his landlord, and when the relation of landlord and tenant is once established by an express act of the parties, the only objection that a tenant can make to his landlord's title is that it expired since the making of the lease, or had been transferred by sale on execution, or by operation of law.

Devacht v. Newsam, 3 Ohio, 59; Moore v. Beasley, 3 Ohio, 295; Merchants Nat. Bank v. Pomeroy Flour Co. 41 Ohio St. 552; Ensel v. Levy, 46 Ohio St. 255; Pennsylvania Co. v. Platt, 47 Ohio St. 366; Brown v. Dysinger, 1 Rawle, 408; Jackson, Brown, v. Ayers, 14 Johns. 224; Bertram v. Cook, 82 Mich. 518; Hughes v. Watt, 28 Ark. 158; Cook v. Creswell, 44 Md. 581; Hardy v. Akerly, 57 Barb. 148; Bedford v. Kelly, 61 Pa. 491; Bigler v. Furman, 58 Barb. 545.

If a person having a mere naked possession accepts a lease from one claiming ownership in order to save litigation, he cannot afterwards dispute the title of his lessor.

Bowditch v. Dubuque, 38 Iowa, 341; Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. 486, 21 L. ed. 779.

Plaintiffs in error expressly agreed to protect Holland against Deaver's claim.

This provision of the contract, even if the general law upon the subject did not apply, would forever estop plaintiffs in error from making any claim under Deaver's lease, or in any way object to Holland's title, unless they could show that his title had expired after the making of the lease, or had been transferred by sale on execution or operation of law.

Saltus v. Belford Co. 133 N. Y. 499; Hyatt v. Ingalls, 124 N. Y. 93.

A reservation by the grantors of a deed of "all minerals" does not include petroleum oil.

Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696; Schuykill Navigation Co. v. Moore, 2 Whart. 477; Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts, 34; Armstrong v. Lake Champlain Granite Co. 147 N. Y. 495.

If the plaintiffs in error failed to perform their covenants within a certain time, the defendant in error had a right at his option to end the term and determine their rights under it.

Wills v. Manufacturers' Natural Gas Co. 180 Pa. 232, 5 L. R. A. 603; Woodland Oil Co. v. Crawford, 55 Ohio St. 161, 34 L. R. A. 62; Edmonds v. Mounsey, 15 Ind. App. 399.

The $100 was paid for the privilege of drilling, which was granted them for ninety days from date of the instrument. If they did not drill then they were required to perform other conditions for such extra time, and they could not expect or require Holland to return the $100.

Phillips v. Coast, 130 Pa. 572; Ewalt v. Gray, 6 Watts, 427; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 779; 2 Kent, Com. 834-833; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 592, 745, 758, 762.

Burket, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

If the title to the oil in the land in dispute passed to Michael L. Deaver under the conveyance of the mining right from Francis G. Deaver, it is clear that plaintiffs in error acquired a right to the oil under the James W. Taylor lease, but, if the title to the oil did not vest in Michael L. Deaver under that conveyance, the James W. Taylor oil lease vested no right to the oil in plaintiffs in error, and they would be driven to some other defense.

The conveyance in question is what is usually known as a mining right, and grants and conveys all the coal of every variety, and all the iron ore, fire clay, and other valuable minerals in, on, or under the said lands. Do the words "other valuable minerals" include petroleum oil? The deed of the mining right was made in February, 1890, and it must be construed in the light of the oil developments as they then existed in the vicinity of the lands. Francis G. Deaver, the grantor in the mining right, resided in Wisconsin, and there is nothing to show that he had any knowledge of the existence of oil in or near these lands. Oil was then produced in small quantities within from 10 to 20 miles of the lands, but there is nothing to show that the parties to the conveyance had any knowledge thereof. Said mining right grants in perpetuity the right "of mining and removing such coal, ore or other minerals, . . . with the right to the use of so much of the surface of the land as may be necessary for pits, shafts, platforms, drains, railroads, switches, sidetracks, etc., to facilitate the mining and removal of such coal, ore, or other minerals, and no more." The incidents here granted are all such as peculiarly applicable to the mining of minerals in place, and not to such as are in their nature of a migratory character, such as oil or gas. Nothing is said about derricks, pipe lines, tanks, the use of water for drilling, or the removal of machinery used in drilling or operating oil or gas wells.

A rule of construction in such cases, which seems correct, is found in the following from the Law of Mines and Mining in the United States, by Barringer and Adams (p. 181): "In determining what is included in a lease, the familiar rules of construction are applied. The grant is construed most strongly against the grantor. The whole contract must be considered in arriving at the meaning of any of its parts. Terms are to be understood in their plain, ordinary, and popular sense, unless they have acquired a particular technical sense by the known usage of the trade. They are to be construed with reference to their commercial and their scientific import. This rule is of special importance when the question arises whether a specific mineral is included in a general designation." The words "other minerals," or "other valuable minerals," taken in their broadest sense, would include petroleum oil; but the question here is, Did the parties intend to include such oil in the mining right? Taking all the terms of the conveyance in the light of the surrounding circumstances, and in view of the above rule of construction, and upon authority of the case of Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696, we conclude that the title to the oil did not pass under said conveyance, but remained in the owner of the soil, and upon his death passed to his heirs. There is nothing to show that it was the intention of the parties that oil should be included in the word "minerals," and the easements granted, in connection with the mining right, are not applicable to producing oil, and show that oil was not intended to be included in the conveyance. If it had been, apt words would have been used to express such intention.

In the next place, it is urged by plaintiffs in error that the deed from the minor son and his guardian is not sufficient to pass title to one half of the land to defendant in error, and that therefore he is not the owner of that half, and has no right to have his title quieted thereto. This might possibly be so as between the minor son and the defendant in error, but, as between defendant in error and a stranger, such title, when strengthened with possession, is sufficient to support an action for the quieting of the title he has, even though such title should be only possessory. In an action to quiet title, if the plaintiff shows peaceable possession under a conveyance, even though defective, and the defendant shows no title or right, the plaintiff is entitled to have his title quieted as against such defendant and those claiming under him. It is also urged that the remedy sought by plaintiff below was by way of forfeiture of the rights of the defendants below under the written instrument, and that a forfeiture should be first established by action at law, and not by an equitable action to quiet title. The contract between the parties in this case was not a lease of the lands, but only a grant of the sole right to produce petroleum and natural gas for and during the term of ninety days from that date, and as much longer as oil or gas should be found, operated, and produced in paying quantities; and the parties to whom the grant was made covenanted to complete one well, in addition to the one already on said premises, in ninety days from said date, unavoidable casualties excepted. There were no casualties; hence the covenant was to complete one additional well in ninety days, the term of the grant. No additional well was drilled, or attempted to be drilled, within ninety days, and therefore, at the expiration of that time, the grant terminated by its own limitation. If one paying well had been completed within the ninety days, the grant would have been extended "as much longer as oil or gas is found, operated, and produced in paying quantities." But, where no well is drilled within the time limited by the grant, the period of the grant is not extended by the words, "and as much longer as oil or gas is found, operated, and produced in paying quantities," and in such cases all rights to drill cease at the expiration of the time limited in the grant, in this case at the expiration of ninety days. The plaintiffs in error having acquired no right to the oil under the James W. Taylor lease, and the grant to them for the production of oil having expired by its own limitation at the end of ninety days, they had no right whatever, as against the defendant in error; and, as they claimed some right, he was entitled to have his title quieted as against such unfounded claim, not by way of forfeiting the grant, but by reason of the expiration thereof by its own limitation. With this view of the case, the petition is broad enough to entitle the plaintiff below to have his title quieted without a resort to the law of forfeiture, although it would seem that, under the terms of the instrument, all the rights of the plaintiffs in error were forfeited by reason of the nonperformance of the covenants and conditions contained in the instrument.

It is further urged that the plaintiff below should pay back the $100 paid to him when the grant or lease was delivered. This sum was paid for the grant for the term of ninety days, and the grantees enjoyed the term without interruption, and the grantor has the right to retain and enjoy the price he received therefor. It is not a case of rescission or forfeiture, but of expiration of the term of the grant.

Again, it is urged that the plaintiff below should be compelled to pay to the defendants below the amounts expended by them in drilling wells on the land after the expiration of the grant, and after notice to them not to drill any wells on the land. The defendants below drilled the wells on the lands of the plaintiff against his will, and after full notice from him not to drill, and in such case they drilled at their peril, and at their own expense, and are not entitled to be reimbursed by the owner of the land.

Some objection is made to the form of the notice and its service. The notice was addressed to all the defendants below, and was served by delivery to one of them on the premises at the well which had been drilled at the time the grant was made, and informed them that the lease expired that day, and notified them to keep off the premises. This was sufficient, and showed that he relied upon expiration of term, and not upon forfeiture. The grant was to all four of the defendants below jointly, and a notice to one joint contractor is binding upon all. Baker v. Kellogg, 29 Ohio St. 663.

There is no error in the record, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

PEOPLE of the State of California, Respt.,

v.
Joseph J. EBANKS, Appt.

(117 Cal. 652.)

1. The mere fact that the order holding the accused to answer for a crime was

NOTE.—Hypnotism.

- I. Nature of subject.
- II. Definitions.
- III. Its existence and effect generally.
- IV. Its use in procuring the commission of crime.
- V. Its use in procuring submission to criminal acts or attacks.
- VI. Its use as an inquisitorial agent.
- VII. Its curative uses—propriety of restraint.

I. Nature of subject.

Hypnotism and its effect in law, though a question which has been much discussed, is one which has been but slightly considered by the courts, it having found its way into the reports of cases in 40 L. R. A.

dated October 4, when the arrest was made September 17, does not show that the committing magistrate had lost jurisdiction of the case by delay, for the examination may have been proceeded with immediately after the arrest and continued until the order was made.

2. Failure to show that a designated person was regularly appointed short-the higher courts, so far as has been ascertained, in but two instances, one of which was the principal case and the other the case of People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 168, set forth infra, at the end of VI. In this condition of affairs, therefore, it has been deemed permissible to look to the expressions of opinion by jurists, physicians, and scientists who have spoken on the subject to ascertain its legal effect, and, so far as may be, to supply the deficiency of judicial opinion thereon.

II. Definitions.

Hypnotism is defined to be artificial catalepsy; induced somnambulism; a method of artificially inducing sleep; artificial somnambulism. Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's edition, title, Hypnotism.

hand reporter to take the testimony of an accused before a committing magistrate will not support an assignment of error if it does not appear that he acted or reported the testimony or certified to it.

3. Addition of the state to the name of the district attorney who signs an information charging one with crime is not necessary.

4. California courts will take judicial notice that the county of San Diego is in that state.

5. Filing the sheriff's affidavit that he was biased, taken upon a challenge to a special venire summoned by him embodying facts brought out while the jury were excluded from the room, is not reversible error.

6. Separation of the jurors during the trial of a murder case may be permitted by the trial court in its discretion.

7. An elisor may be appointed to take charge of the jury when the sheriff and his deputies are disqualified, and the coroner is disabled by sickness from performing the duty.

8. Evidence is admissible in a prosecution for murder that two days before the murder the accused was found under the bed in a stranger's house having with him a bag which was afterwards found near the place of the crime, and which he had denied ever having in his possession, as tending to throw light upon his actions, appearance, and belongings at a period not remote from the day of the crime.

Hypnotism is defined by W. Xavier Sudduth, A.M. M. D., of Chicago in an article on "Hypnotism and Crime," in 18 Medico-Legal Journal, 239, to be in its simpler manifestations a modified form of natural sleep artificially induced, but in its more complex form it compares with the abnormal condition of natural sleep known as somnambulism.

And in the Case of Czyski reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Professor Dr. Grashey of Munich, called as an expert witness, said that a person can be suggested to go to sleep, and that such a sleep induced by suggestion is called "hypnosis," and the inducement of hypnosis is called "hypnotism," and the person who hypnotizes another is called a "hypnotizer."

In 51 Alb. L. J. 87, H. M. Bannister, M. D., of Chicago, in an article on "Hypnotic Influence in Criminal Cases," said that "conditions distantly related to or approaching it [hypnosis], but within physiological limits that may be manifested by anyone, ought not to be called hypnotism, or at least for legal purposes should be clearly distinguished from it."

III. Its existence and effect generally.

In Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Revision, title, Hypnotism, it was said that there is a very decided difference of opinion among American scientific men who have given special attention to the subject as to the effect of hypnotism, and the same difference appears to exist in a marked degree in European thought, and that it is impossible as yet to state any satisfactory conclusion from this diversity of opinion; and that there has as yet been no recognition of the subject of hypnotism by the courts notwithstanding the amount of discussion concerning it in the press.

And in the Case of Czyski, reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Doctor Fuchs of Donn, called as an expert witness, totally denied the power of hypnotism, and said that he did not consider it an instrument by which the human will could be controlled in a permanent or irresistible way.

And in 8 American Lawyer, 534, H. Gerald Chapin, LL. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism" arrived at the conclusion that hypnotism has no place in civil or criminal law, and that it should not be made use of for the purpose of eliciting testimony, and that laws need not be passed to restrain its exercise.

And he expressed the further opinion in the same article, that in cases in which documents have been set aside by the courts where hypnotism has been alleged to have been employed, it is thought that the case in each instance was decided upon a theory of a wholly different character; and said that the case brought before the civil tribunal of Lyons, France, in June, 1863, in which a widow died leaving a will in favor of a professional magnetist, who together with his wife had been harbored by her at her home for some time, in which it was 40 L. R. A.

claimed that they magnetized her, and in which it was reported that it was evident that the magnetist had complete control over her mind, and that he was able to suggest to her to make a will in his favor, there was nothing which would not permit the decision setting aside the instrument in question to be placed upon the theory of undue influence.

In 2 Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur. 452, however, it is said that like other theories and investigations received at first with ridicule, hypnotism has been placed on a sure scientific basis, thanks to the labors of Charcot and his successors; and that the great French experts in legal medicine, so far as known without an exception, Tardieu, Devergie, Brouardel, Vibert, Tourdes, and Tourette recognize the possibility that the will may be entirely abolished under hypnotic influence; and that hypnotism had found a place in French, Austrian, and Hungarian law, and must sooner or later creep into the Anglo-Saxon.

So, the committee of the British Medical Association on hypnotism at the Birmingham meeting, 1890, reported in 11 Medical Legal Journal, 73, stated that they had satisfied themselves of the genuineness of the hypnotic state, but that no phenomena which had come under the observation gave support to the theory of animal magnetism.

And in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 212, the writer expresses the opinion that all impressionable individuals can be hypnotized, but says that hypnotism for the present is of greater theoretical than practical importance both from a medical and a forensic point of view.

And in the Case of Czyski, reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Professor Grashey of Munich, called as an expert, said that "hypnosis has the peculiarity that it can be produced easier and easier as the operation is repeated, and that the subject frequently hypnotized remains more suggestible in the intervening time, and it thus follows that thoughts may be suggested during his waked condition which he would never have accepted before the hypnotic operations had begun, and the control of the subject's will may be undertaken therefore in a waked condition, and can be heightened by suggestions during the period of wakefulness, and thus the hypnotizer may attain finally such power over his subject that a single word or a single look may put him to sleep.

So, in 3 American Lawyer, 5, a case in the United States court at Tacoma, tried in July, 1894, was reported in which the plaintiff caused an important witness for the defendant to become confused in manner and in testimony, hesitating and uncertain in statement, by hypnotically making passes with his hands in the direction of the witness, which influence was destroyed by placing a person between the operator and the subject.

And in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 85, it was said that in a hypnotic condition, or one of exaggerated receptivity, an individual is very apt to make illu-

9. Whenever proof of one crime tends to prove a fact material in the trial of another such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice defendant in the eyes of the jury is immaterial.

10. There will be no reversal for cross-examination as to matters not testified to in chief if the examination in chief is not in the record, so that it does not appear whether the cross-examination was improper or not.

11. Hypnotism of a person accused of crime will not render evidence of statements made by him while under the influence admissible in his favor at his trial.

12. A member of a grand jury impaneled before the trial of a murder case, but which had adjourned to meet in the future, is not incompetent to act as a juror in the trial which is upon an information and has never been brought to the attention of the grand jury.

13. A separate appeal must be taken from a death warrant signed after judgment, to bring the question of its regularity before the appellate court.

14. Refusal of instructions the meaning of which is involved in doubt, or which are uncalled for in the case, is not reversible error if the instructions given upon that branch of the case are as favorable to the complaining party as the facts and the law would warrant.

(August 23, 1897.)

sional mistakes in identity, which would be out of the question under other circumstances.

IV. Its use in procuring the commission of crime.

There is the same conflict of opinion in the question whether hypnotism can be used as an agent in procuring the commission of crime—in other words, whether one can be compelled to commit a criminal act by hypnotic influence without criminal responsibility on his part.

Thus, in 1 Kansas City Bar Monthly, 20, in a paper read before the Kansas City Bar Association by J. C. Rosenberger, October 12, 1895, entitled "Has Hypnotism a Place in the Law," it was said that if a condition in which one can be driven by irresistible suggestions of another to the commission of an act which if he were in his normal condition he would not do can be produced by hypnotic suggestion, hypnotism is destined to become a full defense for crime, otherwise it has no place at all in criminal jurisprudence except as a fact of extenuation, or a mere mitigating circumstance according to the degree of dominion exercised over the subject; but that the medical profession is badly divided upon the question whether one can be driven by the irresistible suggestion of another to the commission of acts which if he were in his normal state he would not do.

In the Case of Czynski reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Professor Grashey of Munich, called as an expert witness, said: "The potentiality of putting a man so promptly and so rapidly to sleep is not reconcilable with the assumption of free-will power, and rather presupposes a condition of unfreedom of will."

And in Albany Law Journal of October 6, 1894, it was said editorially that "from the legal standpoint it is certain that in the minds of jurors, at least, a practical demonstration of the power of hypnotism will raise a reasonable doubt such as would entitle the defendant to an acquittal at the hands of the jury."

So, in 51 Alb. L. J. 87, H. M. Bannister, M. D., Chicago, said in an article upon "Hypnotic Influence in Criminal Cases" that it may perhaps be admitted as a possibility that crimes may be provoked in the hypnotic subject in the actual condition of trance, though in many cases and probably in the vast majority this would be impossible, and that immoral or improper acts might also be done under suggestion by those who would refuse to commit actual crime, and that any strong natural propensity might be stimulated so that improper acts growing out of such propensity would be more likely to be committed or submitted to.

And in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 212, it was said that suggestions made with evil intent during the waking state are still of far greater importance than those issued to a hypnotized individual.

So, in Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, 107, it is said that in 1895 Hayward was hanged in St. Paul, Minnesota, accused of having induced Blitz by hypnotic suggestions to murder Miss Ging. Blitz was sent to the penitentiary for life.

And in the Case of Czynski, reported and commented upon in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Czynski was tried in the higher courts of Munich, Bavaria, on the charge of having had recourse to hypnotic suggestions in order to win the affections of a woman of high social position, and obtain her consent to live with him in criminal intimacy, and subsequently to marry him, after he had subjected her to his will imposed upon her by his power of hypnotism, and was convicted upon the charge, and sentenced to imprisonment after a protracted trial.

And in the Bompard-Eyraud Case, tried in France and reported in H. Gerald Chapin's article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," 3 American Lawyer, 585, Eyraud was murdered in apartments hired for the purposes by one M. Gouffe, the woman Gabrielle Bompard, his mistress, acting as the decoy. The woman alleged that she was hypnotized to do the act by M. Gouffe, but was convicted and sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment.

But in 18 Crim. L. Mag. 100, it was said editorially that there are few cases in which the hypnotized subject will not refuse to do a wrong act or to submit to a wrong, no matter if it be suggested, and that scoundrelism cannot flourish on hypnotism, and the case of the murder of Miss Ging, and the confession of Hayward, and the statements of Blitz that he was hypnotized by Hayward to kill Miss Ging has been investigated, and found to be mostly false, and that while it is not safe to assert that crime never was or can be committed with the aid of hypnotism, experience has taught that such a case is highly improbable.

And in 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 54, it was said by Clark Bell, Esq., of New York, in an article on "Hypnotism and the Law," with reference to the case of the murder of Catharine Ging, that "it would be quite outside of any legal experience to accept, as entitled to any credit, the waking story of murder committed by the accused while under hypnotic influence. Such statements should be entitled to no credit, and I know of no authority which would justify the position that the subject, on awakening from a hypnotic trance, could remember all or relate anything done while under hypnotic influence, and it would be a very unsafe proposition of law in regard to testimony to place a witness in a hypnotic trance, and to accept as truth the statements of events that he in that state described as having occurred at a previous time."

And the same statement was made by the same person in 18 Crim. L. Mag. 1.

And in 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 241, it was said, in an article on "Hypnotism and Crime," by W. Xavier Sudduth, M. D., of Chicago, who attended the Hayward-Blitz-Ging trial in order to make a psychological study of the principal in the case,

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Diego County convicting him of murder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. S. Callen for appellant.

Messrs. W. F. Fitzgerald, Attorney General, and Henry E. Carter for respondent.

Searls, C., filed the following opinion:

The defendant, Joseph Japhet Ebanks, was charged by information with the murder of Harriet Stiles at the county of San Diego, state of California, on the 10th day of September, 1895, and upon a trial had under said information was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death. Defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant moved to set aside the information upon the grounds: (1) That before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate. (2) That it was not subscribed by the district attorney of the county of San Diego, state of California.

The record shows that a complaint was filed with the justice, a warrant issued, the defendant arrested, and committed for examination on the 17th day of September, 1895. The order holding the defendant to answer for the crime of murder is dated October 4, 1895. The that Hayward undoubtedly possessed a strong influence over Blitz, but the latter never claimed it was hypnotic, and that plea never was made in defense. That Hayward hired Blitz to do the deed for $2,500, and when he found that his courage was failing drugged him with whisky in order to nerve him up to doing the deed.

But in 18 Crim. L. Mag. 1, Clark Bell, Esq., in an article on hypnotism in the criminal courts said with reference to the Bompard Case that the writer was of the opinion that the general impression of scientists agreed that hypnotic suggestion entered largely into the crime itself.

So, in 1 Kansas City Bar Monthly, 20, in a paper read before the Kansas City Bar Association by J. C. Rosenberger, October 12, 1895, entitled "Has Hypnotism a Place in the Law," it was said that the only kind of hypnotism which could at all affect the question of criminal responsibility is that by which the individual is deprived of intelligent consciousness, and can be driven by the irresistible suggestions of another to the commission of the act which if he were in his normal state he would not do.

And in 51 Alb. L. J. 87, H. M. Bannister, M. D., Chicago, said in an article upon "Hypnotic Influence in Criminal Cases" that hypnotism as a plea in criminal cases should be especially distrusted and the benefit of any reasonable doubt ought to be given to the party accused of instigating the crime, and that the greatest danger of the plea of hypnotism in criminal cases, if it is to become a popular or frequent one, is that of false accusation, and the escape of an occasional criminal is an unimportant miscarriage of justice when compared with that of the conviction of an innocent individual.

And in 3 American Lawyer, 45, it was said editorially that "Judges should remember that when they admit testimony of hypnotic control they are entering upon a path the end of which cannot at this day be seen. We do not think the courts will find it difficult with no increase of legislation to place legal responsibility where it belongs. We are glad that hypnotism as a legal defense, or, as the sole moving cause of offense, has as yet received no recognized standing in our jurisprudence."

So in Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, 106, it was said that it has not yet been proved that an innocent person could be influenced by hypnotic suggestion of another to commit crime, and the presumption remains that anyone who commits a crime through hypnotism or other suggestions is fully capable of so doing, and without such prompting, and that the act is one consistent with his disposition, and that the suggestion would have been resisted had the person been disinclined to the offense naturally, and the question is open as to whether such a hypnotized criminal is not a principal, or at least a particeps criminis.

And in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 212, it was said 40 L. R. A.

that no serious crime has ever been committed in obedience to hypnotic suggestion, and efforts to prove hypnotic influences in recent French trials have utterly failed, and that there is every probability that the instigator to such a crime could be easily detected of the subject when re-hypnotized by a competent person, as in the hypnotic state information or hints would be given which would lead to discovery, though in the interval between such states the subject would be ignorant of everything that had occurred.

And in 1 Kansas City Bar Monthly, 20, in a paper read before the Kansas City Bar Association by J. C. Rosenberger, October 12, 1895, entitled "Has Hypnotism a Place in the Law" it was said that when we consider the difficulty of proving the defense of hypnotism by direct evidence and the fact that no one can be hypnotized against his will, added to the natural prejudice against innovation, it may safely be said that the time is far off when an ordinary jury can be convinced that an accused malefactor was the unwilling agent of the evil enterprise of another.

So, in 18 Crim. L. Mag. 1, Clark Bell, Esq., in an article on hypnotism in the criminal courts, said: "Whatever may be the facts of the case it is beyond all doubt that the phenomena of the hypnotic trance, and of so-called hypnotic suggestions, are not recognized as an existing fact by the great majority of lawyers at all, and probably not by the majority of the judges."

And Hon. C. D. O'Brien of St. Paul is quoted in "Hypnotism and Crime," 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 29, as saying that the law does not recognize the existence of the hypnotic condition, and that he does not think it ever will recognize it as a defense to a criminal act.

And Judge Seagrave Smith of Minneapolis, who presided at the Hayward trial, is quoted in that article as saying that he does not consider hypnotism as a proper or fitting defense in a criminal action.

And Thomas J. Hudson, Esq., of the Washington bar, author of the "Psychic Phenomena," is quoted therein as saying "that hypnotism has no legitimate place in criminal jurisprudence, and that while a criminal hypnotized in control of a criminal subject could undoubtedly procure the commission of a crime under exceptionally favorable circumstances, it would not be a legal defense on the grounds: (a) Because in the nature of things a hypnotized subject can have no standing in a court of justice as a witness; (b) the cross-examination of a subject as to the nature and extent of the suggestions made to him by the hypnotizer would be quite impossible and absurd."

And in 3 American Lawyer, 535, it was said by H. Gerald Chapin, LL. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," that as it is almost impossible that anything said or done while in the hypnotic state should be remembered in the post-hypnotic state, the very fact that the defense of contention is that it does not appear that the defendant was given an examination until said last-mentioned date, and hence that the justice lost jurisdiction of the case. The record shows that at the hearing of the motion to set aside the information, among other things, the depositions of the witnesses taken upon the preliminary examination of the defendant were in evidence, but they are not set out in the record, and when they were taken does not appear; non constat, but that the justice may have entered upon the examination immediately after the 17th day of September, and continued to conduct the same until October 4, the date of the commitment. It is further objected that there is no evidence that any shorthand reporter was appointed to take the evidence at the preliminary examination, except the certificate of the reporter himself.

I find no such certificate in the record, and no evidence that a shorthand reporter was appointed or acted, except that in the judgment roll, under the head of "Proceedings in the Superior Court of November 21, 1895," the following entry: "The following appears by the transcript thereof filed in the superior court, to wit: . . . Fred H. Robinson is appointed to act as shorthand reporter." Counsel refers to folio 210 of the record in support of his contention, but folio 210 in the transcript hypnotism is interposed constitutes evidence of its falsity; and that subjects of hypnotism usually try to find reasons for the most foolish suggested acts, and that hypnotism would be the last reason which the subject would assign as the defense therefor, because in case it had been suggested to him that the deceased had attempted to murder him he would under all probability insist upon the existence of that fact and not that he had been hypnotized, and had he simply been ordered to do the act some reason other than that of hypnotism would have been given by him, so that the very fact that he set up hypnotism as a defense shows that the crime was committed entirely of his own volition.

So, in 15 Medico-Legal Journal, 254, Carl Sextus, in an article on "Different Forms of Hypnotism," read before the psychological section of the Medico-Legal Society, November 12, 1897, said "that . . . [a hypnotized person] cannot be made to do that which is against his character or ethics, or anything that it was impossible to make him do under general daily conditions, without the aid of suggestion or magnetism. Because if that which he is suggested to do should be something that his whole nature and soul revolt against, the experiment will fail and the influence of the experimentalist will be at an end."

In "The Arena," vol. 18, pp. 548, 549, Marion L. Dawson, B.L., in an article on "Hypnotism in its Scientific and Forensic Aspects" expressed the opinion that hypnotism cannot be induced without the knowledge and against the will of the individual, and asserts that the power of hypnotic suggestion for immoral or criminal purposes, broadly speaking, depends upon the moral tendency of the hypnotized subject.

A hypnotized person will obey when acts commanded do not antagonize the moral standard he has set up for himself; but criminal or immoral suggestions meet the auto-suggestion arising from his own conscience, and confusion results. W. Xavier Sudduth, A. M. M. D., of Chicago, in "Hypnotism and Crime," 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 230.

So, in 3 American Lawyer, 535, it was said by H. Gerald Chapin, LL. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," that there is no doubt concerning the power of auto-suggestion to successfully resist the command of a stranger, and that subjects with a strong abhorrence of the ridiculous will refuse to commit an undignified act although it be suggested in the most forcible manner; and that many attempts have been made to obtain from members of an order or society secrets relating thereto, and not in a single instance have they succeeded; and that it is a well-known fact that persons opposed to the use of intoxicating liquors cannot be compelled to drink a glass of brandy while in a state of hypnosis.

And in the case of Czyski reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 150, Dr. Fuchs of Donn, called as an 40 L. R. A.

expert therein, said that hypnotism could not succeed with any person who had a feeling of serious responsibility, and that no one would succeed in inducing one who simulated disease to relinquish such simulation.

And in 51 Alb. L. J. 187 H. M. Bannister, M. D., Chicago, in an article upon "Hypnotic Influence in Criminal Cases," it was said that in a vast majority of cases, if not in all, the efficiency of post-hypnotic suggestion depends entirely upon the belief of the subject in some mysterious power exercised over him by the operator, and that if moral impulses are strong there is very little probability of its being effective for evil. It is, at best, not equal to the profounder sentiments of our nature.

And in 3 American Lawyer, 535, it was said by H. Gerald Chapin, LL. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," that in numberless cases the hypnotized subject who performs acts at the command of the hypnotizer has admitted that he knew at the time of performing them that the suggestion was false, but obeyed with the imagined object of pleasing the hypnotizer.

So, in 27 Chicago Legal News, 65, it was said editorially that the main test of moral responsibility in cases of hypnotism would lie in the inquiry whether the person hypnotized realized, when himself, that in submitting to hypnotism he became the passive tool of another person, and that if such knowledge existed, in voluntarily surrendering his own reason and will he should be held to the same accountability as if he had voluntarily abdicated his normal mentality and made himself a prey of frenzied passion through intemperate indulgence in drink; and that it would be legitimate to charge a jury, where hypnotism was alleged as a defense, that although they found that the defendant was actually unconscious of his act at the time of its commission, yet if they found that he had actual knowledge or reasonable grounds to infer that a hypnotist contemplated the commission of a crime, and nevertheless submitted himself to his dominion, he would be legally responsible as an accomplice.

And in 3 American Lawyer, 535, it was said by H. Gerald Chapin, LL. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," that hypnotism is not something that can be forced upon a person, and therefore, one, who, knowing that while in a state of hypnosis he may be compelled to commit crime, voluntarily suffers himself to be placed in that condition, may be supposed to have anticipated all consequences of his act, and agreed to become responsible for them, and this would apply to a case in which it was suggested by the hypnotist that a false state of facts existed which would, if true, justify the commission of the offense.

So, in "The Arena," vol. 18, p. 554, it was said by Marion L. Dawson, B. L., in an article on "Hypnotism in its Scientific and Forensic Aspects," that if the subject voluntarily permits himself to is a blank. If, however, it be true that Robinson was not appointed reporter in the justice court, we fail, in the absence of proof that he acted or reported the testimony, or certified thereto, to see how error can be predicated thereon. The further objection that the information was not properly signed by the district attorney is without merit. The information is entitled, "In the superior court of the county of San Diego, state of California." In the body of the information it is charged that the defendant "at the said county of San Diego, in the said state of California," etc., and it is signed by "A. H. Sweet, District Attorney of the said county of San Diego." The objection is that the officer omitted the words "the state of California" after the words "county of San Diego." Section 809 of the Penal Code requires that the information shall be "subscribed by the district attorney," but does not require him to add to his signature the name of the county or of the state. In People v. Ashnauer, 47 Cal. 98, the district attorney signed an indictment "Henry Starr, District Attorney," without adding the name of the county, and it was held sufficient. The courts will take judicial notice that the county of San Diego is in the state of California. Humboldt County v. Dinsmore, 75 Cal. 604. The motion to set aside the information and the demurrer thereto, for like and other causes, were both properly overruled.

At the trial the regular panel of jurors drawn having been exhausted without securing a sufficient number of competent jurors, a special venire issued to the sheriff, commanding him to summon additional persons to act as jurors. Counsel for defendant interposed a be placed in a state of mental irresponsibility the well-settled principle of law that a person cannot take advantage of his own misconduct would govern in case of his violation of the law while in that condition.

But in 27 Chicago Legal News, 65, it was said editorially that "evidence of any knowledge the patient may have acquired, when in her normal condition, of general or particular criminal purposes, on the part of her hypnotizer would be material [in a prosecution in which hypnotism is claimed in defense as], it might be too harsh to apply the analogy from drunkenness to the case of a person who was without any ground for suspicion of criminal motives—one, for instance, who submitted to a hypnotist in a jesting spirit, or out of curiosity, or for supposed medical treatment."

So, merely showing that a woman who committed a homicide was told to kill the deceased by her husband, and that she subsequently did it, does not prove hypnotism, or, at least, does not tend to establish a defense to a charge of murder. People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 186.

And testimony as to the effect of hypnotism upon those subject to such influence is not admissible in a criminal prosecution in which the crime was alleged to have been committed under the influence of hypnotic suggestion, where there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant was subject to the disease if it be such. People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 186.

V. Its use in procuring submission to criminal acts or attacks.

In 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 541, 542, it was said that hypnosis might be used as a means to prevent resistance to sexual approach; but all cases in which accusations are made upon this basis should be scrutinized with the greatest caution. In such a case it may not be difficult to prove whether or not the female was amenable to hypnosis or to detect malingering, but it may be impossible to show that she was in an hypnotic state at the time of the alleged sexual assault; and testimony given by the subject should be corroborated by more objective evidence than alleged perceptions of events during such an abnormal state of consciousness.

So, in 2 Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur. 434, 435, a case is cited as given by Bellanger in which the sexual relations of a doctor and his patient were kept up only during the hypnotic state, and knowledge of the conditions of affairs was finally revealed to the patient's mother in one of the seances. And it was said that lethargy and catalepsy are favorable to criminal purposes, since the girl is absolutely without power to resist, and attention was called to the cases reported by Auban and Rowx in 1865, in which rape was repeated in ucceeding states, and to cases collected by Tourette in Le Vail dans Hypnotisme, Ann. d'Hyg. 1886, in which several of the victims were virgins whose deforation was followed by the usual pain and bleeding, and in two cases pregnancy resulted.

And in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 38, it was said that it is possible to induce various hallucinations by hypnotic suggestion, and in women they not unrarely have a sexual relation.

So, in 2 Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur. 454, a case is reported in which a girl, after visiting a therapeutic hypnotizer daily for some time found herself pregnant, and on examination her pregnancy dated from the time of her visits. But no mention was made of the fact that impregnation might have been the result of intercourse between the visits, citing Devergie in Gaz. Med. de Paris & Edin. Monthly Journal, 1860, vol. 2, p. 561.

And in "The Arena," vol. 18, p. 549, in an article by Marion L. Dawson, B. L., on "Hypnotism in Its Scientific and Forensic Aspects," the Castilian case reported by Prosper Despine is referred to in which hypnotic influence was supposed to have been exerted over a female subject for an immoral purpose, and in which the defendant was convicted and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary.

And in the case of the dentist Levy, in the Rouen Assizes (1878), the dentist was convicted of rape on a young woman in the dentist's chair upon her testimony as to her subsequent condition, and that of the dentist that the intercourse took place with her consent, and the report of the medical examiners that the state of nervous sleep really existed, and that a girl might be violated while her will is abolished by this means. 2 Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur. 453.

So, in a case reported in 15 Medico-Legal Journal, 266, a girl aged twenty years claimed to have been kidnapped, taken to the woods, stripped of part of her clothing, and tied to a tree, where she was found the next morning, and four young men were charged with the crime and arrested and convicted, but a new trial was granted, and they were subsequently convicted of sending improper letters to her which determination was also set aside; subsequently she made a sworn confession that her testimony was false, and that the letters were written by her guardian and others for the purpose of convicting the young men, but when this confession became known she was taken to a newspaper office by the guardian and there denied ever having made it, and also denied the confession when again brought into court, though it was witnessed by four prominent and trustworthy citizens, the guardian being present when the denials were made. Subsequently she escaped from the guardian's residence, and declared that the confessions challenge to the panel under this special venire, upon the ground of the sheriff being disqualified by reason of bias, etc. The challenge was traversed by the district attorney. All the jurors, including those accepted and those summoned under the special venire, were excluded from the court room, and testimony taken; the sheriff testifying to facts clearly showing him to have been biased, and to having had and expressed an unqualified opinion, etc.; whereupon the people confessed the challenge, and the court directed an affidavit to be made by the sheriff, embodying the substance of his testimony as given, which was verified and filed, the challenge sustained, and a venire issued to the coroner.

Defendant objected to filing the affidavit, moved to strike it out, and predicates error on the action of the court in refusing so to do. It would seem to the ordinary mind that, defendant having secured the only object of his challenge, it could matter but little to him as to the form in which the facts appeared of record, where, as here, the jurors were not present, and he could by no possibility be injured by the testimony or affidavit. Conceding, therefore, without deciding, that filing the affidavit was an irregularity, it was one which did not injure the defendant, and affords no ground for reversal. Penal Code, § 1258.

During the progress of the trial, the court, upon the several adjournments from day to day, after admonishing the jurors, as provided by § 1122 of the Penal Code, permitted them to separate, and this is assigned as error. This was a matter resting in the discretion of the court, and was not error. Penal Code, § 1121.

The next error assigned is as follows: "The were absolutely true, and said that he had such an influence over her that she was 'helpless to do otherwise than as he told her to do.

In 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 254, W. Xavier Sudduth said, in an article on "Hypnotism and Crime," however, that hypnosis would be no plea in defense of rape, because a truly virtuous woman would resent the least approach toward familiarity in the hypnotic state, even as she would in the waking condition, and if the immoral suggestions were persisted in it would awaken her, but that intercourse might be had with a courtesan in a hypnotic state, and that she might be led to believe that the act was done by a perfectly innocent person, but that anyone who should allege seduction in a hypnotic condition would proclaim herself an immoral person.

And in 13 Medico-Legal Journal, 241, Dr. H. A. Parkyn of Chicago, who was present when the Briggs-Pickins case occurred, is quoted, in an article by W. Xavier Sudduth of Chicago on "Hypnotism and Crime," as saying that this case was one of hysteria, or of original sin. That when the Briggs girl and her girl companion first returned after their two days' absence nothing was said about hypnotism; but when people began to talk about and shun them they found it necessary to hunt up an excuse for their absence, and to account for their presence in the place where they were found. That the Briggs girl knew something of hypnotism, and was shrewd, sentimental, and hysterical, and that she may have imagined the commission of a crime during a hysterical moment, or she may have concocted the story to screen her part in the case, and that no one who knows anything about the case now believes that hypnotism had anything to do with it.

In 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 542, it was said that the hypnotic state is one pre-eminently hallucinatory, and therefore prone to originate false ideas, especially in the hypnotic subject, and that for this reason there can be no excuse for the induction of the hypnotic condition in a female by a man without the presence of witnesses.

VI. Its use as an inquisitorial agent.

In Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Revision, title, Hypnotism, it was said that the use of hypnotism as an inquisitorial agent is permitted by the law in Holland, citing 95 Law Times, 500.

And in 2 Witthaus & Becker, Med. Jur. 454, it was said that in hypnotism there is a complete loss of memory of events which take place during sleep, on waking. The memory recurs in succeeding states, however, so that the crime must be described while the subject is under hypnotic influence at some subsequent date.

And a case is reported in 15 Medico-Legal 40 L. R. A.

Journal, 208, taken from the American Journal of Insanity, 1848, in which a man was accused by a hysteric lunatic of an attempt to murder her; she was hypnotized and her narration of the story during the hypnotic state varied decidedly from that given in the conscious state, and the mesmerizer was permitted to testify to such facts.

In 3 American Lawyer, 535, it was said by H. Gerald Chapin, L.L. B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," however, that the condition of the subject during hypnosis is almost identical with natural sleep, and that therefore the general rule of law that statements during sleep are not receivable in evidence should apply, and that hypnotism should not be made use of for the purpose of eliciting testimony.

This is the view adopted by the principal case.

And in 51 Alb. L. J. 87, H. M. Bannister, M. D., in an article upon "Hypnotic Influence in Criminal Cases," said that when an individual is fully in the hypnotic condition he can be made to say anything, and even honest questioning may act as false suggestion, and that therefore any confession or admission made by hypnotized persons ought to be legally excluded; that susceptibility to suggestion, even to the extent of affecting bodily functions, does not necessarily imply the hypnotic condition, though the difference is to some extent one of degree only; this must be remembered in considering or estimating the value of testimony.

VII. Its curative uses—propriety of restraint.

Hypnotism may influence some patients to anaesthesia, so that surgical operations can be performed without pain, but such possibilities are rare, or it would come into more general use, Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, p. 107.

And faith healers, Christian Scientists, and others, who sufficiently impress the imagination, occasionally effect cures of minor ailments, but all organic troubles are beyond the reach of such means of cure, as is also the loss of an eye or an amputated leg. Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, p. 107.

And in the report of the committee on hypnotism of the British Medical Association at the Birmingham meeting, 1890, reported in 11 Medico-Legal Journal, 73, it was said that the committee was of the opinion that as a therapeutic agent hypnotism is frequently effective in relieving pain, procuring sleep, and alleviating many functional ailments, as to its permanent efficacy in the treatment of drunkenness the evidence before the committee is encouraging, but not conclusive.

So, in 15 Medico-Legal Journal, 367, Thomas Bassett Keyes, M. D., of Chicago, in an article entitled "Criminality and Degeneracy; Its Treatment by jury retire in charge of B. P. Hill, elisor. See folio 277. The minutes of the clerk and the records fail to show any disqualification of the coroner." Had the learned counsel turned to folios 274, 275, he would have seen that an affidavit was filed, showing that by reason of sickness the coroner was physically unable to perform the duty of coroner, that the sheriff and his deputies were disqualified therefrom, and that therefore Benjamin P. Hill was appointed an elisor, to take charge of the jury, etc. Under the circumstances this was entirely proper.

At this point, and to the end that some of the objections taken to the introduction, and refusal by the court to permit the introduction, of evidence may be the better understood, it is necessary to state the more salient facts in the case. On the 6th day of September, 1895, Leroy R. Stiles, aged sixty-five years, his wife, Harriet Stiles, aged sixty years, and J. B.

Borden, the father of Mrs. Stiles, aged eighty-five years, all residents of Riverside, went to the ocean beach about 15 miles above Ocean-side, in the county of San Diego, for a week's recreation. They were camped in a tent on the beach. On the morning of the 10th day of September, 1895, Mr. Stiles, accompanied by Mr. Borden, left Mrs. Stiles at the tent, and went up the beach a distance of say 1½ miles, Mr. Stiles fishing as he went along, and Borden accompanying him. While fishing Mr. Stiles saw two men on the bluff above him, who were going south down the coast toward his tent, and soon after called the attention of Borden to the fact, and advised the latter to return to the tent, as the strangers might frighten or annoy Mrs. Stiles. Mr. Borden started for the tent, which was not in sight from Stiles' position. Some time later, and probably about 10:30 A. M., Mr. Stiles started back for his camp, and on reaching the tent Surgery and Hypnotism," recommended hypnotism as a cure for dipsomania and sexual perversion, supporting his recommendation with the opinions of numerous medical men, and said that "by the use of proper hypnotic suggestions we may train the mind on a correct basis and lead the thoughts in a proper channel, while unhealthy and criminal thoughts may be softened, deadened, and obliterated, and thus by proper hypnotic suggestions, fearful passions may be ameliorated. The weakness of character of the occasional criminal may be strengthened. The unresisting desire of the criminal insane or kleptomaniac may be reversed to repulsion. Under hypnotism we may teach and even bring the criminal to religious views in truthfulness, honesty, and uprightness."

Hypnotic suggestions, however, accomplish nothing with the insane. Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, p. 1002.

But there is a difference of opinion as to the harmfulness of hypnotism; it is probable that it harms some and does not so affect others; at any rate there is enough danger to make considerable caution necessary, particularly as to repetitions. Clevinger, Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity, p. 107.

The fully developed hypnotic state implying a marked disturbance of consciousness and personality is an abnormal one, and may have serious physical results on the subject. H. M. Bannister, M. D., of Chicago, in 51 Alb. L. J. 87.

And in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Revision, title, Hypnotism, it was said that the consensus of medical opinion would seem to be in favor of regulation of hypnotism.

So, in the report of the committee on hypnotism of the British Medical Association at the Birmingham meeting, 1890, reported in 11 Medico-Legal Journal, 78, it was said that damages in the use of hypnotism may arise from the want of knowledge, carelessness, or intentional abuse, or from too continuous repetition of suggestions in unsuitable cases, and that in their opinion when used for therapeutic purposes its employment should be confined to qualified medical men; and they expressed their strong disapprobation of public exhibitions of hypnotic phenomena, and the hope that some legal restrictions will be placed upon them.

And in the case of Spurgeon Young, reported in 14 Medico-Legal Journal, 529, the coroner of Chautauqua county, who was also the health officer of Jamestown, New York, held an inquest with a jury to inquire into the cause of Young's death and how far it was due to or traceable to his condition as affected by repeatedly placing him in a hypnotic state by hypnotizers who were not skilled. The jury, after hearing the answers of numerous medical experts to hypothetical questions involving the facts, returned a verdict of death from diabetes and nervous exhaustion caused by hypnotic practices upon him for several months prior to his death, his body having been suspended between two chairs while under hypnotic influence, the back of his head resting on one chair and his feet upon another without other support, and that while so suspended a person weighing at least 180 pounds sat upon him, and that he had also while under such influence been carried through the various stages of intoxication and delirium tremens and other hypnotic feats, and recommended that the state legislature pass a law prohibiting the practice of hypnotism.

In Russia no physician can hypnotize except in the presence of two others; and in Prussia public exhibitions of hypnotism are forbidden; and in France the use of hypnotic suggestion is limited to the medical profession. Marion L. Dawson, B. L., in "Hypnotism in Its Scientific and Forensic Aspects," in The Arena, vol. 18, p. 564.

So, in 2 Hamilton, Legal Med. 212, it was said that the possibility of the commission of crime under hypnotic suggestion cannot be denied, and that the practice of hypnotism should therefore be limited by law, and public exhibitions should be entirely prohibited.

Legislation regulating the use of hypnotism and prohibiting its illegitimate exercise has been passed in Russia, France, Italy, and Switzerland, but in the United States the great majority of the profession is inclined to be skeptical, and is waiting for further proof. J. S. Rosenberger, in 1 Kansas City Bar Monthly, 17.

In 3 American Lawyer, 535, however, H. Gerald Chapin, LL.B., in an article on "The Forensic Aspect of Hypnotism," arrived at the conclusion that no laws need be passed to restrain the exercise of hypnotism, and said that it would seem to be better to place it within the same category as intoxicating liquors or explosives. Any person may purchase or own them, he is only to be held accountable for the manner of their use.

And in The Arena, vol. 18, p. 564, it was said by Marion L. Dawson, B. L., in an article on "Hypnotism in Its Scientific and Forensic Aspects," that before the medical profession can reasonably claim any right to the sole use of psychic phenomena it should be required to show that physicians are better qualified than other scientists to use the power for the benefit of the afflicted, and less liable to employ it for injurious purposes. F. H. B.

found Mrs. Stiles and her father, Borden, both dead in the tent. The death of Borden was caused by two bullet wounds, one in the head and the other in the left breast; and the body of Harriet Stiles showed that she had received three wounds, which were caused by two bullets. An autopsy showed that one bullet had passed through the body of Borden, through a gunny sack upon which he was lying, and was found in the sand under him. Another bullet had passed through a cot which was in the tent. The wounds and the bullet found indicated that they were fired from a 45-caliber Colt's revolver. The testimony connecting the defendant with the murder was circumstantial, and, as is frequently the case where circumstantial evidence is relied upon to convict, consisted of a long chain of circumstances. Defendant made a statement after his arrest to the officers, and was also a witness in his own behalf. According to his own testimony he had resided in San Diego in the summer of 1895, and had become interested in religious subjects, and in July of that year he went from San Diego, in part on foot, in part by rail, and in part by wagon, in the vicinity of Downey, to attend a camp meeting of Adventists, Salvationists, or some other religious sect. He seems to have spent his time at Downey and in that vicinity until about the 6th of September, with the exception of a trip to San Pedro, where he worked nearly a week, and then returned to Fullerton, a town or village a few miles from Downey, Anaheim, etc. He had made the acquaintance of an aged member of the society holding the camp meeting, by the name of Adams, who resided in Fullerton, and who permitted him to sleep in a room in his house when in town. When he left Fullerton, two pistols, which had been left in the room occupied by him, one a large white-handled Colt's revolver of 45-caliber, and the other a smaller one, a cartridge belt with ammunition in it, a dagger, two shirts, all of which belonged to R. F. Gibson, were missing. The larger revolver and the shirts had the initials of the owner, R. F. G., marked upon them. A coat and a few other things were taken from the same room at the same time. Defendant testified and admitted that for the last few nights he occupied the room in Adams' house, also spoken of as the Adams & Baxter house; he was excessively drunk, and knew little or nothing of what occurred. Admitted that he had a faint recollection of taking and pawning or selling the smaller revolver, and that a day or two later he found himself on his way toward San Diego with the coat, but denied emphatically the taking or possession of the large white-handled revolver, or that he had any revolver, or that he had a flour sack in which he carried clothes or other things, but averred that he did have a bundle in a white handkerchief or handkerchiefs. The question as to the large white-handled pistol and the flour sack became leading factors in the case, as we shall presently see. Several persons in Fullerton and vicinity saw a large white-handled pistol in the hands of defendant at Fullerton, saw him with a white flour sack, and one person saw him place the pistol, belt, etc., in the sack. One of the witnesses who saw the pistol was familiar with it, and asked defendant if it was not "Gibson's" gun," and he answered "No." One or two other witnesses who were familiar with the Gibson pistol saw the one with defendant, and said it resembled it, and they thought it the same, and one of them recognized the scabbard by a patch on it. From the 6th of September until the 9th several witnesses met and saw defendant on his way to San Diego, with a flour sack, and some hard substance in it, which caused the sack to protrude; one thought it probably a boot heel, another the handle of a frying-pan, etc. On the 9th of September defendant met one Garges near El Toro station, and they traveled south together, walking on the railroad track. Garges was a repairer of watches and clocks, and was plying his vocation about the country. He describes defendant as carrying a white flour sack, which he says "appeared to be an empty flour sack, something more than half full." It appeared to have clothing in it and some hard substance, like a cooking utensil. They walked south that day, slept in the open air at night, and on the morning of the 10th defendants stopped at a section house on the railroad at San Onofre, procured some bread from a lady named Florence Steele, who wrapped it in a newspaper called the "Ladies' World," from which she had made a clipping, which paper she identified afterwards, as stated herein. They followed the railroad south, saw a man fishing (presumably Stiles), and later a tent on the beach, and a person apparently bathing in the surf, who defendant said was a woman. Defendant fell behind at this point and was soon lost sight of by Garges, who continued on his journey until say 2 o'clock p. m. of the same day, when, while resting, he was again joined by the defendant, who said that, having lost Garges, he thought the latter had taken the wagon road, and that he, defendant, had done the same, etc. They parted soon after, Garges leaving the main line of the road to go to Fallbrook, and defendant going to San Diego, where he arrived on the night of September 11, when he visited the room of an acquaintance, requested permission to sleep with him and to be put on board an English ship in the stream, and about to sail in the morning. This was declined and defendant requested his friend to say nothing of his presence there. He was arrested a few days later some 80 miles in the interior, where he said he had gone to hunt work. Over two months later, a white flour sack, much soiled, and resembling that carried by defendant, was found in a thicket of brush near the scene of the murder, containing Gibson's revolver, with four chambers of the cylinder containing empty, and two chambers loaded, cartridges, with the belt, cartridges, dagger, one of Gibson's shirts, with his initials on it, a few slices of bread wrapped in the newspaper identified by Florence Steele, etc. The other shirt of Gibson and the coat taken from the same room were on the person of the defendant when arrested.

It should also be stated that Garges testified that, when defendant joined him on the afternoon of the 10th of September, he did not have the flour sack which he had previously carried. Also that Stiles had a small bag of Durham smoking tobacco in his tent, which was missing after the murder, and that defendant, who had been previously begging tobacco, had, when he joined Garges, a sack of Durham smoking tobacco. There are other inculpatory circumstances, but these are deemed sufficient to show (1) that the evidence was sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty; (2) to show, by the character of the testimony, that the objections to evidence, which must, in the aggregate, reach into the hundreds, and which cannot be considered in detail, were mainly destitute of merit.

We here notice what the learned counsel for appellant terms a flagrant and gross error on the part of the court in the admission of evidence and refusal to strike out the same, and which he asserts calls for reversal: The testimony of Mrs. Aurelia Price was to the effect that she resided nearly 2 miles south of Santa Ana, and some 10 miles from Fullerton. That on the 7th day of September defendant came to their place, with the white flour sack, so often described. She described his dress, etc., and identified the sack presented in court as one like that carried. On the next day, viz., Sunday, September 8, about 11 o'clock A. M., he came again to the Price ranch or house with the same sack, etc. At 7 P. M. of the same day Mrs. Price entered her bedroom, and smelling the fumes of tobacco, which her husband did not use, she lighted a lamp and looked under the bed, where she found the defendant, who rushed out, and before the witness could get to a shotgun, he was out of the door, and from the manner he carried his hand she thought he was going to shoot, although she did not see a pistol, and witness ran out of doors. Defendant came to a screen, and witness asked him if his sack was in the house, and he said "Yes." Witness went in the house after it, and defendant ran off the place. The husband of the witness was at the barn when this occurred. It will be borne in mind that the incident related is one occurring during the trip of defendant from Fullerton to San Diego, and that it occurred during and at the time when defendant afterwards testified that he was at least partially unconscious from intoxication. The Sunday morning alluded to is that mentioned by him as succeeding the night when he slept in a box car near Santa Ana, and first found he had the coat, but he did not know how he came by it, etc. The declared object of the prosecution was to show his conversation in reference to the sack, and to show that defendant had a pistol. In the latter respect the testimony of the witness only showed that from defendant's actions she thought he had one, but the evidence was admissible as an incident throwing light upon the acts of defendant, his appearance, and his belongings, at a period not remote from the 10th day of September, the day of the alleged murder.

As was said in People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 541: "It all consisted of circumstances more or less direct, tending to connect the defendant with the perpetration of the robbery, and to establish his guilt. Evidence that he was seen at different places, not far distant from the robbery and on days not remote from the day on which the crime was committed; that he was seen in company with Hampton, the accomplish, who was used as a witness on behalf of the state; that they were armed, one with a rifle and pistol, and the other with a shotgun; that they had the same dog with them; that they stopped at certain houses, procured meals there, and walked off in certain directions; that they made various inquiries, and otherwise conducted themselves in a suspicious manner,—were all circumstances in the case which were properly submitted to the jury."

Touching the suggestion of counsel that the evidence tended to prove the attempt of defendant to commit another offense, and thus prejudice him in the eyes of the jury, the case of People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138, is in point. In that case the court, speaking through Beatty, Ch. J., said: "It is true that, in trying a person charged with one offense, it is ordinarily admissible to offer proof of another and distinct offense, but this only because the proof of a distinct offense has ordinarily no tendency to establish the offense charged. But whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion. These remarks are applicable to any case in which two persons are murdered or assaulted at the same time, and as part of the same transaction." See also People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 668; People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 74, 82; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 468; People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 613; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 517; People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138; People v. McGilker, 67 Cal. 53; People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216; Moore v. United States, 150 U. S. 57, 37 L. ed. 996; People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481, 501; Com. v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 354, 355; State v. Patza, 3 La. Ann. 513; Kramer v. Com. 87 Pa. 299, 301; Goersen v. Com. 99 Pa. 388, 399; Suan v. Com. 104 Pa. 218, 220; Goersen v. Com. 106 Pa. 477, 496, 51 Am. Rep. 434; State v. Myers, 82 Mo. 562, 52 Am. Rep. 389.

These cases are quoted and cited to meet, not only the foregoing point, but many other objections offered in the trial of the cause, which space will not permit us to discuss at length; among which may be mentioned objections to evidence of the death of Borden, the bullet and cot offered in evidence, the taking of the pistols and clothing at Fullerton, etc.

There is a large group of objections made by defendant to questions put to him on cross-examination, upon the ground, so far as we can determine, that they were not legitimate cross-examination, or in explanation of anything he had testified to in chief. The only reference made to most of them is in the following style: "The matter elicited over the objection of defendant in folio 1603 was clearly error and prejudice." "The objection was well taken to the introduction of the testimony admitted." See folios 1661, 1662, 1664, 1666, 1667, 1670, 1672, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1678, 1679, 1680. We shall content ourselves with saying that a careful review of the scope of the testimony given by the defendant in his examination in chief leads to the conclusion that one and all of the questions propounded to him on cross-examination were within the rules enunciated by this court in previous decisions, or were unproductive of injury to defendant. People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 123; People v. Lee Ah Yute, 60 Cal. 96; People v. Robles, 29 Cal. 421; People v. Murray, 85 Cal. 350; Sharp v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 405; Jackson v. Feather River & G. Water Co. 14 Cal. 24; Neal v. Neal, 58 Cal. 288; Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641.

Defendant was asked on cross examination concerning a trip made by him in, say April, 1895, to Los Angeles. This may or may not have been proper. The record does not contain all of defendant's testimony on direct examination. It shows that on January 16, 1896, "Joseph Japhet Ebanks [defendant] resumed the stand, and proceeds with the question: 'You spoke about your parentage yesterday, Mr. Ebanks. What nationality was your father? You said your parents were European.'" etc. None of his testimony of the previous day is in the record, and he may have testified as to his visit to Los Angeles. Error must affirmatively appear, and will not be presumed. People v. Winters, 29 Cal. 661; People v. Barton, 88 Cal. 176; People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 458; People v. Reilly, 106 Cal. 648. But, as stated above, if this is not correct, there was nothing in his answers which could have injured defendant.

Defendant called as a witness one B. A. Stephens, and offered to prove by him that he was an expert hypnotist, that he had hypnotized defendant, and that when hypnotized defendant had made a statement to him in regard to his knowledge of the affair, from which statement witness is ready to testify that the defendant is not guilty, and that defendant denies his guilt while in that condition. The court sustained an objection to the testimony. The court said: "The law of the United States does not recognize hypnotism. It would be an illegal defense, and I cannot admit it." The court then repeated, in substance, what it had said to the jury, and told them to disregard the offer. We shall not stop to argue the point, and only add the court was right.

After the trial had been pending some ten days, but before the prosecution closed its case, counsel for the defendant interposed a challenge to W. A. Begole, one of the jurors impaneled to try said cause, upon the ground that he was a member of the grand jury of the county which had been impaneled before the trial of this case came on, had taken a recess to meet in the future, and had not yet been discharged, and that such facts were unknown to the defendant or his counsel at the time said Begole was accepted as a juror in this case. The challenge was denied. The defendant was prosecuted by information filed long before the grand jury met, and there is no intimation that it ever had anything to do with this case. "Having served on a grand jury which found the indictment, or on a coroner's jury which inquired into the death of a person whose death is the subject of the indictment or information," afford grounds for challenge. Penal Code, § 1074. But this case does not come within that provision. ▲ Appellant gives us no reason for holding the juror incompetent, and we know of none. We find no error in the rulings of the court upon impaneling the jury.

It is urged that the death warrant was, on the 9th day of April, 1896, signed by the superior judge, "not in the presence of the defendant, nor in the presence of his counsel, and without the knowledge or consent of the counsel of defendant, or of the defendant himself." The judgment was entered on April 6, 1896, consequently the order referred to was an order made after judgment, from which an appeal will lie under § 1237 of the Penal Code. People v. Sprague, 54 Cal. 92; People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594. Defendant has appealed from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, but not from the order made after final judgment of which he now complains.

The court refused to give two instructions asked by the defendant, which are as follows: "The jury are instructed that, if there is any one single fact proved to the satisfaction of the jury, by a preponderance of evidence, which is inconsistent with the guilt of the defendant, to raise a reasonable doubt, and the jury should acquit the defendant. Refused. Pierce, J. You are instructed that it is the settled policy of the law that a person charged with a crime must be acquitted, unless the evidence on the case establishes his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, and it is better that a hundred guilty persons escape punishment than that one who is innocent be punished. Refused. Pierce, J." The meaning of the first of these instructions is involved in doubt, and the final clause of the second instruction is uncalled for. The whole doctrine of reasonable doubt was fully and properly laid before the jury by the court in the instructions which it gave apparently on its own motion, and also in those given on behalf of defendant, marked 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, and 12. We quote the fifth, sixth, and eighth of those instructions of the defendant given by the court. They are as follows: "It is not sufficient to warrant a conviction in a criminal case that the evidence is merely such that a man of prudence would act upon it in his own affairs of the greatest importance. Men frequently act in their own grave and important concerns without a firm conviction that a conclusion upon which they proceed to act is correct: but, having deliberately weighed all the facts and circumstances known to them, they form a conclusion, upon which they proceed to act, although they may not be fully convinced of its correctness. But this degree of certainty is wholly insufficient to authorize a verdict of guilty in a criminal case. In such a case the jury should be fully convinced of the correctness of their conclusion that the defendant is guilty, and that conviction should be so clear and strong as to exclude from their minds all reasonable doubt that their conclusion is correct. Given. Pierce, J." (6) "You are instructed that mere probabilities are not sufficient to warrant convictions; nor is it sufficient that the greater weight or preponderance of the evidence supports the allegation of the information; nor is it sufficient that, upon the doctrine of chances, it is more probable that the defendant is guilty than that he is innocent. To warrant a conviction the defendant must be proved to be guilty so clearly and conclusively that there is no reasonable doubt upon which he can be innocent, when all the evidence in the case is considered together. Given. Pierce, J." (8) "The court further instructs the jury that in this case the law does not require of the defendant that he prove himself innocent, but the law imposes upon the prosecution to prove that the defendant is guilty in the manner and form charged in the information, to the satisfaction of the jury beyond all reasonable doubt; and, unless this has been done, it is your duty to find the defendant not guilty. Given. Pierce, J."

The instructions, taken as a whole, are quite as favorable to the defendant as the facts and law will warrant.

The other alleged errors need not be noticed. We have studied the printed record of 896 pages with the care and solicitude which the importance of the case and the grave results to the defendant demand at our hands, and, as a result, we recommend that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed, and that the court below be directed to bring the defendant before it, and then and there fix a day for carrying the judgment into execution.

We concur: Belcher, C.; Chipman, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed, and the court below is directed to bring the defendant before it, and then and there fix a day for carrying the judgment into execution.

McFarland, J.:

I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Commissioner Searls; but what is said in the opinion on the subject of hypnotism must be taken as applicable to the testimony offered on that subject in this case, which was clearly inadmissible, and not as covering the whole subject. It will not be necessary to determine whether or not testimony tending to show that a defendant committed the act charged while in a hypnotic condition is admissible until a case involving that precise question shall be presented.

We concur: Henshaw, J.; Van Fleet, J.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

STATE of Missouri, ex rel. W. W. GARTH et al., Exrs., etc., of John C. Conley, Deceased,

v.

Lewis M. SWITZLER, Judge of Boone County Probate Court.

STATE of Missouri, ex rel. L. R. WILFLEY, Exr., etc., of Susan E. Spear, Deceased,

v.

Leo RASSIEUR, Probate Judge of St. Louis.

(.....Mo.....)

1. The maintenance of a state university established by the state Constitution is a public purpose.
2. The maintenance of free scholarships in a state university, for the support of those students who are dependent upon their own exertions for their education and financially unable to obtain it otherwise, who shall pass the most meritorious examinations, is the use of funds for a private purpose, and a statute appropriating public moneys therefor is in violation of Const. art. 4, § 46, prohibiting grants in aid of any individual.
3. Taxes for the benefit of private individuals are within the direct prohibition of Const. art. 10, § 3.
4. Provisions for the creation of a "free scholarship fund" in a statute which provides for using three fourths of the annual income for the support of students who get the scholarships cannot be sustained, when the provision for such use of the income is unconstitutional.

5. The estate of a deceased person cannot be subjected to a collateral inheritance tax by statute passed after the death of the owner, where the Constitution prohibits retrospective legislation.

6. A succession tax is an excise or duty upon the right of a person or corporation to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulation of the state.

7. The tax to be levied upon the appraised value of the whole estate left by a deceased person, except such part as is exempt under the Missouri act of 1897, amending the act of 1895, by adding § "1a," is a tax upon the property of the deceased, and not upon the devisees and legatees, and is therefore unconstitutional because it is not levied in proportion to the value of the property, as required by Const. art. 10, § 4.

8. A succession tax which is levied at different rates on legacies of different amounts, although made to persons of the same class, is, when it constitutes a property tax, in violation of the rule of uniformity prescribed by Const. art. 10, § 3.

(March 15, 1898.)

WRITS OF CERTIORARI to review judgments of probate courts assessing the col-

NOTE.—In respect to the constitutionality of a succession tax which imposes a higher rate on large sums than upon small ones, see the late decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Illinois case of Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. —.

For other cases as to constitutionality of succesion taxes, see State, Schwartz, v. Ferris (Ohio) 80 L. R. A. 218; State v. Alston (Tenn.) 28 L. R. A. 178; Minot v. Winthrop (Mass.) 26 L. R. A. 259; State v. Hamlin (Me.) 25 L. R. A. 632; State, Gelsthorpe, v. Furnell (Mont.) 39 L. R. A. 170; State, Davidson, v. Gorman (Minn.) 2 L. R. A. 701.

lateral inheritance taxes upon the estates of certain deceased persons. Proceedings quashed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Turner & Hinton, C. B. Sebastian, and W. M. Williams, for relator Garth:

John C. Conley died prior to the passage of the amendatory acts of March 16 and 17, 1897. If, therefore, the act of April 1, 1895, is in conflict with the Constitution, there was no law in force at the time of his death, imposing a collateral succession tax.

Const. art. 2, § 15; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 69; Re Embury, 20 Misc. 75; Re Roosevelt, 143 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 695.

The act of April 1, 1895, is in conflict with § 28 of art. 4 of the Constitution of this state.

Witzman v. Southern R. Co. 131 Mo. 612; State, Steel, v. Baker, 129 Mo. 482; State, Kirkwood, v. Heege, 135 Mo. 112; Henderson v. London & L. Ins. Co. 135 Ind. 23, 20 L. R. A. 827; Moses v. Mobile, 52 Ala. 198.

The tax provided for by this act is not levied for a public purpose within the meaning of § 3 of art. 10 of the Constitution.

Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 14 L. R. A. 622; Citizens Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 463, 15 Am. Rep. 39; State, Griffith, v. Osawkee Twp. 14 Kan. 418, 19 Am. Rep. 99; Kingman v. Brocton, 153 Mass. 255, 11 L. R. A. 123; Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185; Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6; Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341.

The bounty created by the act is to be paid to a favored class, who are in no wise a public charge, and are not treated as such. It is, in effect, the exaction of money from one class of persons for the benefit of another class.

It is class legislation of the most objectionable character.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 221; Burroughs, Taxn. pp. 18-21; Sewickley School Dist. v. Osborne School Dist. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 211; Philadelphia Asso. for Relief of Disabled Firemen v. Wood, 39 Pa. 73; State, Griffith, v. Osawkee Twp. 14 Kan. 418, 19 Am. Rep. 99; Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341; Henderson v. London & L. Ins. Co. 135 Ind. 23, 20 L. R. A. 827; Hitchcock v. St. Louis, 49 Mo. 484.

It cannot be presumed that the legislature would have provided for the tax at all, if it was not to be used for the special purpose mentioned. The various provisions of the act are wholly inseparable, so far as the general object is concerned.

Webb v. Lafayette County, 67 Mo. 363; Chambe v. Durfee, 100 Mich. 112; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 178.

The tax created by the 1st section of the act of April 1, 1895, is not "uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax." It charges a higher rate when the amount of the property exceeds $10,000, than when its value is less than that sum, and is in violation of § 3, art. 10, of the Constitution of this state; and also, of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and, if regarded as a tax upon the property of the state, it is not levied in proportion to value, and cannot be upheld under § 4, art. 10, of the Constitution.

State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218; State, Davidson, v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 2 L. R. A. 701; Curry v. Spencer, 61 N. H. 624, 60 Am. Rep. 337; State, Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 504, 25 L. R. A. 632; St. Louis v. Spiegel, 75 Mo. 145; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257; Re Westburn, 152 N. Y. 93; Son Mateo County v. Southern P. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 722.

A succession tax would necessarily be imposed upon the respective parties succeeding to the residue of the estate, after payment of debts.

State, Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469; Mason v. Sargent, 104 U. S. 689, 26 L. ed. 894.

Under the construction of the probate court, this tax was assessed upon the estate as a whole, and the executors directed to pay it as any other charge upon said estate.

The act overlooks the fundamental principle upon which a succession tax is based.

Re Westburn, 152 N. Y. 93.

If the act is unconstitutional, because it fails to provide for notice and a hearing, it cannot subsequently be validated by the appearance of the parties interested before the probate judge.

Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, 2d ed. § 22; Evans v. Fall River County (S. D.) 68 N. W. 195; Bieswaenger v. Werner, 5 Mo. App. 582.

Where an act, or portion of an act, is amended so as to read in a prescribed way the section amended, it is entirely repealed and obliterated thereby.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 196, p. 265; State, Kemper, v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 9 Mo. App. 532; Re Prime, 136 N. Y. 347, 18 L. R. A. 718; Knox v. Baldwin, 80 N. Y. 610.

The order of the probate court, levying a tax in excess of 5 per cent, was beyond its jurisdiction and without authority of law.

Knox v. Baldwin, 80 N. Y. 610.

Messrs. M. F. Watts, Silas B. Jones, Frank M. Estes, and L. F. Parker for relator Wilfey.

Messrs. William J. Stone, G. S. Hoss, and D. C. Reeves, for respondents:

The jurisdiction conferred by the acts of 1897 on the probate courts to fix the valuation of estates, directing the payment of the taxes, etc., applies to estates in process of administration prior to the passage of those acts, and subject to the tax imposed by the act of 1895.

State, Rosenblatt, v. Kerr, 8 Mo. App. 125; State, Kemper, v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 9 Mo. App. 532; St. Joseph & I. R. Co. v. Cudmore, 103 Mo. 634; Van Rheeden v. Bush, 44 Mo. App. 263; Lorell v. Davis, 52 Mo. App. 342; Kick v. Doerste, 45 Mo. App. 134; State, Police Comrs., v. St. Louis County Ct. 34 Mo. 546; Wellsheir v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 354; Porter v. Mariner, 50 Mo. 367; State v. Johnson, 81 Mo. 60; State, Cramer, v. Hager, 91 Mo. 456; Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403; Wood v. Westborough, 140 Mass. 403; Logan v. Logan, 77 Ind. 558; Coffman v. Bank of Kentucky, 40 Miss. 29, 90 Am. Dec. 813; Cook v. Gray, 2 Houst. (Del.) 455, 81 Am. Dec. 188; Scobey v. Gibson, 17 Ind. 572, 79 Am. Dec. 490; Johnson v. Wells County Comrs. 107 Ind. 25; Sparks v. Clapper, 30 Ind. 208; Ex parte Buckley, 53 Ala. 43; Flinn v. Parsons, 60 Ind. 574; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 811, 315, 11 L. ed. 143, 144; Guild v. Rogers, 8 Barb. 502; Jones v. Crittenden, 4 N. C. (1 Taylor's Law Repos. 385), 55, 6 Am. Dec. 581; Wood v. Wood, 14 Rich. L. 148; Rathbone v. Bradford, 1 Ala. 312; Ex parte Pollard, 40 Ala. 77; Starkweather v. Haces, 10 Wis. 126; Maynes v. Moore, 16 Ind. 116; Hopkins v. Jones, 22 Ind. 310; Webb v. Moore, 25 Ind. 4; Smith v. Bryan, 34 Ill. 364; Templeton v. Horne, 82 Ill. 491; Frost v. Isley, 54 Me. 345; Coosa River S. B. Co. v. Barclay, 30 Ala. 120; Philbrick v. Philbrick, 39 N. H. 468; Klaus v. Green Bay, 34 Wis. 628; Leathers v. Shipbuilders' Bank, 40 Me. 386; Bigelow v. Pritchard, 21 Pick. 169; Danley v. State Bank, 15 Ark. 16; Buckingham v. Moss, 40 Conn. 461; Dobbins v. First Nat. Bank, 112 Ill. 553; Winslow v. People, Walrath, 117 Ill. 152; State v. Shreves, 81 Iowa, 615; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 287.

If a state legislature shall pass a law within the general scope of its constitutional powers, the courts cannot pronounce it void because in their judgment it may be unwise as a matter of public policy or contrary to the principles of natural justice.

Culder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. 380, 7 L. ed. 458; Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 285.

The tax levied by § 1 of the act of April 1, 1895, is not a tax on property, but is a tax, excise, or bonus imposed on the privilege of succeeding to property of decedents by gift or inheritance.

Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 182; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287; Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, 4 L. R. A. 171; Re Vanderbilt, 2 Connolly, 319; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 680, 28 L. R. A. 178; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 123, 26 L. R. A. 259; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 504, 25 L. R. A. 632; Pullen v. Wake County Comrs. 66 N. C. 363; Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122; Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, 2d ed. § 2, p. 5.

A provision in the statute making the tax a lien on property affected by it does not make it a tax on property, or in any wise change the nature of the tax.

State. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 326, 30 L. R. A. 218.

The taxes imposed by §§ 2 and 3 of the act in question are taxes levied on privileges, and not on property.

Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 182; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287; Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 320, 58 Am. Rep. 502; Re Vanderbilt, 2 Connolly, 319; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 680, 28 L. R. A. 178; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 123, 26 L. R. A. 259; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 504, 25 L. R. A. 632; Pullen v. Wake County Comrs. 66 N. C. 363; Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, 4 L. R. A. 171.

The act in question does not conflict with § 3, art. 10, of the Constitution.

1. The section of the Constitution referred 40 L. R. A.

to does not apply to special taxes on privileges.

St. Louis v. Green, 7 Mo. App. 468; Glasgow v. Rouse, 43 Mo. 480; American Union Exp. Co. v. St. Joseph, 66 Mo. 675, 27 Am. Rep. 382; Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 510, 69 Am. Dec. 475; Farrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 386; Egyptian Lece Co. v. Hardin, 27 Mo. 495, 72 Am. Dec. 276; St. Joseph v. Anthony, 30 Mo. 537; Adams v. Lindell, 72 Mo. 193; St. Joseph, Gibson, v. Owen, 110 Mo. 455; Newton v. Atchison, 31 Kan. 151, 47 Am. Rep. 486; Ex parte Robinson, 12 Neb. 269, 28 Am. Rep. 794.

2. If that section does apply to the taxes in question, then the statute is not in conflict with that section of the Constitution requiring uniformity. All the taxes imposed by the statute are uniform upon the same class of subjects.

Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122; New Orleans v. Kaufman, 29 La. Ann. 283, 29 Am. Rep. 328; East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 46 Ill. 394; Sacramento v. Crocker, 16 Cal. 120; State Bd. of Assessors v. Central R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 146; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 123, 26 L. R. A. 259; Com. v. Moore, 25 Gratt. 956.

Before the courts will declare a tax void there must be an absence of all possible public interest in the purposes for which the tax is levied; and in passing upon the question the courts give great weight to the legislative assertion.

Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 123; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 625, 88 Am. Dec. 711; State v. Nelson County, 1 N. D. 88, 8 L. R. A. 283; Speer v. Blairsville School Directors, 50 Pa. 152; Schenley v. Allegheny, 25 Pa. 180; People, Detroit & H. R. Co., v. Salem Twp. Board, 20 Mich. 475, 4 Am. Rep. 400; Guilford v. Chenango County Supers. 13 N. Y. 143.

If there be the least possibility that making the gift will be promotive in any degree of the public welfare, it becomes a question of policy and not of natural justice, and the determination of the legislature is conclusive.

Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 174, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 123; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; People, Board of Water Comrs., v. East Saginaw, 33 Mich. 164; Tide-Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 268, 14 Am. Rep. 99; People, Stickney v. Marshall, 6 Ill. 672; People, Harless v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 180; Ex parte M'Collum, 1 Cow. 554; Thomas v. Leand, 24 Wend. 65; Darlington v. New York, 81 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248; Briggs v. Whipple, 6 Vt. 95; Exempt Firemen's Benev. Fund v. Roome, 93 N. Y. 813; People, McCullough v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175; New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 654, 24 L. ed. 522; Mount v. State, Richey, 90 Ind. 31, 46 Am. Rep. 192; Long v. Richmond County Comrs. 76 N. C. 280.

There is no necessity for notice to interested parties when the property is valued and the tax is levied by the probate court, as the parties have their day in court before the tax can be collected.

St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 470; Kansas v. Huling, 87 Mo. 203; Sarton Nat. Bank v. Carswell, 126 Mo. 436; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616; Hagar v. Rec- lamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 504, 25 L. R. A. 632.

Personal property of a resident decedent, whether situated within or without the state, is subject to the collateral inheritance tax law.

Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709. See also Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Re Knoedler, 140 N. Y. 377; Miller v. Com. 111 Pa. 321; Williamson's Estate, 153 Pa. 508.

A law may stand so far as it is constitutional, although it has in it certain provisions which are not valid.

State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 36; St. Louis v. St. Louis R. Co. 89 Mo. 44, 58 Am. Rep. 82; State, Aull v. Field, 119 Mo. 612; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Evans & H. Fire Brick Co. 85 Mo. 307; State, Maggard v. Pond, 93 Mo. 635; Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1; Gordon v. Cornes, 47 N. Y. 608; Allen v. Louisiana, 103 U. S. 80, 26 L. ed. 318.

By the term "clear market value" is meant the actual market value of the estate at the date of the death of the decedent, after first deducting all just and legal demands for which the estate is liable.

Commonwealth's Appeal, 127 Pa. 440; Re Milbeard, 6 Misc. 425; Lines's Estate, 155 Pa. 378.

Mr. F. N. Judson also for respondents.

Gantt, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in this court for a writ of certiorari to the judge of the probate court of Boone county, commanding him to send up the record of his proceedings in the matter of the assessment and levy of a collateral succession tax upon the estate of John C. Conley, late of said county, deceased. The writ was issued, and made returnable to division No. 2 of this court; but owing to the importance of the question involved, and the fact that a similar writ had also been issued upon the application of L. R. Wilfley, executor of Susan E. Spear, against Judge Rassieur, judge of the probate court of the city of St. Louis, returnable to the court in banc, this cause was transferred to the court in banc; and, the records of the probate court in each case having been removed into this court, the two cases were heard together, upon a motion to quash the proceedings for want of jurisdiction in said courts to assess and levy said collateral succession tax. John C. Conley died in Boone county, Missouri, on the 6th day of December, 1896, leaving an estate, consisting of realty in this and other states, and of bonds, notes, certificates of stock, and other securities. His will, dated February 18, 1896, was duly established and admitted to probate by the probate court of Boone county, on the 7th of December, 1896. The said testator was never married. He made a bequest of $20,000 for charitable purposes, and gave the remainder of his estate, in different amounts, to his collateral relatives. He gave some special legacies of a certain amount, and, after the payment of various special bequests, the residue of the estate is given by his will to certain nephews and nieces named in the residuary clause. Letters testamentary were duly issued to the relators, who qualified as executors of the will on the 15th of December, 1896, and filed their inventory on the 11th of January, 1897. The probate court, on the 30th of August, 1897, entered an order of record rectifying the death of said John C. Conley, the probating of his will, and setting out the terms thereof, the date of letters testamentary, and of the filing of the inventory, and, over the protest of the relators (who waived formal notice of the proceedings, but objected to the right of the court to make such assessment), proceeded to fix the value of said estate, for the purposes of the collateral succession tax, under the act of April 1, 1895, and the amendatory acts of 1897. The court found that the sum of $20,000 was given by the will, to trustees, for charitable purposes; $18,391.31 of the estate will be required to pay the debts of the testator (so far as appeared up to the date of that order) and other legal demands; that the real estate in the state of Missouri was of the value of $45,660; and that the personal property of the estate was of the value of $132,919.34,—making a total valuation of $228,579.34. The court deducted from this amount the sum of $20,000, given for charitable purposes, and $18,391.34, required to pay debts and expenses of the administration, and held and determined that the clear market value of all of said property subject to such tax was $190,188, and that said amount was subject to the payment of a collateral succession tax of $5 for each and every $100 of such sum, up to $10,000; and $12.50 for every $100 in value in excess of said sum of $10,000. Eighty five shares of stock in the Bank of Hico, Texas, of the par value of $3,925, was included in the above valuation. The court then levied and charged said estate with a total tax of $23,023.50, and ordered the executors to pay the same. All these facts appear upon the face of the record of the probate court. A similar state of facts exists as to the tax on Susan E. Spear's estate, in all material respects.

The constitutionality of the act of the general assembly of Missouri entitled "An Act Providing for the Endowment of the State University, and for the Establishment and Endowment of Free Scholarships of Merit Therein in Each County," approved April 1, 1895, and of an act of the general assembly entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Passed by the 38th General Assembly of the State of Missouri, Entitled 'An Act Providing for the Endowment of the State University, and for the Endowment of Free Scholarships of Merit Therein in Each County,' by Adding a New Section after § 1 of Said Act, to be Numbered § 1a, which New Section Shall Read as Follows, 'approved March 16, 1897,'" is directly assailed in and by these proceedings. The proposition of relators is that both the act of April 1, 1895, and the amendatory act of March 16, 1897, are void, because in conflict with various provisions of the Constitution of Missouri and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. No question is raised as to the power of this court by certiorari to supervise the proceedings in the probate courts, and, if their action in levying said taxes is found in excess of their powers, to quash their proceedings, and we have no doubt of our power to do so. At the risk of being deemed prolix, we will insert so much of the acts as bear directly upon the questions raised.

The act was passed in 1895, and amended by two acts passed in 1897. As amended, it provides, among other things, as follows:

"Sec. 1. That all property conveyed by will, or by the death of an intestate, . . . to any persons other than the father, mother, husband, wife or direct lineal descendant of the testator, intestate, . . . except property conveyed for some educational, charitable, or religious purpose exclusively, shall be subject to the payment of a collateral succession tax of $5 for each and every $100 of the clear market value of such property.

"Sec. 2. That in addition to the fees now provided by law, no corporation shall be organized under the laws of this state, and no foreign corporation shall do business in this state unless the incorporators shall, upon filing the articles of association, pay to the state treasurer, in trust for the state of Missouri, to be disposed of as hereinafter provided in this act, the sum of twenty-five hundredths of a dollar for every $1,000 of the capital stock of such corporation as a franchise fee; and a like franchise fee shall be paid in the same manner on every $1,000 of the increase of the capital stock of any corporation.

"Sec. 3. That every manufacturer of patent medicines shall annually pay a license tax of $25.

"Sec. 4. That all moneys, which may hereafter escheat to the state, shall be distributed in the manner provided by this act.

"Sec. 5. That all taxes, fees, or moneys received under this act by any county official, shall be paid during the first week of the following month to the county treasurer, who shall credit three fourths to a fund hereby created, to be known as 'the state university scholarship fund,' and remit the remaining one fourth to the state treasurer; and from all money received directly by the state treasurer under this act, he shall monthly reserve one fourth, and remit the remaining three fourths to all the county treasurers of the state, to be credited to 'the state university scholarship fund' of such counties.

"Sec. 6. That all moneys received by the state treasurer to be retained by him under this act shall be deposited in the state treasury to the credit of the 'seminary fund' as provided by law.

"Sec. 7. That all moneys received by the county treasurer of each county to be credited to 'the state university scholarship fund' shall be forever kept and preserved as a sacred permanent fund; and shall be invested and loaned in the manner provided in this act."

Sections 8, 9, and 10 of the act are in the following words:

"Sec. 8. The income of the moneys in 'the state university scholarship fund' shall be collected annually, and one fourth of the same added to the principal, and the remaining three fourths shall be faithfully appropriated for establishing and maintaining free scholarships in the state university, the amounts and terms of which shall be fixed and changed from time to time, as may be necessary, on 40 L. R. A.

the written order and resolution of the board of curators of the state university.

"Sec. 9. On the first week of August of each year, beginning with the first Monday after due notice thereof, as prescribed by the county court, in two newspapers in each county, representing different political parties where such newspapers exist, there shall be held at the court-house, in the county seat, an examination of all applicants qualified under the law to be students of the university. Such applicants shall be actual residents of the county, and such examinations shall be conducted by three examiners, one of whom shall first be appointed by written notice to the county clerk by the president of the board of curators of the university during the month of July, and one selected thereafter by the county court, of another political faith, and the third selected by the agreement of the two so chosen, with power in the county court, or the presiding judge thereof in vacation, to fill all vacancies in the position of examiner; and such examination shall be written, and shall meet the requirements for entrance in the academic department of the university; provided, that the duties imposed on county courts or the judges thereof, by this section, shall be discharged in the city of St. Louis by the mayor.

"Sec. 10. Those applicants passing the best and most meritorious examinations, to the number of scholarships established in each respective county, shall be awarded such scholarships, and be entitled thereon to enter free of matriculation fees any department, school, or college of the university, and have paid to them in equal monthly instalments while attending the university, the sum provided by the scholarship so awarded, for defraying the expenses of such attendance; provided, that no applicant shall be qualified to receive such scholarship unless such examiners shall be satisfied that the applicant is dependent upon his own exertions for his education, and financially unable to otherwise obtain the same."

By comparison of the act thus revised and amended in 1897 with the original act of 1895, it will be seen that the progressive feature of the original act, to wit, the increase of 7½ per cent on amounts of over $10,000, is repealed, and specific provision is added for valuation of inheritances and enforcing the collection of the tax. Amendments are also made to §§ 2 and 8 in matters not material in the present proceeding; while in § 5, the basis of the distribution of the funds collected by the state treasurer in trust under the provisions of the act, is arranged so that it is made in the different counties on the basis of representation in the general assembly.

Lying at the threshold of this discussion is the objection which goes to the very substance of this enactment. It is insisted that the tax provided in the act is not levied for a public purpose, within the meaning of § 3 of art. 10 of the Constitution of Missouri, which ordains that "taxes may be levied and collected for public purposes only." This provision of our Constitution accords with the definition of a "tax," as expounded by the courts and law writers of this country. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, says:

"Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes." Judge Coulter, in Northern Liberties v. St John's Church, 13 Pa. 104, said: "I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the government, for the purpose of carrying on the government in all its machinery and operations; that they are imposed for a public purpose." The Supreme Court of the United States, in Citizens' Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455, in a luminous opinion by Judge Miller, after a review of the authorities and a discussion of the power to tax, laid it down as an established principle that "beyond cavil there can be no lawful tax which is not laid for a public purpose." In Re New York, 11 Johns. 80, the court said: "The word 'taxes' means burdens, charges of impositions, put or set upon persons or property for public uses, and this is the definition which Lord Coke gives to the word 'tallage' (2 Co. Inst. 532); and Lord Holt, in Carth. 488 [Brewster v. Kidgell], gives the same definition, in substance, of the word 'tax.'" Chief Justice Appleton, in Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185, says: "A tax is a sum of money assessed under the authority of the state on the person or property of an individual, for the use of the state. 'Taxation,' by the very meaning of the term, implies the raising of money for public uses, and excludes the raising if for private objects and purposes." Judge Jere Black, in Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167, 59 Am. Rep. 759, says: "I have conceded that a law authorizing taxation for any other than public purposes is void."

We construe § 3 of art. 10 of our Constitution as a direct inhibition upon the general assembly to levy a tax for a private purpose, or for the benefit of any private individual. The language used is not susceptible of any other construction. We shall assume without further comment that, if the act under review authorizes the levy of a tax, that tax must be for a public purpose; otherwise, it is a direct violation of the Constitution of this state. Does it authorize a tax? The learned counsel for the probate judges argues that it is not strictly a tax. He says: "Although called a 'tax,' it is not properly so, but a bonus or price exacted from the collateral kindred and strangers to the blood, as the condition upon which they take the estate whose owner is dead." But, even if such a distinction can be maintained, the contention does not reach the vital point upon which the relators insist, namely, that, by whatever name this burden or excise, tax, bonus, or exaction from the citizen may be called, still it falls within the purview of the word "taxes," as used in the 3d section of article 10 of our Constitution. The word in that section is used in its generic sense, as expounded by lexicographers, judges, and lawyers long before its use in our organic law. In the sense that taxes can only be levied for a public purpose, that word includes every character and kind of tax, general or special. The power of the state to demand such a bonus is referable, and referable only, to the taxing power; so that, whether this "collateral succession tax," as it is denominated by the legislature, be termed a tax or a bonus, an excise, a price imposed for the privilege of taking an estate by will or inheritance, it must be levied or exacted for a public purpose only under our Constitution, and under those limitations on the taxing power which exist in the very nature of our free institutions. Miller, Const. U. S. p. 242. Outside of express constitutional inhibitions, there are limitations upon the powers of every branch of our governments, state and Federal. Every branch has its limitations short of absolute power. The Supreme Court of the United States expressed it in these words: "No court . . . would hesitate to declare void a statute which enacted that A and B, who were husband and wife to each other, should be so no longer, but that A should thereafter be the husband of C, and B the wife of D, or which should enact that the homestead now owned by A should no longer be his, but should henceforth be the property of B." And in the same case the court further said: "To lay with one hand the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals, to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law, and is called 'taxation.' This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms." [20 Wall. 663, 664, 22 L. ed. 461].

That the state of Missouri, for public purposes, may assess and levy taxes upon the succession or devolution of property under our inheritance laws or statute of wills, subject only to the prohibitions of the Constitution of the state and the Constitution of the United States, we have no doubt whatever. The constitutionality of such a tax has been too long affirmed by the courts of last resort to admit of doubt; but we have not found nor have counsel pointed to any statute which has received the sanction of the courts which levied such a tax for other than a plainly public purpose. Is the purpose for which the act in question authorizes this collateral succession tax a public one? Perhaps few branches of the law have been more carefully considered than that which this inquiry suggests. The duty and power of imposing taxes is a legislative one, and the presumption is, and must be, that the legislature will only levy a tax for a public purpose; and the courts are only justified in interposing when it clearly appears that the Constitution, which is the supreme law governing both the legislature and the courts, has been or will be violated by the enforcement of the legislative purpose. What is and what is not a public purpose is not always easily determined. The Supreme Court of the United States in Citizens' Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455, states the rule to be that "in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they [the courts] must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily and by long course of legislation levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this, and is sanctioned by time and acquiescence of the people may well be held to belong to the public use, and proper for the maintenance of good government, though this may not be the only criterion of rightful taxation." The supreme court of Michigan, in People, Detroit & H. R. Co., v. Salem Twp. Board, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400, with signal ability and thoroughness, discussed this question, and came to the conclusion that "the term 'public purpose,' as employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, has no relation to the urgency of the public need, or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow. It is, on the other hand, merely a term of classification, to distinguish objects for which according to settled usage the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private inclination, interest, or liberality." How these general principles have been applied, reference to the judgments of the courts will best determine.

In Citizens' Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455, a statute of the state of Kansas which authorized a town to issue its bonds in aid of the manufacturing enterprise of private individuals came before the Supreme Court of the United States; and it was held void, because the taxes necessary to pay the bonds would, if collected, be a transfer of the property of individuals to aid in the projects of gain and profits of others, and not for a public use, in the proper sense of these words.

In Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185, a town, at a meeting legally called, voted to loan its credit to a firm to the amount of $10,000, and issue its bonds for that sum, provided the firm would invest $12,000 to $13,000 in a steam sawmill, with a run of stone to grind meal, and maintain it for ten years; and the legislature afterwards passed an enabling act authorizing said loan, but the supreme judicial court held the act unconstitutional and void, because not for a public use.

All the buildings on a very large portion of the city of Charleston, South Carolina, having been destroyed by fire, the city council passed an ordinance providing for the issue of bonds by the city to be loaned the owners, to build and rebuild the waste places and burnt districts. The legislature afterwards, by an act reciting the ordinance, fully confirmed and authorized the issue of said bonds, known as "Fire Loan Bonds," and certain persons bought them. Afterwards suit was brought against the city to collect them, but the supreme court of the state held said bonds were issued for a private purpose, and void. That the taxing power could only be exercised for some public purpose. Fieldman v. Charleston, 28 S. C. 57, 55 Am. Rep. 6.

In November, 1872, a great conflagration swept over a large portion of the city of Boston. The legislature of Massachusetts passed an act authorizing the city of Boston to issue bonds, and loan the proceeds on mortgage to the owners of the land, to enable them to rebuild their houses. The supreme court held the act void; that it was not for a public object, in a legal sense. Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39.

In Curtis v. Whipple, 24 Wis. 350, 1 Am. Rep. 187, the legislature empowered the town of Jefferson to raise a sum by taxation to be paid to the treasurer of the Jefferson Liberal Institute, a private educational institution, but the supreme court held the act void, the tax being for a private purpose; and a like conclusion was reached in Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 94.

This court in Deal v. Mississippi County, 197 Mo. 464, 14 L. R. A. 622, held § 5697, Rev. Stat. 1879, void, because it gave a bounty to private individuals for growing forest trees upon their own lands.

In each and all of these cases it was held that the fact that the public might be incidentally benefited by rebuilding a burnt city, the establishment of manufactories and schools, would not sustain the tax. Every factory, every private school or academy, every industrial enterprise which furnishes opportunity for labor and the earning of wages, benefits a community in one sense; but the indirect good which inures in this way furnishes no basis for taxation of other business to build up such occupations. Learned counsel for the respondents do not seriously controvert this general proposition, but meet it with the assertion that the state university is a state institution, established and maintained for a public purpose. This is at once conceded by the relators, because the people of Missouri, in their sovereign capacity, have recognized and declared in their organic law that a general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence is essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, and imposed upon the legislature the duty of establishing and maintaining free public schools for the gratuitous instruction of all persons in this state between the ages of six and twenty years. Mo. Const. 1875, art. 11, § 1. Moreover, by § 5 of art. 11 of the Constitution, the general assembly is enjoined, whenever the public school fund will permit and the actual necessity of the same may require, to aid and maintain the state university, now established, with its present departments. By § 6 of the same article of the Constitution, a fund is provided, the annual income of which, together with so much of the ordinary revenue of the state as may by law be set apart for that purpose, shall be appropriated for the maintenance of the free public schools and the state university. If, then, this collateral succession tax is levied to support the state university, unquestionably it is for a public purpose.

At this point, however, the real contention in this case arises. Relators insist that the fund sought to be accumulated by this tax is not a provision for the support of the university, but is a tax to raise a fund, the proceeds of which must be paid to certain favored individuals, to enable them to buy food and clothing for their own use while pursuing their studies at the university. The controversy must be determined by the act itself. By reference to the summary of its various sections as hereinbefore set out, it will be observed that three fourths of all the moneys raised by this tax was intended to create the "State University Scholarship Fund" of the several counties of this state, to be kept as a permanent fund, to be invested so as to bear interest. This interest is to be collected annually, and one fourth of it added to the fund, and the remaining three fourths to be appropriated for establishing and maintaining free scholarships in the university, the amounts and terms of which are to be fixed by the curators of the university. By § 9 provision is made for competitive written examinations on the first week of August in each year of actual residents of each county, which shall meet the requirements for entrance in the academic department of the university, provided, however, that no applicant shall be eligible to receive such free scholarship, unless the examiners "shall be satisfied that the [said] applicant is dependent upon his own exertions for his education, and financially unable to otherwise obtain the same." Having thus determined who may be the beneficiaries of this tax, and segregated them from the great mass of citizenship, and awarded them these free scholarships, § 10 of the act provides that they shall "be entitled thereon to enter free of matriculation fees any department, school, or college of the university, and have paid to them in equal monthly instalments while attending the university, the sum provided by the scholarship so awarded, for defraying the expenses of such attendance."

Deferring for the present any discussion of the proposition that one fourth of the tax may be sustained because it is directed to be paid into the state treasury for the benefit of the "Seminary Fund,"—an admitted public use,—we direct our attention to the arguments for and against the "Free Scholarship Fund." It is perfectly evident, we think, that no distinction can be maintained between the fund and its annual increment. It cannot be true that this fund is a state or public fund, under this act, while the whole beneficial use and interest arising therefrom is private. Such a distinction is illogical and unsound. The fund is created for the sole purpose of producing the interest to be derived from it, and it is incredible to believe that the legislature would have provided the tax at all if it was not to obtain the interest to be used for the maintenance of the scholars. The fund and the interest are inseparable.

Counsel for the curators urge that this statute can only be properly construed by keeping in view "the historical setting" of the university, and "its historical genesis." They assert that university education is a proper, indeed, one of the primary, objects for which public taxation may be levied, and that the extent of such taxation in aid of higher education is for the legislature alone to determine; that, the Constitution having established free public schools and the university, the legislature can go further, and furnish free support of the children while attending these schools and the university. It is true that the learned counsel for the curators are not altogether in harmony on this proposition. Some of the learned counsel for the curators boldly argue that, if the legislature can furnish free schools and free teachers, why can it not go further, and furnish a free support to the children who attend these schools, if that is deemed necessary to make the system a success; whereas their colleague draws the line at the free support of the students of the university, and denies the right to furnish free living to the children attending the common schools, "because the law recognizes and enforces the parental obligation of support during the period of elementary education." Some of the learned counsel for the curators admit that such a support of the students is paternalism in its most pronounced form, but say it is "not a hurtful or dangerous kind; that it is only paternalism of the state, not of the Federal government." Paternalism, whether state or Federal, as the derivation of the term applies, is an assumption by the government of a quasi-fatherly relation to the citizen and his family, involving excessive governmental regulation of the private affairs and business methods and interests of the people, upon the theory that the people are incapable of managing their own affairs, and is pernicious in its tendencies. In a word, it minimizes the citizen, and maximizes the government. Our Federal and state governments are founded upon a principle wholly antagonistic to such a doctrine. Our fathers believed the people of these free and independent states were capable of self-government,—a system in which the people are the sovereigns, and the government their creature, to carry out their commands. Such a government is founded on the willingness and the right of the people to take care of their own affairs, and an indisposition on their part to look to the government for everything. The citizen is the unit. It is his province to support the government, and not the government to support him. Under self-government, we have advanced in all the elements of a great people more rapidly than any nation that has ever existed upon the earth, and there is greater need now than ever before in our history of adhering to it. Paternalism is a plant that should receive no nourishment upon the soil of Missouri. While the exigencies of this case may require the operation of such a principle, we are sure its germ is not to be found in the Constitution of this state, nor in the spirit of its people. Whatever other fault the Constitution of 1875 may have, it is certain that its framers sought most sedulously to curb the power of those clothed with authority to legislate in behalf of favored classes, and to leave the people the largest possible control over their own affairs. Especially has the power of taxation been jealously hedged about and limited. The same authority is found in the Constitution to levy taxes to clothe and feed the children who may desire to attend the free public schools, as there is to raise money by taxation to hand over to young men and young women to support them while they acquire what is termed "the higher or university education;" but we find no warrant for either in the organic law of this state or in the character of our government. It is one thing to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a state university and a system of free public schools,—the state, through its own officers, agencies, and municipalities, constructing and owning the buildings and apparatus, and employing the teachers as public functionaries, responsible under her own laws for the discharge of their duties,—and a wholly different thing to support private individuals who attend the university and public schools, by public taxation. But it is said that nothing is more common than the endowment of free scholarships as a part of the endowment of a university. This may be true of the universities of Europe, and individual instances are to be found in this country where some great benefactor of the race has, out of his own bounty, provided such scholarships; but these examples furnish no guide to the free states of this Union, clearly not to the legislature of Missouri under its organic law.

The act under consideration endows the scholar, not the university. It provides in unmistakable terms that a fund shall be raised by taxation and paid over to students attending the university, for their support while so engaged. It is a pure and simple gift of public money by the state to private individuals, for their own private use, in plain violation of § 48 of art. 4 of the Constitution, which prohibits the legislature from granting public money to any individual, association of individuals, or other corporation whatsoever. We hold that, when the Constitution provided for the establishment and maintenance of the university, it conferred authority to support an institution belonging to the state; and this grant is not to be extended to the unlimited support of the pupils who may attend or desire to attend that school. In obedience to the mandate of the Constitution, the legislature has made generous provision for the university and public schools, and the opportunities for education are commensurate with the greatness of the commonwealth and the needs of the people. Neither the Constitution nor a sound public policy demands that the state should indirectly stifle all motive for individual effort and laudable mention. Free common schools adorn every school district in the state. Splendid normal schools are distributed to its different sections, and the doors of the university are practically opened to every thrifty, energetic young man and woman in the state. The state has not been niggardly with its children. Every proper stimulus is set before them. But here she stops, and says to the citizen, "The right to lay further burdens for your private benefit is exhausted. Under equal and just laws, by your own self-reliance and energy, you must win the rewards of labor and the honors of the state."

It is only necessary to add that counsel for the curators do not attempt to maintain this tax on the theory that the young men and women who would obtain these scholarships are paupers, in the meaning of the law. Even without this admission, it is perfectly apparent that the act, by its terms, does not confine this pension to the children of poor persons who may, in a legal sense, be denominated "paupers." The class of ambitious young men and women who could avail themselves of the benefits of this act would resent such a designation, and scorn this proffered aid if, to obtain it, they must first be classed as paupers. It is perfectly clear that the tax is not levied upon any such principle. If it were, it would collide with another fundamental principle. It would be class legislation. Says Judge Cooley, in his work on Taxation, 2d ed. (p. 121): "To justify taxation for the purpose of education, the rules under which the people shall be admitted to the privileges given must not be invidious and partial, but must place all parties upon a plane of practical equality. The rule is substantially the same here that applies in the apportionment of taxation. Equality must be the aim of the law, and it must be assumed that the state has no special favors to bestow upon privileged classes. . . . It will not be competent to single out some one class of the community, and exclude them from the benefits of the public schools on arbitrary grounds." Our conclusion is that this tax is levied for a purely private purpose, and for that reason it is in contravention of the Constitution of Missouri.

This tax is assailed in another vital point. Relators assert it is void for want of uniformity. John C. Conley one of the testators, died on the 6th day of December, 1896. His will was probated February 18, 1896. Susan E. Spears, the other testator, died June 10, 1896. It is essential that we determine whether the act of 1895 or that of 1897 governs. Is the tax to be levied under the act of 1895 if valid, or the act of 1897, which was enacted long after the death of both of these testators? There is nothing in the act of 1897 which gives it a retrospective operation, and, if there was, it would be in direct conflict with the Constitution of Missouri, which prohibits retrospective legislation. We think it must be plain that the act of 1895, adopted prior to the death of these testators, if valid, must control, and not the act of 1897, enacted after their deaths. This, we take it, is the usual construction. By the terms of each, the devolution of the property and the right of the state to tax accrues immediately upon the death of the testators. Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 69; Re Embury, 20 Misc. 75; Re Roosevelt, 143 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 695; Mo. Const. art. 2, § 15; Leete v. State Bank (Mo.) 42 S. W. 1074.

Looking to the act of April 1, 1895 (Laws Mo. 1895, p. 278) for authority for this tax, we are met with the objection that this tax is also void, because the said act is in violation of § 3 of art. 10 of the Constitution of Missouri, and of the 14th Amendment of the United States, and § 4 of art. 10 of the Constitution of Missouri. Of these in their inverse order. As already remarked, no doubt longer exists that it is competent for the legislature to levy a tax upon the succession of estates. It is quite universally held that such a tax is not a tax upon property, in the ordinary sense, but is in the nature of an excise or bonus, exacted by the state upon the privilege or right to inherit or succeed to an estate. It is not necessary at this time to enter upon an examination of the extent of this right on the part of the state, nor to approve or disapprove the extreme views expressed by some of the courts. While conceding the right to tax, our duty now is to ascertain, if we can, what was the purpose of the legislature in enacting this law. A primary and safe rule of interpretation of a statute is to endeavor to gather the legislative intent from the words they used. Gardner v.

Collins, 2 Pet. 93, 7 L. ed. 359; Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Pet. 178, 10 L. ed. 408. The general assembly has declared that it intended to levy "a collateral succession tax," and we all agree that, by whatever name this exaction may be called, it is referable to the taxing power of the state. The controlling question is, Upon what did it authorize that tax to be levied,—upon the property or estate of the deceased person, or upon the right or privilege of his beneficiaries to receive his estate by inheritance or devise? If upon the latter, it is settled by the great weight of authority that it does not fall within the regular ordinary taxation upon property which our Constitution requires shall be in proportion to its value. Recurring, then, to the language of the act, we find that the ordinary machinery, so to speak, was not prepared for enforcing the act of 1895, as for enforcing other delinquent taxes. It ordained that a tax of $5 for each and every $100 of the clear market value of such property where the money or property exceeds $10,000 or less in value, and, where the money or property affected exceeds $10,000 in value, the same shall be subject to a tax of $5 for each and every $100 of the clear market value thereof up to and including $10,000 in value, and a tax of $7.50 in addition for every such $100 in value in excess of $10,000, and gave a first lien upon the property affected, but provided no method of valuation. The mode of procedure was amended in 1897, by providing a means of ascertaining the value of such estates, which had been overlooked in the act of 1895, and a new section, to be known as "§ 1a," which provides that it shall be the duty of the judge of the probate court in this state, whenever the inventory and appraisement of any estate is filed, which is subject to the payment of a collateral succession tax, to immediately levy upon and charge such estate with the amount of such collateral succession tax, and require the executor, administrator, or beneficiary to pay the same, etc. A "succession tax," as the words indicate and the history of such taxes clearly establishes, is an excise or duty upon the right of a person or corporation to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulation of the state. Wherever properly laid, this is its distinguishing feature, in contradistinction from a property tax. The language of these two acts of 1895 and 1897 is very much involved, and more or less doubt must be felt in interpreting the meaning of the legislature, and this is true of other acts in other states. When it is clear that the tax is upon the succession, it is computed, not on the aggregate valuation of the whole estate of the decedent considered as the unit for taxation, but on the value of the separate interest into which it is divided by the will or by the statute laws of the state, and is a charge against each share or interest, according to its value, and against the person entitled thereto; that is to say, it is a burden on each person claiming succession, measured by the value of his interest, and collectible out of his interest only. Accordingly, in New York, after whose statute the act in question seems to have been in several respects patterned, great difficulty was experienced in construing the law; but having sustained the act as levying a succession tax, it was ruled in Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 827, that, when the will created contingent estates, the executors could not pay the tax until the expectancies became fixed and actual; in other words, being a tax upon the person receiving the share of the estate, it did not accrue until that person was finally ascertained, and that the state could only get its taxes when the legatees or devisees obtained their property. And in Re Roosevelt, 143 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 695, in answer to the contention of counsel for the state that, while it might be considered a hardship to compel annuitants to pay a tax upon an interest that they might never receive, it was the fault of the statute, and the tax could only be postponed by giving bond, the court of appeals answered: "This contention admits away the entire case of the state. It is not to be assumed that the legislature intended to compel the citizens to pay a tax upon an interest he may never receive." Until the vesting of the estate, "the power to tax does not exist." It is obvious that the tax is upon the transfer, by will or devolution, by inheritance; and, in the absence of a transfer and a transferee, there is no basis for a succession tax in its true sense, as it comes to us in the history of jurisprudence and of nations.

With these essential characteristics in view, can the acts of 1895 and 1897 be said to have levied a succession tax? Section 1a requires the tax to be levied upon the appraised value of the whole estate left by the deceased. The tax is at once levied upon that estate, and the personal representatives of the deceased, not the devisees and legatees, are required to pay the tax. How such a tax differs from general taxes upon the property of the deceased, under our system, we are not able to state. The mere calling of such a tax a "succession tax" does not make it different from an ordinary tax upon property, when the effect and operation are identical with an ordinary property tax. This tax is collectible out of all property devised by will or descending to any person other than the father, mother, husband, wife, or direct lineal descendant, whether the estate of the ancestor, devisor, or grantor is solvent or insolvent. If insolvent, there is nothing to which the heir or devisee or legatee can succeed; and yet upon the theory of a succession, an onerous tax is added to the charges against an estate, and payable in advance of other claims. The language of the supreme court of Wisconsin, in State, Sanderson, v. Mann, 76 Wis. 469, seems exceedingly appropriate upon this point: "A succession tax would necessarily be imposed upon the respective parties thus succeeding to such residue. . . . But the tax in question is not upon such succession, but upon the whole estate at its appraised valuation, regardless of whether it is solvent or insolvent. In case of an insolvent estate nothing would be left after the payment of debts for transmission; and in most estates there are likely to be sufficient debts to reduce the amount of such transmission far below the amount of such valuation. Besides, the amount of such tax is graduated by the amount of such appraisal, and is to be paid by the executors or administrators before or at the time of filing such appraisal, notwithstanding they may only be interested as such officials, and never succeed to any of such estate. Manifestly the burden imposed is not a succession tax, but a tax upon the whole estate regardless of whether it is solvent or insolvent."

The New York act (Laws 1896, chap. 908, § 225) provides for a refunding of a proportionate part of the tax in case debts are allowed after its payment; and it was owing largely to this provision that that act was sustained, but no such provision is found in our acts of 1895 and 1897. Re Westurn, 152 N. Y. 98. We think the language of this act, whatever conjecture we may indulge as to the intention of its author, imposes a tax directly upon the property of the decedent, and not upon those who may succeed to his estate; and it must be conceded that, if it is a property tax, it is unconstitutional, because it subjects this estate to an additional property tax to that levied upon all other like property in the state for the same year, and is not levied in proportion to its value. But in no event can the act of 1895, which governs these two cases, be upheld, because the tax authorized by it is not uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax. Mo. Const. art. 10, § 3. The class of subjects to be taxed under this act is the succession or inheritance of property by collateral kindred or devisees other than those named in the statute as exempt from its imposition. It is not necessary to determine what would or would not be proper classification under this act in all cases; but it is perfectly clear that, when the tax is levied upon the property as under this act, uniformity is only attainable by levying the same per cent upon all property belonging to persons bearing the same relation to the decedent. A law which levies 5 per cent upon one cousin or uncle whose legacy is $10,000 and 5 per cent upon the first $10,000 of a legacy of $20,000, bequeathed to another cousin of the same degree, and 12½ per cent upon the remaining $10,000 thereof, violates the constitutional principle of uniformity. It is an arbitrary classification, without rhyme or reason. Such was the decision of the supreme court of Ohio in State, Schwartz, v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 814, 30 L. R. A. 218, upon a provision of the Constitution of that state substantially like § 3 of art. 10 of the Constitution of Missouri. It is a significant fact that in New York, Maine, Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, in which inheritance taxes are sustained, the statutes only authorize a uniform rate of taxation. The constitutional guaranty of uniformity upon the same class of subjects would avail but little if the legislature can arbitrarily vary the classes as often as the amount of property devised or transmitted by inheritance shall differ. If such a rule obtain, the classes will be innumerable, and the constitution a dead letter. Where the amount of property received is made the basis of the tax, uniformity can only be attained by levying the same per cent upon the property of each beneficiary under the will or by inheritance. While the legislature might perhaps distribute the collaterals according to the different degrees of kinship to the decedent or testator or grantor, and levy a different rate upon the different degrees, yet when it ignores all such natural classification, and makes the amount of money received by each the test of classification, it runs counter to another principle that is well-nigh universally accepted,—that a uniform rate of taxation upon every man's property secures equality of burden. To levy a different rate simply because the amount of each man's holdings is different would produce favoritism and destroy that principle of equality before the law which is the boast of free government. If it be so urged that the one receiving the larger bounty enjoys a greater privilege, still the principle of uniformity answers that the value of his right to receive is in direct proportion to the value of the property to which he succeeds, and must, if taxation is to be uniform, be taxed in that proportion or according to one common rate. In State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 632, the supreme court of Maine, in upholding a tax consisting of a uniform per cent, said: The constitutional requirement of uniformity is satisfied by a tax on the transmission of property by will or descent to strangers and collaterals when it is uniform as to the entire class affected, although other classes of persons are exempted from the tax. See also Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep. 722.

Other grave objections are made to the act,—one challenging its title as containing two distinct subjects; another, that the various subject-matters found in the body of the act are not indicated at all in the title. These objections have been presented with the greatest ability, and have been duly considered; but, inasmuch as the propositions already decided go to the very substance of the act, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the point as to the title of the act. To respond to the very thorough discussion of the point by counsel would extend this opinion unnecessarily to too great length. The act of 1895 must be held void, and it follows that the probate courts of Boone county and of the city of St. Louis were wholly without jurisdiction to levy the taxes upon the estates of John C. Conley and Susan E. Spear, and their proceedings in that behalf must be quashed; and it is so ordered.

Sherwood, Burgess, Robinson, and Brace, JJ., concur.

Williams and Marshall, JJ., having been of counsel, take no part in the decision of the case.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Mary G. ATHERTON, Resp't.,
r.

Peter Lee ATHERTON, Appt.

(155 N. Y. 129.)

1. The matrimonial domicile of a wife who is justified in leaving her husband for cruelty may be changed by removal to another state so as to prevent jurisdiction over her on constructive service in a divorce suit in the state where the husband resides.

2. An agreement to provide for the best interests of a child, made by parents who had separated and were to live in different jurisdictions, by which the husband agrees to pay certain sums for the maintenance of the child and a certain allowance of alimony to the wife, with a provision that a divorce or second marriage of either party shall terminate the agreement, is terminated and mutually abandoned when the husband obtains judgment for absolute divorce in one state, and the wife obtains a limited divorce in another state.

(March 1, 1898.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General term of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a special term for Oneida County granting plaintiff a separation from her husband, the custody of their child, and money for its support. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alexander P. Humphrey and Simon W. Rosendale, for appellant:

The Kentucky judgment is a bar to this action pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state.

U. S. Const. art. 4, § 4.

Also, under the provisions of the Federal statutes that authenticated judicial proceedings shall have such faith and credit given them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from which they are taken.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 905.

The plaintiff in the Kentucky action, Peter Lee Atherton, was all his life a resident of that state—and the courts of that state had jurisdiction in that action to fix the status of plaintiff; this would be so even if there was no jurisdiction over the defendant.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, approved in Lynch v. Murphy, 161 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 688; Nelson, Divorce, § 28.

The marital domicile of the parties was in the state of Kentucky.

A citizen of one state and a citizen of another state contracting with each other, may agree between themselves which laws will control the agreement, and may agree upon either state in good faith.

2 Kent, Com. 480; Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 783; Frithard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104.

The divorce in the Kentucky suit was valid, so far as it affects the marital status of the parties there, assuming even that the dwelling place of Mrs. Atherton was in the state of New York.

Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408; Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. ed. 525.

The union of husband and wife legally involves unity of domicile, and the residence and intention of the husband necessarily fixes the domicile of the wife as well as her own.

Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87, 10 Abb. N. C. 833, note; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654.

The provisions of the Federal Constitution would be a nullity if the court of the state of New York should, after conceding jurisdiction to a sister state, assume to decide that some of its findings (incidentally only involving jurisdiction), were erroneous, and assume therefore to ignore its decree.

Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132, cited in 160 U. S. 543, 40 L. ed. 529.

The divorce proceedings in Kentucky were in the nature of proceedings in rem, i. e., in its application to the status of the parties.

Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 14 L. R. A. 220; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132; Davis v. Davis, 2 Misc. 549.

One's residence may be in one place and domicile in another.

Campbell v. Campbell, 90 Hun, 235, citing Re Thompson, 1 Wend. 45; Re Roberts, 8 Paige, 524; Re Denick, 92 Hun, 161.

Although not personally served, still if her domicile, either actual or constructive, were in Kentucky, the judgment would be binding on her.

2 Black, Judgm. § 926; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132; De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Nelson, Divorce, § 28; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654.

Assuming jurisdiction as to the marital status, by the courts of Kentucky, and that the state of New York and the state of Kentucky had equal jurisdiction, the decree in the state which first assumes jurisdiction should be permitted to control.

Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. ed. 829.

The judgment appealed from is contrary to the law as laid down by text-writers of repute and courts of authority, and is not supported by the decision of this court.

1 Freeman, Judg. § 314; Rhyma v. Rhyma, 7 Bush, 316; Hackins v. Ragsdale, 80 Ky. 353, 44 Am. Rep. 483; 2 Black, Judgm. § 926;

NOTE.—As to domicile of wife for purpose of divorce suit, see Loker v. Gerald (Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 497, and note; also Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 23 L. R. A. 267; Miller v. Miller (Fla.) 24 L. R. A. 137; Wood 40 L. R. A.

v. Wood (Ark.) 28 L. R. A. 157; McCreery v. Davis (S. C.) 28 L. R. A. 655; Clutton v. Clutton (Mich.) 31 L. R. A. 160.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 152; Pennoyer v. Neff, 96 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Creely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 298; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. ed. 95; Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 248, 37 Am. Rep. 321.

When an inhabitant of this state goes into another state or country to obtain a divorce for any cause occurring here and while the parties resided here, or for any cause which would not authorize a divorce by the laws of this state, a divorce so obtained shall be of no force or effect in this state. In all other cases a divorce decreed in any other state or country, according to the laws thereof, by a court having jurisdiction of the cause and both the parties, shall be valid and effectual in this state.

In the Williams Case, the separation occurred while the parties were domiciled in New York, the husband going to Minnesota, refusing to allow his wife to follow him, and there obtaining his divorce.

In the Rigney Case, the only doubt was as to the validity of the judgment so far as it was for alimony and costs, in personam.

In the De Meli Case, while both parties were domiciled in New York, the husband sued in Germany.

In the Jones Case, the parties separated in New York, and the wife went to Texas and there sued.

In the Cross Case, the parties separated in New York, and the husband went to Illinois to sue.

In the O'Dea Case, the parties separated in New York, and the husband went to Ohio to sue.

In the Baker Case, the parties separated in New York, and the wife went to Ohio to sue.

In the Hunt Case, the parties separated in Louisiana; the husband stayed at home; the wife came to New York; and yet a judgment in favor of the husband, on constructive process in Louisiana, was held valid.

In the Hoffman Case, the parties separated in New York, and the husband went to Indiana to sue.

In the Kerr Case, the parties separated in New York, and again the husband went to Indiana to sue. Indeed, in both of these cases (the Hoffman and the Kerr Cases), it was found that at the time the husband obtained his divorce in Indiana he was a citizen of New York.

We are not making a distinction which is novel to the administration of the law in these cases.

Re Morrison, 52 Hun, 102; Re Morrison, 117 N. Y. 638; Re Degaramo, 86 Hun, 390; Campbell v. Campbell, 90 Hun, 233; Re Denick, 92 Hun, 161; Bell v. Bell, 4 App. Div. 528; McGown v. McGown, 19 App. Div. 368.

When a wife separates herself from her husband there is no law by which he can restrain her movements.

Queen v. Jackson [1891] 1 Q. B. 671.

The plaintiff was only temporarily in the state of New York. The place of residence or dwelling place is the permanent abode, and the word is synonymous with inhabitancy or domicile, as distinguished from temporary residence.

DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 485; Nelson, Divorce, § 40.

40 L. R. A.

Length of residence will not alone effect the change; intention alone will not do it; but the two taken together do constitute the change of domicile.

DePuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556, Approved in Hart v. Kip, 148 N. Y. 806; DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 485.

Courts should, and do, discountenance efforts at attempted residential change for purposes of divorce.

Story, Confli. L. § 744; Wharton, Confli. L. § 490; Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Clark & F. 488; Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H. L. Cas. 390.

Messrs. William Kernan and A. M. Mills, for respondent:

It is sufficient to authorize the interposition of the court to grant a separation, that there be illtreatment and personal injury, or a reasonable apprehension of personal injury.

Whispell v. Whispell, 4 Barb. 217; Davies v. Davies, 55 Barb. 180; Bihin v. Bihin, 17 Abb. Pr. 20; Uhlmann v. Uhlmann, 17 Abb. N. C. 236; Lutz v. Lutz, 31 N. Y. S. R. 718; Straus v. Straus, 67 Hun, 491; Waltermire v. Waltermire, 110 N. Y. 183; DeMeli v. DeMeli, 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 306; Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 35; Mason v. Mason, 1 Edw. Ch. 278.

The decree of divorce in Kentucky in favor of the defendant is no bar to this action.

The court of another state cannot divorce a citizen of this state, domiciled and actually residing here at the commencement of and during the pendency of the judicial proceedings in that state, without personal service of process upon the defendant in such proceedings in that state, or a voluntary appearance by the defendant in such proceedings.

Beckwith v. Beckwith, 24 N. Y. Week. Dig. 5; Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30, 7 Am. Rep. 299; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415; Cross v. Cross, 22 N. Y. Week. Dig. 309, Affirmed 108 N. Y. 628; DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 485; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 14 L. R. A. 220; Re Degaramo, 86 Hun, 390; People v. Karlsioe, 1 App. Div. 571; Bell v. Bell, 4 App. Div. 527; Kilburn v. Woodworth, 5 Johns. 37, 4 Am. Dec. 321; Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549.

A wife may acquire a residence and domicile separate from that of her husband, whenever it is necessary and proper for her to do so. Certainly it was eminently necessary and proper for the plaintiff in this case to do so.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 125; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Rundt v. VanIncegan, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 328; Mellen v. Mellen, 10 Abb. N. C. 329, and note.

The evidence and the attending circumstances clearly show that the plaintiff intended to and did abandon her residence and domicile in Kentucky, and came to her mother's at Clinton, New York, with the intention of making that her home, and has since resided there and made it her home; and that she became and was from the time of coming to Clinton a citizen and resident of this state, actually residing in this state.

The question was one of fact, to be decided upon all the evidence and circumstances, and was correctly decided, and is conclusive upon this court.

DuPuy v. Wurtz, 53 N. Y. 556; Prentiss v. Butler, 87 N. Y. S. R. 605; Bassett v. Wheeler, 84 N. Y. 486; DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 486; Phelps v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 17 App. Div. 392.

The agreement between the father and mother is not binding upon the child, or upon the court as to the custody of the child. The court has the power, and it is its duty, to provide for the best interests and welfare of the child, aside from any agreement between the parents.

People, Barry, v. Mercein, 3 Hill, 400, 38 Am. Dec. 644; People, Barry, v. Mercein, 8 Paige, 47; Mercein v. People, Barry, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Re Hartman, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 128; People, Brush, v. Brown, 35 Hun, 324; Allen v. Affleck, 64 How. Pr. 580.

The court had the power, and it properly exercised it in giving the care and custody of the child to the mother.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1766; Re Waldron, 13 Johns. 418; Re Maurer, 18 N. Y. Week. Dig. 568; Re Hartman, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 128; People, Olmstead, v. Olmstead, 27 Barb. 9; Mercein v. People, Barry, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Re Welch, 74 N. Y. 299; People, Allen, v. Allen, 105 N. Y. 628; People, Pruyn, v. Walts, 122 N. Y. 288.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant seeks on this appeal the reversal of a judgment for limited divorce recovered against him by his wife. The judgment rests upon the finding of the trial court that the defendant had treated the plaintiff in such a cruel and inhuman manner that it rendered it unsafe and improper for her to cohabit with him, and justified her in seeking a separate residence. It gives her alimony, and the custody of the only child of the marriage. The plaintiff, a young lady of refinement and excellent social position, was married, when twenty-two years old, to the defendant, at her father's house in Clinton, New York, on the 17th day of October, 1888. The defendant is a young man of good family, a native of Kentucky, and at the time of his marriage resided with his parents at the city of Louisville. After the wedding trip, the plaintiff and defendant took up their residence at the house of defendant's parents. On the 8th of January, 1890, a daughter was born, and is the only issue of the marriage. On the 3d of October, 1891, the plaintiff left her husband's home permanently, taking the child with her. On the 10th day of October, 1891, and before her departure for the state of New York, the plaintiff, her trustee, and the defendant, with the advice of counsel, entered into a certain agreement that will be referred to later. Immediately thereafter the plaintiff departed from the commonwealth of Kentucky, and came to the state of New York, with the intention, as the trial court finds, of changing her residence and domicile from Kentucky to New York. In the month of December, 1892, the defendant commenced an action against plaintiff in Kentucky for an absolute divorce, alleging that she had abandoned him in the month of October, 1891, without fault on his part, and such abandonment had continued uninterruptedly for the period of more than one year. Under the statutes of Kentucky the proof of this state of facts entitles a plaintiff to a decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony. The defendant was not served with process in Kentucky, nor did she appear in the action. The decree of divorce was obtained upon the assumption that the defendant was a resident of Kentucky, who had been absent therefrom for four months, and could, therefore, receive notice of commencement and pendency of the action by a designated constructive process. The plaintiff made his formal proofs, and, in the absence of the defendant, the Kentucky decree was entered about March 14, 1893. The wife began the present action for a limited divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment in January, 1898, and the trial court rendered judgment in her favor in June, 1893. The husband appeared in this case, was represented by able Kentucky and New York counsel, and the issues were thoroughly tried.

The principal question presented by this appeal is whether the Kentucky decree is a bar to this action, the defendant having set it up in his answer. The plaintiff attacked this decree on the ground that it was entered by a court having no jurisdiction of her person, she being at the time the Kentucky action was begun and the decree therein entered, a resident of the state of New York. On the other hand, the defendant insisted that his wife was, at the time referred to, a resident of Kentucky, and, consequently, bound by the decree. This was one of the issues tried and decided in favor of the wife. The learned counsel for the defendant from Kentucky argued with great earnestness and ability that the matrimonial domicile of the wife is that of her husband, and consequently we are compelled by the Constitution of the United States to give full faith and credit to the decree in her husband's favor. Article 4, § 1. In view of the fact that we have a finding fixing the wife's domicile in this state, we are of opinion the Kentucky decree is void as to her under the law as well settled in this jurisdiction. It is undoubtedly true that the matrimonial domicile of the wife is that of her husband, but this general rule has its exceptions. In this case we have the finding that the plaintiff was justified in leaving her husband, and that her sole reason for so doing was his cruel and inhuman treatment. This court said in Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129, in speaking of the general rule as to the wife's domicile (at page 242): "There are, however, exceptions to the rule, one of which is invoked by the plaintiff in this suit, so that in certain cases a married woman may have a domicile in another jurisdiction than that of her husband. This is so, when they are living apart under a judicial decree of separation, or when the conduct of the husband has been such as to entitle the wife to an absolute or limited divorce. She may acquire a separate domicile whenever it is necessary for her to do so. But the right to do so springs from the necessity for its exercise." In the case at bar we have the undoubted right of the plaintiff to change her domicile under this rule, followed up by the finding that she did so change it to the state of New York. It has been held in many cases that the jurisdiction of the court of another state in which judgment has been rendered is always open to inquiry in the courts of this state, and, if that court has exceeded its jurisdiction or has not obtained jurisdiction of the parties, the proceedings are void. Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 272; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30, 7 Am. Rep. 299; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415; DeMeli v. DeMeli, 120 N. Y. 486; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408; Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 14 L. R. A. 220.

We have carefully examined the evidence, and have reached the conclusion that the findings of the trial court as to the issues of domicile of the plaintiff and the cruel and inhuman treatment by defendant of his wife are not without evidence to support them, and because of their affirmation by the general term they are binding upon this court. It therefore follows, upon the facts and the law, that the Kentucky judgment is not a bar to this action.

It remains for us to consider the appellant's points based on the alleged effect of the agreement entered into by the plaintiff, her trustee, and the defendant just prior to plaintiff's final departure from Kentucky. This agreement bears date October 10, 1891. We do not regard this instrument as technically articles of separation between husband and wife, but rather an agreement to provide for the best interests of the child, made in contemplation of the fact that the parents had separated, and were to live in different jurisdictions. The opening recitation of the agreement refers to the parties as "having ceased to live together as man and wife, without in any way acknowledging upon whom is the fault, or condoning the conduct of the one or the other which has led to the existing state of affairs, or preventing any consequences which may follow, or right which may arise to either party, if such status shall continue." This language makes it clear that, while the separation was recognized as a fact, the agreement was not to prejudice or affect existing rights of either party growing out of that situation. The recitation clause further states that the parties desire to provide for the best interest of the child, and with this view they have entered into an agreement. It provides for the alternating custody of the child by her mother and the mother of the defendant. The defendant obligates himself to pay $500 for maintenance of the child during that portion of the year in which she is with her mother. The wife is to receive alimony at the rate of $125 a month, the divorce or second marriage of either party to terminate the agreement. The agreement was to continue as to the child until she was fourteen years of age, and as to her mother until January 8, 1904. If divorce was granted, the provisions as to plaintiff were to be carried into the decree. There are other details not necessary to mention. We are of opinion that the suit for absolute divorce brought by the husband in Kentucky in December, 1893, and the action for limited divorce instituted by the wife in this state in January, 1893, both having proceeded to judgment, may be regarded as a mutual abandonment and termination of the agreement under its terms, and left the court below free to act as it deemed proper respecting the alimony of the wife and the custody and maintenance of the child. The provision of the agreement for the wife's alimony was not carried into the Kentucky decree, but the judgment in this action provides for the same amount of alimony per month of $125. It is unnecessary for us to consider any of the questions which are argued in the briefs, resting on the assumption that the agreement was in full force and effect at the time the judgment was entered herein at trial term. The husband and wife had sought relief in the courts, and the interests of the child were safe, with the supreme court of this state guarding her rights.

The judgment of the General Term should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Gray, J., absent, and Martin, J., not sitting.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Adam WILHELM, Plff. in Err.,
v.

City of DEFIANCE.

(.....Ohio.....)

A municipal corporation, having, in the proper mode, provided for the construction of a sidewalk and notified the owner of abutting land, may require of him the construction of a sufficient walk in front of his premises, and, upon his default, may itself construct such walk and assess the cost thereof upon his land; but it cannot recover from him indemnity on account of a judgment recovered against it for injuries occasioned by such owner's negligent construction of the walk.

(March 1, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Defiance County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas which sustained a demurrer to the petition in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the amount of a judgment which the city had been compelled to pay because of a defect in a walk in front of defendant's property. Reversed.

Statement by Shauck, J.:

The city of Defiance filed its petition against Wilhelm in the court of common pleas alleging in substance that he was the owner of lot

*Headnote by the COURT.
NOTE.—See also the similar case of Rochester v. Campbell (N. Y.) 10 L. R. A. 393.
40 L. R. A.

1 abutting on Clinton street in said city; that an ordinance of the city required him to construct and maintain in front thereof good and sufficient sidewalks; when constructed of wood to be 6 feet in width and laid with good sound pine-board planks not less than 6 nor more than 12 inches wide and 1½ inches thick, and free from sap and unsound knots, on white or burr oak stringers, etc.; that on November 7, 1889, the council of said city adopted a resolution declaring it to be necessary to improve the walk in front of Wilhelm's lot in accordance with the provisions of the general ordinance relating to wooden sidewalks, and that notice thereof was personally served upon Wilhelm; that Wilhelm thereupon took upon himself the work of constructing and repairing said walk, but constructed it in a negligent manner and of unfit and defective materials, and left it in an unsafe and dangerous condition, in consequence whereof one Martha L. Sammis, while lawfully passing along said walk, without fault on her part sustained severe injuries for which in the court of common pleas a judgment had been awarded her against the city for $1,500, and $108.53, the costs of suit; that before the trial of her said action against the city, Wilhelm was notified of the pendency of said action, and that the city would require him to indemnify it for all damages which it might be adjudged to pay her; and that it paid the amount of the judgment so recovered by her, and demanded of Wilhelm that he reimburse it, which he failed to do. The prayer of the petitioner was for judgment for the amount which the city so paid to Mrs. Sammis.

In the court of common pleas a final judgment was rendered in favor of Wilhelm on his demurrer to the petition.

On a petition in error by the city, the circuit court reversed the judgment of the common pleas.

Messrs. Henry Newbegin and Edward H. Newbegin, for plaintiff in error:

No liability was cast upon Wilhelm for the injury on account of the defective sidewalk. The sidewalk was a part of the public street, under the entire control of the city, and, in regard to it, Wilhelm owed no duty to the public, whatever.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 1008, 1012; Re Burmeister, 76 N. Y. 174; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459; Taber v. Grafmiller, 109 Ind. 206.

For mere negligence in permitting a sidewalk to be out of repair, when he has actually done nothing to obstruct it, or the defect is not in some particular part of it which he has constructed for his own private use and not for the common and general use of the public, the abutting lotowner is not responsible.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 1012; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532; Noonan v. Stillwater, 33 Minn. 198, 53 Am. Rep. 23; Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 45 Mich. 74, 40 Am. Rep. 457; Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502; Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Kirby v. Boylston Market Assn. 14 Gray, 249, 74 Am. Dec. 682; Betz v. Limingi, 46 La. Ann. 1113; Keokuk v. Independent Dist. 53 Iowa, 352, 36 Am. Rep. 40 L. R. A.

226; Hartford v. Talcott, 48 Conn. 525, 40 Am. Rep. 189; Rochester v. Campbell, 123 N. Y. 405, 10 L. R. A. 393; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 348; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 395, ¶ 10, note 3.

To have this right of action over against Wilhelm, the city must have been without fault itself. The city was negligent of its duty to keep the sidewalk in repair under § 2640, Ohio Rev. Stat.

Cardington v. Fredericks, 46 Ohio St. 442; Cleveland v. King, 132 U. S. 295, 33 L. ed. 334.

There can be no recovery over by the city against Wilhelm for the reason that one of two joint wrongdoers cannot have contribution from the other.

Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; 2 Addison, Torts, Wood's ed. last par. § 1394, note 1.

Wilhelm was not liable to Mrs. Sammis.

Sammis v. Wilhelm, 6 Ohio C. C. 565.

If not liable directly to the injured person he could not be held liable indirectly to the city for damages suffered by the injured person through its fault.

Tobin v. Portland S. & P. R. Co. 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; Urquhart v. Ogdensburg, 97 N. Y. 238; St. Louis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Mo. 92; Keokuk v. Independent Dist. 53 Iowa, 352, 36 Am. Rep. 226; Lowell v. Gliddon, 159 Mass. 317; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 1012; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. §§ 346, 348.

Mr. Edwin A. Latty, for defendant in error:

One who negligently creates or maintains an obstruction or nuisance in a public street is, irrespective of authority or license, liable to persons injured thereby.

Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 359, 72 Am. Dec. 580; Southern Ohio R. Co. v. Morey, 47 Ohio St. 207, 7 L. R. A. 701; Hawver v. Whalen, 49 Ohio St. 69, 14 L. R. A. 828; Sexton v. Zett, 44 N. Y. 430; Bliss v. Schaub, 48 Barb. 339; Steinermann v. White, 16 Jones & S. 523; Dixon v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 170; Mairs v. Manhattan Real Estate Assn. 89 N. Y. 498; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24; Indianapolis v. Emmelman, 108 Ind. 580, 58 Am. Rep. 65.

In case the defect was caused by a licensee, the right of recovery depends on his contract, express or implied, to perform the act permitted in such a manner as to protect the public from danger and the municipality from liability.

Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Congreve v. Morgan, 15 N. Y. 84, 72 Am. Dec. 495; Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 657.

Where a municipal corporation has been compelled to pay a judgment rendered against it, for damages sustained by reason of the wrongful acts of a third person, rendering a street unsafe, it has a remedy over against such person.

Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen, 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; Lowell v. Short, 4 Cush. 275; Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496; Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33;

Woods v. Groton, 111 Mass. 357; Westfield v. Mayo, 122 Mass. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 292; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 67; New York v. Dimick, 20 Abb. N. C. 15; Seneca Falls v. Zalinski, 8 Hun, 571; Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 657; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Rochester v. Campbell, 123 N. Y. 412, 10 L. R. A. 898; Catterlin v. Frankfort, 79 Ind. 547, 41 Am. Rep. 627; Morgan v. Muldoon, 82 Ind. 347; Bever v. North, 107 Ind. 544; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 774; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill, 324; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 657; Elkhart v. Wickwire, 87 Ind. 77; McNaughton v. Elkhart, 85 Ind. 384; Brookville v. Arthurs, 152 Pa. 334; Portland v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 66 Me. 485; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 356; New York v. Brady, 81 Hun, 440; Reading City v. Reiner, 167 Pa. 41; Wabasha v. Southworth, 54 Minn. 79; Canandaigua v. Foster, 81 Hun, 147.

When a remedy exists the corporation may notify such wrongdoer of the pendency of the action against it, and request him to come in and defend; he will then be concluded by any judgment as to the existence of the defect, the liability of the city, and amount of damages.

Boston v. Worthington, 10 Gray, 496; Portland v. Richardson, 54 Me. 46, 89 Am. Dec. 720; Seneca Falls v. Zalinski, 8 Hun, 571; Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 657; Rochester v. Montgomery, 72 N. Y. 65; Morgan v. Muldoon, 82 Ind. 347; Bever v. North, 107 Ind. 544; Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 74 Ga. 774; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427; Port Jervis v. First Nat. Bank, 96 N. Y. 550; Binsse v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 530; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill, 324; Elliott, Roads and Streets, p. 657.

If, after notice and request to defend, the wrongdoer fails to make any defense in the action against the city, and the city defends it for him, it may, if guilty of no misfeasance itself, recover from such wrongdoer, not only the amount of the judgment recovered against it, but also all reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in defending the action, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Westfield v. Mayo, 122 Mass. 100, 23 Am. Rep. 292; Veazie v. Penobscot R. Co. 49 Me. 119; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Allegany County Comrs. 57 Md. 201, 40 Am. Rep. 430; Bazendale v. London, C. & D. R. Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 35; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 657; Aslin v. Parkin, 2 Burr. 665; Marlatt v. Clary, 20 Ark. 251; French v. Parish, 14 N. H. 496; Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299.

The rule that no contribution exists between wrongdoers is always confined to cases where the party seeking redress knew, or must be presumed to have known, the act was unlawful; and does not apply to cases where the party seeking contribution was a tortfeasor only by an inference of law.

Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 72; Wooley v. Batte, 3 Car. & P. 417; Pearson v. Skelton, 1 Mees. & W. 504; Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. 287, 57 Am. Dec. 105; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 40 L. R. A.

Conn. 455; Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 638; Goldborough v. Darst, 9 Ill. App. 205; Sherner v. Spear, 92 N. C. 148; Horbach v. Elder, 18 Pa. 33; Armstrong County v. Clarion County, 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368; Acheson v. Miller, 2 Ohio St. 203, 59 Am. Dec. 668; Grund v. Van Vleet, 69 Ill. 479; Ives v. Jones, 25 N. C. (3 Ired. L.) 538, 40 Am. Dec. 421.

In the following similar cases, where recovery over was sought, the rule of no contribution between tortfeasors was expressly held not to apply.

Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 23 Pick. 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Campbell v. Somerville, 114 Mass. 834; Gridley v. Bloomington, 68 Ill. 47; Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Wheeler, 81 Minn. 121; Churchill v. Holt, 127 Mass. 165, 34 Am. Rep. 855; Horbach v. Elder, 18 Pa. 33; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455; Wooley v. Batte, 2 Car. & P. 417; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co. 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324; West Boylston v. Mason, 102 Mass. 341.

Shauck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In Morris v. Woodburn, 57 Ohio St. 380, we held that if the owner of a lot abutting upon a street of a municipality, for the use of his property, constructs a vault under the sidewalk over which he negligently places and maintains a defective covering, he is liable directly to a footman injured thereby, notwithstanding the omission by the municipality of the duty imposed upon it by statute to keep the street in repair. And since the decisions in Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298, and 4 Wall. 657, 18 L. ed. 427, it seems to be the settled law that if a municipal corporation is held in damages for its failure to keep a sidewalk in repair by removing the source of danger so created by an abutting owner for his own personal ends, it may, having given him notice of the pendency of the suit against it, recover from him the amount which it is adjudged to pay because of his torts.

But it is not assumed that the grounds upon which recoveries were sustained in those cases are available here. The opinion of the circuit court in the present case (12 Ohio C. C. 346), shows that it was mindful of the fact that the statute imposes upon the municipality, and not upon the abutting owner, the duty of keeping the streets and sidewalks in repair and free from nuisance. It is conceded that the law imposes upon such owner no duty with respect to the walk whose mere omission could be asserted as the foundation of an action against him. According to the view there taken, Wilhelm, having assumed the duty of constructing and maintaining the walk, thereby became bound to exercise due care in the selection of materials and reasonable skill in constructing and repairing the walk, and by his failure in respect thereto, he actually created the dangerous place and negligently left it unguarded, whereby he became directly liable to the person injured, or to the city in the present action, it having been compelled to respond first because of its failure to perform the duty imposed upon it by the statute. No authority is cited by the circuit court in support of its view, and most of the cases cited by the city solicitor in support of the judgment relate to the points decided in Morris v. Woodburn, and Chicago v. Robbins.

The right of the municipality to recover from the wrongdoer was upheld in Chicago v. Robbins, and in the cases following it upon the ground that the recourse of the person injured is primarily against him; and the municipality, having relieved him of that liability, is subrogated to the right of the person injured. In Rochester v. Campbell, 123 N. Y. 405, 10 L. R. A. 393, it was correctly said of those cases: "These were all cases where the dangerous conditions of the street were created by the defendants, and they were held liable for the consequences of their unlawful acts, under their common-law obligations as the creators of nuisances, and not by reason of any duty enjoined upon them by statute or otherwise." Section 2640, Revised Statutes, provides: "The council shall have the care, supervision, and control of all public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, and bridges, within the corporation, and shall cause the same to be kept open and in repair, and free from nuisance."

This, it has been repeatedly held, is not merely a grant of power to the municipality, but the imposition of a duty upon it. Cognate provisions of the statute authorize the municipality to require, in the mode specified, the abutting owner to construct or repair the walk in front of his premises. The effect of his failure to comply with the requirement is also defined by the statute; that upon his failure the municipality may construct or repair the walk and assess the cost thereof upon his property. But the right of the city to be indemnified in this manner is expressly limited to one fourth the amount at which the property is valued for the purposes of taxation. The consequence thus indicated by the statute is exclusive. In considering the effect of similar statutory provisions in Keokuk v. Independent Dist. 53 Iowa, 352, 36 Am. Rep. 226, it was said: "The city has sole authority over its streets, is charged with their improvement and repair, and vested with the power to tax for that purpose. Where the lotowner is required by the city to construct or repair sidewalks it is simply a method of exercising such power of taxation by which he is made the agent of the city to expend the amount of the tax, and the responsibility for the performance of the work remains where the authority to control it is found.

In well-considered cases it has been held that the liability which the statute imposes upon the abutting owner is exclusive, and not reconcilable with an unlimited liability for injuries occasioned by the defective condition of the streets and sidewalks which are constructed and maintained under the authority of the municipality, where the condition results from negligence merely. Flynn v. Canton Co. 40 Md. 812, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Hartford v. Talcott, 48 Conn. 525, 40 Am. Rep. 189; St. Louis v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Mo. 92. That conclusion is in harmony with the view of the subject taken in Rochester v. Campbell, where it is said that to hold the abutting property liable in an action for indemnity "would tend to relax the vigilance of municipal corporations in the performance of their duties with respect to the repair of streets and highways, and impose that duty upon those who might be utterly unable to discharge it."

The policy of the statute, as indicated by its provisions, according to the doctrine of the cases cited and the numerous cases which they review, seems to require the conclusion that when a municipality accepts a sidewalk constructed by the owner of abutting property pursuant to its notice, as a compliance therewith, all liability for mere negligence in construction and maintenance must rest and remain upon it.

Judgment of the Circuit Court reversed, and that of Common Pleas affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

George F. VIETOR et al., Appts.,

James M. GLOVER et al., Respts.

(17 Wash. 37.)

1. The only ground on which preferred creditors of a partnership can complain of a deed of trust made by it for benefit of creditors is that the claims of preferred creditors is not bona fide and real.

2. Partnership property may be conveyed to pay notes signed by the individual partners, and not in the firm name.

3. Subsequent creditors of an insolvent firm cannot complain that a note was given by the continuing partners to a withdrawing member for his alleged share in the assets of the firm.

NOTE.—As to the assumption by a partnership of the individual debts of the partners, see note to Re Edwards (Mo.) 29 L. R. A. 681.

40 L. R. A.

4. A conveyance for the security of several claims some of which are fraudulent will be sustained in favor of those which are valid.

5. Creditors who act in good faith in taking a conveyance of their debtor's property, in satisfaction of their claims, and who surrender notes to a larger amount than are covered by the assets assigned, may retain what they receive although the grantors may act in bad faith.

(April 23, 1897.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of defendants in an action brought to set aside a conveyance for the benefit of creditors as in fraud of plaintiffs' rights. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel R. Stern, Cyrus Happy, and W. W. Tolman, for appellants:

Where successive firms are formed, or where changes in partnerships occur, as by a partner selling an interest to another, the property of the old firm is converted into that of the new, and the partners in the new firm have an equitable lien to have it applied in payment of the creditors of the latter firm, which lien the court will use in favor of such creditors until they are paid in full, to the exclusion of the creditors of the former firm.

1 Bates, Partn. § 555.

A partner who retires, suffering the continuing partners to go on with the old assets as a new firm, has lost his equity to compel their application to the debts of the original firm.

1 Bates, Partn. § 556.

Then Julius Loewenberg had no lien upon these assets (even conceding that they were the assets of the old firm) for the $31,000 note given him as representing his share.

A firm must be solvent in order to dispose of the partnership property or preferentially prefer an individual or old debt.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 116; 1 Bates, Partn. § 556; Burhans v. Kelly, 17 N. Y. S. R. 552; Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 146, 11 Am. Rep. 683; Charleson v. McGraw, 3 Wash. Terr. 344.

Where one member of the partnership retires, and no one is taken in his place, the property of the old firm will be first devoted to the debts of the firm succeeding it. If such firm property thus disposed of has not gone into the hands of a bona fide holder, such a transfer is a gift, and is void as to all existing firm creditors who are prejudiced thereby.

17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 979, 984.

If a firm is insolvent, the withdrawal of a large amount of funds, or of his original capital, by one partner, or otherwise drawing from the joint fund an amount in excess of what he is entitled to, knowing that the joint creditors will not have sufficient, whether this is by gratuitous permission of his copartners or under a right to do so given by the articles of partnership, is, as a matter of course, a conveyance in fraud of the rights of partnership creditors, and doubtless also of the separate creditors of the other partners, for it is in effect a gift; and if the court can get possession of the fund before the retiring partner has collected it, they will treat it as partnership assets.

1 Bates, Partn. § 564.

A partnership has no greater right to make voluntary conveyances of its property, or, what is the same thing, use its property to pay or secure debts not its own, when it is insolvent, or when such payment will leave it insolvent, or hinder or delay existing creditors, than an individual of his separate property.

1 Bates, Partn. §§ 565, 566, 568; Phelps v. McNeely, 66 Mo. 554, 27 Am. Rep. 378; Re Cook, 3 Biss. 122; Goodbar v. Cary, 16 Fed. Rep. 316, 4 Woods, 663; Heineman v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64; Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 46, 49 Am. Rep. 160; Keith v. Armstrong, 65 Wis. 225; Dereau v. Fowler, 2 Paige, 401; Patterson v. Seaton, 70 Iowa, 689; Still v. Focke, 66 Tex. 715.

Partnership effects cannot be taken by attachment or sold on execution to satisfy a creditor of one of the partners, except it be the interest of such separate partner in the effects after settlement of all the accounts.

40 L. R. A.

3 Kent, Com. ed. 1889, 98; Goodbar v. Cary, 16 Fed. Rep. 319; Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 146, 11 Am. Rep. 683; Patterson v. Seaton, 70 Iowa, 689; Ferson v. Monroe, 21 N. H. 462; Wilson v. Robertson, 21 N. Y. 587; Ransom v. Van Deventer, 41 Barb. 307; Heineman v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64; Taylor v. Missouri Glass Co. 6 Tex. Civ. App. 337; Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329; Johnston v. Standard Shoe Co. 5 Tex. Civ. App. 398; Baily v. Hornthal, 89 Hun, 514; Ames v. Ames, 87 Fed. Rep. 36.

A parallel case with the one at bar will be found in Bannister v. Miller, 54 N. J. Eq. 121.

See Van Doren v. Stickler, 24 N. J. Eq. 331, Affirmed 27 N. J. Eq. 498.

The creditors were privy to the fraud, and are not therefore bona fide purchasers without notice.

McDonald v. Gaunt, 30 Kan. 693; Gollobor v. Martin, 33 Kan. 252; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 3d ed. 22-28. See also Williams v. Etans, 6 Neb. 216; Hunter v. Ferguson, 3 Colo. App. 287; Lloyd v. Fulton, 91 U. S. 485, 23 L. ed. 365; Humes v. Scruggs, 94 U. S. 22, 24 L. ed. 51; Burt v. Agassiz, 6 Wash. 242.

The transfer in this case was, in effect, a general assignment.

Sabichi v. Chase, 108 Cal. 81; Strong v. Kalk, 91 Wis. 29; Stout v. Watson, 19 Or. 251; Truitt Bros. v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 364; Page v. Smith, 24 Wis. 368; Murphy v. Caldwell, 50 Ala. 461; Burrill, Assignm. 6th ed. § 4; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 352; Smith v. Sipperley, 9 Utah, 267.

This transfer being a preferential transfer, and not for the benefit of all the creditors, was contrary to law.

1 Hill's Code, § 274, and as amended by chap. 100, Laws 1893.

The conveyance in this case was made in trust for the use of the persons making the same, and was therefore fraudulent.

1 Hill's Code, § 1452; Burrill, Assignm. § 167; Lawson v. Funk, 108 Ill. 502.

If the consideration failed in part because of fraud the entire transaction was fraudulent.

Biapham, Equity, p. 260; Mead v. Combs, 19 N. J. Eq. 112; 1 Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 73; Swinford v. Rogers, 28 Cal. 234; cases cited in Collins v. Blantern, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. Am. Law Series ed. p. 659; Wait v. Jones, 1 Bing. N. C. 665.

Although founded on sufficient consideration, if the intent was fraudulent the sale was a fraud.

Bussard v. Bullitt, 95 Iowa, 736; Billings v. Russell, 101 N. Y. 226; Knapp v. Day, 4 Colo. App. 21; Cole v. Thornburg, 4 Colo. App. 95; Mead v. Combs, 19 N. J. Eq. 112; Kellogg v. Root, 23 Fed. Rep. 525; Chevalier v. Commins, 106 Cal. 580; Lawson v. Funk, 108 Ill. 502.

Messrs. L. B. Nash, Lucius G. Nash, Dolph, Malloy, & Simon, and John M. Gearin, for respondents:

A debtor in failing circumstances may not only dispose of his property for the benefit of his creditors, generally, but by such conveyance prefer one creditor to another, or one class of creditors to another class.

Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. 178, 9 L. ed. 1046; Tompkins v. Wheeler, 16 Pet. 106, 10 L. ed. 903.

If the debtor's property is not encumbered by liens, he may prefer creditors by paying a debt in full or in part.

The secret motives of the debtor or his intent to defeat execution are immaterial, if the transfer is solely to prefer one creditor over another.

Bump, Fraud. Conv. 3d ed. p. 190; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 184.

This right of the debtor to alienate his property is restricted only by the principle that he shall not alienate it for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding his creditors.

Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 546; Turner v. Iowa Nat. Bank, 2 Wash. 192; Ephraim v. Kelleher, 4 Wash. 243, 18 L. R. A. 604; Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 128; Samuel v. Kittenger, 6 Wash. 261.

Each partner has an ultimate interest in the results of the partnership, i. e., if it has made profits, to his interest therein, and on dissolution, to his capital invested, therefore, he has an equity in having the partnership property applied to the discharge of the partnership obligations, and to prevent their being diverted from this central purpose and converted by the other members into their individual property, or applied to the discharge of their individual obligations.

This interest the partner may dispose of, and the equity referred to the partner may waive, and this equity of the creditor subsists so long as that of the partner, through whom it is derived, remains.

Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 654, 27 L. ed. 213.

The partnership has the same jus disponendi of partnership property as an individual of individual property, so that, when the partners have united to sell the partnership property, or to divide it, or appropriate it to pay a single firm or a single individual creditor, upon what equitable or legal principle can an interference with their jus disponendi be based.

3 Kent, Com. p. 65; Barkley v. Tapp, 87 Ind. 25; Story, Partn. § 858; Levis v. Harrison, 81 Ind. 278; Lindley, Partn. pp. 674, 681; Story, Partn. § 97; Purple v. Farrington, 119 Ind. 164, 4 L. R. A. 535; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. p. 13; Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 46, 49 Am. Dec. 160; Kennedy v. National Union Bank, 23 Hun, 494; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 44; Re Kahley, 2 Biss. 383; Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 317, 1 L. R. A. 179; Fisher v. Syfers, 109 Ind. 514; Dunham v. Hanna, 18 Ind. 270; Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370; Goudy v. Werbe, 117 Ind. 154, 3 L. R. A. 114; Louden v. Ball, 93 Ind. 232; McFadden v. Fritz, 90 Ind. 590; McFadden v. Hopkins, 81 Ind. 459; Morris v. Stern, 80 Ind. 227; Schaeffer v. Pithian, 17 Ind. 463; Kistner v. Sindlinger, 83 Ind. 114; McCormick's Appeal, 57 Pa. 54, 98 Am. Dec. 191; Wilson v. Soper, 13 B. Mon. 411, 56 Am. Dec. 573; 2 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. pp. 1237-1267; Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 648-654, 27 L. ed. 211-213; Hutiskamp v. Moline Wagon Co. 121 U. S. 310, 30 L. ed. 971; Rogers v. Batchelor, 12 Pet. 221, 9 L. ed. 1063; Nall v. McIntyre, 31 Ala. 532; Jackson v. Holloway, 14 B. Mon. 133; Saunty v. Dunlap, 12 Wis. 384; Buck v. Mosley, 24 Miss. 170, and cases cited; Wait, Act. & Def. p. 131; Williams v. Barnett, 10 Kan. 455.

40 L. R. A.

A partner may pay a firm debt out of individual property at the expense of individual creditors.

Gallagher's Appeal, 114 Pa. 353, 60 Am. Rep. 350; 2 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. p. 1268; Hanover Nat. Bank v. Klein, 64 Miss. 141, 60 Am. Rep. 47; Saunders v. Reilly, 105 N. Y. 12, 59 Am. Rep. 472; Schmidlapp v. Currie (Miss.) 30 Am. Rep. 530, with very learned and valuable note by the reporter; Carver Gun & Mach. Co. v. Bannon, 85 Tenn. 712; Haggood v. Cornwell, 48 Ill. 64, 95 Am. Dec. 516; Arnold v. Hagerman, 45 N. J. Eq. 186.

Where all the debtor's property was transferred to satisfy preferred creditors, there is no assignment, but the reverse.

Puget Sound Nat. Bank v. Levy, 10 Wash. 499; Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 542.

A creditor who accepts goods in the payment of a pre-existing debt is a purchaser for a valuable consideration within the meaning of the rule that a bona fide purchaser of personal property for value without notice, from a vendee who obtained it by means of fraudulent representation, takes a good title, as against the original vendor.

Butlers v. Haughwout, 42 Ill. 18, 89 Am. Dec. 401; Hanold v. Kays, 64 Mich. 439; Gassen v. Hendrick, 74 Cal. 444; Robinson v. Levi, 81 Ala. 134; Le Grand v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 81 Ala. 123, 60 Am. Rep. 140; Lavrence v. Owens, 39 Mo. App. 318; Babcock v. Jordan, 24 Ind. 14; Sovle v. Shotwell, 52 Miss. 236, cited in note 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 749; Horton v. Williams, 21 Minn. 193; Oberdorfer v. Meyer, 88 Va. 384; Woolridge v. Thiele, 55 Ark. 45.

A new consideration, besides the discharge of the pre-existing indebtedness, which some authorities require, was exchanged between the parties at the time of the sale of these goods to respondents, and it was a present passing consideration.

Pratt v. Coman, 37 N. Y. 441; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Church, 81 N. Y. 222, 37 Am. Rep. 494; Youngs v. Lee, 12 N. Y. 555; Foster v. Ambler, 24 Fla. 519; Henderson v. Gibbs, 39 Kan. 679; Philbrick v. Dallett, 48 How. Pr. 425, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. 425; Purchase v. Matison, 3 Bosw. 312.

If a contract is good in part and bad in part, the good part will be enforced if separable.

Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354; Granger v. Original Empire Mill & Min. Co. 59 Cal. 679.

There is nothing in our statute to prevent, nor was it ever intended to prevent, an insolvent debtor from transferring his property directly to his creditors, either absolutely in payment of his debts or as security by way of mortgage.

Turner v. Iowa Nat. Bank, 2 Wash. 192; Ephraim v. Kelleher, 4 Wash. 259, 18 L. R. A. 604; Samuels v. Kittenger, 6 Wash. 269; Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 542; Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 128; Dana v. Stanford, 10 Cal. 275.

A sale of a stock of goods at a fair price by a failing debtor cannot be impeached as fraudulent by creditors of the vendor.

Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 386; Ruhl v. Phillips, 48 N. Y. 125, 8 Am. Rep. 522; Haste v.

Connor, 53 Kan. 718; Giddings v. Sears, 115 Mass. 505; Priest v. Brown, 100 Cal. 626.

Anders, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On January 2, 1895, a firm composed of Bernhard and Herman Loewenberg, engaged in mercantile business at Spokane, Washington, transferred to one James N. Glover, as trustee, all their firm and individual property, both real and personal. Contemporaneously with this conveyance, Mr. Glover executed and delivered what was termed a "declaration of trust," in which he recited that he held the property for certain banks and persons who were creditors of Loewenberg Bros. in amounts specified, and that he was to sell the property conveyed to him, and out of the proceeds thereof pay the claims, in a certain order therein indicated. Thereafter, and while the property was in the possession of the said Glover, plaintiffs herein, who were, respectively, creditors of Loewenberg Bros., commenced actions against the said firm to recover the respective amounts alleged to be due them. In each of these actions an attachment was sued out, and levied upon the property in the possession of said Glover; and subsequently this action was brought, in aid of the attachments, to set aside the transfer to the trustee, Glover, on the ground that the same was a fraud upon the plaintiffs and other creditors of the firm, for the reason, among others, that it was made to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the said firm, and especially the plaintiffs. The defendants answered, alleging that the transfer of the property was not made or the property received by them to hinder or delay the plaintiffs, or any other creditor or creditors, but for the sole purpose of paying honest debts due them by Loewenberg Bros. and by B. & H. Loewenberg, and that the promissory notes evidencing their respective debts had been delivered to said Loewenberg Bros. and canceled; and praying that the proceeds of the property be distributed in accordance with the terms of the agreement and conveyance. Upon these issues the cause proceeded to trial, and judgment was rendered for the defendants, dismissing the complaint with costs. From this judgment this appeal is taken.

It appears from the evidence that the debts for which the property was transferred were of long standing, and that the notes representing some of them had been renewed from time to time with the consent of the payees. Some of the debts were in existence even while Julius Loewenberg was a member of the firm of Loewenberg Bros., which was prior to October 1, 1893. But the later firm of Loewenberg Bros. recognized these debts as its own, although at least two of the notes were not signed by the firm, but were, upon their face, the notes of the individual partners. Many interesting points are made and discussed in the learned and elaborate brief of counsel for appellants, but they are all practically included in, or illustrative of, the general proposition, urged, that appellants, being creditors of the firm of Loewenberg Bros. as it existed at the time of the transfer complained of, are entitled to priority of payment out of the firm assets over the joint creditors of the individual partners, as well as the creditors of the preceding firm, and that the conveyance to respondent Glover is therefore, as to them, fraudulent and void. The equitable rule contended for on behalf of appellants only applies where the court is called upon to administer and distribute partnership assets, or where its jurisdiction to set aside a conveyance for fraud in fact has been successfully invoked by firm creditors. A partnership creditor, merely as such, has no right in or lien upon partnership property. He merely has the right to sue and reduce his claim to judgment, and to sell the partnership property on execution. Lindley, Partn. 2d Am. ed. pp. 334, 354; 2 Bates, Partn. §§ 820, 824; Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370; Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 648, 27 L. ed. 211; Huiskamp v. Moline Wagon Co. 121 U. S. 310, 30 L. ed. 971; Schmidkapp v. Currie, 55 Miss. 597, 30 Am. Rep. 530. But each partner has the right in equity—often denominated a "lien" by courts and text-writers—to have the firm property applied to the satisfaction of the firm debts, and so long as this equity subsists the courts allow the creditors of the firm to avail themselves of it, on the principle of subrogation, whenever the property is "within the control of the court, and in course of administration." Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. ed. 370. But this equity or lien, or whatever else it may be called, is primarily for the benefit and protection of the individual partner, and not the creditors. The partner may therefore waive it, and, if he does so, the resulting equity of the creditor is absolutely destroyed. Moreover, this right attaches only to partnership effects, and hence "if, before the interposition of the court is asked, the property has ceased to belong to the partnership,—if by a bona fide transfer it has become the several property either of one partner or of a third person,—the equities of the partners are extinguished, and consequently the derivative equities of the creditors are at an end. It is therefore always essential to any preferential right of the creditors that there shall be property owned by the partnership when the claim for preference is sought to be enforced." Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 125, 25 L. ed. 371. The doctrine thus announced is affirmed in the other cases cited from the same court, and is undoubtedly correct on principle. The controlling question, therefore, in any particular case, is whether or not the transfer of the property is bona fide. The evidence shows, and it is not denied, that at the time of the transfer both the firm and the individual members thereof were insolvent, but that alone did not destroy the right to dispose of its property in good faith and for an honest purpose. If a firm that is in debt could not sell or otherwise dispose of its property, it might never be able to pay its debts at all, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, for it to conduct its business; for it could not give a good and clear title to any specific chattel it might sell, and the purchaser of any partnership commodity would be obliged to take it subject to the lien of creditors possibly unknown to him. It is useless to observe that no such doctrine has ever been announced by the courts. But the general right of disposition is limited by the principle that the firm shall not alienate its property for the purpose of delaying or defrauding its creditors. It is the established law of this state that an individual, although insolvent or in failing circumstances, may pay or secure one or more creditors to the exclusion of others equally meritorious, even if, by so doing, he exhausts the whole of his property. Turner v. Iowa Nat. Bank, 2 Wash. 192; Ephraim v. Kelleher, 4 Wash. 248, 18 L. R. A. 604; Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 128; Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 542; Samuel v. Kittenger, 6 Wash. 261. The manner of giving the preference is immaterial. It may be given by deed, or in any mode which effects a legal transfer of the property. Bump, Fraud, Conv. 3d ed. p. 186. And partners, in this respect, have the same rights that individuals have. "Partners, the same as others, may, by a sale or mortgage of the partnership property, give a preference to their creditors. If a sale or mortgage is made in good faith to secure a bona fide debt or debts, the transaction cannot successfully be assailed on the ground that the creditors preferred were the individual creditors of the several partners." George, Partn. p. 278. The right to prefer manifestly involves the right to designate the creditors or class of creditors to be preferred, and it therefore follows that the only ground on which the unpreferred creditors can justly complain is that the claims of the preferred creditors are not bona fide and real. The mere preference of a particular creditor or class of creditors over others by a debtor is therefore not fraudulent, because it is legal, and what the law sanctions cannot rightfully be questioned.

But it is urged on behalf of appellants that in no event could Loewenberg Bros. convey the firm property in payment of the notes which were signed by the individual partners, and which were not in the firm name. It does not appear whether the money evidenced by these notes was used for firm purposes or not, but there is very high authority to the effect that, where the partners are jointly liable, they may transfer property to pay such liability, even though it was incurred outside of the partnership business. Bump, Fraud, Conv. 3d ed. p. 390; Smith v. Howard, 20 How. Pr. 121; Saunders v. Reilly, 105 N. Y. 12, 59 Am. Rep. 472. In the case last cited the court, at page 18, 105 N. Y., says: "All the members of a firm may sell the partnership property, even if wholly insolvent, to a purchaser in good faith, and thus convey, free from the claim of firm creditors, a good title to the firm property. Instead of selling for cash they may transfer firm property to pay a firm debt. And they may transfer the firm property to pay a joint debt for which they are jointly liable outside of the business of the firm, and the joint creditor will obtain a good title to the firm property." See also Hoare v. Oriental Bank Corp. L. R. 2 App. Cas. 589. And the same conclusion would seem logically to follow from decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases to which we have above referred.

It is insisted that the note for $31,000 held by the London & San Francisco Bank, one of the preferred creditors, was fraudulent as to appellants, for the alleged reason that it was given without consideration, and was void, and that the conveyance to the trustee was therefore fraudulent as to the unpreferred creditors. Julius Loewenberg, a former member of the firm of Loewenberg Bros., sold his interest to the remaining partners on October 1, 1893; but it was agreed between him and his partners, who continued in business under the firm name of Loewenberg Bros., and retained all of the assets of the preceding firm, that he should not draw out anything for one year thereafter. After the year had expired, this note was given him for his one-third interest, and he indorsed and delivered it to the bank as collateral security for a debt which he owed to the bank. It is claimed that, inasmuch as the firm was insolvent at the time Julius Loewenberg sold his interest and retired, the note was without consideration and void, even in the hands of the bank. It must be borne in mind, however, that, at the time the debt represented by this note was contracted, appellants were not creditors of the firm of Loewenberg Bros., and it is therefore difficult to perceive how they were defrauded by the transaction. The existing creditors might have had reason to complain, but they did not do so, and are not doing so now. But, even conceding the note to be void and fraudulent, yet it does not necessarily follow that the transfer should be set aside as to the creditors whose claims are confessedly just and valid. If this particular note were invalid,—which we do not think is the fact,—the conveyance should nevertheless be sustained as to the other claimants, because the parts are clearly severable. The true rule, we think, is announced in 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 9th ed. at p. 78, where it is stated that "it is a general rule that any conveyance which is fraudulent as to a part of the property transferred, or which is made upon a consideration partly fraudulent, is wholly void as to the grantor's creditors. But the validity of a conveyance as against creditors, where the parts are severable, cannot depend upon this test. If it is made for the payment or security of several debts, some valid and the others fraudulent, it will be avoided as to the latter, but sustained as to the former, in the absence of any fraud on the part of those beneficiaries." Nor does the conveyance in question amount to a general assignment with preferences, under the insolvent law of this state, as suggested by counsel for appellants. See Furth v. Snell, 6 Wash. 542; Pugel Sound Nat. Bank v. Levy, 10 Wash. 499. A careful examination of all the evidence in the case convinces us that the respondents (that is, the preferred creditors) acted in perfect good faith, and solely from a desire to secure the payment of their debts; and therefore the transfer was not mala fide on their part, whatever may have been the secret motives or intention of Loewenberg Bros. The property the creditors received falls far short of paying the full amount of their claims, but they have surrendered their notes for cancellation, and therefore, in our opinion, entitled to retain what they have lawfully received. But, of course, they have no right to keep property transferred to them by the Loewenbergs, which the latter did not themselves own, if any such was received by them; and therefore nothing we have said in this opinion will in any way affect whatever rights the plaintiff in the case of Woonsocket Rubber Co. v. Loewenberg (just decided) 17 Wash. 29, may have to the specific merchandise therein claimed by it.

The judgment is affirmed.

Scott, Ch. J., and Gordon, J., concur.

J. H. DENNIS, Appt.,

v.

I. E. MOSES, Respnt.

(.....Wash.....)

1. Sales on mortgage foreclosures are within the provisions of Laws 1897, p. 88, respecting appraisement before sale.
2. A mortgagee or lienor may have a sale for the amount of his debt, under Laws 1897, p. 70, § 10, even if that is less than 80 per cent of the property or portion of the property sold.
3. Not more than the amount of the debt of a mortgagee or lienor need be bid upon all the parcels of property when several are included in the security, under Laws 1897, p. 70, and he may segregate his debt and bid a part on each parcel sold.
4. The appraisement required before sale on foreclosure by Laws 1897, p. 70, cannot be waived in the mortgage itself, although it may be waived after default.
5. A statute limiting the right to enforce a debt secured by mortgage to the property mortgaged, whether realty or chattels, is an undue restraint upon the liberty of a citizen to contract with respect to his property rights.
6. A statute limiting the rights of a citizen to contract with reference to his property must tend to promote the public good in some way, or it is an unwarranted interference therewith.
7. Waiver of the right of a mortgagor to remain in possession of property during the period of redemption given by Laws 1897, p. 227, cannot be made in the instrument itself, although it may be made after default.
8. The right to contract for payment in gold coin of the United States cannot be taken away by a state statute which attempts to make any debt payable in any kind of lawful money.
9. The regulation of attorney's fees by Laws 1895, p. 81, limiting stipulations of the parties in that respect, is a valid measure of public policy.

(Dunbar and Reavis, JJ., dissent.)

(February 15, 1898.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of defendant in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

NOTE.—For a general view of the constitutionality of statutes restricting the right of contract, see note to State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789.

As to contracts for payment in gold or silver, see 40 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John P. Hoyt and Hastings & Stedman, for appellant:

All the statute in question does is to give the mortgagor or judgment debtor the right to have his property appraised before it is sold, and to remain in possession thereof until the time for redemption has expired. There is nothing therein, either in express language or general scope, which in any respect prohibits the interested party from contracting away or waiving such right. On the contrary, it clearly appears from the act, taken as a whole, that the rights are conferred for the benefit of the individual, and may be waived by him.

The public is no more interested in the retention by the individual of his rights under this statute than they are in the retention of any other right or property which he may possess. Hence no consideration of public policy can influence the decision of the question under consideration.

Stockmeyer v. Tobin, 139 U. S. 176, 35 L. ed. 123; New Orleans Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bagley, 19 La. Ann. 89; Desplate v. St. Martin, 17 La. Ann. 91; Stockwell v. Byrne, 22 Ind. 6; Wray v. Miller, 20 Pa. 115; Mitchell v. Freedley, 10 Pa. 209; Dean v. Morrison, 10 Ind. 367; Baker v. Roberts, 14 Ind. 552; Broadwell v. Rodrigues, 18 La. Ann. 68; Herman, Executions, §§ 197, 257; 2 Freeman, Executions, 2d ed. § 284, and notes; First Nat. Bank v. Bell Silver & Copper Min. Co. 8 Mont. 32, 156 U. S. 470, 39 L. ed. 497.

When parties to a contract include in it a legal remedy by which it is to be enforced such remedy cannot be changed, and parties may by express contract stipulate that neither existing nor anticipated legislation shall in any wise affect or control their agreement.

Taylor v. Stearns, 18 Gratt. 284; White v. Crawford, 84 Pa. 436.

Under the legislation in Iowa it was held that the mortgagor was entitled to the possession during the redemption period, yet notwithstanding this holding the courts of that state did not hesitate to enforce provisions in mortgages which deprived mortgagors of this possession.

See Barrett v. Blackmar, 47 Iowa, 565; Myton v. Davenport, 51 Iowa, 588; Hill v. Hewett, 35 Iowa, 562; White v. Griggs, 54 Iowa, 650.

But even if the statute must be construed to prohibit the waiver of these rights it is without force to affect them, for the reason that thus construed it is unconstitutional and void.

The right to contract as to property rights is as much property as the right itself. It is also a part of the liberty of the individual. Both are protected by the Constitution of the United States and this state.

Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931; Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; Millett v. People, 117 Ill.

note to Skinner v. Santa Rosa (Cal.) 29 L. R. A. 512; also Packwood v. Kittitas (Wash.) 33 L. R. A. 673; Burnett v. Maloney (Tenn.) 34 L. R. A. 541; and Murphy v. San Luis Obispo (Cal.) 39 L. R. A. 444.

294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264; Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 106, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482; Palmer v. Tingle, 55 Ohio St. 423; John Spry Lumber Co. v. Sault Ste. Bank Loan & T. Co. 77 Mich. 199, 6 L. R. A. 261; Taylor v. Murphy, 148 Pa. 387; Re Eight Hours Bill, 21 Colo. 29; Re House Bill No. 203, 21 Colo. 27; Schroeder v. Galland, 134 Pa. 277, 7 L. R. A. 711.

Rents and profits of real estate may be mortgaged and the mortgage foreclosed and the property sold.

Chase v. Ball, 79 Ind. 311.

If rents and profits may be mortgaged surely the possession of the property from which the rents and profits are derived may be waived in a mortgage covering the property.

Storm v. Ermantrout, 89 Ind. 214; Buchanan v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 96 Ind. 510; Hurah v. Hurah, 99 Ind. 500; Treat v. Dorman, 100 Cal. 623; Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432; O'Hara v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 75 Fed. Rep. 180.

The act of March 11, 1897, Laws 1897, p. 98, is clearly unconstitutional. It interferes with the right to contract. It also deprives the court of the power to enforce a contract fairly made. It prohibits the taking of security for a debt without waiving the right to collect the debt in full though the debtor is abundantly able to pay.

Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L. R. A. 853; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L. R. A. 445; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34; Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492.

Upon like grounds it must be held that the act of March 11, 1897, Laws 1897, p. 91, is unconstitutional. It is also in contravention of § 10 of art. 1 of the Constitution of the United States, and for that reason void and without effect.

Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 40 L. ed. 973, 48 Cent. L. J. 155, 237, 238; Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. 687, 20 L. ed. 460; Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. 229, 19 L. ed. 141; Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 624, 24 L. ed. 741; Frank v. Colhoun, 59 Pa. 386; Dutton v. Pailaret, 52 Pa. 109, 91 Am. Dec. 135; Independent Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 104 Mass. 192; Chrysler v. Renois, 48 N. Y. 209; Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169; Myers v. Kaufman, 37 Ga. 600, 95 Am. Dec. 367; Chesapeake Bank v. Swain, 29 Md. 506.

Messrs. John E. Humphries, W. E. Humphrey, and E. P. Edsen, for respondent:

This act is for the benefit of the debtor, and cannot be waived. The contract in mortgage to waive appraisement is void.

Levicks v. Walker, 15 La. Ann. 245, 77 Am. Dec. 187; Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 109; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 575; Hardin v. Wolf, 29 La. Ann. 333; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 827; Cullen v. Minnesota Loan & T. Co. 60 Minn. 6; 1 Freem. Executions, 40 L. R. A.

2d ed. § 216; Kneettle v. Newcomb, 22 N. Y. 249, 78 Am. Dec. 186, 190, note.

Even a trust deed giving right to possession on default without foreclosure will not authorize grantee to take rents and profits without foreclosure.

Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415.

The rents and profits of real estate in this state cannot be mortgaged so as to give the mortgagee right to possession of same until after foreclosure of mortgage, and the expiration of year of sale or redemption.

Cullen v. Minnesota Loan & T. Co. 60 Minn.

6.

The contract of waiver is void as against public policy.

State v. Considine, 16 Wash. 853; Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 41 L. ed. 93; Swinburne v. Mills, 17 Wash. 611.

Scott, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought to foreclose a real-estate mortgage given to secure a note for $1,500, bearing interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The mortgage contained stipulations on the part of the mortgagor waiving all benefits under the provisions of §§ 3 to 10 inclusive, of the act relating to sales of property under execution (Laws 1897, p. 70), and provided that in case of foreclosure the land might be sold forthwith, as lands are sold on execution, to the highest bidder, without appraisement, and without waiting one year, as provided by statute; also waiving the provisions of the deficiency judgment act (Laws 1897, p. 98), and providing that in case of non-payment of the note there might be a decree of foreclosure against the mortgaged land, and a personal judgment upon the note, and, in case the land was not sufficient to satisfy it, that an execution might issue and be levied on other property of the mortgagor. It was further stipulated in the note and mortgage that the debt should be payable only in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value, and that the decree and judgment thereon should so provide, in contravention of the act relating to payment of obligations (Laws 1897, p. 91); also, that the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, or his successor in interest, should have possession of the mortgaged land during the time allowed for redemption, but should apply the rents and profits upon the debt in case it was redeemed, the mortgagor waiving all right to the possession as provided by the act granting judgment debtors right of possession during the period of redemption (Laws 1897, p. 227). The mortgage also provided, in case of suit, that an attorney's fee of 20 per cent upon the amount due should be included in the judgment, and in case of a settlement of the suit before judgment an attorney's fee of $300 should be payable, which calls in question the provisions of the act regulating attorney's fees (Laws 1895, p. 81). The mortgage recited that the loan was obtained at a lower rate of interest than would have been fixed were it not for the stipulations and the waivers above stated. The lower court found that they were all agreed to, but held that they were all invalid, and that there must be an appraisement, that the land could not be sold for less than 80 per cent of the appraised value, that the remedy must be confined to the property mortgaged, that it could not be sold before the expiration of one year provided by statute, that the mortgagor should have possession meanwhile, that the debt could be satisfied in any kind of lawful money, and allowed an attorney's fee of 10 per cent, instead of the one stipulated; whereupon the plaintiff appealed.

That some of the questions raised are of paramount importance is apparent. The general situation heretofore and now prevailing is well known, and it is permissible to consider it for the purpose of arriving at the intention of the legislature in enacting some of the laws in question. Incident to the development of a new state, it had been necessary for people to hire money, and this was done largely upon real-estate security, such debts being in the main unsatisfied when said laws were passed, and the mortgages given to secure the same could not be affected thereby. If these laws are valid, and must receive the construction contended for in some of the briefs, it is apparent that a large number of citizens will be prevented from negotiating loans, and from obtaining a generally prevailing lower rate of interest than that previously existing, with which to satisfy present debts, or, perhaps, to obtain binding stipulated extensions of time upon such debts, or for the purpose of contracting new loans for building houses or constructing improvements. Homes might be lost thereby, and the development of the state seriously retarded. They were helpless, so far as existing mortgages are concerned, for such laws could not affect them injuriously, under both the state and national Constitutions. There is no way of compelling new loans or extensions of either foreign or local capital. Realizing the great public interest centered in the decision of these questions, and desiring to be as fully enlightened as might be, the court followed a practice, sometimes adopted, of inviting other competent attorneys to express their views to the court on said matters; they not being interested in the case. These gentlemen have courteously and ably responded, and while in important particulars they have disagreed, and while it will not be necessary to consider the argument presented upon some lines, it has been much to the court's assistance. The most important questions are those arising under the act relating to sales of property under execution, especially the matter of the appraisement, and the deficiency judgment act, as these are the most serious obstacles in the way of obtaining loans and renewals.

Arguments have been presented in several of the briefs to the end that the provisions of the act relating to sales of property under execution, as to the appraisement of land, do not apply in the case of mortgage foreclosures. In the case of Swinburne v. Mills, 17 Wash. 611, without entering upon an extended discussion of that point, the court expressed the opinion that, owing to the use of the word "decree," etc., in the title of the act, and the direct reference to mortgages in § 10, mortgages were included in the act, and that there must be an appraisement as to subsequent mortgages.

40 L. R. A.

There are other expressions of like import, such as sales "upon execution or by order of the court," in § 2, and "upon the return of any sale of real estate or execution," in § 14. Also, the evident intent of the act as a whole to deal with all sales of real estate at the suit of the private or individual creditors strengthens that conclusion, and we follow it here. In the discussion of the Swinburne Case, the court, after holding that the provisions of the act relating to an appraisement applied to mortgage decrees as well as to ordinary judgments, held that it was an impairment of the obligations of existing contracts, and could not affect prior mortgages, following a long, unbroken line of state and Federal decisions, it being a prior mortgage there in controversy. No attempt was made to interpret or construe the act further in that case, as it was not necessary to do so. But the substance of the entire act is largely involved in this case, for a construction of the particular parts questioned renders necessary a consideration of nearly all of it to some extent, in order to harmonize and give effect to the whole. It is a wholesome, well-established rule that an act should be interpreted or construed to give effect to each of its express provisions, if practicable. In case of conflict, those susceptible of but one meaning will control those susceptible of two, if the act can thereby be rendered harmonious. The general purpose or spirit of the act must always be held in view, and absurd or oppressive consequences avoided, as far as possible. State, Chamberlin, v. Daniel, 17 Wash. 111; People v. Jaehne, 103 N. Y. 182. Observing these rules we enter upon the further consideration of this act.

First, going back to the necessity of an appraisement, we desire to call attention to § 16 of the act, which seems to have been unnoticed from the briefs. This section clearly recognizes that there are cases where no appraisement is required. To what sales does it apply? Section 3 speaks of an estimated value to be furnished by the judgment creditor; § 4 provides that if the debtor is not satisfied therewith, he may except, and give his estimate, etc.; and § 5, provides that the creditor may demand an appraisement, if he is not satisfied with the debtor's estimate. But, evidently, § 16 did not intend to except those cases where no other appraisement than the first estimate, or estimates, was demanded, because if the debtor should except to the creditor's estimate, and thus bring about the further appraisement provided for at the instance of the creditor, and § 16 means the appraisement provided for in § 5, the debtor will be punished for excepting to the creditor's estimate by cutting off one year of his period of redemption; for, if this is the appraisement that is meant, and none is had, the deed would not issue until one year after confirmation, and, if an appraisement is had, the deed issues immediately after the confirmation. There would be no reason for providing two different periods of redemption to fit these cases, and a cogent one against it. If § 680, vol. 2, of the Code was not repealed, so an immediate sale of mortgaged lands could be had, and it should be held that no appraisement was necessary, the same difficulty and inconsistency would remain as to ordinary judgments not constituting a lien until a levy is had, and if mortgaged lands must be appraised, and an immediate sale can be had, under § 630, the confirmation following right along, the period of redemption would be less than one year. The legislature evidently meant to provide a uniform period of redemption in these cases, whether the land was sold under an ordinary judgment or a mortgage or lien decree of foreclosure. There is no reason why an ordinary judgment creditor should have such a preference over a mortgagee or mechanic seeking to enforce his lien. While the words "estimated value" are used in § 3, and "estimate," "valuation," and "appraisement" in § 4, and "appraisement" and "valuation" in § 5, they must mean the same thing, because no such absurd result with reference to the period of redemption could have been intended if the appraisement, as mentioned in § 16, only applies to the further appraisement provided for in § 5, and no appraisement in § 16 has a reference to the estimates in §§ 3 and 4. These estimates are appraisements,—the appraisements of the parties; and it may stop after either the first or the second estimate, if the other party is satisfied. The appraisement mentioned in § 5 is the final appraisement, unless further proceedings are had under § 8, where the matter seems to be finally and substantially left with the court, under the power to compel a fair appraisement, etc. Section 16, in this respect, evidently has reference to the next section (17), where it provides for certain sales without valuation. Valuation must mean appraisement, or it means nothing; and if §§ 16 and 17 would control in this respect, in case of a sale by a city of land to enforce a street assessment proceeding, the same uniform period of redemption of one year would be provided. Whether these would, or how far they would, control or repeal prior laws fixing different periods of redemption, as, for instance, § 41, p. 204, Laws 1893, is another question, not to be decided here. The intention is one thing; the result another. The intention may or may not be accomplished.

The first provision of § 10 of the act is, no property shall be sold for a sum less than 80 per cent of the appraised value thereof, except that, when property is not capable of partition or division, then the same may be sold for the amount of the judgment debt or demand. The second is, when the property is capable of partition, then so much thereof as may be sufficient only shall be sold to satisfy the judgment. The third is, in case of foreclosure of mortgages or other liens, nothing shall prevent the sale of the entire premises included within the mortgage or lien. The first clause provides for a sale for less than 80 per cent of the appraised value; that is, if the debt should not amount to that much, and the property is not capable of partition or division. The second provides that it must be partitioned if it is capable of being divided, and only enough sold to satisfy the judgment. The third makes an additional provision as to mortgages and other liens. It provides that nothing shall prevent the sale of the entire premises included within the mortgage or lien. The other liens referred to are evidently other special liens, such as mechanics,' materialmen's, and laborers,' the proceedings to enforce which are largely assimilated to mortgage foreclosures. The provisions of § 10, considered separately, are explicit, and are susceptible of but one meaning, according to the expressed intent. It would seem that the first clause might stand without much qualification, considered with relation to the second clause. The last clause, if it means anything, according to its specific provisions extends a greater benefit to mortgagees and other special lienors. If there are several parcels, or even one piece, susceptible of division, included in the mortgage or covered by a mechanic's, laborer's, or other such special lien, the whole may be sold for the amount of the debt, but not, necessarily, for a lump sum. The last part of § 2 provides, in case of the sale of real property consisting of several known lots or parcels, they shall be sold separately when demanded by the judgment debtor or subsequent encumbrancer. A subsequent purchaser of a part would doubtless have the same right. This is a well-established rule everywhere, under both the common law and general statutes, and it cannot be supposed for a moment that there was any intention to provide otherwise in this act. The first provision of § 10, allowing sales for the amount of the debt, must be accorded the right or power expressed, or it is meaningless. To set this aside, if not necessarily in direct conflict with some other express provision, would be judicial legislation, and not construction. If hardships result thereunder, it is a matter for the legislature to remedy; but we fail to see where its practical effects are likely to be injurious. Under the first clause, an appraisement is necessary. Construed with reference to the second, in case of an ordinary judgment, if a levy has been made upon several distinct parcels, or if it is capable of partition or division, it must be divided, and each part appraised; but when that is done, then, under the first provision, in the case of an ordinary judgment levy, doubtless, the tract having the smaller value, not being capable of further partition or division, may be sold for the amount of the debt, although the debt may not equal 80 per cent of the appraised value. This construction gives effect to each clause of the act, and a direct and salutary effect to the matter of the appraisement. Under that, the sale must be the full amount of the debt if the debt is less than 80 per cent of the amount of the appraisement. Thus the spirit of the act is beneficial, and tends to prevent the sacrifice of property. It compels the judgment creditor to bid up to the full amount of his debt, if it is less than 80 per cent of the appraised value, but it says to an ordinary judgment creditor, perhaps a common laborer, who could not avail himself of the laws giving liens in some cases, but who has obtained a judgment on his demand, where the debtor has but one piece of property, not capable of being divided and largely in excess of his demand, that he may sell it for the amount of his debt. Of course, he is not required to bid more than 80 per cent of the final appraised value, if that is less than his debt. If there is no final appraisement, he must bid the full amount of the preliminary appraisement under the act, if his debt amounts to that much. There is no hardship in this to the debtor class, surely, for a man having a tract of large value, under such circumstances, could raise an amount sufficient to discharge a small obligation, or an amount sufficient to redeem his property within the time provided in case it is sold. In sales under decrees of foreclosure of mortgages, or mechanics' and such special liens, where the lien is given upon all the land included therein, by the contract or by the law, it may all remain as security for the debt until it is satisfied. Where several parcels are included in the mortgage, or, in case of a mechanic's lien covering two buildings built under one contract, while a separate sale of each may be had, the mortgagee or lienor is not required to bid more than the amount of his debt upon all; that is, he may segregate his debt, and bid a part on each parcel. He is not compelled to bid more than 80 per cent of the final appraised value in any event upon any or all of it. He may buy for less, if his debt is less than 80 per cent. The same rule would apply as to the preliminary estimates as in the case of an ordinary judgment; making the amount the limit if the debt amounts to that much. But it would apply as to all of the property here. Otherwise, no meaning could be given to the last clause of § 10, as there may be a separate sale of parts, as we have seen. But under this provision they are all subject to the lien, and for the amount bid.

In the case of State, Purves, v. Moyer, 17 Wash. 643, decided a few days after the Swinburne Case, it was held that the provisions of the act requiring the levy of an execution did not apply in case of mortgage liens, on the principle that the law does not require the performance of an idle thing, and, the decree being a lien upon specific property, there was no necessity for a levy. In view of this holding, it has been argued in some of the briefs that the provisions of the acts relating to the postponement of sale do not apply, and that a sale of mortgaged lands may be had forthwith, under § 690, vol. 2, of the Code. It was said in that case that the sale must be postponed, and we think correctly. While § 19 of the act expressly repeals §§ 511 to 521, vol. 2, of the Code, relating to redemption, and does not by express declaration repeal other laws in conflict with the act, and although repeals by implication are not favored, it nevertheless follows that conflicting prior laws must yield to later ones, and there would be a conflict here as to the time for redemption if an immediate sale could be had, an appraisal being necessary. Furthermore, it is objectionable to have a sale a year or so before title can be passed. This has been demonstrated under prior laws, and these are to be considered in construing remedial statutes. Consequently, in case of mortgages and other specific liens, no levy being required, the special execution or order of sale should not issue until the expiration of one year from the time of the rendition of the decree, or, if issued, the sale should not be had until a year has expired, the same as in case of an execution upon an ordinary judgment to carry out the spirit and provisions of the act. The stipulations in this mortgage relating to immediate possession and right to rents and profits will be considered later. We have examined all the authorities cited, and do not think the appraisal can be waived in the instrument itself. After default, when the situation becomes fixed, the act permits the debtor to waive a further appraisal upon notice given of the estimation of value by the judgment creditor. This would militate against construing the act to permit a waiver otherwise, or until default. The form would not be material. The discussion of the rents and profits provision will have a bearing upon this question also, as a measure of public policy to prevent the sacrifice of property.

The act, when considered with reference to itself, let alone other laws, is incongruous and difficult to understand. This is strikingly apparent from the briefs of those who have attempted to construe it. In making this criticism we do not desire to be understood as doing so in any captious spirit; for we appreciate the difficulties surrounding the legislature when enacting laws, the more or less hurried consideration thereof rendered necessary, the want of individual training or education on such lines by a large number of the members, preconceived notions and tendencies of some, and the practical impossibility of carefully considering particular acts with reference to perhaps numerous other existing laws bearing on the same matters. A friendly sympathy should exist between the different branches of the government, working for the common good. The general intention to do right should be accorded to all. Each fills a separate and useful field, but it is not saying too much to say that the greater safety of the people usually rests with the courts. All courts worthy of the name act deliberately, upon well-established lines, not swayed by popular impulse, and usually upon better information than legislatures have, and with better assistance, for courts are called upon to interpret and construe laws after they have been tested in the light of practical experience. They do not hesitate to correct their own mistakes, and they have a continuing, and not a stated, periodical opportunity to do so. It happens occasionally with reference to legislative acts, and it is particularly true of this act, that the provisions are complicated and hard to reconcile. If it were not for the clause authorizing a sale for the amount of the debt, it might be a question, at least, whether the act could stand, where it might prevent a recovery at all by requiring the outlay or payment of a larger sum by the creditor in addition to his debt, in order to have a sale or enforce collection. In the cases examined it is sufficient to say that we have found none where such a burden has been imposed. Somewhat similar statutes have been enacted in several states, but they vary from this one in essential particulars, and the decisions thereon have not been of much aid to us in construing it. If any of such other acts have provisions authorizing a sale for the amount of the debt, such provisions have not been called to our attention. We have not seen any, but we have not examined particularly, as it is immaterial, for the act before us provides for it in unmistakable terms, and this is the act we have to construe. In considering it, we have called attention to some matters we have not attempted to decide, but for the purpose of showing that there may be some effect given to each provision, and that they have not been overlooked. The discussion of many points, and our construction thereof, regarding the act, and § 10 particularly, are rendered necessary under the mortgage here in controversy. The conclusion we have reached, while it differs materially from that contended for or suggested in the briefs attempting to deal with it somewhat in detail, seems to be the only one that will give a legitimate effect to each provision.

We will next consider the act entitled "An Act Relating to Deficiency Judgments" (Laws 1897, p. 98). Section 1 is as follows: "That in all proceedings for the foreclosure of mortgages hereafter executed, or on judgments rendered upon the debt thereby secured, the mortgagee or assignee shall be limited to the property included in the mortgage." Section 2 repeals all acts or parts of acts in conflict with it. The discussions in some of the briefs view the act as prescribing a method of procedure. Looking only to the title of the act, and the older and later practice relating to the foreclosure of mortgages, this would in a measure be justified. If it could be held to apply to a matter of practice only, and to prohibit deficiency judgments in actions to foreclose mortgages, and the right remains intact to enforce collection of the deficiency in a subsequent suit, or to waive the security in the first instance, and bring an ordinary action, where there is a covenant to pay in the mortgage, or a separate instrument contracting to pay, then this question comes up, What measure of public policy can it serve to prohibit a waiver? All agree that, if it is a matter of public policy, it cannot be waived by the parties; if a matter of private concern, it may be. It would be hard to conceive of any public interest that would be promoted in requiring a debtor to be subjected to the costs of two actions. The cases mentioned in 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1711, as to some states, would not apply here, as such distinctions between the practice in equity and at law have been abolished for a long period, and it can hardly be supposed it was intended to take such a decisive step backward, and deprive the court of such power, and compel a resort to the old common-law procedure in this particular. It would be entirely foreign to the whole history and spirit of our jurisprudence. Consequently, if the power to enforce collection of a deficiency exists, the act, as a method of procedure, must be intended to confer a private benefit only, and its provisions can be waived. As limiting the method of procedure, it is clearly worse than useless.

But the act goes further than this, and is manifestly intended for something else, and is so regarded in some of the briefs. Its language is plain, and not susceptible of the construction that it was intended to prescribe as a matter of practice only. The body of the act distinctly limits the right to enforce judgments on a debt for which mortgage security has been given to the property mortgaged, and covers chattel as well as real-estate mortgages. While it might be void in this respect, on the ground that the substance is not embraced within the title, graver constitutional questions arise. It affects more particularly local capital and business, in relation to which chattel-mortgage security is often taken, as also small urban loans upon real estate; for it is a well-known fact that the greater amount of capital invested in loans in the state belonging to parties residing without the state is invested in loans upon agricultural lands, although loans have been made to some extent upon town property, particularly large loans. It deprives a man to a great extent of the benefit of his general credit, especially if he has but a small amount of property. For instance, if he wanted to hire $500 to build a house, or buy tools to pursue a trade, he might find a man who was willing to loan it to him by taking mortgage security upon such property as he had with a further reliance upon his individual credit and ability to pay. He might be capable of earning good wages, or have considerable property in expectancy or prospectively. The party having the money might not be willing to loan to him otherwise, but this law says to him that, if he takes mortgage security at all, his remedy is confined to that and that only, regardless of the amount of property the debtor may thereafter acquire; and the result will generally be that the loan cannot be obtained. As applied to farm lands, there would not be so great an objection to such a law, for sufficient security can be taken in the first instance. The value is stable, and not generally liable to destruction or serious impairment. But in the case of improved town property it would be different. It is no answer to say that its value could be protected by insurance policies, for it might be damaged in ways a policy would not cover. Even agricultural lands might be damaged by floods seriously in some localities, and damage in various ways might happen without fault of either of the parties. Furthermore, the title might prove defective, and the debtor have no interest in the property, or, in case of a chattel mortgage upon livestock, the stock might die, and thus the remedy be lost entirely; or, if it should be held in such cases that, the security having been lost, the debt should be regarded as one upon which no security had been taken, then, suppose, in case of the real-estate loan, a small, but inadequate, interest remained in the debtor after the real estate of the title was determined, or, in the case of a mortgage upon several horses, all but one should die, here there would be some security left, but mayhap insufficient to satisfy more than a small part of the demand. Under this law, the remedy would cease when such property was exhausted. Here, also, a class seems to be singled out arbitrarily with no apparent reason other than a matter of opinion, as the law only applies to mortgage loans, and not to other special liens, such as mechanics' liens, or upon debts secured by a deposit of collaterals. A deposit of warehouse receipts would create a lien upon the grain, but the creditor would not be limited thereto in case it proved to be inadequate security; while in case of a chattel mortgage, taken on like property for a similar purpose, another creditor would be. In the case of a lien of a materialman furnishing lumber for the erection of a building, there would be no such limit; but the groceryman who furnished the necessities of life and took mortgage security would be so limited. Under this law, a man who holds a promissory note for which mortgage security had been originally taken, but where such security has become lost or impaired, is not given the same rights that another citizen is who simply took a promissory note without any security. A law with some general terms may be so hedged in with conditions and specifications as to limit its application to a few citizens, and make it class legislation. Furthermore, that the right to contract with reference to one's property is a property right is well settled, and any abridgment of the enjoyment of the benefits flowing from a contract not against public policy is void.

In considering the sweeping consequences of this act, it would seem to be a propitious time for a recurrence to fundamental principles. Const. art. 1, § 32. Civil liberty is defined by Blackstone to be "no other than natural liberty so far restrained by human laws (and no farther) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public." Book 1, p. 125. Judge Cooley, in speaking of constitutional declarations, mentions "those declaratory of the fundamental rights of the citizen, as that all men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness; that the right to property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction" (Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 45); and that, "in considering state Constitutions we must not commit the mistake of supposing that, because individual rights are guarded and protected by them, they must also be considered as owing their origin to them. These instruments measure the powers of the rulers, but they do not measure the rights of the governed. . . . There never was a written republican Constitution which delegated to functionaries all the latent powers which lie dormant in every nation, and are boundless in extent and incapable of definition" (Id. p. 47). As if to emphasize this principle, our Constitution (§ 30, art. 1) declares that "the enumeration in this Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny others retained by the people." At page 198 of his work, Judge Cooley says: "The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require that the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred." And at page 200, quoting approvingly from a Connecticut case (Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121), says: "With those judges who assert the omnipotence of the legislature in all cases where the Constitution has not interposed an explicit restraint, I cannot agree." But at page 205 says: "Nor are the courts at liberty to declare an act void, because in their opinion it is opposed to a spirit supposed to pervade the Constitution, but not expressed in words. When the fundamental law has not limited, either in terms or by necessary implication, the general powers conferred upon the legislature, we cannot declare a limitation, under the notion of having discovered something in the spirit of the Constitution which is not even mentioned in the instrument." And at page 206, speaking of the national and state Constitutions, says: "A legislative act cannot, therefore, be declared void, unless its conflict with one of these two instruments can be pointed out." But, while this is to be observed, it is apparent that all declarations, guaranties of right, and limitations cannot be specific, and, unless general ones can be applied to such cases by necessary implication, they would be valueless; or, as said at page 482, quoting approvingly from the Dartmouth College Case [4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629], there cited: "By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities, under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land." At page 483, it is said: "But a statute would not be constitutional which should prescribe a class or a party for opinion's sake, or which should select particular individuals from a class or locality, and subject them to peculiar rules, or impose upon them special obligations or burdens, from which others in the same locality or class are exempt." At pages 486, 487, it is said: "The doubt might also arise whether a regulation made for any one class of citizens, entirely arbitrary in its character, and restricting their rights, privileges, or legal capacities in a manner before unknown to the law, could be sustained, notwithstanding its generality. Distinctions in these respects must rest upon some reason upon which they can be defended,—like the want of capacity in infants and insane persons; and if the legislature should undertake to provide that persons following some specified lawful trade or employment should not have capacity to make contracts, or to receive conveyances, or to build such houses as others were allowed to erect, or in any other way to make such use of their property as was permissible to others, it can scarcely be doubted that the act would transcend the due bounds of legislative power, even though no express constitutional provision could be pointed out with which it would come in conflict. To forbid to an individual or a class the right to the acquisition or enjoyment of property in such manner as should be permitted to the community at large would be to deprive them of liberty in particulars of primary importance to their 'pursuit of happiness;' and those who should claim a right to do so ought to be able to show a specific authority therefor, instead of calling upon others to show how and where the authority is negatived. Equality of rights, privileges, and capacities unquestionably should be the aim of the law; and, if special privileges are granted, or special burdens or restrictions imposed, in any case, it must be presumed that the legislature designed to depart as little as possible from this fundamental maxim of government. The state, it is to be presumed, has no favors to bestow, and designs to inflict no arbitrary deprivation of rights. Special privileges are always obnoxious, and discriminations against persons or classes are still more so." As to class legislation, see also Tucoma v. Kreck, 15 Wash. 296, 34 L. R. A. 68, where the principle was held to apply.

To undertake anything like a review of the numerous decisions on these constitutional questions would extend this opinion beyond all due bounds. Many of them are cited in the briefs, and these can be resorted to by those desiring to do so. The rules above quoted are sufficient to indicate the general grounds, and to establish that an act limiting the rights of a citizen to contract with reference to his property must tend to promote the public good in some way or it is an unwarrantable interference therewith. Such laws must be founded on a legitimate reason. Where the reason fails the right ceases. Can such a basis be found here? The act cannot operate as an exemption law. Such laws are sustained on the principle that the state is interested in the retention by each citizen of enough property to enable him to be self-supporting, that he may be enabled to pursue his trade or calling, and in order that he may not become a public charge. These matters are left to the legislature, and to say how little or how much may be exempted. Such laws are liberally construed. It clearly cannot serve any such purpose, for a mortgagor may have a large amount of other property above his exemptions aside from that mortgaged. Why should a mortgagee who has exhausted the mortgaged property not be paid therefrom? It has been heretofore a well-settled policy of the law that a man's property in excess of his exemptions should be subjected to the payment of his debts. It could not be supported as an additional exemption, for it would operate unequally. One man might have a small amount of such property; another, a very large amount. It is no answer to say that the parties have contracted for certain security, for that may be lost or impaired without the mortgagee's fault. The mortgagor has also contracted to pay the debt in addition to giving the security. It does not serve the purpose of an insolvency law in any way, whereby a man is enabled to turn over all of his property above his exemptions to all of his creditors, and start again, freed from former liabilities: for here he is not absolved from the payment of his unsecured debts. If the property he then owns is not sufficient to pay them, payment may be enforced against his future acquired property. On the other hand, he may have property largely in excess of enough to pay all of his debts, whether originally secured or not. It is not a marshaling of assets, or like settlement of estates, as in the case of partnership and individual debts; for the originally secured creditor would have no recourse to the property left after unsecured debts are paid. It cannot be sustained on the ground that an undue advantage may be taken of an unwary or needy debtor, where the law sometimes relieves him on the ground of public policy from his own stipulations, often carelessly entered into, and where he might be overreached otherwise, as in the case of a stipulation in an insurance policy that the agent shall be deemed to be the agent of the insured, for an instance. He has received the amount of the loan, if it is a case of hiring, and he has agreed to return it. If the mortgage is given to secure payment for the necessities of life or tools of trade which he has purchased, he has agreed to pay for them, and it is a direct primary part of his contract. It does not tend to prevent the sacrifice of real estate, for the sale must be for the amount of the debt, or for 80 per cent of the appraised value if it is less. No one would contend that it in any way involves the police power of the state. It rests on none of these grounds. We know of no similar law anywhere, and may safely say that none like it has ever been sustained in any state of the Union. The results of a turbulent, restless, temporary impulse on the part of the people or majorities in any state or community may sometimes be reflected in contemporaneous legislation, which disregards the rights of individual citizens or classes. In such cases, the people need protection from their own hasty acts. State Constitutions are designed to serve as a check thereon. If they do not do this, they are but a delusion and a snare. When constitutional rights are in issue, a great responsibility rests upon the courts. If they are unconstitutional, it is a duty to hold them so,—one not to be avoided. It is not a matter of choice to act or not, but a duty is imposed which must be discharged. It would seem that, if any law could be an unwarranted interference with a citizen's right to contract, this is one. If this law could be sustained, a law absolutely prohibiting all mortgages, debts, or even the sale of property could as well be. We believe the opinion that such laws would be constitutional is not generally prevalent. In support of the proposition, favored by a few, that legislatures are practically omnipotent, and can interfere with the rights of the citizen under the Constitution, imaginary cases are sometimes presented, such as if the legislature should pass bills repealing all laws providing remedies and substitute no others. Although the courts could not supply them as to future contracts, if they could hold former ones in force as to prior contracts, and, while the Constitution would afford but little protection in such cases, it is true, there is yet something inherent in the social organization itself which prevents them, resting in the settled good sense of the people. That any such thing, so destructive of society, would be done, is not to be thought of. Supposed cases, practically impossible because of their palpable outrageousness, can always be pursued to absurd ends in any direction. Our conclusion is that this law is void as being an undue restraint upon the liberty of the citizen, affecting his property rights.

We will next consider the act granting judgment debtors the right to the possession of property during the period of redemption (Laws 1897, p. 227), together with the following clauses contained near the end of the mortgage here in controversy: "That the purchaser at the mortgage foreclosure sale, or his successors in interest, shall have full and complete possession of the mortgaged property during the time allowed for redemption, and that the party of the first part and his successors in interest shall and do hereby waive all right or claim, allowed by statute, to possession during the period of redemption, whether such period elapse before or after sale, but that whenever the property is redeemed the rents and profits shall be accounted for to the judgment debtor, and credited as payment in part or in whole of the judgment; that from the time of the levy upon the real estate mentioned in the mortgage, and the decree rendered in the foreclosure proceedings thereon, the judgment creditor, being the party of the second part or his successors in interest, shall have full and complete possession of the mortgaged premises, and be entitled to all rents and profits of the same, but that in case of redemption such rents and profits shall be credited upon the judgment." It is contended that these provisions constitute a mortgage on the rents and profits which is binding. A mortgage may undoubtedly be given on rents and profits (1 Jones, Mortg. 5th ed. § 140; Chase v. Ball, 79 Ind. 811), and, if a substantial part of the agreement, necessary for the security of the mortgagor, should be enforced. A mortgage in the form of a deed, with a separate defeasance, the deed giving immediate possession and the right to the rents and profits, can doubtless be given; and it could be made to take effect upon a default and foreclosure. But it does not follow that such latter stipulations must be enforced in all cases. Courts of equity have always exercised a control over sales of property, even to the extent of disregarding the stipulations of the parties. Rents and profits might be applied towards the satisfaction of a mortgage debt in the absence of such a stipulation, as is sometimes done where a receiver is appointed before or after default. Nor do we say that it would be necessary that a receiver should be appointed therefor in all cases. These are matters over which the court has control, and may or may not enforce, as the justice of the particular case seems to demand. The stipulations therefor may be in the nature of forfeitures, which are not favored. On a similar principle, stipulations regarding the time of payment, where it is not of the essence of the contract, and as to damages, will not always be enforced. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. §§ 455, 456; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. §§ 283, 284. This is a familiar doctrine. The stipulations in this mortgage as to rents and profits add little, if anything, to the stipulation giving immediate possession after the rendering of the decree. The right to possession would take the rents, and the law now would compel the application of the profits to the debt in case of redemption. It may have been but an attempt in this instance to evade the law relating to possession during the redemption period, not at all necessary for the protection of the mortgagee, nor a substantial part of the contract. If so, the mortgagor could not waive the right in the instrument creating the debt, or before default generally, when the situation becomes fixed, and he is directly confronted with its effects. There was no showing in this case that the land was inadequate security for the debt. After default, the law would permit a waiver. A debtor might waive his exemptions by failing to claim the same after levy. This law declares a public policy and establishes a salutary rule. While it operates for the benefit of debtors, it also benefits the public by benefiting a large number of citizens. It is of the same class as those laws preventing waivers in insurance policies relating to agents and otherwise, which are well known, and also declaring after what performance life insurance policies shall be non-forfeitable, regardless of stipulations. The law permits a mortgage of a homestead, and it might be a matter of public policy that the owner should not be turned out of possession immediately upon foreclosure. He might surrender possession after default and sale, but not be allowed to stipulate therefor in the instrument creating the debt. Greenhood, Pub. Pol. pp. 496 et seq.; Kneetle v. Newcomb, 22 N. Y. 249, 78 Am. Dec. 186; Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 387, 24 L. ed. 776; Lericks v. Walker, 15 La. Ann. 245, 77 Am. Dec. 187; Mills v. Bennett, 94 Tenn. 651; Waters v. Randall, 6 Met. 479; Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 47 Ohio St. 409, 9 L. R. A. 45; Cleghorn v. Greeson, 77 Ga. 343. These matters must be left with the court, and there is nothing presented in this case to warrant our disturbing the finding of the court in that particular. This also disposes of the stipulation for an immediate sale after decree, as the law fixes the time, as heretofore stated.

40 L. R. A.

Regarding the act relating to the payment of obligations (Laws 1897, p. 91), I desire merely to announce the conclusion reached by the other members of the court, as I understand it, viz., that it is a subject upon which a state cannot legislate, but belongs exclusively to the general government. In its practical effects it is of no consequence, although the principle is an important one. The precise point as to whether a state can provide that no contract shall be enforced as payable in any particular money, but may be discharged in any kind of lawful money, regardless of the stipulations of the parties, in the absence of national legislation permitting such contracts, does not seem to have been decided elsewhere. Personally, from the limited examination I have given it, in view of its present at least inconsequential effect and the opinion of the majority, I can see no objection to sustaining such a law. But it follows, from the holding of the other members of the court, that this contract must be enforced according to its terms, and that the act is inoperative.

We are all of the opinion that the act in relation to attorney's fees (Laws 1895, p. 81) must stand. This prescribes a measure of public policy. In the absence of any statute upon the subject, it would be a matter over which the courts would have control, at least to the extent of refusing to allow unconscionable fees. It is also well settled that where no attorney has been employed there can be no recovery of an attorney's fee in the case, and it would follow therefrom that only a reasonable compensation should be allowed where one is employed. It is intended as a matter of costs, to cover the expenses of suit. The practice of allowing the parties to fix the amount of such fees, under the former statute, was abused more or less. Excessive fees were sometimes fixed, and it is contended in the briefs that mortgages under arrangements made with attorneys were occasionally foreclosed for a much less sum, the mortgagee retaining the balance. This, certainly, was a reprehensible practice, and one not to be tolerated. The finding of the lower court in this respect is sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

Anders and Gordon, JJ., concur.

Dunbar, J., dissenting:

I am reluctantly compelled to dissent in part, at least, from the majority opinion in this case. So far as the proposition of appraisal is concerned, I am forced to the opinion that the law should be held to be of no force or effect, by reason of its incongruities and contradictory provisions. Section 10 provides that no property shall be sold for a sum less than 80 per cent of the appraised value thereof, except that, when property is not capable of partition or division, then the same may be sold for the amount of the judgment debt or demand. The same section further provides that, when the property is capable of partition, then so much thereof as may be sufficient only shall be sold as will satisfy the judgment; and the further provision of the same section is, in case of foreclosure of mortgages or other liens, nothing shall prevent the sale of the entire premises included within the mortgage or lien. It will thus be seen that the second and third provisions of the section are irreconcilably conflicting, for one provides that so much only of the property as may be sufficient to satisfy the judgment shall be sold, while the next sentence as clearly declares that nothing shall prevent the sale of the entire premises included within the mortgage or lien. I heartily concur in all that is said in the majority opinion concerning the relations existing between courts and legislatures; but when the legislature enacts a law the provisions of which are absolutely conflicting within themselves, then I think it becomes as much the duty of the court to hold the law ineffectual for any purpose as it does to hold the law unconstitutional when it plainly violates a constitutional provision. The section which I have quoted is only one example of the conflicting provisions of this law, if we hold that it applies to mortgages and not to execution sales alone; and an attempt to exempt mortgages from the operation of the bill is rendered as unsuccessful by reason of the provisions of succeeding and preceding sections. There are no rules of statutory construction or of logic which can be brought to bear in construing a statute of this kind. It simply becomes a question of guessing as to what was the intention of the legislature. If, indeed, it does not go further, and compel judicial legislation, which is always to be avoided. This is shown by the majority opinion, which was announced after many weeks of painstaking labor, coupled with an earnest endeavor to bring order out of confusion, and to give some effect to the legislative act. But I think the effort, devoted and praiseworthy as it was, has failed, and that the announcement is really the best judgment of the majority of what the law ought to be,—a result which, in my opinion, could not be avoided under an attempt to sustain this law; and I think, as a matter of public policy, it is far better that the laws enacted by former legislators, who were the proper lawmaking powers, should be held to be the laws governing transactions of this kind, than a law which is the result of judicial judgment and announcement. I have read with interest the masterly presentation made by the majority of the deficiency judgment law, but am still constrained to believe that on that subject the legislature had a right to act, and that it did act within the scope of its constitutional powers; and, believing that it is a provision which cannot be waived, I think the law should be sustained. I am also of the opinion that the statute in relation to possession cannot be abrogated or modified by the courts. Neither do I think it is a provision that can be waived. The majority opinion expresses my views on the money proposition.

Reavis, J., dissenting:

I cannot assent to several conclusions announced by the majority of the court in this case, and the importance of the questions involved requires further discussion. The question whether an appraisal of real estate provided for in the act of March 10, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 70), relating to the sale of property under execution, is applicable to mortgages was decided in the case of Swinburne v. Mills, 17 Wash. 611; and mortgages were there held to be included within the terms of the act. Upon complete consideration we are all agreed that the conclusion heretofore reached was correct. This litigation arises in the construction of the mortgage in suit, which contains, among its stipulations upon the part of the mortgagor, an express waiver of the law relating to appraisal and time of sale; also, the act of March 16, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 227), declaring the mortgagor entitled to the possession, and rents, issues, and profits, of real property sold under foreclosure, during the full period for the redemption of the same; also, the act of March 11, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 98), prohibiting a deficiency judgment in mortgage foreclosures; also, the act relating to the construction of contracts between parties for attorney's fees; and also the act of March 11, 1897, relating to payment of obligations, and declaring that the same may be fully satisfied with any kind of lawful money or currency of the United States. I understand the conclusion of the majority is that the waivers contained in the stipulations of the mortgage are void, and cannot be enforced; but, as there is some intimation that a different state of facts from those found in the present cause might vest in the court the consideration of the enforceability of some of the waivers, I desire to make some observations upon this question.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff contend that the provisions relating to appraisal, and to possession, and the rents, issues, and profits, in the legislation of 1897, do not, in terms prohibit the waiver; that, being solely for the benefit of the debtor, he may lawfully waive the same; that such contract of waiver is enforceable in the courts; and that public policy does not concern itself with those provisions, intended merely for the benefit of the debtor. I have examined every case cited upon this proposition in the briefs submitted by counsel. Stockmeyer v. Tobin, 139 U. S. 176, 35 L. ed. 123, was first determined in the state of Louisiana, and the Supreme Court of the United States merely accepted the construction of the state supreme court in Broadwell v. Rodrigues, 18 La. Ann. 68, and its ruling in that case is not authority here in any sense, because the uniform rule in the Federal Supreme Court is to accept the construction of a state statute by the court of last resort of the state, without reference to the correctness of such construction. As the Louisiana case just mentioned, and also New Orleans Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bugley, 19 La. Ann. 89, are cases presented where the waiver of an inquisition or appraisalment law has been held a valid contract, it is instructive to review the reasoning of the Louisiana court in an earlier case. Levicks v. Walker, 15 La. Ann. 245, 77 Am. Dec. 187. The court there held such a waiver void, and observed: "Parties regulate their own conduct by their stipulations, but they cannot prescribe rules of proceeding for public officers, nor demand that the courts of justice shall depart from the usual modes of enforcing their decrees. If, before judgment, the creditor may stipulate the manner in which the same shall be executed, the principle will sanction an endless variety of modes of execution of judgments." But in the case of Broadwell v. Rodrigues, 18 La. Ann. 68, the court again had brought before it the question of waiver in connection with the construction of § 2, art. 11, of the Revised Civil Code of Louisiana, which had not been before them in the former case. Construing this section of the Code, the court said: "The law of France, in its practical application, differs but little from the law of Louisiana, and both rest on the maxim of the Roman law, which lays it down as a rule that everyone is at liberty to renounce what the law has established in his favor and interests but himself. 'Est regula juris antiqui omnes licentiam habere his que pro se indicta sunt renunciare.' L. 29, C. de Pactis. But individuals cannot, by their conventions, derogate from the force of laws made for the preservation of public order or good morals. I. C. de Pactis 2; 3 L. 45, §§ de R. T. L. 38, §§ de Pactis, 2, 14. Marcadé, commenting on the last rule cited, observes: 'Cet article en nous disant qu'on ne peut par convention déroger aux lois dont il parle, nous indique assez qu'on pourra, par a moyen, déroger aux autres.' Volume 1, p. 671. And the juriconsults who compiled our Code, while they adopted verbatim the article 6 of the French Code, in article 11 of our own Code, have added to that article a second paragraph, which is a legislative recognition of Marcadé's doctrine, and has removed much of the uncertainty of the French article. (See also the doctrine of Toullier, hereinafter referred to.) The second paragraph of article 11 of our Code is as follows: 'But, in all cases in which it is not expressly or impliedly prohibited, individuals can renounce what the law has established in their favor, when the renunciation does not affect the right of others, and is not contrary to the public good.' " The court then says: "Aided by the light which the French jurists have afforded us in solving this mooted question, . . . this we apprehend to be the general rule, as relates to the renunciation of private rights. The exceptional cases are those which trench on public order; and within those exceptional cases is not embraced, as we conceive, the stipulation in the mortgage granted by the plaintiff in injunction." It will thus be seen that the present Louisiana doctrine does not in any sense overturn the principle first declared in 15 La. Ann., supra, but is founded on a provision of the Louisiana statute, which had theretofore been construed by the French jurists, and such construction was accepted by the court. I do not, therefore, think the cases cited from Louisiana are authority upon the construction of the statutes under consideration here. The case of Stockwell v. Byrne, 22 Ind. 6, is founded entirely upon estoppel of the judgment debtor who consented that an officer having charge of a writ of execution should sell without appraisalment, and the court held such estoppel good. The case of Baker v. Roberts, 14 Ind. 552, was a suit on a promissory note containing a waiver of valuation laws, and the decision was based upon a statute which declared: "Upon any instrument of writing, made in this state or elsewhere, containing a promise to pay money without relief from valuation laws, judgment shall be rendered and execution had accordingly." It will be noted that the Indiana cases cannot be in point, because special statutory permission authorizes the waiver of valuation laws. The case of Wray v. Miller, 20 Pa. 115, was where the defendant was held estopped by a waiver after sale. The sale was made without dissent, and the opinion states the presumption was that defendant received the purchase money. In Mitchell v. Freedley, 10 Pa. 198, the defendants had estopped themselves after judgment and sale had been made. Thus the Pennsylvania cases are not in point, but it may be appropriately observed here that the courts of Pennsylvania stand almost alone in their construction of homestead and other exemption laws, and against the almost universal weight of authority in this country. But a Pennsylvania statute of 1836 seemed to authorize the waiver of inquisition or appraisalment. On the validity of a waiver of the right to possession several Iowa cases were cited, but I find in the last of those cases cited the decision based upon the Iowa Code of 1873, § 1938, which declares, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, the mortgagor of real property retains the legal title and right of possession thereto. Manifestly, the statute of Iowa determines conclusively the construction of such contracts for the waiver of the right to possession. It is a well recognized legal rule that constitutional or statutory benefits may be waived unless such waiver violates some principle of public policy. A number of the states, among which are Pennsylvania, Indiana, Louisiana, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and Illinois, in their early history, adopted what have been very pertinently termed "appraisalment or valuation laws." Every authority from those states, both in the state and Federal courts, has sustained the validity of these laws when applied to subsequent contracts.

Having thus reviewed the authorities presented by counsel to sustain the validity of a contract of waiver of appraisement, and found that in no instance other than when authorized by statute such waiver was enforced, we may now examine some of the numerous and very eminent authorities which hold that analogous provisions in other laws cannot be waived by private stipulation. Our statutes, it may be mentioned, nowhere authorize a waiver of any of the provisions of the laws under consideration. Wall v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273, was an action on an insurance policy in the United States circuit court. It involved the question as to the force to be given to a Missouri statute, as against the express language of the policy. The court, by Judge Brewer, declared: "It evidently intended by its [the state's] legislation to provide a fixed and absolute rule applicable to all cases, absolute and universal, because, if it applied only in cases in which the policies were silent, or if it could be waived or changed, a child can see that it would protect only so far as the insurance companies were willing. So, although no words of penalty are attached, no express denial of the right to waive, in fact no words of negation in any direction, yet it seems to me fair to say that the affirmative language of this statute discloses a public policy which no court ought to question or refuse to enforce."

The legislature has by this language declared a rule in respect to forfeitures in life insurance policies; it has thus established the policy which it believes should obtain in this state, and, though sitting on the Federal bench, it is my duty to administer the laws of this state in the spirit in which they were enacted, and to uphold both their letter and their spirit." This doctrine is also approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, and other cases in that court. State v. Edwards, 86 Me. 102, 25 L. R. A. 504; Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 416, 26 L. R. A. 107; Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552. In the last case the court says: "Now, the law is well settled that, where a statute is founded upon public policy, a party cannot waive its provisions, even by express contract." Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776. In the case of Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Beck, 64 N. W. 637, 95 Iowa, 725, it was held that, under Code, § 3100, providing that 'personal property levied upon and advertised for sale on execution must be appraised before sale,' etc., such appraisement cannot be waived. Though it was stipulated in a chattel mortgage that the mortgagor waived appraisement, and the mortgagee was present at the foreclosure sale, the mortgagee is not precluded from moving to set aside the sale on the ground that there was no appraisement, as is required by statute." The case of Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 776, involved the right of withdrawal of a stockholder in a building association after giving thirty days notice thereof, and to receive back the amount paid in by him, together with his shares of the profits. The court held: "The statutory right of a stockholder in a building association to withdraw therefrom after giving thirty days' notice, and to receive back the amount paid in by him together with his share of the profits (Mo. Rev. Stat. § 2810), is one evidencing a public policy, and cannot be waived, even by an express declaration in the certificates that there shall be no right of withdrawal until one hundred months from the issuance of the stock." A strong analogy is also found in the uniform rule that the equity of redemption cannot be waived in a mortgage, or in any other instrument executed at the same time. This has been the settled law for over two centuries in English and American courts. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 332, 24 L. ed. 775, discussing the waiver of the equity of redemption, said: "This right cannot be waived or abandoned by any stipulation of the parties made at the time, even if embodied in the mortgage. This is a doctrine from which a court of equity never deviates. Its maintenance is deemed essential to the protection of the debtor, who, under pressing necessities, will often submit to ruinous conditions, expecting or hoping to be able to repay the loan at its maturity, and thus prevent the conditions from being enforced and the property sacrificed. A subsequent release of the equity of redemption may undoubtedly be made to the mortgagee. There is nothing in the policy of the law which forbids the transfer to him of the debtor's interests. The transaction will, however, be closely scrutinized, so as to prevent any oppression of the debtor." Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 242, 28 L. ed. 415.

The language quoted is an answer to the proposition, affirmed by counsel for plaintiff, that the public is not concerned as to how much or when the property of the debtor is taken in foreclosure. The whole reasoning relative to the right to waive the equity of redemption, and the principle upon which it is founded, is applicable to the construction of the statute before us. The rule, also held by the courts of equity from time immemorial, that the mortgagor cannot waive at the time of the execution of the mortgage, the right to the possession of the mortgaged premises during the period of redemption, is analogous. This is for the special benefit of the mortgagor, and the authorities have always been at one in refusing to enforce such waivers. But it has been argued that the statutes of 1897 relating to appraisement do not evince a public policy, or the intention of the legislature to declare a uniform rule relative to sales under execution and foreclosure of all real estate at judicial sales. Laws 1897, p. 71, § 3, is mandatory in its language: "It shall be the duty of the judgment creditor, . . . when the judgment is to be satisfied in whole or in part from real estate, or any interest therein, to deliver to the sheriff a true statement, signed by himself or attorney, containing a description of the property levied upon, the estimated value of each separate description, and serve a copy upon the judgment debtor or his attorney." Thus it will be seen that, before the sheriff can take a single step under his execution after levy, the appraisement must be made by the judgment creditor. It is a part of the process as necessary as the notice of sale. But, if it were desirable to derive the intention of the legislature from surrounding circumstances and conditions then existing, it is also easy to deduce the rule of public policy. For a few years preceding the legislative session of 1897, it was a matter of universal knowledge in this state that real property exposed to sale under execution was sacrificed. A severe financial stringency and absolute dearth of money in general circulation destroyed the value of real property, and at such sales generally the only bidder was the judgment creditor, who, in effect, could, and did, bid so much as he chose for property, and thus the mortgage which, when executed, was deemed secured by property of thrice its value, frequently was purchased by the mortgagee for a small portion of the amount secured, and a deficiency judgment left standing against the mortgagor for the balance—often the larger portion—of the claim. It is plain to my judgment that the legislature intended by these statutes to prevent the undue sacrifice of property. Whether the statute is the best that could be framed for that purpose, or whether it is a wise legislation, are matters which the courts cannot control. The question at the outset ought to be, Is the statute constitutional? I understand the court is agreed that the legislature has the power to enact such laws. I have examined the numerous cases cited by counsel upon the question of the constitutionality of this statute, and my conclusion is that, with the exception of the mechanic's lien and slaughter-house cases, all the cases cited are those involving class legislation, and as such would probably be held void under article 1, § 12, of our Constitution. These cases hold the acts under consideration void for the reason that they limit the right to contract to certain classes, to wit: Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. 71 Fed. Rep. 931 (railroad employees); Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702 (all laborers except on farms); Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325 (weavers); State v. Goodwill, 38 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621 (laborers in mines and factories); Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869 (coal miners); Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264 (railroad employees); Re Jacobs, 96 N. Y. 106, 50 Am. Rep. 636 (cigarmakers in tenement houses); Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482 (employees on public contracts); Re Eight Hours Bill (laborers in mines, factories, and smelters); Re House Bill No. 203, 21 Colo. 27 (coal miners). The statutes here in question embrace all those entering into the relation of debtor and creditor, which is not only a relationship based upon its own peculiar characteristics, but is one recognized from the earliest times and under all forms of Constitutions as subject to legislative control, without the suspicion of being answerable to the charge of class legislation. The objection to the constitutionality of the provisions relating to appraisement being untenable, the important duty of the court is their construction.

2. And here I am unable to agree with the construction of the majority of the court. I concede that § 10 of the appraisement act is inartificially framed, and there is much difficulty in the harmonious construction of the several provisions included in the section. Section 2 provides, when the sale is of real property and consisting of several known lots or parcels, they shall be sold separately when demanded by the judgment debtor or a subsequent encumbrancer. This is merely declaratory of an ancient equitable rule in mortgage foreclosures. The act is clear in the procedure on the appraisement. It is simple and direct. If the judgment creditor's appraisement is satisfactory, notice of sale is given; if not satisfactory to the judgment debtor, then the appraisers are appointed by the clerk of the court, and they shall appraise the real value of the property or interest of the judgment debtor therein. Section 8 seems to commit finally the fairness of the appraisement and the propriety of another valuation of the property to the court. The difficulty in construction is found in § 10. I think this section may be fairly read as follows: "No property shall be sold for a sum less than 80 per cent of the value thereof." All that follows in § 10 are exceptions or provisos. The well recognized canon of statutory interpretation, that in the event of absolute repugnancy between a proviso and the body of the section and intention of the whole act, the proviso must yield, ought to be applied here, and the exceptions or provisos, taken together, would qualify the section that the property cannot be sold for less than 80 per cent of the appraised value; the whole thereof may be sold, if necessary to pay the debt, at 80 per cent of the appraised value; but if a portion of the property, appraised at 80 per cent, will pay the debt, no more can be sold. State, Chamberlin, v. Daniel, 17 Wash. 111. As I view the construction given to § 10 by the court, the whole appraisement is so emasculated that nothing of value is left of it. The plain intention of all the preceding sections of the act is the appraisement of real property so as to avoid its sacrifice at the sale, and, while such legislation relating to execution sales is novel in this state, it is by no means new in the general legislation of our sister states. Very similar provisions relative to appraisement, as we have seen heretofore, existed in a number of the states, and one uniform intention pervaded all of them. There is nothing specially different in the results to the judgment creditor in our statutes from those found in the statutes of the other states. In fact, we have in our probate procedure long recognized a control over sales of property for the satisfaction of debts. An appraisement is mandatory in all administration sales, and the court is by statute authorized to set aside any sales if in its judgment, upon a hearing, a larger amount can be obtained for the property; and, without any statutory provisions, the courts, in the exercise of their equitable powers, continually, in receiverships, fix limits upon the bids which shall be received for property offered at sale. This court has approved such an order when made by a superior court of property under mortgage foreclosure in the custody of its receiver. All the arguments used against the fairness of the statute are equally applicable to probate sales and to receivers' sales. As seen, § 8 of the statute reposes in the superior court the final determination of the fairness of the appraisement. Imaginable cases may be suggested where the appraisement might incidentally postpone the sale; but I think the general presumption of fairness in judicial procedure, and that judicial officers will perform their duty, will relieve the statute of any imputation of an intention to postpone collections on execution, or to require anything but a fair sale of property.

3. The act relating to deficiency judgments (Laws 1897, p. 98) is clear and mandatory in its provisions, and therefore not the subject of construction, and the only question litigated here is its constitutionality. As a mere question of procedure in a foreclosure suit, it ought to be controlling. By legislative authority only in this state has the power to enter a deficiency judgment in a foreclosure of a mortgage been found. Without such statutes for authority to enter a deficiency judgment in the same proceeding, or where large discretion is given by equity rules, I think no court has entered such a judgment. But the broader question of the constitutionality of the statute which limits the recovery of the debt to the mortgage security has been fully discussed by counsel and by the court. It is objected that the statute is obnoxious—First, to art. 5, § 1, and art. 14, § 1, of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and art. 1, § 3, of the Constitution of Washington (in substance as follows: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law"); and, second, to art. 14, § 1, of the amendments of the Federal Constitution ("No state shall make or enforce any law that shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States"). Section 10, art. 1, of the Federal Constitution, that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, has been cited. The latter citation is so manifestly not in point here that I do not deem it necessary to refer to it again. The first provision does not say that the state may not deprive a person of life, liberty, or property, and stop there, but declares that it shall not be done "without due process of law." The state is continually depriving persons of life, liberty, and property, but it must be done according to due process of law. "Due process of law does not mean a statute passed for the purpose of working a wrong." Cooley, Const. Lim. (1st ed.) p. 353. These words are held to be synonymous with the words "law of the land" (Id. p. 352), and this means "general public law, binding upon all the members of the community under all circumstances, and not partial or private laws affecting the rights of private individuals or classes of individuals." Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 297, 57 Am. Rep. 869. And it is also that law which hears and condemns only according to recognized judicial usages. The second constitutional inhibition, against making or enforcing any law which will abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, has been frequently considered by the Supreme Court of the United States. In Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 25 L. ed. 585, Mr. Justice Bradley observes: "I hold that the liberty of pursuit—the right to follow any of the ordinary callings of life—is one of the privileges of a citizen of the United States." And the application of this article of the Federal Constitution has generally been directed against some discrimination by the state in favor of its own citizens and against other citizens of the United States. The protection of life, liberty, and property, and the enforcement of private rights, has been uniformly held by the Federal Supreme Court to devolve upon the state. The state unquestionably may regulate contracts between its citizens and control them as best accords with its own views of public policy, and it has always done this; and this policy may be changed at the will of the state, so long as it does not impair the obligations of prior contracts. The questions relating to its policy have been, in all our state Constitutions, committed to the legislative department of the government. In fact, I believe, almost without exception, the English-speaking race has entirely placed these questions within the domain of legislation. They belong to the field of political economy, morals, and the general science of government, and people differ materially in their views upon them. At one time the legislature might deem it sound policy to encourage speculative loans of capital in the state. It might deem any exemption laws unwise. It might, as has heretofore been the rule, by legislative enactment in this state, provide that the possession of real property should go to the mortgagee before the period for redemption expired, without such mortgagee's accounting for rents, issues, and profits when redemption was made. It might, as was the law for some time in this state, abolish the equity of redemption in mortgages, and in redemption of real estate sold at execution. And the court has uniformly sustained such enactments as being peculiarly within the power of the legislature. The state may also appropriately, through the legislative department, change such rules. It may deem speculative loans objectionable. It may deem exemption laws wise. It may determine that the equity of redemption in mortgage foreclosures shall be preserved in the future. It may provide for a redemption of property sold on execution, or it may provide that contracts may be made between the borrower and lender of money at such rates as they choose. But, if it should adopt other views, it may appropriately, through its legislative department, limit the right to borrow money to a certain rate of interest, and may, in my judgment regulate and control the contract or mortgage, and limit the amount and value in security embraced in a mortgage, and the amount of the recovery thereon. It has been held that a state might forbid the assignment out of the state of claims against the recovery of which the exemption laws of the state of the residence of the parties would be a protection (Sweeney v. Hunter, 145 Pa. 363, 14 L. R. A. 594); declare after what performance contracts of insurance shall be nonforfeitable (Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497); regulate the weight and price of bread (Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. 140, 36 Am. Dec. 441); restrict the removal and sale of cotton in seed (State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714); declare that railroad and telegraph companies cannot, by private agreement, devest themselves of liability for acts as such (Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788).

But many illustrations might be offered of the principle that the regulation and control of contracts, and the procedure for their enforcement, are not inhibited by either of the two provisions of the Federal Constitution heretofore mentioned. I apprehend the true rule can be formulated thus: If a public policy is obvious from the statute, and it is not arbitrary or partial, its validity is assured. The public policy must be such as to induce the legislature to act, and its motives must not be merely whimsical and arbitrary, and the law cannot be merely partial, but must affect all alike. Whether the policy inducing legislative action is wise does not come within the province of judicial inquiry. When the statute fairly discloses such a policy, the act is valid, unless contravening some other constitutional provision. I think the policy of the act prohibiting a deficiency judgment in mortgage foreclosures is fairly deducible from the evident intention of the several acts which have been under discussion here and all enacted by the same legislature. We have seen the legislature repeal the law giving to the mortgagee or judgment creditor the immediate possession after sales of real property, without any liability to account, in the appraisement law to secure fairer sales of real property on execution, and to limit the recovery of a debt secured by mortgage to the property included in the mortgage. The conditions existing in the state were before the legislature. Large numbers of its citizens, many of them active and energetic business men, were retired from business, or from any productive occupations, because of existing deficiency judgments against them after the mortgage foreclosures. The same considerations, from this point of view, might affect the legislative mind that could be adopted in the enactment of a state insolvency law; and the unbroken current of judicial authority in this country now sustains the validity of such insolvency laws enacted by the states, when they do not impair prior contracts. The state is interested in the activity and capacity of its citizens, and if any considerable class of them be deprived of their capacity to engage in productive occupations or business, there is so much loss to the public. Something here of the same principle as underlies the exemption laws is found. A just motive existing in the legislative intent relieves the act of any objection that it is arbitrary.

The next objection that is suggested to this law is that it is class legislation, but no authority has been called to our attention which would suggest such an objection. Mortgages have been the subject of legislative control, both in the terms of the contract and in the procedure enforcing the mortgage contract, throughout our history. It is a general and natural division of the subject of legislation. There can be no doubt of the power of the legislature to fix the rate of interest on money. That is a matter exclusively within its policy. This rate may be made so low as to largely interfere with the power to borrow money. In 40 L. R. A.

a number of the states the power to mortgage a homestead is forbidden, and in the state of Texas, notably, the real-estate homestead is so large that, as has been observed by some jurists, it is a practical inhibition upon the mortgage generally of real property in that state. Yet, though the constitutionality of this law has been challenged, it has uniformly, so far as my examinations have extended, been sustained. I understand, without legislative sanction, the right to mortgage chattels without taking possession is denied in many jurisdictions. The rule in the state of California seems to be that only such chattels as are specified in the various legislative acts are subject to mortgage unless the possession be delivered to the mortgagee. In the case of Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. ed. 143, the Supreme Court of the United States had under consideration a law, passed in the state of Illinois, which provided that the equitable estate of the mortgagor should not be extinguished for twelve months after sale on decree, and which prevented any sale of the mortgaged property unless two thirds of the amount at which the property had been valued by appraisers should be bid therefor. The question before the court was as to the impairment of existing contracts by the retroactive provisions of the statute. The court, by Mr. Chief Justice Taney, declared: "Mortgages made since the passage of these laws must undoubtedly be governed by them; for every state has the power to prescribe the legal and equitable obligations of a contract to be made and executed within its jurisdiction. It may exempt any property it thinks proper from sale for the payment of a debt; and may impose such conditions and restrictions upon the creditor as its judgment and policy may dictate. And all future contracts would be subject to such provisions; and they would be obligatory upon the parties in the courts of the United States, as well as in those of the state." This I understand to be the established rule enforced by the Supreme Court of the United States.

4. The effect of the statute making the contract for specific money soluble in lawful money of the United States, involves a Federal question, and seems to have been determined by the controlling authority,—the Supreme Court of the United States. The power of the state to declare a legal tender is limited to gold and silver coin. All "lawful money" of the United States is not a legal tender for private obligations by the laws of the United States; but, under the grant of power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, the Federal Supreme Court has, I think, decided that the question relating to final payment in private contracts is one exclusively of Federal jurisdiction, and vested in Congress. The legal tender and gold contract decisions, taken in connection with the recent case of Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 40 L. ed. 973, are controlling here. The jurisdiction of the Federal Court would not, in this case, have been sustained on any other principle than complete Federal control of such contracts. This conclusion, I think, is manifestly apparent from both the majority and minority opinions given in the case. A different question would be presented in contracts made by the state, or municipal corporations controlled by the state.

My conclusions are that, with the exception of the solution of the contract in suit in lawful money of the United States, the judgment of the superior court is correct.

STATE of Washington, ex rel. F. J. BARNARD, Appl., BOARD OF EDUCATION of Seattle School District No. 1, Respts.

(..... Wash.)

1. Prohibition may be issued to prevent a board of school directors from trying charges against a school superintendent when one of the directors is disqualified by enmity and prejudgment of the case, while there is no appeal from the decision of the board.
2. An order of supersedeas to preserve the status quo of the parties pending the determination of the appeal upon its merits is within the inherent powers of an appellate tribunal which is authorized to issue all writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction.
3. A school director is disqualified to sit as a member of the board to try charges of misconduct of a school superintendent, when he has a personal enmity toward him and was a prime mover in the prosecution of the charges, and declared that he should vote for his conviction, while there is no appeal from the decision of the board.

(February 23, 1898.)

APPEAL by relator from an order of the Superior Court for King County denying a writ of prohibition to prevent defendants from proceeding to try relator upon charges of misfeasance and malfeasance in office. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Osborn, Steele, & Aust and Donworth & Howe, for appellant:

Under the admitted facts was Mr. Wells disqualified to sit as a member of the board proceeding in a judicial capacity, to try and determine the charges against relator?

The common conscience of all mankind who live under government intuitively responds with an affirmative answer.

Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52, 84 Am. Dec. 118; Barnett v. Ashmore, 5 Wash. 164.

Even an act of Parliament cannot make one judge and party.

London v. Wood, 2 Mod. 688; Williams v. Robinson, 6 Cush. 333; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 548.

The right of recusal against members of a tribunal of exclusive jurisdiction is limited by the line of vitality. That is, the right exists until to further proceed would destroy the power of the tribunal; upon the theory that when a tribunal is invested with exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine a cause, it is better that it should be determined by a partial court than that it should not be heard.

People, Pond, v. Saratoga Springs, 4 App. Div. 399.

The participation of a disqualified member of a tribunal in the judgment vitiates the whole proceeding.

Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547; State, Pond, v. Saratoga Springs, 4 App. Div. 399.

Although a judgment against the appellant will be vitiated by his participation therein, yet appellant must be subjected to a void and corrupt adjudication of his rights, to a wrongful deprivation of his reputation and employment, and then seek a remedy, if any he has, through certiorari or quo warranto.

These independent proceedings afford no adequate remedy.

North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 326.

Messrs. James F. McElroy and John B. Hart, for respondents:

At common law the only disqualification of a judge was his financial interest.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 41.

The common law as to what is a disqualification of a judge prevails in this state unless changed by statutory enactment. Prejudice and bias, in the absence of a statutory provision, are not a legal cause of disqualification.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 52; McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500; People v. Williams, 21 Cal. 31; Allen v. Reilly, 15 Nev. 452; People v. Mahoney, 18' Cal. 180; Pearson v. Hopkins, 2 N. J. L. 185; Pierce v. Delamater, 1 N. Y. 17; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Cook, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 573.

Even though the board of education had proceeded and had removed the superintendent of schools under the power given them by the law of 1897, still if that removal was illegal, it could be inquired into by the court either by quo warranto proceedings (State v. Van Brocklin, 8 Wash. 557), or by a writ of review or certiorari under the law of 1895, p. 114. Having these legal remedies still left to him, it is extremely doubtful whether a writ of prohibition will lie at all.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 265.

The mere fact that the appellant would be removed temporarily and unjustly as claimed by him from office would not warrant the court in making an order which would prevent the board of education from proceeding further in their investigation.

State, Nooksack River Boom Co. v. Whatcom County Super. Ct. 2 Wash. 15; Fawcett v. Pierce County Super. Ct. 15 Wash. 342.

The discretion of the lower court will not be interfered with or inquired into by this court.

State, Gardner, v. Yakima County Super. Ct. 9 Wash. 307; State, Cline, v. Campbell; 5 Wash. 517.

No discretion is in any court to stay proceedings of this kind.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 264; People, Adams, v. Westbrook, 89 N. Y. 152; Fawcett v. Pierce County Super. Ct. 15 Wash. 345; Gibbs v. Louisville, 95 Ky. 471.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, F. J. Barnard, is superintendent of the public schools of the city of Seattle.

NOTE.—As to the disqualification of a judge by prior connection with the case see State, Ambler, v. Hooker (Fla.) 25 L. R. A. 114, and note.

As to disqualification of member of board, see State, Getchel, v. Bradish (Wis.) 37 L. R. A. 289.

40 L. R. A.

Charges were filed with the respondents, as the board of directors of said school district, charging the said Barnard with misfeasance and malfeasance in office, with conduct unbecoming a superintendent of schools, and with disobeying the rules of conduct established by the board of directors. Citation was issued to the appellant, citing him to appear before the board of directors to answer to the charges. The appellant objected to A. J. Wells, one of the board of directors, sitting as a member of the tribunal to hear and determine the charges, on the ground that said Wells was disqualified by reason of bias, prejudice, and personal enmity towards the appellant. On the 17th day of December, 1897, on the application and affidavit of the appellant, Barnard, the superior court of Kings county, Washington, issued its writ of prohibition in the alternative to the respondents, staying proceedings until the further order of the court. On the return of said writ the superior court sustained a demurrer thereto quashing the writ, and entering judgment in favor of the defendants for their costs. The demurrer was sustained upon the ground that no facts were stated sufficient to authorize the issuance of a writ. The appellant forthwith gave notice of appeal, and asked the court to fix the amount of the supersedeas bond. The court fixed the amount of the bond to operate as a supersedeas, but announced to the council for respondents in open court that the bond would operate only to stay execution for costs, because the judgment appealed from was not such a judgment as could be superseded. The appellant forthwith filed his bond on appeal in the amount fixed by the court, and conditioned as a supersedeas bond. The board of education, and Mr. Wells, sitting as a member thereof, proceeded with the hearing of the charges against the appellant. The appellant then applied to this court for an order of supersedeas, on which an alternative writ was granted, and the case is here now for final determination.

We are inclined to think that the bond upon appeal conditioned as supersedeas under our statutes did not operate to suspend and supersede the judgment quashing the alternative writ. But we think that this court, in the exercise of its discretion, by virtue of its inherent powers as an appellate tribunal, can issue an order of supersedeas to preserve the status quo of the parties, pending the determination of the appeal upon its merits. Section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution of Washington, after reciting the original jurisdiction of the supreme court, says further: "The supreme court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, review, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, and all other writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction." It is conceded that an appeal lies from the judgment of the court in quashing the writ, and, under the provision just read, for the purpose of making that appeal effective, and to insure the complete exercise of this court over that appeal, it becomes necessary and proper to supersede the judgment, otherwise the right to appeal which the statute has given would be of no avail to the appellant, for if the board of directors in the meantime were to proceed to remove him, when the case finally reached this court on appeal it would have to be dismissed for want of merit, because the trial on merit would already have terminated. People, Gould, v. Commissioners of Excise, 61 How. Pr. 514. We think this is exactly the kind of a case which is contemplated by the Constitution, and that the only way that this court could maintain the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction would be by issuing the writ prayed for. There would be no meaning to the provision of the Constitution, and no necessity for it, if it could only be held to apply to cases where supersedeas was provided for by the law. In Home F. Ins. Co. v. Dutcher, 48 Neb. 755, it was held that in cases where the statute makes no provision for the supersedeas, as a matter of right, the court may in its discretion, allow a supersedeas upon conditions which it may affix for the protection of the parties, and that it is within the power of the court, in its discretion, after obtaining jurisdiction of a case by appeal, to allow a supersedeas in cases not provided for by statute, and upon terms which the court may prescribe. To the same effect is Janesville v. Janesville Water Co. 89 Wis. 159. In that case the court said: "Within the limitation that the appeal is taken and prosecuted in good faith, and that the party asking it gives the reasonable security required for that purpose, a stay of proceedings during the pendency of an appeal is quite of course, and really a matter of right, without which an appeal allowed by law would often prove fruitless, and the appellate jurisdiction of the court be found inadequate to the ends of justice and the proper protection of the rights of parties during the pendency of the appeal." In Hill v. Finnigan, 54 Cal. 493, the court said: "We have no doubt but this court has an inherent power to secure to the appellant the fruits of a successful appeal, if it can be done without depriving the respondent of a substantial right." And the qualification mentioned by the court in that case is not in point here, for there is nothing to prevent the board proceeding with the trial of the cause without the concurrence of the member objected to. In Lery v. Goldberg, 40 Wis. 308, it was held that the power of the court to stay proceedings in any matter appealed to it did not altogether depend upon statutory enactment, but was inherent in the court. The same announcement was made in Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Park Hotel Co. 37 Wis. 125.

The substance of the affidavit for the writ is to the effect that A. J. Wells was a personal enemy of the relator, that he was a prime mover in having the charges preferred and prosecuted, that he was biased and prejudiced against relator, that he had no personal knowledge of any of the facts alleged in the charges, that he had publicly announced his intention to vote to find relator guilty, and that he proposed to vote to remove him from his office no matter what the evidence might be, and that his mind was made up and his determination fixed.

The case of Fawcett v. Pierce County Super. Ct. 15 Wash. 342, is relied upon by the respondent to maintain his contention that the board of education cannot be restrained from proceeding. That was a quo warranto proceeding to try the right to an office. The judgment of ouster had been pronounced against Fawcett, and it was held by this court that the judgment was self-executing, and that without the aid of process or further action of the court it accomplished the object sought to be attained, so that there was nothing upon which the bond could operate except for costs. But that is altogether different from the case at bar. It was the object of the appellant in this case to prevent himself from being placed in the position in which Fawcett was placed by the judgment of ouster. Were he to stand by, and allow the board to proceed and remove him from his office, then he would be as helpless as Fawcett was in the case cited; but it is for the very purpose of maintaining his rights and preventing his being overtaken by that condition that this stay is sought.

It is stoutly contended by the respondents that this case does not fall under any of the disqualifications of the judge provided in subdiv. 4 of § 163 of the Code of Procedure, and that, outside of the provisions of the Code, a judge is only disqualified by having a financial interest in the result of the suit. We have examined with care all the authorities cited by the respondents to sustain this contention, but are of the opinion that they fail to do so. Most of the cases either fall within the doctrine of necessity, which is announced by some of the courts, where to challenge the judge successfully would prevent the hearing of the cause, as in cases where there was no other tribunal to try the case, or where the judge was sitting merely to declare the law and the case was tried by jury, and in all the cases we think an appeal would lie. It may be said here that no appeal lies from the decision of the board of directors, and the judges acting in the capacity of jurors; and, while some courts have decided that the tests of the respective qualifications of judges and jurors are not the same, yet in a case of this kind, where the judges pass upon the facts, and it is a pure question of fact which is presented for their consideration and for their determination, we see no good reason why the test of qualification should be different; for the judge in this case is in reality a juror passing upon questions of fact. It is true that on page 52 of 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, the proposition is announced that, "in the absence of statutory provisions, prejudice not based on property interest in the judge is not assignable as a legal cause of disqualification." But this broad assertion of the text is not borne out by the cases cited to sustain it, many of which are cited by the respondents in this case. For instance, in McCauley v. Weller, 12 Cal. 500, it was held by the supreme court of California, through Terry, Ch. J., that "the exhibition by a judge of partisan feeling, of the unnecessary expression of an opinion upon the justice or merits of a controversy, though exceedingly unbecoming, improper, and reprehensible, as calculated to throw suspicion upon the judgments of the court, and bring the administration of justice into contempt, are not, under our statute, sufficient to authorize a change of venue on the ground that the judge is disqualified from sitting." But, even admitting the correctness of that decision,—which we are not inclined to do,—the court evidently would have come to a different decision in a case of this kind, for they based the decision on the ground that the province of the judge was to decide questions of law alone, and that his decisions upon these points were not final, but, if erroneous, the party had his remedy by appeal. People v. Mahoney, 18 Cal. 181, is substantially the same holding, the argument being that, if the judge acted illegally on the trial, or denied the prisoner his legal rights, it could be remedied on appeal. In People v. Williams, 24 Cal. 81, the court quotes approvingly § 2945 of Whart. Crim. L. where that author says: "The practice among the civilians extends the right of challenges for cause to the judges as well as the jurors; and the great inclination of authority is, that the same causes which disqualify one disqualify the other. Where the judge, like a chancellor, sits to try both facts and law, as in the case with the civilians, there is peculiar reason for the application to him of a jealous test." But in this case the judges were simply sitting as judges to pass upon the questions of law, and the court discriminated that case from such a case as the one in hand.

Chapman v. Stoneman, 63 Cal. 490, does not seem to us to be in point. It was simply held in that case that the governor had authority and jurisdiction to investigate questions of misconduct on the part of the state board of prison directors. There is no intimation in the case anywhere of any charge of bias or prejudice on the part of the governor. Allen v. Reilly, 15 Nev. 452, cited on page 8 of respondents' brief, is evidently a miscitation, as the case is not to be found in that volume. It was probably taken from the citations given by 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law to sustain the text announced by that court, which we commented on above but the author was mistaken in the citation; Pearson v. Hopkins, 2 N. J. L. 181, was a challenge to a judge who had acted in the circuit court, and had overruled a motion of the defendant for a nonsuit, and it was held that this did not disqualify him from sitting in the case on appeal, the court rightfully taking the view that, if the expression of an opinion by a judge on the law disqualified him, he would be disqualified from trying a case upon the granting of a motion for a new trial. The same was substantially the holding in Pierce v. Delamater, 1 N. Y. 17, and the same in substance was decided in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Cook, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 573. We do not think the other cases cited in respondents' brief, and commented on therein, are in point. We will, however, especially notice the two which are nearest in point. In People, Doherty, v. New York Police Comrs. 84 Hun, 64, it was held that it was not error for a commissioner to sit on the trial of charge against a policeman after he had been challenged on the ground that he had prejudged the case, and did not intend to give the policeman a fair trial, it not being claimed that the commissioner had any interest in the matter, or was disqualified by any statute. This case was based on the doctrine of necessity, and it was asserted by the court that, if the judges who were challenged were thereby rendered disqualified to try the case, the relator could secure himself in office, because it would leave the board without a majority of its members to render a judgment or make a de-

